THE PENGUIN GUIDE TO JAZZ RECORDINGS

VANCOUVER PUBLIC LIBRARY
[redacted]
3 1383 08674 8988

NINTH EDITION

Richard Cook &
Brian Morton

'BRILLIANT . . .
THE BEST MUSIC
REFERENCE BOOK I HAVE EVER READ'
SUNDAY TIMES

PENGUIN BOOKS

The Penguin Guide to Jazz Recordings

Praise for the previous editions

'It must be one of the most elegantly written and useful books ever to have appeared about jazz'
Adam Lively, Mail on Sunday

'Suitably monumental ... admirably thorough ... an impressive achievement – any serious collector of jazz recordings ought to have it on his or her shelf'
James Maxfield, Cadence

'A volume whose scholarship is matched by its sassy wit ... you find something new on every read'
Christopher Hawtree, The Times

'Discerning and conscientious ... a splendid source of information at a bargain price' Jazz Times

'Highly recommended ... the book is a valuable reference tool, a thorough catalogue, and a credible guide through the ocean of discs that flood the stores'
Fanfare

'Comprehensive, endlessly fascinating and informative ... I was lost in admiration' Literary Review

'This masterpiece of compilation ... provides the newcomer with an easy to use and accessible introduction ... for the regular jazz collector it is the first truly comprehensive and critical reference source (of its kind)'
Sinan Carter Savaskan, The Times Educational Supplement

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Richard Cook was born in Kew and spent virtually all of his life in or around that part of London. An early passion for record collecting helped push him towards jazz and both interests endured. He got paid for a piece of music writing in 1979 and was so impressed that he kept going. He edited the Wire for seven years and was founding editor of Jazz Review; he also wrote for the Sunday Times, New Statesman and Punch at different times and, in addition to the first eight editions of this book, was the author of a 'biography' of the Blue Note label, a study of Miles Davis and Richard Cook's Jazz Encyclopedia, published by Penguin. He also presented a well-liked and thoroughly idiosyncratic jazz programme on London local radio, and made some documentaries for BBC Radio 3; didn't like cameras much, though. Horse racing and malt whisky were his other passions and the only subjects on which he and his co-author ever disagreed. Sadly, Richard Cook succumbed to cancer in the late summer of 2007. He's greatly missed.

Brian Morton was born in Paisley. He was first published at the age of sixteen and has never stopped, though he has also worked as an academic, a newspaper journalist and a broadcaster on BBC Radios 3 and 4, and on BBC Radio Scotland, where he presented a daily arts programme for eight years. Jazz and improvisation gradually won out over other musical enthusiasms. Writing gradually won out over playing, and his improvising ensembles The Golden Horde, Phlogiston and People Without Government are now a distant memory. He lives with his wife, the landscape photographer Sarah MacDonald, and son John on a small farm in the west of Scotland. His older girls Fiona and Alice are there much of the time, too. Unlike Mr Cook, who was a devoted Islay malt man, Morton favours the great Speysides. With a good few drops of gypsy blood in his veins, he reckons he's a better judge of horseflesh, too. He misses the arguments.

The Penguin Guide to Jazz Recordings

Richard Cook
Brian Morton

Ninth Edition

PENGUIN BOOKS

PENGUIN BOOKS

Published by the Penguin Group
Penguin Books Ltd, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England
Penguin Group (USA) Inc., 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014, USA
Penguin Group (Canada), 90 Eglinton Avenue East, Suite 700, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M4P 2Y3
(a division of Pearson Penguin Canada Inc.)
Penguin Ireland, 25 St Stephen's Green, Dublin 2, Ireland (a division of Penguin Books Ltd)
Penguin Group (Australia), 250 Camberwell Road, Camberwell, Victoria 3124, Australia
(a division of Pearson Australia Group Pty Ltd)
Penguin Books India Pvt Ltd, 11 Community Centre, Panchsheel Park, New Delhi – 110 017, India
Penguin Group (NZ), 67 Apollo Drive, Rosedale, North Shore 0632, New Zealand
(a division of Pearson New Zealand Ltd)
Penguin Books (South Africa) (Pty) Ltd, 24 Sturdee Avenue, Rosebank, Johannesburg 2196, South Africa

Penguin Books Ltd, Registered Offices: 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England

www.penguin.com

First published 1992
Second edition 1994
Third edition 1996
Fourth edition 1998
Fifth edition 2000
Sixth edition 2002
Seventh edition 2004
Eighth edition 2006
Ninth edition 2008
1

Copyright © Richard Cook and Brian Morton, 1992, 1994, 1996, 1998, 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006; Brian Morton, 2008
All rights reserved

The moral right of the author has been asserted

Designed by Richard Marston
Set in Minion, Grotesque Display and TheSans
Typeset by IDM, France, and Richard Marston, England
Printed in Finland by WS Bookwell

Except in the United States of America, this book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

ISBN 978-0-141-03401-0

Contents

Introduction vii

Distributors xiii

Abbreviations xiv

Jazz Musicians 1

Index 1546

Introduction

Jelly Roll Morton always said he started it; so did Nick LaRocca. Perhaps it was born in New Orleans; maybe it just sort of drifted that way and bloomed there. Either way, jazz has been around since the beginning of the last century, even if it didn't start being recorded until about 1917, when the Original Dixieland Jazz Band first went into a studio. We shall never know what Buddy Bolden, the first 'king' of New Orleans cornet-playing, sounded like, since he never recorded; and many other opportunities were also missed by the American industry. King Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton, both prominent figures before 1917, didn't arrive in the studios until the 1920s; Freddie Keppard, whose band was a sensation in the 1910s, allegedly refused to make records lest anyone steal his sound. In fact, very little significant recording was done in New Orleans, the supposed birthplace of jazz, until the 1940s. So a white band in New York made 'Darktown Strutters' Ball' in January 1917: at that time, they were described on the record labels as the 'Original Dixieland Jass Band'.

Jazz (or jass) has become as widely documented on record as any music. It has rushed through its history – from traditional jazz to swing to bebop to free jazz and back again – in less than a century, and the gramophone has enjoyed the unique position of being able to document it at almost every step along the way. Although many will always hold that jazz is primarily a live music, at its best created in the immediacy of a concert setting of some kind, it has long been disseminated, listened to and argued about via the medium of records. Jazz was, indeed, the first music to be dramatically affected by records. As the 78-rpm medium gave way to the LP format, the confining bonds of the three-minute disc were abandoned and jazz performance became longer, less contained, more multifarious.

It is one of the paradoxes of the jazz life that, although the musicians who play the music are seldom as financially rewarded as their counterparts in rock and classical music, they often get to make many more records. Jazz recordings are relatively economical to produce compared with the studio time which rock and classical records seem to demand. Starting your own label has often been the way by which musicians themselves disseminate their work, and there are many, many entrepreneurial spirits whose eagerness to record and distribute the music has helped to keep the jazz record scene a burgeoning phenomenon. Today, more jazz records than ever are recorded and released, despite jazz's allegedly marginal status.

There is also the matter of some eight decades of 'catalogue' to be reissued. The advent of the compact disc brought new life to many a neglected jazz archive. Most of the major catalogues of the past – RCA's Bluebird, Warner Bros' Atlantic, the great modern archives of Blue Note, Verve and Prestige – have been restored to circulation via CD. As many of the earlier recordings have fallen out of copyright, independent enterprises such as Classics, Frog and Retrieval have embarked on extensive CD reissues of the jazz of the 1920s, '30s and '40s. This has extended to the 1950s: the LP era itself is now (to the consternation of many in the industry) becoming 'available'.

Our aim in this book has been to try to provide as comprehensive an overview as possible of this vast and bewilderingly diverse area of recorded music. Newcomers to jazz are always hard-pressed to know both where to start and where to proceed from there. Most will have heard of Miles Davis's Kind Of Blue or John Coltrane's Giant Steps, two of the most famous jazz albums ever released. But both those musicians have enormous discographies, and this presents a formidable problem to collectors on a limited budget or to those who wish to acquire just a few examples of Davis or Coltrane on record. At the same time, more experienced fans and collectors deserve a detailed summary and evaluation of what exactly is available by both major and minor figures in the jazz field. That is what we've tried to do here.

As in the areas routinely defined by the terms 'rock' or 'classical', the diversity of music covered by the term 'jazz' is extraordinary. Our aim is to list and discuss as many records currently available in the field as possible – but, since jazz itself remains a difficult area to define, this has inevitably led to problems over what to include and what to leave out. Although jazz and blues are inextricably bound up in each other, we have omitted such musicians as Bessie Smith and Joe Turner, even though their records are listened to and enjoyed by countless numbers of 'jazz fans': the blues demands a volume to itself, which should be documented by safer hands than ours (we hope that the long-awaited Penguin Guide to Blues is going to be completed soon!). Singers, too, are difficult to make clear judgement-calls on: the old argument as to what is a jazz singer has never been resolved, and it could be contended that, if we have included Mel Tormé (as we have), then why not Peggy Lee, or Bing Crosby, or Frank Sinatra, all of whom made records of a jazz inclination? Often we have been guided by the nature of the accompaniments, and in some cases we have chosen to include only the jazz-directed output of a particular artist. In the case of Nat Cole, for instance, we've omitted the bulk of his vocal recordings, while his instrumental ones have remained; much the same applies to George Benson. We don't wish to discriminate against an artist seeking pop status, but we try to stick to discussing jazz records.

The advent of 'free music' placed a further strain on jazz classification: the work of such musicians as Derek Bailey may, often at their own insistence, have little to do with any jazz tradition. But the connections between jazz and improvised music are indisputable, and there is no feasible reason to discriminate against free music by excluding it from this book.

It hardly needs saying that it's impossible to include every jazz record from every part of the globe. The sixth edition of the Guide reached a physical limit in terms of size, and for later ones we have had to be ever more selective in terms of what's been included. Even so, literally thousands of new discs have been considered for inclusion. The flow of new material is as prodigious as ever. To those who missed out this time around, our apologies: but the Guide can only get so big. In addition, the increasing bulk of the jazz back-catalogue is another issue. While many records have disappeared from circulation since last time, it is increasingly the practice of major jazz labels such as ECM and Black Saint/Soul Note to keep their entire catalogues in print. But we still try to cover as much of significance as we can out of what was available at the time of our cut-off point. More on this further on.

In situations where there is a big overlap in the reissues of early material, as is now the case with some major artists, we've simply tried to choose the best records to list. Compilations, either of a single artist or of some style of jazz genre, have been flooding out in recent years, as major labels seek to put a bit of fresh life (as they see it) into comparatively quiescent areas of their catalogue. We've omitted many of these, unless they're a really effective piece of cherrypicking.

As usual, we rarely list those records which amount to little more than easy-listening instrumental or vocal music with only the vaguest of jazz connotations. The radio format in America known as 'smooth jazz' includes a great deal of this kind of thing. Many such records have little to do with what we (and most of our readers) understand as jazz – and if that seems an élitist view, we prefer to see it as a pragmatic one. There's a substantial grey area between jazz and contemporary composition: some musicians, such as Fred Rzewski, move freely between these genres, and there are many records – particularly from such companies as Bvhaast – which count jazz as an element (though not perhaps the defining one) in their make-up. On this issue, we've used our discretion here as best we can.

How do we get the records we review? Many companies and indeed the artists themselves are kind enough to send us review copies – although they can all vouch for the fact that this has no bearing on what we think of the music we listen to! Some may be astonished to hear that many, many records were also purchased, across the counter, by ourselves – just as most of our readers do. We like to think that we haven't entirely lost touch with how collectors and fans approach building their personal library of music. But if nobody has sent us a disc, and we haven't been able to lay our hands on a copy, it won't be listed here. If a disc is literally impossible to find, even if theoretically available, it does no kind of service to collectors to give it coverage.

Other discs may have arrived too late for inclusion. Some we have deemed too poor to be even worth listing. Some we may have simply missed altogether. A few of our correspondents take obvious delight in pointing out discs which we've omitted, to which we can only say ... excuse us, but no one's perfect.

One trend of late has been for some of the major labels to issue limited-edition releases – Blue Note with their Connoisseur series, Verve with their Elite Editions. Here and there we have listed a few of these titles, where we think the release is of particular significance and the reader stands a good chance of finding a copy: some 'limited editions' seem to last a long time.

This is designed to be a practical book, to assist our readership in putting together a collection of jazz music which they can enjoy and be proud of. None of the judgements herein is set in stone: further listening and pondering on the music may yield different opinions in the fullness of time, and – as always – here and there assiduous readers may again spot a slight change of opinion from our previous editions. In that respect, we share a characteristic that is surely common to all jazz-listeners: that of living and developing with this music as it continues to evolve and grow. We have tried not to be sentimental about our evaluations: it is all too tempting to overrate some records on the basis that the jazz musician's lot is trying enough without having to endure negative criticism. But the first responsibility of a guide such as this is to the listeners and record-buyers. Building even a modestly representative library of jazz CDs is an expensive business, and even the keenest fan will be able to invest in only a fraction of what is available to them in the current record marketplace. Our primary aim has been to assist in deciding how best to make that choice and to suggest areas of the music which may yield hitherto unrealized pleasures.

Evaluation

While some may consider it iniquitous to define the merits of a record using a star-system, we feel that it's simply the most useful shorthand as a starting point for discussing the disc in question. But we cannot stress too strongly that the reader should consult the text in addition to the star rating for our overall evaluation of the record. We have chosen to make use of between one and four stars: parentheses round a single star indicate that some small reservation prevents our placing it in the higher category. Brackets around all of the stars denote a basic reservation which usually has something to do with the presentation.

* Very fine: an outstanding record that yields consistent pleasure and is a notable example of the artist's work.

(*) An excellent record, with some exceptional music. Only kept out of the front rank by some minor reservations.

 A good, middleweight set; one that lacks the stature or consistency of the finest records, but which will reward the listener tuned to its merits.

(*) Worthwhile things here, but some significant flaws in either performance or presentation tell against it. Maybe for completists of the artist in question only.

 Not good. There are many better records to listen to.

() Awful. A waste of their time and your money.

* Confiscate their instruments.

A few further words on grading. Inevitably, a great many records end up with a three-star rating, which is basically an average mark. By its very nature, this is going to be a populous category. Such records may well provide a lot of pleasure, but they're never going to be part of an 'essential' library. Such a rating might also be considered in the context of the artist in question: a three-star record by one of the giants of the music is likely to be an inferior example of that musician at work, but for many lesser figures, it could be their signature session. As ever, interpret these gradings in tandem with the text.

When push comes to shove, though, we would admit that anyone looking to build an 'essential' collection can pass up anything under three-and-a-half stars without loss of sleep. Life's too short, and CDs are too costly. There aren't all that many discs of two stars or less which we even list, and even then it's more in the nature of a warning than anything else: our space (and listening time) is at enough of a premium to oblige us to dismiss most dross out of hand.

In a very few cases we have chosen to award a special token of merit; in our Guide, it takes the form of a crown. This is to denote records we feel a special admiration or affection for: a purely personal choice, which we hope our readers will deem as such. We hope our readers will indulge this whim.

Core Collection

This book rates thousands of CDs but, modern life being what it is, very few readers can hope to make time for even a significant percentage of the total. With that in mind we have selected some 200 discs which are suggested as a 'Core Collection': a basic library of jazz records which readers on a budget or those who wish for only a small holding of jazz CDs might consider as their first-priority purchases. These are highlighted as such in the text. It is meant as a balanced selection covering every strain in the music; but we anticipate that debate will inevitably rage over what has and hasn't been included in this list!

Recording Quality

Our first concern is with the music itself, and most contemporary jazz records are engineered to the customary high standards which are the norm for the industry; they therefore require little further comment – although, whenever there is some particular felicity or problem with the production, we have noted it as such. Far more important, however, is the question of the remastering of older material for CD reissue. Remastering from 78s continues to be an area which excites controversy, just as it was in the LP era, and numerous issues have caused us disappointment in this regard. Set against this is the magnificent work which has been done by, in particular, the late John R. T. Davies, the doyen of the field. We have attempted to be as scrupulous as possible in our evaluation of this issue. We might also mention that we have frequently discovered many instances when the CD version of even a relatively modern record offers no noticeable improvement over the LP issue: LP-loving audiophiles are a small but vocal minority, and they are unlikely ever to be satisfied with the now-standard format. Overall, however, we are glad to note that, as the CD era has matured, standards of remastering have become much more consistent, and more often than not there is evidence of real craftsmanship in a typical CD reissue.

A good deal of fuss has been made (by the industry) over such new standards as 24-bit remastering. In reality, the 'noticeable improvements' in such editions are a marketing deception. Since domestic CD players are at present still no more than 16-bit, the 'superior' sound is currently converted down in any case.

Pricing

The jazz record business is a global one and, with the rise in internet commerce and international retailing, CD pricing is a far from static issue: the price of a disc in one territory may conflict with its cost as an import in another. As usual, we do not denote whether an issue is full- or mid-price, or indeed at budget. The latter bracket is still a rarity among jazz CDs but, with labels such as Naxos and Proper launching their own series and with many of the major companies releasing compilation series which are at least close to the budget point, it's an increasingly populated area.

Layout of Text

Musician-entries are listed alphabetically.

Here is a typical record-entry:

(*) The Return of Tal Farlow Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 356
Farlow; John Scully (p); Jack Six (b); Alan Dawson (d). 9/69.

The star-rating is followed by the title of the record; its label and catalogue number follow. Next we list the musicians who are playing on the disc, together with their instrumental credits, and – where available – the date of the recording (month/year). All personnel are listed collectively – that is, it shouldn't be implied that every musician listed for a record is featured on every track.

A full list of instrument abbreviations follows this introduction on page. Where there are multiple records in an entry, each change in personnel is duly noted – although, rather than listing the same musicians over again, subsequent details may begin with 'As above, except ...' Sometimes, where there may be some minor changes between complex lists of personnel, we have chosen to say 'similar to above' or suchlike. Where the recording dates span a number of different sessions, as is the case for many compilations, they are listed as, for example, 5/74–10/80. While we've tried to present the clearest possible picture of who recorded what and when, this is a guide, not a discography, and we've attempted to be sensible over the listing of minutiae. We hope our readers will indulge any slight discrepancies of style which may result.

We have tried to be as accurate as possible over listing catalogue numbers, but neither we nor our publishers can be held responsible for mistakes which may have eluded our checking. By and large, we have attempted to simplify the situation as far as possible by concentrating on the 'core' number which most records are assigned. Many CDs now show a seemingly baffling array of digits, but often these refer to bar-code configurations as well as the core number. It has become an industry standard to use the suffix -2 to denote a CD issue. Independent companies often use very simple systems of cataloguing – which we wish the major companies would avail themselves of! Most record companies are seeking to standardize their catalogue-number system to ensure that a worldwide release uses the same central number. Columbia seems to be one of the few which doesn't, necessarily.

We always advise that, when ordering records, readers state in full the title and artist and desired format, as well as the catalogue numbers. Experienced dealers will be able to spot any possible confusion over the number when furnished with these extra details.

Biography

We have again chosen to preface each artist's entry with a few lines – in some cases, no more than a few words – which offer some biographical information, or frequently a simple pointer to the kind of player he or she is. We've no wish to charge into the sort of territory inhabited by the several excellent biographical A–Z jazz works (particularly Richard Cook's Jazz Encyclopedia, also published by Penguin) which are already out there; this is more of a 'sighter' on the artist in question.

Formats: How Would You Like That Packaged

The music industry continues to be a difficult and complex business to try and run. Enormous revenues are still being lost via free downloads and piracy of various kinds. Reluctantly or otherwise, the major companies have now thrown themselves into the download as a source of revenue, and it has been having a major effect on their approach to the selling and marketing of their pop music in particular. The consequences for a supposedly marginal area such as jazz are less easy to evaluate.

This book continues to be about compact discs, first and foremost, and the music they carry. We are unconvinced that this format is either doomed or outdated. It offers the finest sound quality available in the current marketplace, with SACD and even more advanced media building on its strengths. Rival formats, such as iPod, and downloading your music library to your computer's hard drive, are fine as a matter of convenience. But the enormous amount of compression required to effect this means that a great part of what used to be called 'hi-fi experience' is being lost. Hard drives are also susceptible to damage and deterioration: we would hate to think of readers losing their music libraries because of some investment in mere convenience.

Downloads are by now a fact of life, and presumably most of the music listed in this book will soon enough be available for downloading. But the 'album' is still a preferred medium for jazz music: historically, the great jazz recordings remain such iconic albums as Kind Of Blue, Saxophone Colossus, Giant Steps and Point of Departure. Their duration seems uncommonly appropriate for this music, often reflecting the length of a typical jazz performance. And where would we be without cover art and sleeve notes?

Predicting the future is not our business. Like everyone else reading this, we wait to see what will happen next.

Deletions

A book like this can never be as up to date as we would wish. Many records will have appeared since our manuscript went to press, and a number of those listed here may have fallen victim to the deletions axe. Records often stay in circulation even after they have been officially 'deleted': dealers and independent distributors may hold stocks, and a diligent search can often locate a supposedly extinct item. All this will be familiar to experienced collectors, who know how difficult it can be to locate a particular record; but we counsel that a patient reader should try more than one source if confronted with an initial response that a record is deleted and therefore impossible to obtain. For that purpose we have included a list of distributors.

What's In, What's Out?

This edition of the Guide is in some ways the most radically revised version we have ever completed. The seventh edition grew so enormous that we had to lose our index of individual artists at the end. We did not expect the world-wide uproar which resulted from this heinous crime. But in order to accommodate the index's return, we have had to make numerous savings on space.

This has led to a number of things. We have removed many entries which have seemed to stand still in recent years, through the lack of any new releases by the artist in question. Where there has been even a slight doubt about a record's availability, we have been much more ruthless about deleting it from the text. On larger entries, where considerable space is taken up with records which are of little overall consequence or call for only modest appraisal, we have introduced an 'In Brief' section at the end, which we hope tells readers all they need to know.

This has resulted in a somewhat slimmer and definitely fitter book. We know that quite a number of brave souls actually carry the book with them on shopping expeditions; but even taking it off the shelf to consult an entry shouldn't require a bodybuilder's muscles.

As ever, we've tried to offer as comprehensive a coverage as we can of the world's jazz music, both historical and contemporary. It is salutary to reflect that, at a time when some are suggesting that the CD has its days numbered, we have for this edition auditioned thousands of new discs and are receiving more than ever for possible inclusion.

Overview: 2008

As ever in the jazz business, gloom and hope walk hand-in-hand like Tweedledum and Tweedledee. True, the majors still seem less than committed to instrumental jazz (with the usual honourable exceptions), but the doughty presence of independents and artist-led imprints guarantees that new voices are heard and that some careers are consistently documented. The jazz-singer phenomenon continues to deflate like the hot-air balloon it was, despite mistaken attempts on the part of critics (other than ourselves) to pop it like a soap bubble.

The 'CD is dead' editorials continue, and continue to be largely meaningless. Industry insiders have told us that downloads will only represent approximately 10% of the market by 2012, or 12% by 2010. We can't work out which of those is the more pessimistic scenario; either way, we hardly need to dust off the CD obituary just yet, particularly in jazz, where album-length performances and programmes are still best experienced in the more traditional form.

Perhaps in anticipation of a proposed extension of recording copyright from 50 to 90 years, there has been a further vast proliferation of (mostly cheap) reissues which mean that, pace the indifference of the majors, it is still possible to build a collection of pre-LP era jazz without undue difficulty. Don't assume this situation will continue for ever. Some independents already look dangerously overstretched, and the odds are short on the copyright situation changing.

Acknowledgements

After nine editions, we probably qualify for debt relief. Without the generosity and patience of many friends in the jazz business, this project would quite literally be unfeasible. Our special thanks to (alphabetically!): Ann Braithwaite of Braithwaite and Katz, Jim Eigo, David Fraser and colleagues at New Note, Mark Gillinson at Crazy Jazz, John Jack and Hazel Miller at Cadillac, Kerstan Mackness at RiotSquad, Sian Matthews, Scott Menhinick of Improvised Communications, Bill Trythall at Discovery, as well as to all of those at the major and independent labels who continue to send us material and information. It is all gratefully received, as are the many comments and suggestions sent in by our readers, whose sharp eyes sometimes pick up a missing third alto in a 1930s big band and whose sharp ears often direct us to music we might otherwise not have found the time to audition.

For all too obvious reasons, this has been a bittersweet edition to prepare. It might seem strange to thank an absent co-author, but Richard Cook's presence in these pages has never been more strongly felt, nor his example more valued. It remains his book as much as the present author's. Our agent Anthony Goff of David Higham Associates has been, as ever, immensely supportive, as has our gracious editor at Penguin Books, Georgina Laycock, who cracks the editorial whip (but in a good way). Her colleague Ellie Smith took the book from Base Camp to Camp V in Everest terms before handing over to Ruth Stimson, who was warmly welcomed even as we agonized over the attrition rate among production editors! Mark Handsley was typically assiduous, finding missing umlauts in the surnames of Swedish tenor players, transposed numbers in twelve-digit album codes, and all manner of potentially shaming inconsistencies in what is now a vast palimpsest. Ygraine Cadlock handled the inputting of every single item, while Amanda Gordon and Alice MacDonald (unseen by us, but indispensable) oversaw production. Allan Orsnes and the database guys at IDM worked in mysterious ways, but there wouldn't be a book without them.

Richard's widow Lee Ellen Newman gave her blessing, and is blessed in return. Her great spirit and warmth are a part of this book, too. At northern HQ, Sarah was obliged to listen to even more jazz than usual, as were John ('What's that noise, dad?'), Fiona and Alice. Love and thanks to them all.

Brian Morton

Richard D. Cook (1957–2007)

WRITER

Richard Cook wrote professionally about jazz and other music for over twenty years. He worked for NME in the early 80s before becoming editor of The Wire for seven years from 1985. At the same time he was the jazz correspondent for the Sunday Times and a weekly broadcaster on GLR where he hosted GLR Jazz for five years. He was also frequently heard elsewhere on the BBC, scripting and presenting three jazz series for Radio 3, including the acclaimed four-part history of ECM Records. He joined the corporate life in 1992 and was Head of Jazz for Polygram for six years, a post which he decided to leave in 1998 to concentrate on other interests in the jazz business. He also produced three albums for trumpeter Guy Barker, whom he signed to Polygram, and a fourth by the actress Sheila Steafel. He co-wrote and directed the West End production A Sparkling Evening With Caroline Jackson. He was the editor of Jazz Review, the leading British jazz magazine, and was among the world's bestselling contemporary jazz writers. His published books were Blue Note: A Brief History, It's About That Time: The Music of Miles Davis, Richard Cook's Jazz Encyclopedia and eight editions of The Penguin Guide to Jazz Recordings. Only grave illness prevented him from working on the ninth.

♛ Richard Cook: The Incomplete Works

We have no hesitation (as we used to say, rather grandly) in awarding Mr Cook our highest accolade. 'We' and 'our' remain in place, not just editorially but because for fifteen years The Penguin Guide to Jazz Recordings was, and remains, a collaborative project, a shared passion, object of much delight and considerable grouching. The book began in a distant geological era which required the subtitle … on LP, CD & Cassette and continued through the CD revolution, which meant that just about every musician who could play in tune had the wherewithal to issue his/her music (the object of much irritation on Richard's part) and that the immense back catalogue of recorded jazz, some of it on obscure 78s and LPs that only Richard, myself, and a handful of other obsessives owned suddenly became available again.

Richard listened to everything. His expertise in early jazz and swing was matched by a deep appreciation of the avant-garde, though he admitted to falling out of love with improvised music towards the end of his life. If complete freedom seemed to have run its course, jazz based on the blues, on popular song, on an established harmonic language, and on that hard-to-define thing called swing never failed to please him. We both began listening to the music in our fathers' record collections, and started to hear the early jazz classics at a time when we were able to dabble in British free music (heard live in tiny London venues; I saw Richard well before I met him – we were once the only members of the audience at an improv gig, though as Brits of different, though equally diffident, cast we managed not to speak on that occasion), as well as the fusion music Richard later affected to despise, though he did admit to a few mystifying loyalties, like the music of Chuck Mangione.

He listened to everything, and all the time. Whenever I phoned him – and our conversations about the Penguin Guide were increasingly carried out on the telephone after I returned to Scotland in the mid-90s – there would be music in the background. 'Come on, Brian, what was that?' he'd say, as he turned down the hi-fi, and I uselessly protested the unfairness of carrying out a blindfold test on a rural telephone line, given only five seconds of the music to work with.

As both of us dealt with the domestic impact of the CD revolution – he memorably snapped at one colleague who was experiencing conjugal conflict over the number of discs coming home: 'Just tell your wife it's what we do' – we seemed to be listening all the time. I used to joke that Richard's bathroom was wired with better speakers than most people had in their music rooms. He got his own back when, before one of our 'Penguin lunches', he caught me at our street corner rendezvous listening to music on a Discman. He drew the line at that. Only the unwise would recommend an iPod to him.

Our ongoing relationship was sometimes chalk and cheese, and sometimes cheese and cheese. Only T. S. Eliot ever got more excited than Richard about a good Stilton. Richard considered references to Eliot a giveaway of excess education and insufficient concentration on the matter at hand, which was jazz. He listened with a rare intensity. It was an active, never a passive activity. His only advice to budding music journalists was to listen, listen hard and keep listening. If some of the judgements in this book seem glib or offhand, they are based on careful thought, not offhand dismissal or runaway enthusiasm. Some readers have expressed doubts that all the records reviewed were properly auditioned. One American claimed to have 'done the math' and caught us out. His 'math' failed to take into consideration that two guys, listening for a collective 70 years (your biblical lifespan) can get through a lot of music and form some fairly authoritative judgements.

What follows remains very much Richard's book, even though he was too unwell to contribute to this edition. Over the years, we have passed certain entries back and forth, so some of them are now palimpsests ('Palimpsests, Brian? What the * are they?') that represent something between a consensus and an ongoing argument. No one has ever been able to reliably to determine who wrote what. Even the authors. He once called me to remonstrate about the judgement of a Jackie McLean record. 'But I didn't do McLean this time. That was you.' 'Oh, damn.' Where I have disagreed with previously published judgements I have left them in place. Where I have previously failed to share Richard's enthusiasm for a particular artist, I have written about more recent work from his perspective rather than from my prejudice. And if that sounds arrogant, I have even reserved the right to wag a finger when one of Richard's favourite musicians has delivered a less than accomplished recording. Needless to say, if the book retains authority, in large part that rests with Richard. Any mistakes, new or undetected, fall to me.

Richard fought bravely against illness but failed to reach his biblical lifespan. It was the greatest irritation to him that illness and treatment took away his taste for a peaty Islay. This is the first edition of the Penguin Guide whose completion wasn't toasted with a stiff dram, even if that happened in different countries. For me, though, the worst aspect of Richard's untimely death, beyond losing a friend, is that he will hear no more music. Every time another small package lands on the mat I wonder what he would have thought about the latest 'rising star' on saxophone or the latest attempt to recapture the excitement of the Hot Sevens, the Mulligan-Baker quartet, the classic Miles quintet. Continuing to listen on Richard's behalf, and with his integrity and calm judgement my guide has been a privilege, mostly a very great pleasure, and only occasionally an experience akin to drowning in sand. Drinking two glasses of malt as the final pages were sent in was a very bittersweet pleasure indeed, but he wouldn't have wanted me to waste the second one.

Sleep well, big man, and say hi to Pops for me.

Brian Morton

During his time at Verve UK, Richard produced three albums by British trumpeter and composer Guy Barker …

The idea of being signed to Verve just seemed impossible to begin with, but Roger Spence put me in touch with Richard. I'd been playing with Carla Bley's band and as I came offstage in Edinburgh Roger Spence grabbed me, said 'We're taking you to dinner' and persuaded me that it was time to record. Richard was never what you'd call effusive and when we met he spelled out all the problems, not least having to go through all the hoops at a major label – not just Verve UK, but Verve in France and the USA as well, so I thought 'This is never going to happen'. But he persuaded me to put a band together, something that was different and international. So I got in touch with pianist Bernardo Sassetti and saxophonist Sigurður Flosason. Richard helped us get a gig and he liked what he heard, but the idea of recording just went backwards and forwards.

Richard didn't have a go-ahead from the label, but he astonished me by saying 'We're going to do it' and next thing I knew we were in CTS studios in Wembley, one of the great studios, long since gone. The guys had flown in, having had it explained that there was no money and no certainty of the contract. Richard was very relaxed in the studio; he just sat and listened, never criticized – he'd just say 'You know what? I think we could just do one more'. That must have been in November. In February, I was working at the Birmingham Ronnie Scott's and I got a call from Richard. 'Come to London'. I said, 'I can't. I have a gig'. 'Come to London'. I took the train down and a few hours later I was on my way back with a signed contract in my hand and an expression that said 'What just happened?'

In The Blue was nominated for the Mercury Prize. At the launch of my next album Time Swing one of the heads of Polygram came up and said 'Would you be interested in doing an album with strings?' Making an album with strings has always been every jazz musician's dream, so I was elated. Richard knew that the record company would want standards, but we talked about doing more unusual material, jazz ballads by Thelonious Monk, Billy Strayhorn and Jimmy Rowles, even an Ornette Coleman medley.

I think the most 'standard' standard in the set was a song called 'Crazy She Calls Me'. Colin Towns did an arrangement, but for some reason the piece didn't feel right in the studio and it was troubling Richard a bit. He thought it was too long and after a bit of discussion he suggested we cut a section out, just go from here to here. It was bit awkward, because Colin and I didn't think there was anything wrong with it, but the next day we did the piece the way Richard wanted and it immediately felt completely different. Something just happened, and all the musicians knew it. Even the introduction sounded different. It just felt fantastic. I went back into the recording booth and Richard was just sitting there with tears in his eyes. He bent his head and said 'That's my favourite track…'

And the last word comes from Roger Spence, who amongst many other things was the co-founder of Jazz Review with Richard

He could have been a diplomat in the age of empire. He was upright, courteous and firm. He was a lover of traditions, but not necessarily the traditional ones. Astute and disconcertingly quick in thought and judgement, Richard could form an opinion or resolve on an action so quickly it could startle, but once he'd set his mind, it would take a strong argument to persuade him to alter it. He was proud of his knowledge and consequent decisiveness, He set high standards, but he was often generous with his encouragement of people who didn't meet them.

It was never like that with jazz. His knowledge of the music was extraordinary, and much of it ready and available for engagement in all manner of debate at the ring of a telephone. I might call him with a question about Boyd Senter, or to enthuse about Fredrik Ljungkvist. He was able to articulate his opinion about both immediately, with reference to recordings, fellow band members, and, sometimes, personal contact. His instinct was always to champion; to highlight the best aspect of a musician's work. However, he stubbornly refused to accept commonly held opinion, recognizing that it was often initiated by commercial interest, rather than musical merit. He saw no reason to elevate artists who enjoyed major record company support above those who were documented in humbler surrounds. He was equally ready to support entire jazz styles, trying to give succour to musicians whose approach might be totally rejected by fashion-makers. Everyone stood equal in Richard's mind – until the music started.

His legacy is level-playing-field jazz criticism; the dispassionate and articulate approach, partnered by the love of all the core virtues. Richard's mind was razor sharp, but his mission was often sensuous pleasure. The nose on a Barolo; the succulence of a kidney; the gut-laugh at one of Tony Troon's prickly jokes in Jazz Review; the glorious paradoxes of Paul Rutherford's obdurate music; the radiant glow of Gunnar Bergsten's horn… his enthusiasms were endless. Looking back, it's hard to remember ever having a disagreement with Richard on musical matters. I'm left wondering if he just inculcated me with his way of listening, and then thinking that if we all applied the same method – an open-minded concentration on the music and none of the baloney that surrounds it – jazz might end up being the one big wonderful world which Richard heard.

Distributors

The following UK distributors may be able to help in obtaining records. We have appended the names of some of the labels they deal with, where appropriate.

New Note Ltd,
The Pinacle Building, The Teardrop Centre,
London Road, Swanley, Kent BR8 8TS
(Tel.: 01332 616 050; Fax: 01332 615658; www.newnote.com).
Concord, ECM, Hep, Label Bleu, N2K, Nagel Heyer, Stretch, TCB, Timeless, Tutu, Zephyr

Harmonia Mundi UK Ltd,
45 Vyner Street, London E2 9DQ
(Tel.: 020 8709 9509; info.uk@harmoniamundi.com).
Black Saint, Emanem, Flapper, hatOLOGY, Soul Note, Winter & Winter

Cadillac Distribution,
15 King's Exchange, Tileyard Road, London N7 9AH (Tel.: 020 7619 9111; Fax: 020 7619 0901; email john@cadillacjazz.co.uk).
Arbors, Baldwin Street, Bvhaast, Cadillac, Calligraph, Dragon, FMP, Frog, Geestgronden, Gemini, ICP, Jazz Focus, Jazz Hour, Jazz Oracle, Leo, Matchless, Ogun, PEK Sound, Phono Suecia, Reservoir, Wave

Spotlite,
103 London Road, Sawbridgeworth, Herts CM21 9JJ
(Tel.: 01279 724 572).
Sackville, Spotlite

Discovery Records,
Nursteed Road, Devizes, Wilts SN10 3DY
(Tel.: 01380 728 000; www.discovery-records.com).
Classics, Cool N Blue, Definitive, Fresh Sound, Steeplechase, Stunt, Sunnyside

Proper Music Distribution,
The New Powerhouse, Gateway Business Centre, Kangley Bridge Road, London SE26 5AN
(Tel.: 0870 444 0799).
A, Black Lion, Candid, Challenge, Chesky, Criss Cross, Delmark, High Note, Lake, Proper, Retrieval, Savant

Support your local record shop! However, since mail order is often the only available option for many, we recommend:

Crazy Jazz,
21 Wakefield Road, Northampton NN2 7RW
(Tel.: 01604 716 683 or visit www.crazyjazz.co.uk).

Artists or companies who have records which they feel should be heard by the authors for the next edition are invited to contact Brian Morton via email at: brianjwmorton@onetel.com.

Abbreviations

acc	accordion
acl	alto clarinet
af	alto flute
ahn	alto horn
arr	arranger
as	alto saxophone
b	bass
bal	balalaika
ban	bandoneon
bb	brass bass
bcl	bass clarinet
bf	bass flute
bhn	baritone horn
bj	banjo
bs	baritone saxophone
bsn	bassoon
bsx	bass saxophone
b-t	bass trumpet
btb	bass trombone
c	cornet
cbcl	contrabass clarinet
cbsx	contrabass saxophone
cbsrspn	contrabass sarrusophone
cel	celeste
cl	clarinet
clo	cello
Cmel	C-melody saxophone
comp	composer
cond	conductor
cor	cor anglais
d	drums
elec	electronics
eng hn	english horn
euph	euphonium
f	flute
flhn	flugelhorn
frhn	french horn
g	guitar
gfs	goofus
g-syn	guitar synthesizer
hca	harmonica
hn	horn
hp	harp
hpd	harpsichord
ky	keyboards
kz	kazoo
mand	mandolin
mar	marimba
mel	mellophone
ob	oboe
org	organ
p	piano
perc	percussion
picc	piccolo
picc t	piccolo trumpet
pkt-t	pocket-trumpet
sax	saxophone
sno	sopranino saxophone
sop-cl	soprano-clarinet
sou	sousaphone
srspn	sarrusophone
ss	soprano saxophone
syn	synthesizer
t	trumpet
tb	trombone
tba	tuba
thn	tenor horn
ts	tenor saxophone
uke	ukulele
v	vocal
vib	vibraphone
vla	viola
vn	violin
vtb	valve trombone
wbd	washboard
xy	xylophone

Frøy Aagre

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Talented Norwegian, whose main outlet is the group Offbeat.

 Katalyze Aim 105 Aagre; Flemming Aksnes (frhn); Andreas Ulvo Langnes (p); Tove Margrethe Erikstad (clo); Roger Williamsen (b); Freddy Augdal (d). 04.
 Countryside Aim 118 Aagre; Morten Michelsen (cl); Andreas Ulvo Langnes (p); Kari Ravnan (clo); Audun Ellingsen (b); Freddy Wike (d). 07.

Aagre studied with Dave Liebman, so the resemblance isn't incidental, though inevitably the favoured comparison has been with compatriot Jan Garbarek. She has a strong tone and a vivid touch with melody, and likes to vary the metre imaginatively, as witness 'Thank Heaven For A Tune In Eleven'. A strong start, and a pity that it took so long to make an appearance outside Norway. The second record is largely inspired by that country's landscape, but also the Canadian Rockies. Again, Langnes makes a strong impression, with his spiky, percussive accents and rolling chords. The guest horns and cellos are used sparingly and to great effect.

Juhani Aaltonen (born 1935)

TENOR AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, FLUTES

Born in Kuovala, he worked in dance bands before arriving in Helsinki in 1961. 'Junnu' came to wider prominence with Edward Vesala and Heikki Sarmanto, but in the '90s worked largely away from jazz before making a return to record.

* Etiquette Love LRCD 119 Aaltonen; Sakari Kukko (ts); Hasse Walli (g); Jouhani Poutanen (vla); Pekka Sarmanto, Teppo Hauta-aho (b); Edward Vesala (d, syn, v). 3–9/74.
(*) Strings Love LRCD 160 Aaltonen; Seppo Peltola (tb); Esko Linnavalli (p); Rune Gustafsson (g); Ilkka Willman (b); Esko Rosnell (d); Sabu Martinez, Tapani Ikonen (perc); strings. 1/76.

A distinctive voice in European jazz, his relative disappearance was disappointing, his return a source of great delight. Both of these early sets suffer from dated touches like the electric keyboards, but the music remains compelling. Etiquette is basically a collaboration with the great Vesala. It opens with a brutal dissection of 'But Not For Me', done with Rollins-like authority. The succeeding 'Fountain' is a stinging solo for overdubbed flutes. 'Bhanki' explores some of the territory Garbarek and Rypdal had staked out, but if anything even more fiercely, while the title-piece is an almost ritualistic frenzy for alto saxophone. 'Perhaps' offers a mystifying coda.

Strings is co-credited with composer/conductor Otto Donner (see also below) and is a fascinating showcase for Aaltonen's craggy lyricism pitched against dark, looming string charts. 'Och Det Gar, Det Gar' is another flute tour de force, while the closing 'My Next And Only Love' turns the with-strings jazz ballad on its head, the playing seemingly hewn out of rock, even when the closing measures hint at the American ballad it paraphrases.

* Mother Tongue TUM CD 002 Aaltonen; Ulf Krokfors (b); Tom Nekljudow (d). 10/02.
() Strings Revisited / () Reflections TM CD 003 / 007 Aaltonen; Reggie Workman (b); Andrew Cyrille (d); Avanti! Chamber Orchestra; Henrik Otto Donner (cond on Revisited only). 11/03.

Aaltonen's finest record remains 1981's Prana: Live At Groovy, a stunning trio with Workman and the late Edward Vesala. The trio remains a favourite format and the concert recording with the comeback group is beautifully pitched, bass and drums in shadowy formation behind saxophone and flute. The group is so simpatico that even the later date with Workman and Cyrille is less involving, although there's some tremendous music here, too. On 'Selflessness', Aaltonen muses on Coltrane. This was recorded a day after a strings session which took a fresh look at the classical material on the 1976 Strings record but also included, some new works. 'My Next And Only Love' is again hauntingly beautiful.

Greg Abate (born 1947)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

A New Englander with vast big-band experience who made a late-ish start to recording under his own name.

 Bop City – Live At Birdland Candid CCD 79513 Abate; James Williams (p); Rufus Reid (b); Kenny Washington (d). 7/91.
 Straight Ahead Candid CCD 79530 Abate; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); Hilton Ruiz (p); George Mraz (b); Kenny Washington (d). 9/92.

The first is a breezy session which affirms an interest in bop saxophone. Alto is his main preoccupation, but tenor features on 'Peaks, Beaks' and 'Gemini's Mood' are convincing and the soprano on 'Opportunity' reveals lessons absorbed from Coltrane. Straight Ahead reruns the formula with Roditi as sparring partner, though he's pretty anonymous; the best music is created by Abate and another heavyweight rhythm section.

 My Buddy Seaside 132 Abate; Paul Fontaine (t); Mac Chrupcala (p); Al Bernstein (b); John Anter (d); Donna Byrne (v). 3–12/94.
(*) Bop Lives! Blue Chip Jazz 4001 Abate; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); Kenny Barron (p); Rufus Reid (b); Ben Riley (d). 5/96.

My Buddy is an honest set of originals and a couple of standards, played by a local Rhode Island band. Unfussy but cogent, this won't turn heads but it's satisfying bop. As is the second of the pair, which benefits from an excellent band and Mark Morganelli's pointed production, beautifully clear and lean, with very little reverb. Abate plays alto only and has never sounded tougher or more direct on record.

 Broken Dreams Seaside SSBD 144 Abate; Frank Tiberi (ts); Mac Chrupcala (p); Dave Zinno (b); John Anter (d). 00.

Another impressive set from the local group. Again, Abate rises head and shoulders above his bandmates, sounding more diffuse on three saxophones but still playing with absolute authority and economy.

 Evolution 1201 Music 60132 Abate; James Williams (p); Harvie Swartz (b); Billy Hart (d). 02.

Evolution, indeed. Abate is after bigger than usual game with this, which sounds very much as if the themes were written specifically for the album. The title-track comes first and shows off some intriguing chordal ideas which inform the rest of the record. 'Dreaming In Colour' is a gorgeous development of the basic premise and 'Dearly Departed' (a 9/11 lament) is an astonishing stand-alone. Peters out a little towards the end, but only because the earlier stuff requires time to absorb.

(*) Horace Is Here Koko Jazz Records KJRCD002 Abate; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); Hilton Ruiz (p); Marshall Wood (b); Art Cabral (d). 04.

All the obvious stuff – 'Filthy McNasty', 'Nica's Dream', 'Song For My Father' and 'Peace' – are included, alongside a couple of Silvery ideas from the saxophonist. As a tribute it's very effective and in character, but it also pays tribute to Abate's own musical imagination, which is increasingly revealed as of a very high order indeed. Might be hard to find, but well worth the search.

 Monsters In The Night Koko Jazz Records KJRCD 003 Abate; Art Montanaro (tb); Paul Nagel (p); Bill Miele (b); Vinnie Pagano (d). 05.

This is the kind of set you might expect from Jack Walrath, a self-confessed horror nut. There's a rerun of 'Dr Jekyll & Mr Hyde', with lots of Frankensteins, Draculas, Igors and other Transylvanian nonsense, none of it quite hiding the fact that this is top-notch bop played with enthusiasm and without waste.

Also, in brief:

() Dr Jekyll And Mr Hyde Candid CCD 79715. 11/94.

With Richie Cole (as) on board, but the formula's wearing a bit thin.

 It's Christmastime Brownstone BRCD 959. 97.

A delightful 'holiday' record, with Herb Pomeroy (t) well featured.

() Happy Samba Blue Chip Jazz 4004. 00.

Nicely produced again and featuring the splendid Harvie Swartz (b), but not a major statement.

Tom Abbs

BASS, TUBA, CELLO, DIDJERIDU

Busy figure on the New York scene since the early '90s.

() Conscription CIMP 288 Abbs; Brian Settles (ts, f); Okkyung Lee (clo); Chad Taylor (d, vib). 4/03.

 The Animated Adventures Of Knox 482 Music 1039 Abbs; Alex Harding, Oscar Noriega (sax, cl); Jean Cook (vn); Okkyung Lee (clo); Chad Taylor (d, vib). 05.

Abbs has done string work with the likes of Ori Kaplan and Steve Swell. There's some strong playing on his debut as leader but the music is oddly dissipated and insufficiently prepared. A free-bop piece like 'Conscriptions' needs more in the way of flair and discipline to make it work. 'Turbulence' merely rambles, suggesting that this is a group which simply isn't sure of itself.

No risk of levelling the same criticisms at the follow-up. This is sound-cinema, a biographical study of madness and redemption played off a sequence of videographic cues, which indicated narrative and emotional transitions; a DVD accompanies the set. The band is known as Frequency Response. Again, Lee figures strongly, this time with Cook (and sometimes Abbs) filling out the string-lines, while the two reedmen often seem to act as leaders. Impressive.

Susanne Abbuehl (born 1970)

VOICE

Swiss-born of Dutch extraction, she moved to Los Angeles in 1987 before returning to Europe to study with Jeanne Lee in The Hague.

 April ECM 1766 Abbuehl; Christof May (cl, bcl); Wolfert Brederode (p, hca, melod); Samuel Rohrer (d, perc). 11/00.

 Compass ECM 1906 Abbuehl; Christof May (cl, bcl); Michel Portal (cl); Wolfert Brederode (p); Lucas Niggli (d, perc). 1/03, 10/04.

Her enthusiasms are as deep as they are wide: the poems of e. e. cummings, North Indian music, Berio's Folksongs (where she first heard 'Black Is The Color …', included on Compass), as well as Thelonious Monk (though April's 'Round Midnight' is pretty feeble), Sun Ra, and just about every point in between. 'Where Flamingos Fly' is the solitary jazz standard on the second record, taken from a Ran Blake/Jeanne Lee date, but also played by Gil Evans.

The first record concentrates somewhat on Carla Bley material, including 'A.I.R.' from Escalator Over The Hill, and the peerless 'Ida Lupino'. Abbuehl's lyrics are thoughtful, literary in a positive sense and well-judged musically. Accompaniments are spare and to the point. The second disc is more ambitious and much more focused in approach. Susanne's take on Sun Ra's 'Calling All Demons' is strikingly original.

Ahmed Abdullah (born 1947)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, PIANO, VOCAL

Began almost as a swing stylist, but subsequently followed paths to freedom from the '70s onwards.

(*) Liquid Magic Silkheart 104 Abdullah; Charles Brackeen (ts); Malachi Favors (b); Alvin Fielder (d). 2/87.

 And The Solomonic Quintet Silkheart 109 Abdullah; David S. Ware (ts); Masujaa (g); Fred Hopkins (b); Charles Moffett (d). 12/87.

Abdullah's original inspiration was Louis Armstrong, but his main areas of activity have more to do with the free playing of the '70s and '80s. Dizzy Gillespie and Don Cherry may also have made some impact on his voice. That's clear on the 1987 quartet, which has some lovely, fresh-toned playing from all concerned. 'Liquid Magic' is a trumpet/bass duet inspired by a dancer. It segues into 'The Ruler', which has the two horns working separate lines; there's a further take of this lovely waltz. 'Walk With God', written by a prisoner in the NY correctional system, digs into the blues, but with curious tonalities. 'Reflections On A Mystic' has the leader on piano and very effectively. 'Mayibue' is a wonderful township theme, while 'Ebony Queen' takes an African idea and blends it with something resolutely contemporary.

The second of the Silkhearts is a noisy rammy of a set, with more heat than light. Hopkins and Moffett are a delight, but the horns seem locked in feverish combat and the results are often merely confused. Undoubtedly exciting when it does work, though.

 Dedication CIMP 152 Abdullah; Carlos Ward (as, f); Masujaa (g); Alex Blake (b); Cody Moffett (d). 6/97.

 Actual Proof CIMP 192 Abdullah; Alex Harding (bs, bcl); Masa Kamaguchi (b); Jimmy Weinstein (d). 1/99.

Dedication is his first record in a while. The music tends to be dominated by Cody Moffett (playing his father's kit), and he creates a fine, swinging drive for the big pieces, 'Amanpondo' and 'Song Of The Holy Warrior'. Ward is anonymous and Abdullah lacks much authority as a soloist; but the music has a cheerful, celebratory feel, old-fashioned like a free-bop date of 25 years before.

The spirit of Charles Moffett hangs over Actual Proof as well. Drummer Jimmy Weinstein met the veteran in a Brooklyn store, and then heard Abdullah at Moffett's funeral service. Through a sequence of circumstances, NAM was formed and this record, whose title refers to the Buddhist belief in synchronicity, is the result. Abdullah is in stronger voice and the group is altogether better balanced. A long 'Naima' and Gunter Hampel's 'Serenade For Marion Brown' occupy the heart of the set, though once again Abdullah's interest in the nexus of New Orleans and Africa is a dominant concern. The final 'Song Of Time/Shaka Zulu' is dedicated to the late Fred Hopkins, but the most straightforwardly moving cut is Abdullah's own 'Song Of Tenderness', on which his muted solo floats over a bass-line that old Fred would have loved.

* Tara's Song TUM 009 Abdullah; Alex Harding (bs); Billy Bang (vn); Alex Blake (b); Andrei Strobert (d). 5/04.

Inspired by the birth of a daughter the day after the September 11 attacks on the US, this beautiful set, attributed to Abdullah's Ebonic Tones ensemble, has a quietly swinging grace. The opening cut of Gigi Gryce's 'Sans Souci' is unexpected, in that it evolves into a dialogue between trumpet and drums, with bass rumbling away off to one side. The version of Ornette's 'Lonely Woman' which follows is more highly developed, starting with lovely string interchanges before the main theme kicks in, rooted in Alex Harding's baritone. 'Tara's Song' is a melancholy nursery piece, its plangency perhaps explained not just by the historical circumstances, but the little girl's initial frailty. There are pieces by Monk, two by Sun Ra as expected ('Tapestry' and 'Fate In A Pleasant Mood') and a long version of Abdullah's 'The Cave', which has the intimacy and plainness of some ancient domestic ritual. The coda is 'Iko Iko', a traditional song played with the saucy authority of Sir Rex Lawson of Nigeria. A record of quietly growing authority.

Also, in brief:

 Travelling The Spaceways Planetarts 009. 04.

A fantastic tribute to old employer Sun Ra and performed by Abdullah's Dispersions Of The Spirit Of Ra ensemble. Billy Bang (vn) and Craig Harris (tb) both shine.

Staffan Abeleen (born 1940)

PIANO

Born in Stockholm. His quintet with Färnlöf ran for 20 years.

 Quintets 1961–66 Dragon DRCD 242 Abeleen; Lars Färnlöf (c); Björn Netz ; Lennart Åberg (ts); Göran Pettersson , Björn Alke , Palle Danielsson (b); Rune Carlsson, Bosse Skoglund (d); Monica Zetterlund (v). 4/61–3/66.

To be fair, Färnlöf was the composer with this group as well as the front-man, with a tight, rich cornet sound, but Abeleen's offline, often impressionistic comping and inventive solo ideas on such things as 'Relax/Float Downstream' (15½ minutes!) or 'Maybe Tomorrow' give these fascinating survivals genuine historical interest in the evolution of Swedish jazz.

John Abercrombie (born 1944)

GUITAR, GUITAR SYNTHESIZER, ELECTRIC MANDOLIN, GUITAR MANDOLIN, PIANO

Like several gifted young guitarists, Abercrombie got a professional start – after four years at Berklee – with Chico Hamilton's group, before going on to record with drummer Billy Cobham. His characteristic style, which some would regard as definitive of the ECM label, is limpid and evocative and makes imaginative use of electronic sweetening and extensions. It's hard to pin down obvious influences; Abercrombie is very much his own man.

* Timeless ECM 829114-2 Abercrombie; Jan Hammer (p, ky); Jack DeJohnette (d). 6/74.

 Sargasso Sea ECM 835015-2 Abercrombie; Ralph Towner (g, p). 5/76.

(*) Characters ECM 829372-2 Abercrombie (g solo). 11/77.

All credit to ECM for spotting and signing up the often understated Abercrombie. There's more filigree than flash on the early Timeless, and it's left to DeJohnette (the first of several tough-minded drummers Abercrombie has used as foils) and the underrated Hammer to give the set the propulsion it calls for. It would be unfair, though, to suggest that the guitarist doesn't punch his weight. There is always more to his playing than hits the ear first time around, and this is a session that has grown in stature with familiarity, an altogether tougher and more resilient label debut than anyone remembers. (And if anyone is wondering where Gateway and its successors have gone, may we recommend a quick flip to the G-spot, where this properly collaborative group is now listed separately.)

Sargasso Sea is a very different pile of weed, a winsome, diffident affair on which only the timbral variation of Towner's 12-string and piano figures sustains interest. This is the sort of thing that gave ECM its (mostly) undeserved reputation for unfunky pastel-jazz and, though the album still has its advocates, it's less than representative of Abercrombie's real strengths. If American popular music can be seen as a long struggle between 3/4 and 4/4, then Abercrombie is squarely on the side of the waltzers; 6/8 and 12/8 are actually his most effective settings, but he rations both.

Though an eponymous album was still, for some unexplained reason, some years off, Characters was Abercrombie's most overt manifesto and calling-card, a demonstration of styles and moods and, even at this point in his career, influences too. If they weren't obvious before, Jim Hall and Tal Farlow are evident in the mix, and there's a touch of Wes Montgomery that was to come out again in the '90s trio with Dan Wall and Adam Nussbaum.

 Night ECM 823212-2 Abercrombie; Michael Brecker (ts); Jan Hammer (p, ky); Jack DeJohnette (d). 4/84.

(*) Current Event ECM 827770-2 Abercrombie; Marc Johnson (b); Peter Erskine (d). 9/85.

 Getting There ECM 833494-2 As above, except add Michael Brecker (ts). 4/87.

 John Abercrombie ECM 837756-2 As above, except omit Brecker. 4/88.

* Animato ECM 841779-2 Abercrombie; Vince Mendoza (syn); Peter Erskine (d). 10/89.

By the later '80s, Abercrombie had something of an image problem. In terms of sheer bankability, he had been overtaken by John Scofield, and Bill Frisell's bag of tricks was significantly more capacious. Mercifully, whatever was discussed across the table at ECM (or, more realistically, whatever went on in Manfred Eicher's or Abercrombie's own head), there were to be no career-boosting gimmicks. These albums mark a period of consolidation during which Abercrombie simply dug in and got on with what he was good at. The self-titled record says nothing other than 'Here I am; this is what I do; hope you like it', and if it doesn't quite come up to the strength of Current Event, which introduces two of the guitarist's most sympathetic and responsive partners, it is still a very strong statement. The decision to include standard material – in particular a truly beautiful 'Stella By Starlight' and an unexpected reading of 'Haunted Heart' – was a good one at this point.

Night demonstrated two things: first, that Abercrombie had outgrown the association with Hammer in particular, probably because increasingly he could give those evocative keyboard figures his own spin, using pedals and, later, guitar synth; and secondly, that he never sounds entirely easy in the company of a horn-player whose main strength is rapid-fire changes work. Brecker comes on like the hired gun who takes over the whole show, as he always does, and there's perhaps too generous an allocation of space to both Johnson and Erskine on John Abercrombie, a further hint that the guitarist isn't quite selfish enough to stamp himself on the music (though, to be fair, these albums are among the first to feature ECM's later habit of giving individual group members an opportunity to develop their own thing; it sometimes works, sometimes not).

Animato is interesting in this regard. Though it seems to contradict the point about not needing an effects man any more, it includes in Mendoza a synthesizer-player very like Hammer in general conception and it gives considerable (and justified) prominence to the drummer. However, longer retrospect reveals this as one of Abercrombie's most cohesive and swinging sets. He sounds completely in control of the music, and it is almost axiomatic, given the label concerned, that the production is flawless. This probably wouldn't be most people's desert island choice, but time and the sea-change that followed have given it a new gloss and urgency.

(*) Now It Can Be Played Steeplechase SCCD 31314
Abercrombie; Andy LaVerne (p); Steve LaSpina (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 4/92.
During the '90s Abercrombie flirted with a couple of other labels. The knee-jerk was to turn Jewish mother and declare that he wouldn't get the Eicher and Kongshaug treatment from anyone else, but in fact the rather more homecooked sound on the Steeplechase serves him very well indeed. 'Cat Nap' and 'Waltz King' are both exceptional performances, with LaVerne strongly featured as co-leader.

 November ECM 519073-2 Abercrombie; John Surman (ss, bs, bcl); Marc Johnson (b); Peter Erskine (d). 11/92.
Reconvening the trio with Johnson and Erskine was a masterstroke. Teaming them with stablemate Surman was little short of genius. In keeping with ECM's later policy, this isn't so much an Abercrombie record as a collaborative set that allows all four players to develop ideas. The title-track, though, is for the trio and it is one of the very best things Abercrombie has ever done: moody, faintly bleak but undeniably hard-edged and without sentiment. Johnson's 'Right Brain Patrol', which on his own projects has always seemed slightly winsome and out of focus, emerges here as a compelling addition to the modern repertory, while Surman's contribution to the freely improvised opening number, 'The Cat's Back', suggests strongly that he had familiarized himself with at least some of Abercrombie's back-catalogue before turning up to play. The retread of 'John's Waltz' suggests it's a theme we will be hearing again and, unexpectedly in this context, there is an arrangement of a standard, 'Come Rain Or Come Shine'. Superb, evocative modern jazz. One day, we'll get the out-takes as well.

(*) While We're Young ECM 517352-2 Abercrombie; Dan Wall (org); Adam Nussbaum (d). 6/92.
 Speak Of The Devil ECM 849648-2 As above. 7/93.
(*) Tactics ECM 533680-2 As above. 7/96.
No one expected this to last. It was widely assumed in 1992 that Abercrombie's organ trio – poised somewhere between Wes Montgomery and Lifetime – was a one-off idea, a forgivable self-indulgence that actually worked better than anyone had any right to expect. In fact, its great success largely defined Abercrombie's career in the '90s and very significantly kick-started his playing. The latest of the trio was recorded live at Visiones in New York and it represents a working band who have come to understand each other's needs very well. Nussbaum, like Christensen and Erskine before him, doesn't so much drive the thing along as provide injections of fuel when they are needed. There are signs that much of the material on the second album was written especially for the trio, but perhaps with some pragmatic haste. It must have been fun to play, but there is too little for the listener to get a purchase on. The live album, Tactics, is much stronger: churning but still delicate Hammond shapes, a rock-steady bass, and some of Abercrombie's lightest and most dancing jazz playing.

(*) Open Land ECM 557652-2 As above, except add Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Joe Lovano (ts); Mark Feldman (vn). 9/98.
There was no particular need to augment or spice up the existing trio, which still had lots of mileage, but this was an intriguing collaboration. The revelation of the set is Feldman, who is as fiery and antagonistic in places as Leroy Jenkins or Billy Bang, and he blends brilliantly with both organ and guitar. Wheeler, as ever, has more sinew in his playing than at first appears, and his attack is notably sharper and more plosive here than in his usual guest-musician mode. The slight disappointment is Lovano, who very much sounds as though he's around for a casual sit-in; Joe never plays badly or with less than imagination, but there's no fire to his work. Both the title-track and 'Free Piece Suite' are quite free in conception, and Wall's open-ended dissonances leave any amount of room for imaginative improvisation. Like most current ECM sets, this feels very much like a collaborative project rather than leader-plus-group; but Abercrombie does seem firmly, quietly in charge here, steering the performances in his distinctive, hard to define way.

(*) The Hudson Project Stretch 9024 Abercrombie; Bob Mintzer (ts); John Patitucci (b); Peter Erskine (d). 99.
Classic jazz from these masters, sensitively produced by Paul Siegel and label boss Chick Corea. Our only reservation is that the record somewhat lacks light and shade. Abercrombie's two compositions are the most upbeat and buoyant on the set, bracketed by Mintzer's 'Runferyerlife' and 'Modern Day Tuba'. John's 'Little Swing' shows how comfortably he remains in possession of a classic jazz guitar idiom, while his solos on 'Cats & Kittens' and 'Well', composed by Erskine and Patitucci respectively, suggest once again how much wit and humour there is in his playing.

 Cat'N'Mouse ECM 014001-2 Abercrombie; Mark Feldman (vn); Marc Johnson (b); Joey Baron (d). 12/00.
A quietly beautiful record. 'A Nice Idea' opens the record with softly brushed figures from Baron, ensembles and exchanges between Abercrombie and Feldman (who sound like two wisely passionate old philosophers) and some notably earthbound and focused playing from Johnson. 'Convolution' moves the music some way towards abstraction, as do the collectively improvised 'Third Stream Samba' and 'Show Of Hands', but it's that second track's edgy detail that shows how sympathetic and responsive a group this is, and when Abercrombie rocks out the final two minutes they're with him every inch.

John sounds in great form, but it's very often the fiddle that cuts through the mix to make the most emphatic statements. The more obviously processed lines work better than the cleaner, acoustic-sounding passages, but the production is in no way at fault. Manfred Eicher and engineer James Farber have found a sound-balance ideally suited to this extraordinary group and a thoroughly satisfying performance.

* Class Trip ECM 038118-2 As above. 2/03.
John and Manfred Eicher were right to give this quartet another turn in the studio. As with the previous date, it's quiet, thoughtful, and about as remote from the current axis of American jazz guitar (Scofield–Metheny) as the one non-original, Bela Bartók's 'Soldier's Song'. But it's still four American guys in a New York studio, and the playing is informed by many traditions. As gentle as many of the pieces are, the session feels like it works at a steady lilt, and Abercrombie's fascination with waltz-time seems to run through most of it, even when they're playing in a different metre. 'Dansir' is a lovely start, and the closing improvisation is a surprisingly tart finale.

* Structures Chesky 317 Abercrombie; Eddie Gomez (b); Gene Jackson (d). 3/06.
David Chesky's sessions are widely admired for good, natural sound, and for this one engineer Rich Eckerle grouped the trio round a single microphone, capturing a very immediate, intimate sound. It's Jackson who obviously has to do most to accommodate, and he uses his brushes much more than usual. Abercrombie seems keen to consolidate his reputation as a strong mainstream/standards player and 'The Touch Of Your Lips' is a standout here, though very largely for Gomez's lovely intro. Sometimes a dull soloist, the bass-player opens with bow and only starts to pick his notes once the track is under way. 'Moon And Sand' immediately follows, an absolute highlight in Abercrombie's extensive discography, and there are equally good things to come, on 'Turn Out The Stars' (from the Bill Evans book, and so doubtless warmly familiar to Gomez), 'How Deep Is The Ocean' (an Abercrombie favourite, one suspects; it sits well for a guitar-player), together with 'Everything I Love' and 'Embraceable You', which form the centrepiece of a fine set. The originals aren't bad, either, and Gomez's 'Walter Pigeon' serves as a reminder of how elegant a writer he can be. Exquisitely played, but also a model for engineers/producers as to how a trio of this kind can be made to sound if the team is simply brave enough to do it simply.

♛ * The Third Quartet ECM 08584 Abercrombie; Mark Feldman (vn); Marc Johnson (b); Joey Baron (d). 6/06.
This is a great modern jazz record. The interplay between the four men – all distinguished leaders in their own right, of course – is quite uncanny and the set builds to a remarkable climax. There are inklings of great things right from the off with 'Banshee', which starts a process of statement and counterstatement, not just between Abercrombie and Feldman, but also the two rhythm players. There's already a more unified approach in evidence on 'Number 9' and by the time the quartet gets to 'Tres' (these all Abercrombie originals) the group is singing.

Unexpectedly, they break off the run of new compositions with versions of Ornette's 'Round Trip' and Bill Evans's 'Epilogue'. Technically, the former is a tour de force, but the Evans tune delivers an iconic performance. Feldman, magnificent throughout, takes things off in an unexpected direction before Abercrombie steers it back subtly towards the kind of emotional centre that great composition requires. There are a couple more numbers after 'Epilogue', but if the record had stopped there, our rating would have been no different.

Also, in brief:

 :rarum: Selected Recordings ECM 8014. 74–00.
Valuable artist's selection from sessions for the label, and John has been on more than most.

 A Nice Idea Steeplechase SSCD 31571. 8/04.
A gently swinging duo set with Andy LaVerne (p).

 Alone Together Acoustic Records AC005. 05.
Nice set of duets with fellow guitarist Frank Haunschild. Not essential, but lovely playing throughout.

Lennart Åberg (born 1942)

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Based in Uppsala, he was a founding member of the Swedish Radio Jazz Group from 1966 and also played in the influential Rena Rama.

 7: Pieces Phono Suecia 118 Åberg; Peter Asplund, Bosse Broberg, Magnus Broo, Fredrik Norén (t, flhn); Bertil Strandberg (tb); Mattis Cederberg (btb); Håkan Broström (ss, as, f); David Wilczewski (ss, ts, f); Erik Nilsson (bs, bcl, f); Bobo Stenson (p); Daniel Karlsson (syn); Mattias Ståhl (vib, mar); Palle Danielsson (b); Peter Erskine (d). 11/99, 2/00.
 Up North Caprice 21766 Åberg; Norrbotten Big Band; Bob Brookmeyer (arr). 07.
 Free Spirit Amigo AMCD912 Åberg; Peter Asplund, Palle Mikkelborg (t); Johan Hörlén (ss, as); Daniel Karlsson (p); Christian Spering (b); Peter Erskine (d). 07.
Åberg's music is typically rich and complex with an emphasis on subtle voicings and interlocking scalar patterns, the latter most obviously so here on 'Skalovningar'. 7: Pieces won a Grammy, and it's not hard to see why. Åberg's sequence of larger ensemble records began back in 1977 on Japo with Partial Solar Eclipse and the quality has remained consistent ever since. Also on 7:, 'Ornette Or Not' is a clever brief tribute in an advanced style that might be intended respectfully or might be cocking a gentle snook. The long 'Spiraltrappan' is as winding as the spiral staircase of the title, while '4' and 'Lena's Tune' touch a more meditative and more lyrical side of his musical personality.

Big-band rhythm sections usually garner less attention than the same configurations in a small-group setting, but the combination here of Stenson, Danielsson and Erskine is a major factor in the record's success. The drummer is co-credited – 'with Peter Erskine' – on Free Spirit, with Mikkelborg added to the cover as a special guest. It's a delightful, flowing project with a good deal of the trumpeter's characteristic high-flying stuff in the solo passages and some great work from Erskine as well.

Up North is a suite of pieces co-composed with Brookmeyer. The Norrbotten Band, based up around Lulea, is too good an outfit not to identify the individual players, but MD Tim Hagans has done such a good job that they basically sound like a well-oiled machine. As a fresh statement, it's a cracking record, but its real significance lies in how it continues Åberg's sequence of big-band statements, which constitute one of the finest recent bodies of work from a European instrumentalist keen to work with larger ensembles.

Also, in brief:

 Green Prints Caprice CAP 1276. 10/85, 1/86.
Perhaps the most eclectic of the big-band records, with percussionists Bengt Berger and Okay Temiz guaranteeing a 'world music' tinge.

Pablo Ablanedo

PIANO

Argentinian pianist and group leader.

 From Down There /  Alegria Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 109 / 156 Ablanedo; Avishai Cohen (t on From Down There only); Taylor Haskins (t, flhn on Alegria only); Anat Cohen (ss, ts, cl); Chris Cheek (ss, ts on Alegria only); Jerome Sabbagh (ss, ts); Jenny Scheinman (vn); Juancho Herrera (g on From Down There only); Julio Santillan (g); Fernando Huergo (b); Franco Pinna (d); Ernesto Klar (elec on Alegria only); Katie Viqueira (v on From Down There only). 8/00; 8/02.
Gentle, ruminative music. Ablanedo isn't one of those leaders who wants a band to sound bigger; rather, he keeps the textures uncrowded and has the players working carefully. There are seldom more than two soloists on a track, usually at modest tempo. Mournful minor laments mingle with more upbeat pieces but the feel remains interior and musing and the earlier record seems to have used up a lot of Ablanedo's ideas. The one cover, Strayhorn's 'U.M.M.G.' on the first disc, is seamlessly integrated.

Also, in brief:

 The Sound Of New York Jazz Underground Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 200 CD/DVD. 04
Almost 50 Fresh Sound associates playing originals and arrangements ('Nefertiti', 'I Got Rhythm', 'Giant Steps', Aphex Twin) ably conducted by Ablanedo.

Josh Abrams

BASS

He worked with Town And Country and other downtown ensembles, but is striking into new, delicately nuanced styles.

 Cipher Delmark DG 546 Abrams; Axel Dorner (slide t); Guillermo Gregorio (as, cl); Jeff Parker (g). 03.
An active figure on the Chicago scene, Abrams made his recorded debut with the remarkable Busride Interview. This, though, is a more settled performance. The drummerless quartet features four strong improvisers with projects of their own. Dorner's trumpet-playing veers away from the idiomatic (an impression abetted by his use of a slide), while Gregorio and post-rock Tortoise man Parker are not so much idiosyncratic as driven by a powerful personal agenda. Abrams often plays quietly, with soft brushings of the strings, untoned sounds and percussive clicks. Two studio cuts – 'And See' and the title-track – and the rest from an Empty Bottle gig. This is delicate but not desiccated improvisation, sometimes subtle to a fault but endlessly engaging and far removed from either interpretation of its title.

Muhal Richard Abrams (born 1930)

PIANO, SYNTHESIZER, CLARINET

A Chicago giant, he founded the Experimental Band in 1960 and the legendary Association For The Advancement Of Creative Musicians thereafter. A catalytic figure and profound influence whose own work is underrated.

 Levels And Degrees Of Light Delmark CD 413 Abrams; Anthony Braxton (as); Maurice McIntyre (ts); Leroy Jenkins (vn); Gordon Emmanuel (vib); Charles Clark, Leonard Jones (b); Thurman Barker (d); David Moore, Penelope Taylor (v). 1–7/67.
(*) Young At Heart / Wise In Time Delmark CD 423 Abrams; Wadada Leo Smith (t, flhn); Henry Threadgill (as); Lester Lashley (b); Thurman Barker (d). 7–8/69.
There is no reliable means of measuring 'influence'. If there were, Abrams would sit very high indeed in the canon. Like any catalyst, he seems remarkably unchanged by the forces he has set in motion. He has no 'style' of his own – that is his great strength – but remains a free agent in a current of Black and European idioms, from stride to serialism.

The first Delmark is not untypical of the Chicago experimentalism of the period, except that it seems much less chaotic, much more responsive to structure. It opens in prayerful mood, with Penelope Taylor's wavering vocalese giving way to Abrams's strangely effective clarinet. The lyrical content of the very long 'Bird Song' doesn't work so well, though Jenkins and Jones give the music an almost orchestral depth of focus. Here and on the next record, Barker is unfailingly musical.

Young/Wise combines the definitive Abrams solo performance of the period with group tracks of burning intensity. 'Wise In Time', the piano piece, is a good representation of Abrams's strengths and limits as a soloist. It's packed with powerful striding metres and wonderful left-hand geometries that recall Tatum, James P. Johnson and Bud Powell, but overlain with other languages.

(*) Things To Come From Those Now Gone Delmark CD 430 Abrams; Ari Brown (ts); Ed Daugherty (as, ts); Wallace McMillan (as, f); Emmanuel Cranshaw (vib); Rufus Reid, Reggie Willis (b); Wilbur Campbell, Steve McCall (d); Ella Jackson (v). 10/72.
A ringing assertion of Abrams's belief that musical advancement can only be achieved by observing the lessons of history. In what's best heard as an autobiographical suite, he investigates every conceivable angle and dimension of the jazz and popular tradition, synthesizing ragtime, stride, boogie and bop within a complex free idiom. A complex musical manifesto; a ringing template for the next 30 years of dogged effort.

 1-0QA+19 Black Saint 120017 Abrams; Anthony Braxton (as, sno, f, cl, v); Henry Threadgill (as, ts, f, v); Leonard Jones (b, v); Steve McCall (d, perc, v). 11–12/77.
 Spihumonesty Black Saint 120032 Abrams; George E. Lewis (tb, sou, syn); Roscoe Mitchell (as, f); Amina Claudine Myers (p, org); Youssef Yancey (ther); Leonard Jones (b); Jay Clayton (v). 7/79.
Like many American radicals, Abrams has had to rely until recently on European labels. These two early releases reveal just how adventurous Giovanni Bonandrini was in his signings.

Myers's contribution to Spihumonesty is much more focused than on the later duo set. This drummerless band moves through the charts like information through a printed circuit and there is an impressive simultaneity to some of the cues that suggests a degree of exact preparation. Abrams still isn't a great soloist but like Ellington he has a rare gift for taking and retaining strong personalities and making them part of an overall vision, which he anchors.

The earlier record has a more impressive line-up but a far more conventionally jazz-based sound. Though Threadgill is a less demanding player than Mitchell, Braxton (composer of the title-piece) may well be Abrams's most gifted pupil. The music is complex and scurryingly allusive.

(*) Duet Black Saint 120051 Abrams; Amina Claudine Myers (p). 5/81.

The two pianists simply get in each other's way. Mightn't it have been interesting and involving to programme a piano/organ duet? The duets with Mitchell are all about space, by contrast, and the saxophonist (though it's his flute that dominates here) is a consummate duo performer.

(*) Blues Forever Black Saint 120031 Abrams; Baikida Carroll (t, flhn); Craig Harris (tb); Vincent Chancey (frhn); Howard Johnson (tba, bs); Jimmy Vass (as, f); Eugene Ghee (ts, cl); Wallace McMillan (bs, f); Jean-Paul Bourelly (g); Michael Logan (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 81.

Unaccountably overlooked in previous editions, this is a sparkling big-band date with some demanding charts and a vivid sub-current of the blues. Not all the arrangements come off with equal impact, but when Abrams's vision is matched by the loose but deceptively co-ordinated playing of the band, something grand emerges that is worthy of comparison with Ellington.

 Colors In Thirty-Third Black Saint 120091 Abrams; John Purcell (ts, ss, bcl); John Blake (vn); Dave Holland (b, clo); Fred Hopkins (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 12/86.

This continues an experiment with texture begun on View From Within by building in string-lines. This might be thought to be Purcell's finest hour, but everyone contributes. The basic personnel divides into trio, quartet, quintet and, for the title-piece and 'Introspection', full sextet. Cyrille is magnificent and fully deserves the 'Drumman' dedication..

(*) The Hearinga Suite Black Saint 120103 Abrams; Cecil Bridgewater, Frank Gordon, Ron Tooley, Jack Walrath (t); Clifton Anderson, Dick Griffin (tb); Jack Jeffers, Bill Lowe (btb); John Purcell (ts, f, cl); Marty Ehrlich (as, picc, f, cl); Patience Higgins (ts, bcl); Courtney Wynter (bsn, bcl, ts); Charles Davis (bs, ss); Dierdre Murray (clo); Fred Hopkins (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 1/89.

This marks something of a quantum shift, a move towards something larger and more cohesive in which texture and structure are of equal importance. The spirit of Ellington isn't far away. 'Hearinga' itself, 'Seesall' and 'Bermix' are self-contained and robustly built, though one wishes now and again for a more open-ended approach. The horns might have been given more room to expand, but the rhythm section is faultless and it all starts there.

* Blu Blu Blu Black Saint 120117 Abrams; Joel Brandon (whistle); Jack Walrath (t); Alfred Patterson (tb); Mark Taylor (frhn); Joe Daley (tba); John Purcell (as, f, bcl); Bob DeBellis (as, cl, bcl); David Fiuczynski (g); Lindsey Horne, Brad Jones (b); Warren Smith (vib, tim); Thurman Barker (d). 11/90.

Abrams's best album for some time is almost hijacked by the remarkable Brandon, who has also worked with David Murray. His high, bird-like tones are instantly appealing. 'One For The Whistler' is a tour de force and he contributes strongly elsewhere.

Abrams really gets going as a pianist only on the final 'Stretch Time', leaving most of the foreground to a tonally varied and adventurous band. The title-track is a dedication to Muddy Waters. Fiuczynski's guitar initially sounds out of place, but it settles back into a sophisticated chart which sums up a lot of recent Black music history. Of the brasses, Walrath is the unchallenged star: punchy, accurate and full of drollery. Barker takes control of the engine room. A fine and important contemporary big-band record.

(*) Family Talk Black Saint 120132 Abrams; Jack Walrath (t); Patience Higgins (ts, bcl, eng hn); Warren Smith (vib, tym, mar, gongs); Brad Jones (b); Reggie Nicholson (d, mar, bells). 3/93.

A fine record which transcends individual contributions. Higgins is a somewhat limited soloist, best deployed as a colourist. His tenor spot on 'Illuso' is so forcedly naïve, one wonders if it is a put-on. By contrast, Walrath this time out sounds too knowing, as if trying to distance himself from his confreres. On the long 'DizBirdMonkBudMax' he's poised and at ease, but all wrong on the darker 'Drumbutu', where he simply reworks the co-Gothic effects of his own records. Family Talk really belongs to the rhythm section. The addition of tuned percussion allows Muhal to play quite abstractly when the need arises. His synth work is mainly reserved for introductory sketches and background washes, but it adds an important element to the overall sound.

(*) Think All, Focus One Black Saint 120141 Abrams; Eddie E. J. Allen (t); Alfred Patterson (tb); Eugene Ghee (ts, bcl); David Gilmore (g); Brad Jones (b); Reggie Nicholson (d). 7/94.

Henry Threadgill's liner-notes come in the form of a poem, a free-form rhapsody on hunger, fear, delight, pursuit and language. The music doesn't quite come up to the level of his emotive response, but it's fine, toughly thought-out jazz. Abrams's 'instrument' by now is the whole band. 'The Harmonic Veil' and 'Scaledance' are relatively technical opuses and Abrams has interspersed them with more associative pieces like 'Crossbeams' and 'The Junction'. The title-track is a small-scale classic, a piece of jazz writing which collapses a lifetime of experience into five and a half minutes.

(*) Song For All Black Saint 120161 Abrams; Eddie E. J. Allen (t); Craig Harris (tb); Aaron Stewart (ss, ts); Bryan Carrott (vib, perc); Brad Jones (b); Reggie Nicholson (d). 95.

Again, the presence of a vibist makes a significant difference to Abrams's own approach. He sounds more concerned with colours and shapes than with forward momentum and this is all to the good. Allen is a bouncy, often provocative player, with an old-fashioned attack. Harris is a star of course and blarts out of the ensembles like a boy sticking out his tongue in a school photograph. Stewart is not so much anonymous as easily overlooked, more impressive on each fresh listen.

 The Visibility Of Thought Mutable Music 725052 Abrams; Joseph Kubera (p); Mark Feldman (vn); Thomas Buckner (v); string quartet. 3/01.

With his New World albums gone, there is a gap between the last of the Black Saints and this. It's a curious record, not because it 'isn't jazz' but because it seems to touch too many stylistic dimensions at once. The title-piece is a carefully crafted computer composition which leaves one wishing to hear more in this area. The long closing piano improvisation is a companion piece, but one wonders about the role of the remaining works, which are uniformly enigmatic.

(*) Streaming Pi 20 Abrams; George E. Lewis (tb, laptop); Roscoe Mitchell (sax). 05.

This is a collaborative trio, of course, and one made up of three very different and equally important innovators, but both Lewis and Mitchell owe something profound to Abrams's example and he's very much the senior presence musically. There were no prior discussions about the music played, and at times on the opening 'Scrape' it sounds as if they are going to squabble rather than interact, but after that it flows with impressive empathy and by the end, on 'Streaming', the cues seem almost too good to be true.

* Vision Towards Essence Pl 23 Abrams (p solo). 98.
Recorded live at the Guelph Jazz Festival in Canada, this is a massive three-part improvisation that demonstrates once again that while Abrams is neither the most distinctive nor the most virtuosic pianist around, he has a coherence of vision and attention to detail that make him very special indeed. The first part has tentative moments, areas of slow transition which are slightly dull on first hearing though their logic becomes clearer over time. The other two parts are flawless, A masterpiece by an American master.

Also, in brief:

 Mama And Daddy Black Saint 120041. 12/79.
A strident, brassy project that doesn't sound quite resolved.

 Rejoicing With The Light Black Saint 120071. 1/83.
Again ambitious, but it sounds under-rehearsed and awkward in places.

 View From Within Black Saint 120081. 9/84.
A very personal statement, packed with rich timbres and textures.

Aces Of Syncopation

GROUP

Dutch hot jazz enthusiasts who first convened in 1993.

 Lastic Aces 9610 Robert Veen (ss, as, bs, cl); Tom Stuip (bj); Paul Habraken (sou). 11/96.
 Sidney Downtown 9217 As above, except add Dick Sleeman (tb); Mike Goetz (p). 4/98.
 In The Shade Of The Old Apple Tree Stomp Off 1372 As above, except omit Sleeman; add Arend Huisman (tb); Mike Goetz (p). 5/01.
 Kitano Walk Aces 0310 As for Lastic above. 3/03.
These guys don't do pastiche, or if it is, then it is pastiche of a very high order. Veen has a serious Bechet fetish that comes out on all of these: seven of Sidney's tunes on Lastic, 11 on, uh, Sidney, but just one or two on the later, more varied discs. Interestingly, on the first album, he's often playing those familiar themes on baritone or alto; though those two horns are largely abandoned later, though bass clarinet creeps back in on Kitano, dedicated to Kobe Street Jazz, where the Aces are honoured annual guests. Stuip and Habraken carry metres and syncopations that are as tense or relaxed as the context demands, but never far off the money. Like Paris Washboard, it's a front line without a trumpet, so ironically, but inevitably, it's sometimes the guest players who steal the show. Goetz takes Bechet's 'Jacqueline' as a solo on Sidney, and anchors Veen's tribute to 'Kobe' (these guys also write lovely, idiomatic themes) on the 2003 record. They may look like a novelty act, but these guys take the music very seriously indeed.

Acoustic Ladyland

GROUP

A provocative mix (or collision) of rock and jazz. Critics' darlings.

() Camouflage / () Last Chance Disco Babel BDV 2449 / 2555 Pete Wareham (ts, bs); Tom Cawley (p); Tom Herbert (b); Seb Rochford (d). 10/03, 12/04–1/05.
(*) Skinny Grin V2 1043683 As above, except add James Chance, Coco Electric, Alice Grant (v). 3 & 4/06.
The debut rightly caused tremendous interest. Wareham's interest in Hendrix inspired both the band name and tunes like 'Little Miss Wingate', but it's hard to find the guitarist's influence in an original and dramatic sound. The pieces are cleverly orchestrated, Cawley doctoring his piano to make it work like electric guitar, ravenous solos from both him and Wareham. Herbert's grand sound thickens the mix while Rochford plays anything other than straight jazz time.

The problem with the second is that it strays into indie-rock territory; this is a jazz band that releases singles, after all. The freshness of the debut has been traded for self-consciousness, and there's a chopped-up, thrashy feel to much of it. Skinny Grin is miles better, dark and decadent in its way, distinguished by the group's two finest compositions to date, the opening 'Road Of Bones' and the addictive 'Salt Water', which receives the hip benediction of a Scott Walker mix.

Acoustic Triangle

GROUP

Formed by Malcolm Creese, this British group like exploring large generous acoustic spaces.

(*) Interactions Audio-B ABCD 5012 Tim Garland (ss, ts, bcl); John Horler (p); Malcolm Creese (b). 1/01.

 Catalyst / (*) Resonance Audio-B ABCD 5015 / 5023 As above, except omit Horler; add Gwilym Simcock (p). 8/03; 05.
The debut set drifts towards classical pastures at times – there is actually one transformation of a Ravel theme – but digging in harder on 'Sly Eyes' and 'Winding Wind'. Creese enjoys audiophile sound and the SACD recording (first two at St George's, Bristol, Resonance at Romsey and Dorchester Abbeys) is expansively beautiful, but somehow admirable rather than heartwarming. Garland's features are typically assertive and the trio interaction on 'The Glide' is compelling.

Simcock's arrival doesn't disturb the balance. Pieces by Kenny Wheeler and John Taylor on Catalyst point to a fine British tradition of intelligent pastorale. Nothing as strong coming from the band itself, as yet, though Resonance suggests a growing creative confidence.

Bruce Adams (born 1951)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Grew up in Glasgow and began working the local scene before moving south and staking a corner of the British mainstream as a forthright, ebullient stylist.

 Good Bait! Jazz House JHCD 063 Adams; Dave Cliff (g); Leon Clayton (b); Martin Drew (d). 5–6/00.

 All The Way! Mainstem MCD 0016 Adams; Brian Dee (p). 11/00.

 Always And Forever Woodville WVCD 104 Adams; Dave Cliff (g); Leon Clayton (b); Ralph Salmins (d). 12/03.

Adams is a socking player, whose big range and armoury of licks will appeal to anyone who's a fan of the grandstanding end of the trumpet tradition. At the same time, he likes to mumble away in the middle register at more cooling moments, which gives his playing a certain predictability in the dynamics. It also makes him sound like a cross between Clark Terry and Roy Eldridge with a degree of bop stirred in – impressive, if not particularly individual. Good Bait is a typical live blow, though the ballads have a spoonful of sugar added. The unflappable Cliff was a good choice; an excitable pianist would have overcooked everything. Dee is not prone to excitability and the duo session is an amiable dialogue. The quartet for frequent collaborator Alan Barnes's label works best when the tempos are down – Pat Metheny's title-track is beautifully handled. Adams isn't precise enough to come away from some of the phrases without a stagger and there are times when it doesn't seem to make any difference which of the fast pieces he's playing, but there's plenty to enjoy.

 Spontaneous Combustion Woodville WVCD 117 Adams; Alan Barnes (as, ts, bs); Pascal Michaux (p); Alec Dankworth (b); Bobby Worth (d). 09/06.

The group come in beautifully on Cannonball Adderley's title, almost as if we're watching something smoulder, smoke, spark and then burn. It's done freshly and with imagination. Blue Mitchell's 'Funji Mama' is equally brisk and uncluttered and 'For D.M.' (a farewell to saxophonist Dick Morrissey) has chopsmanship and genuine emotion. There's a suite of pieces apparently commissioned by a fan of the group: interesting writing, but perhaps not individual enough to make much impression. A great listen, all in all, though.

Pepper Adams (1930–86)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE

Park Adams III toured with Hamp in his teens and after army service played in Detroit. Moved to NY in 1958 and worked with Charles Mingus, co-led a group with Donald Byrd and joined the Jones–Lewis Orchestra.

 Quintet VSOP 5 Adams; Stu Williamson (t); Carl Perkins (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Mel Lewis (d). 7/57.

 Critics' Choice Mighty Quinn 1103 Adams; Jimmy Rowles (p); Lee Katzman (g); Doug Watkins (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/57.

 The Cool Sound Of Pepper Adams Sony/Columbia 53524 Adams; Bernard McKinney (euph); Hank Jones (p); George Duvivier (b); Elvin Jones (d). 11/57.

(*) 10 To 4 At The 5 Spot Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 031 Adams; Donald Byrd (t); Bobby Timmons (p); Doug Watkins (b); Elvin Jones (d). 4/58.

Adams came closer than anyone to making the baritone horn congenial in hard bop. He had a solid, slightly dry tone, very different to Mulligan's playfulness or Chaloff's swash and buckle, and had a penchant for headlong solos that conceded nothing to the baritone's 'cumbersome' reputation. The West Coast date on VSOP is unusually relaxed, but features two very typical Adams compositions, 'Freddie Froo' and 'Muezzin'. Formerly on World Pacific, Critics' Choice – Pepper was a Downbeat poll winner – is in similar vein, still quite light in tone and approach. The Cool Sound attempted an interesting experiment, in having McKinney shadow the trombone-lines. It isn't entirely necessary, given how resonant Adams always was, but the big brass fills and warms the ensembles and Jones is full of deft touches.

Byrd was a more frequent partner and New York a regular base, so the Five Spot date already sounds more like the familiar Adams of later years, alternating muscular work-outs like 'Hastings Street Bounce' with clear-headed ballads like 'You're My Thrill'.

 The Pepper–Knepper Quintet Fresh Sound FSRCD 344 Adams; Jimmy Knepper (tb); Wynton Kelly (p); Doug Watkins (b); Elvin Jones (d). 3/58.

Just arrived in New York, Adams was teamed with the young Knepper to produce a blend similar to that on Cool Sound, but with more expressive resonance and mobility. Some of the material is ultra-straightforward, like the bop blues 'Beaubien', but the tone here is unforced subtlety, with some interesting excavations from the American songbook. Knepper's 'Primrose Path' is pleasing.

 Plays Charlie Mingus Fresh Sound FSRCD 177 Adams; Thad Jones (t); Bennie Powell (tb); Charles McPherson (as); Zoot Sims (ts); Hank Jones (p); Paul Chambers, Bob Cranshaw (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 9/63.

Adams led this date with unfussy authority: nine Mingus tunes, a slew of Mingusians (though what was Zoot doing there?!), and a division of forces into quintet and octet, good pocket-size versions of 'Fables Of Faubus' and 'Haitian Fight Song', though 'Better Git In Your Soul' (sic) is comparatively watery. Zoot actually copes rather well.

(*) Encounter Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 892 Adams; Zoot Sims (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Ron Carter (b); Elvin Jones (d). 12/68.

A very good one. Stellar band, full of Detroit homeboys and Sims turned into a failsafe choice as front-line partner. If anything, Jones overdoes the bashing, and the uptempo pieces are a battle, but the horns don't falter at any point. 'I've Just Seen Her' is a fine Adams ballad and there's a choice arrangement of 'Star-Crossed Lovers'.

(*) Conjuration: Fat Tuesday's Session Reservoir RSRCD 113 Adams; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Hank Jones (p); Clint Houston (b); Louis Hayes (d). 8/83.

This live set emphasizes Adams's virtues – the muscularity of sound, oversized tone and plangent phrasing – so decisively that one overlooks any scent of routine in the playing. An unlikely partner, Wheeler adds sparkle and some good material, and Jones is sublimely buoyant.

Also, in brief:

 Out Of This World Fresh Sound FSRCD 137. 61.

Often listed under Byrd's name, this is unexpectedly tender. Nice early glimpse of Herbie Hancock (p) as well.

(*) Urban Dreams Quicksilver QS 5 4006. 9/81.

Rescued from the defunct Palo Alto catalogue and a late, great flowering of Pepper's talent, working with Jimmy Rowles (p) and a great section.

Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (1928–75)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born in Tampa, he taught music and played part-time but was persuaded to try his luck in NY. Joined Miles Davis in 1957 and two years later re-formed a band with his brother Nat, performing and recording almost continuously thereafter. A great popularizer, his soul-jazz kept the music alive during the pop doldrums. A much-loved figure, but his life was cut short by a stroke.

 Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley /  Supreme Jazz Verve 830381 / Membran 223280 SACD Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Jimmy Cleveland; J. J. Johnson (tb); Jerome Richardson (ts, f); Cecil Payne (bs); John Williams (p); Paul Chambers (b); Kenny Clarke, Max Roach (d). 7–8/55.

(*) Sophisticated Swing Verve 528408 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Junior Mance (p); Sam Jones, Al McKibbon (b); Specs Wright, Jimmy Cobb (d). 7/56–3/58.

 Portrait Of Cannonball OJCCD 361 Adderley; Blue Mitchell (t); Bill Evans (p); Sam Jones (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 7/58.

(*) Things Are Getting Better Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 032 Adderley; Wynton Kelly (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Percy Heath (b); Art Blakey (d). 10/58.

 Quintet In Chicago /  Takes Charge Verve 559770 / Blue Note 34071 Adderley; John Coltrane (ts on Chicago only); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 2/59; 4/59.

Long critically undervalued, Adderley's status as a master communicator has grown rapidly since his untimely death. The blues-soaked tone and hard, swinging alto-lines are as recognizable a sound as any in the aftermath of bebop. He did fall back on clichés, but just because he liked the sound of them. There's a lean, hard-won quality to his best playing and much dedication to craft.

The first of these was only his third appearance in a recording studio, yet the confidence and brio are immediately apparent. Intended to flatter and support the front man, there's not much else going on, but even a formulaic setting like the one for 'The Song Is You' gets Cannonball burning. The Membran gives the earlier date (now out of copyright) a shiny makeover.

Working with Miles (see below) brought real cachet and the Adderley dates of this period are marked by a superb supporting cast. There is marvellous sparring with Jackson on Things and 'The Sidewalks Of New York' is an inspired revision which only Ellington's incomparable 1940 version can surpass. Portrait offers Mitchell some welcome limelight and an early glimpse of Evans feeling his way through 'Nardis'. The session with Coltrane is really the Davis group without Miles and it's a bit of good fun, both hornmen flexing their muscles on the blues and a ballad feature apiece.

Verve restored the picture by putting together Cannonball's Emarcy sessions. Sophisticated Swing also includes En Route and Sharpshooters, plus Nat's To The Ivy League. The clipped, punchy format suits the playing, and some of the altoist's freshest music is hidden in otherwise unpromising songs.

CORE COLLECTION

* Somethin' Else

Blue Note 95392 Adderley; Miles Davis (t); Hank Jones (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Blakey (d). 3/58.

Adderley's cameo appearances on Milestones and Kind Of Blue were outclassed by the leader's returning-the-favour on this classic Blue Note, which is sometimes (unfairly) credited to the trumpeter. It's also very much Cannonball's achievement. The long, sublimely relaxed lope through 'Autumn Leaves' is the track every listener remembers, but there isn't a rote moment on the record and the rhythm section take much credit too. The contrast between Adderley's vitalism and Miles's narrow-eyed lyricism is a treat.

 In San Francisco Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 035 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Bobby Timmons (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 10/59.

(*) Them Dirty Blues Capitol 95447 As above, except add Barry Harris (p). 2–3/60.

* At The Lighthouse Capitol 31572 As above, except omit Timmons, Harris; add Vic Feldman (p). 10/60.

(*) What Is This Thing Called Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 801 As above. 11/60.

 Pleyel: Live 10-25-60 /  Paris 1960 Trema 710561 / Pablo PACD 5303 As above. 10 & 11/60.

(*) Cannonball Adderley And The Poll-Winners Capitol 20086 Adderley; Victor Feldman (p, vib); Wes Montgomery (g); Ray Brown (b); Louis Hayes (d). 5–6/60.

Adderley's regular quintet has often been damned with such faint praise as 'unpretentious' and 'soulful'. This was a hard-hitting group which invested blues and blowing formulae with an intensity that helped to keep older jazz channels open at the time of Ornette Coleman, Eric Dolphy and other seekers. Them Dirty Blues debuts Nat's 'Work Song', as well as Timmons's 'Dat Dere'; Harris comes in for four tracks. Duke Pearson's 'Jeannine' is perfect for the group and a few glitches in the remastered sound hardly matter. Crisper than the live In San Francisco, where a lot of solos run out of steam early on, At The Lighthouse, which marked Feldman's arrival, is by contrast a near-classic, opening on the immortal 'Sack O' Woe' and steaming through a vintage set in front of an enthusiastic crowd. What Is This Thing, the Trema and the Pablo are taken from European concerts, the latter two inessential, the former distinguished by a great read of Jimmy Heath's 'Big P'. The Poll-Winners was a typical all-star meeting; no revelations, but how good to be able to hear Adderley, Montgomery and Brown on the one stand.

 Know What I Mean? Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 105 Adderley; Bill Evans (p); Percy Heath (b); Connie Kay (d). 1–3/61.

 Quintet Plus Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 306 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Vic Feldman (p, vib); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 5/61.

(*) In New York / * Jazz Workshop Revisited /  Nippon Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 142 / Capitol 29441 / OJCCD 435 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Yusef Lateef (ts, ob); Joe Zawinul (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 1/62; 9/62; 7/63.

 Dizzy's Business / (*) In Europe /  Lugano 1963 Milestone MCD 47069 / TCB TDE 02032 As above. 9/62–7/63; 3/63.

Cannonball continued to turn out records for Riverside, and while there are no classics here, his own big-hearted playing never falters, though the improvising declines. However, the regimen of touring is beginning to fossilize some aspects. Having stratified bop licks and set the pace for 'soul-jazz', Adderley found there wasn't much left to do but play them again. The quartet date with Evans was almost a last chance to hear him as sole horn, and he sounds fine; Plus brings in Kelly on a few tracks, enabling Feldman to play more vibes. Bringing in Zawinul and Lateef energized the band anew, but the records are disappointing. Zawinul is still no more than a bandsman, while Lateef's exotic touches – an oboe solo on 'Brother John' (Nippon Soul) – are an awkward match for the rest. Dizzy's Business patches together out-takes from the sessions for Nippon Soul and Cannonball's Bossa Nova (see below, 'in brief'); not bad, with the title-track a solidly turned cooker. The Lugano date is just a reminder of how hard this outfit worked and how efficiently that rhythm section ran on the road.

 Live Session Capitol 97934 As above, except add Ernie Andrews (v). 9/62, 10/64.
 Fiddler On The Roof Capitol 42309 As above, except add Charles Lloyd (ts, f). 10/64.
() Domination / () Money In The Pocket /  Mercy, Mercy, Mercy /  Why Am I Treated So Bad /  Radio Nights Capitol 77566 / 77569 / 29915 / Blue Note 356314 / Hyena 9303 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c, t); Charles Lloyd (ts on Radio Nights only); Joe Zawinul (p); Victor Gaskin (b); Roy McCurdy (d); orchestra on Domination only; William Fischer, Oliver Nelson (arr). 4/65–5/70; 3/66; 3/66; 67; 12/67–1/68.
 Inside Straight Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 952 Adderley; Nat Adderley (c); Hal Galper (p); Walter Booker (b); Roy McCurdy (d); King Errisson (perc). 6/73.

Adderley kept on recording until his death and the Capitol holding has an increasingly scrappy, posthumous look to it. Live Session comes from gigs two years apart designed mainly to launch Andrews, who takes charge while the band takes a back seat. Fiddler was a show-based album in a familiar format, again not revelatory but very entertaining. Mercy, Mercy, Mercy and Money In The Pocket are Chicago club sets, the former featuring one of Cannonball's hottest outings, on 'Sticks'. Radio Nights is a well-travelled private recording from the Half Note, entertaining but slightly mechanical. Why was another live-in-the-studio date, well stocked with burners and featuring Zawinul on the Pops Staples title-track.

Inside Straight was a live-in-the-studio session with a late edition of the band: Galper plays smart, probing electric piano, and Booker and McCurdy generate considerable heat. The tunes are a little more severe and sidelong than before and only the title-track is typical Adderley soul-jazz; 'Inner Journey' and 'Second Son' suggest new routes the altoist might have taken.

The most extraordinary record in this group is surely Domination. Both Adderleys feature through a series of monumental charts by Nelson, constructed round material by Ray Bryant, J. J. Johnson and the Cole Porter rarity 'I Worship You'. At the other end of the disc is the elephantine 'Experience in E', scored by Zawinul and Fischer as a kind of concerto for Cannon, who does his best with a tough assignment and once again squashes those belittling 'unpretentious' and 'soulful' tags.

Also, in brief:

 Jump For Joy Verve 528699. 10/55–5/58.
An uneasy strings concept for the first half; better fortune with Bill Russo's arrangements later.

(*) Complete Quintet Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10279. 12/56–2/58.
Basically the same stuff sampled on Sophisticated Swing, plus a few more things from the same period.

 Ultimate Cannonball Adderley Verve 559710. 58–62.
A gracious touch to have Joe Zawinul make this selection from his old boss's work.

 Great Sessions Blue Note 52729. 3/58–10/66.
Somethin' Else, Bossa Nova and Mercy, Mercy, Mercy repackaged at mid-price.

 African Waltz Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 258. 2–5/61.
The simple clarity of the small groups is a casualty of Ernie Wilkins's top-heavy arrangements and big-band setting.

 Cannonball Plays Zawinul Blue Note 597070. 61–71.
Like Ultimate in reverse. Slightly pointless, but enjoyable.

 Cannonball's Bossa Nova Capitol 22667. 12/62.
On Brazilian vacation, with some of the local talent.

() Pyramid / () Phenix Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 952 / Fantasy FCD 790042. 74; 3–4/75.
Two late records. A few modish touches from George Duke (ky) and an ok 'Bess, Oh Where's My Bess?' (Pyramid), some intriguing signs of new direction on the other. Sadly, though, Cannonball died just weeks later.

... and many other compilations and selections.

Nat Adderley (1931–2000)

CORNET, TRUMPET

One of the few modern brass-players to have specialized on cornet, Nat had a sharp, staccato tone in melody statements which could give way to the most unctuous and syrupy of deliveries when he played ballads. He worked with J. J. Johnson and Woody Herman and, most famously, with his older brother, Cannonball, to whom he was an ideal foil.

 That's Nat Adderley Savoy SV 0146 Adderley; Jerome Richardson (ts, f); Hank Jones (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 7/55.
 Introducing Nat Adderley Verve 543 828 Adderley; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Horace Silver (p); Paul Chambers (b); Roy Haynes (d). 9/55.

The Adderley brothers helped keep a light burning for jazz when rock'n'roll was dominating the industry 'demographics'. Neither was ever particularly revolutionary or adventurous in style, but saxophonist Cannonball's enormous personality and untimely death, together with his participation in such legendary dates as Miles's Kind Of Blue, have sanctified his memory with young fans who would have found his live performances rather predictable.

Nat was always the more incisive soloist, with a bright, ringing tone that most obviously drew on the example of Dizzy Gillespie but in which could be heard a whole raft of influences from Clark Terry to Henry 'Red' Allen to the pre-post-modern Miles of the '50s.

Interestingly, the brothers' recording debut was made under Nat's leadership. Introducing is a buoyant, exuberant set created by a band who sound as if they have absolutely nothing to prove. All the tunes are by Nat and Cannonball and some of them – most obviously the opening triptych of 'Watermelon', 'Two Brothers' and 'Little Joanie Walks' – would be standard fare for the Adderleys, together and apart, for years to come.

Though Charlie Parker had been dead for some time and the search was already on for his successor, an accolade that would later settle on Cannonball, he doesn't sound unduly affected by Bird and his phrasing is much more reminiscent of Willie Smith and Benny Carter. Nat was then and remained a musical descendant of the Eldridge–Shavers era and his punchy, precise attack on 'New Arrival' and 'Blues For Bohemia' is a delight. Hard to imagine that when this record was made, the Adderleys were still pretty much unknown. The fact that they managed to assemble such a stellar rhythm section suggests that fellow musicians knew where the action was going to be in future.

The slightly earlier set has much of promise. Richardson plays with unexpected bite and Jones, though a less propulsive player than Silver, brings an unexpected edge and energy to the rhythm section. Three of the tunes are fraternal collaborations, though 'Big "E"' isn't much more than a strident workout for the band.

'I Married An Angel' gives Nat a chance to demonstrate his more romantic side.

 Branching Out Original Jazz Classics OJC 255 Adderley; Johnny Griffin (ts); The Three Sounds, (Gene Harris (p); Andy Simpkins (b); Bill Dowdy (d)). 9/58.

* Work Song Original Jazz Classics OJC 363 Adderley; Bobby Timmons (p); Wes Montgomery (g); Keter Betts, Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes, Percy Heath (d). 1/60.

In the late '50s the cornetist was playing at his peak, and these sessions do genuinely merit the 'classic' tag, though 'original' is probably stretching things a bit. Branching Out is an attractive enough set, but Griff doesn't seem to be the right saxophone-player for the gig, too noisy and rapid-fire on things like 'I Got Plenty Of Nuthin''. Work Song is the real classic, of course, laced with a funky blues feel but marked by some unexpectedly lyrical playing (on 'Violets For Your Furs' and 'My Heart Stood Still') from the leader. Montgomery manages to produce something more enterprising than his trademark octave-runs and hits a tense, almost threatening groove. Timmons is more predictable, but just right for this sort of set; compare In San Francisco (OJC 035), which was made under Cannonball's name.

 Much Brass Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 848 Adderley; Slide Hampton (tb); Wynton Kelly (p); Laymon Jackson, Sam Jones (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 3/59.

Some interesting arrangements here, presumably largely the work of Hampton, and some delicately interwoven playing which largely belies the bluster implied in the title. 'Israel' is gorgeous, as is the closing 'Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child'. Not immediately identifiable as a 'typical' Nat Adderley record, but a beautiful statement all the same.

(*) That's Right! Original Jazz Classics OJC 791 Adderley; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Yusef Lateef (ts, f, ob); Jimmy Heath, Charlie Rouse (ts); Tate Houston (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Jim Hall, Les Spann (g); Sam Jones (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 9/60.

 In The Bag Original Jazz Classics OJC 648 Adderley; Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Nat Perrilliat (ts); Ellis Marsalis (p); Sam Jones (b); James Black (d). 6/62.

That's Right is a bit of an oddity, with Nat's cornet placed in front of what was billed, quite accurately, as the Big Sax Section. Lateef's multi-instrumentalism is kept to a minimum. He leads the ensemble on flute for 'My Old Country' but switches back to tenor for a rich, folksy solo. His oboe doesn't quite work out on 'Night After Night'; back in 1960 there weren't that many soprano specialists around to take a part made for one of them. Heath and Rouse are well featured, taking fine solos either side of Nat and the pianist on Heath's own 'Chordnation'. One of the high-points of a thoroughly enjoyable record.

In The Bag is welcome for a further glimpse of the brothers playing together but isn't specially exciting. Watch out for the little-known Perrilliat, who plays a firm-toned and steady tenor, with some interesting quirks. The CD has added a couple of rather inconsequential bonus tracks.

* Little Big Horn! Original Jazz Classics OJC 1001 Adderley; Junior Mance (p); Kenny Burrell, Jim Hall (g); Bob Cranshaw (b); Mickey Roker (d). 9–10/63.

Nat was still working with his brother's group when this was recorded, and it disappeared from sight surprisingly quickly after first release. Restored, it suggests again what a fine writer the wee man was. There's nothing as powerful as 'Work Song', but 'Loneliness' is an almost archetypal Nat tune and solo, and the penultimate track, 'Roses For Your Pillow', one of eight composed by the leader, is beautifully pitched and harmonized, a ballad worthy of frequent revival. Listening to this after a gap of – in our case – 15 years, it's hard to understand why such a quiet gem has slipped through the net.

 Sayin' Somethin' Atlantic 81222 72393 2 Adderley; Joe Henderson (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Mickey Roker (d). 2/66.

Hearing Nat in the presence of both Joe Henderson and Herbie Hancock provides ample reminder that his approach to hard bop and soul-jazz was one that very much stayed up with the times. His solo on Herbie's 'Canteloupe Island' is simplicity itself, but none the less effective for avoiding over-elaboration. 'Hippodelphia' and 'Manchild' are funky treatments and even the pop tune, 'Call Me', seems to fit the setting comfortably enough. Very dated sound, which remastering hasn't smoothed out. Also now available in digipack accompanied by a liner interview with Nat. Example: Q. What are you saying with the album title, Nat? A. I'm saying nothing. It was Nesuhi Ertegun who picked it ... Hmm.

 Don't Look Back Steeplechase SCCD 31059 Adderley; Ken McIntyre (as, bcl, ob, f); John Stubblefield (ts, ss); Onaje Allan Gumbs (p, ky); Fernando Gumbs (b); Ira Buddy Williams (d); Victor See Yuen (perc). 8/76.

Adderley's reputation as a mainstream traditionalist takes a knock with sets like these. Unfortunately, the results aren't by any means commensurate with the daring of the line-up. McIntyre is an important catalyst in the revoicing of jazz horns but, like a true catalyst, he remains largely untouched by what is going on round him and he solos as if alone. Stubblefield is fierier and provokes some of the leader's best returns of fire. Whatever Onaje Allan Gumbs's qualities, he's patently wrong for this gig, and the rest of the group circle round him somewhat uneasily. A bold effort, but not quite there.

 A Little New York Midtown Music Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1008 Adderley; Johnny Griffin (ts); Victor Feldman (p); Ron Carter (b); Roy McCurdy (d). 9/78.

A resilient and tough-minded hard-bop session, this late-'70s set is distinguished by some expert accompaniment from Victor Feldman and by superb solos from Nat and Johnny Griffin. Vic chips in with an original theme, 'Whipitup', but the bulk of the material, as ever, comes from Nat himself, and of his four compositions the title-track and 'Fortune's Child' are the best. Which means it's an album that peaks too soon, waning in interest after the first few cuts. Very much of its day, it has a brittle register which pervades the playing as well as the recording. Carter is poorly recorded, suggesting that even producer Orrin Keepnews could have an off-day.

 Blue Autumn /  On The Move Evidence ECD 22035 / 22064 Adderley; Sonny Fortune (as); Larry Willis (p); Walter Booker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 10/82; 83.

Viewed as Sonny Fortune records, these are very good indeed. The saxophonist rips through his solo feature on the opening 'For Duke And Cannon' (Blue Autumn) and keeps up a level of energy across both sessions that is only culpable in being so unrelieved and unshaded. Perhaps he sensed that Nat was in poor form. So, disconcertingly so, is Willis, who one always wishes were more widely appreciated. His chording is often quite slack and his solos lacking in weight or presence. Even so, there are things to enjoy here. The rest of the rhythm section is fizzingly good and by the time Blue Autumn gets to 'The Tallahassee Kid', with Nat reeling off his bandmates on a severely edited cut, the impression is of a good, if rather slack, session.

 We Remember Cannon In + Out 7012 Adderley; Vincent Herring (as); Art Resnick (p); Walter Booker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 11/89.

Another breezy live date that could have done with some judicious post-production work to elide some of the sloppier passages. They go into 'I'll Remember April' with a generous swing that promises more than the rest of the set delivers. Again, the saxophonist outshines the boss embarrassingly often. Herring became a regular and his feature on 'Soul Eyes' is easily the best thing on the set. This time, it's Booker and Cobb who seem a bit wayward, though the little-known Resnick has some interesting moments as the album progresses.

 Autumn Leaves: Live At Sweet Basil /  Talkin' About You Evidence ECD 22102 / Landmark 51528 Adderley; Vincent Herring (as); Rob Bargad (p); Walter Booker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 5/90; 11/90.

A now well-established group, with just a touch of the revolving door about the piano chair. It's a fairly conservative programme – or conservative selection from the Sweet Basil dates – with 'Autumn Leaves' and 'Yesterdays' taking up 35 minutes of a set that comes in under the hour. Jimmy Heath's 'Big P' is the repertory opener, a nice enough blowing theme, interpreted fairly loosely. Herring has inherited Sonny Fortune's 'For Duke And Cannon' as his feature and it concludes the disc with the renewed impression that Nat is leaning ever more heavily on his sidemen. He's also leaning a bit heavily on memories of Cannon, who was dead 15 years by this point. 'Talkin' About You, Cannon' has had better performances than on the otherwise OK Landmark disc, which features a nice read of Feldman's 'Azule Serape', but with nothing much to separate these albums, it's hard to make a clear recommendation for either of them.

 Good Company Challenge 70009 Adderley; Antonio Hart (as); Rob Bargad (p); Walter Booker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 6/94.

 Live At The Floating Jazz Festival 1994 Chiaroscuro 334 2CD As above, except omit Hart; add Vincent Herring (as). 10/94.

By the mid-'90s, Nat had become something of an elder statesman of the music and one of its living historians. As the chops faltered, the monologues between numbers tended to get longer, and on the double festival CD the chat outweighs solo playing from the leader at least. His account of the origins of Sam Jones's 'Unit Seven' (heard to good effect on Good Company) has already entered jazz mythology, a hilarious performance, even if after a first hearing one starts to wish for a little more jazz. Most of the serious solo honours now fall to young Herring and to Bargad, both of whom sound poised and confident in such senior company.

Opening with Hank Mobley's 'This I Dig Of You' and Walter Booker's 'Soudade', the Floating Jazz set soon moves in more familiar directions, with fine versions of 'Work Song' and, rather briefly, 'Mercy, Mercy, Mercy'. Nat's most effective feature is his solo on 'Once I Had A Secret Love', on which the tone of the old days comes back ripe and fat and buttery. Bargad is excellent on the Chiaroscuro disc and he is rewarded with inclusion of two new compositions, 'War Zone' and 'Rob's New Tune'.

Hart is a more intuitive soloist than Herring, and his ensemble work is tighter and more obviously integrated with the leader's idiom, and yet he lacks his fellow altoist's simplicity of tone. Producer Hein van de Geyn goes for a plain but resonant sound and he seems to have boosted Nat in places, which is no more than his due.

Also, in brief:

() The Soul Of The Bible Blue Note 53217 72.

Not quite as dismal as '70s concept album Love, Sex And The Zodiac, but close. Given how comfortably Motown and Stax musicians of the time were synthesizing sacred and profane in popular music, the Adderleys' approach is lame in the extreme.

 The Old Country Pony Canyon 30230. 12/90.

Reissued from the original Enja album, this has some strong moments, again largely courtesy of Vincent Herring (as), but also some decent blowing from the leader.

 Mercy Mercy Mercy Evidence ECD 22176. 12/95.

Another exercise in nostalgia with a set-list dominated by tunes from the days with Cannonball. With Hart on alto.

Air / New Air

GROUP

Formed 1971; definitive of the Chicago experimental scene of the '70s, mixing radical free improvisation with the democratic levelling of 'little instruments'.

CORE COLLECTION

 Air Song /  Live Air / * Air Time /  Air Mail

India Navigation IN 1057 / Black Saint 120034 / Nessa NCD 12 / Black Saint 120049 Henry Threadgill (as, ts, f, bf, hubkaphone); Fred Hopkins (b); Steve McCall (d, perc). 9/75; 10/77; 11/77; 12/80.

Air were capable of riveting live performance, but one suspects the intimate, almost hermetic atmosphere of the studio brought out their most characteristic work. The first-ever gig was a theatre performance of Scott Joplin rags as a basis for improvisation. The group placed great emphasis on tightly co-ordinated ensemble work while exploring freedom and the sonic terra incognita represented by Threadgill's alien-sounding automobile accessories. The first of these stands up well (they'd been together for four years by this stage), four longish Threadgill compositions whose quirky deployment of minimal themes gives the trio plenty to work with. The October 1977 live date sounds like a dry run for the group's masterwork. Listening in detail to Air Time's five tracks – two of them very short and one haiku-like piece emerging seamlessly out of 'Subtraction' – helps illuminate the group's language, its vivid exploitation of splintered tempi, deliberately awkward and raucous phrasing, devices from other traditions (Hopkins had studied Burundi musics), and most particularly the use of voiced and pitched percussion.

 Air Show No 1 Black Saint 120099 As above, except omit McCall; add Pheeroan akLaff (d, perc); Cassandra Wilson (v). 6/86.

McCall was a critical presence in the group's first incarnation. No other percussionist of this generation (which includes Milford Graves and Sunny Murray) could sound so far out and so locked into tradition. By contrast, akLaff is almost motoric and lacks the ability to dance around the saxophone splinters. An earlier live record by the new group, also on Black Saint, seems currently unavailable. This latter one, with the addition of Wilson, gains immeasurably from her presence, but seems far removed from the old ethos. Hopkins seems particularly inspired on this date, though.

Noël Akchoté (born 1968)

GUITAR

The young Parisian studied with Chet Baker and Barney Wilen, as well as with fellow guitarists John Abercrombie and Philip Catherine. He has emerged as the European Bill Frisell, a player with a gift for atmosphere and an iron-clad musical understanding.

(*) Lust Corner Winter & Winter 910 019-2 Akchoté; Eugene Chadbourne (g, bj, v); Marc Ribot (g). 6/96–7/97.

It's no great surprise to find this debut album from the young Frenchman dominated by Ornette Coleman compositions. Ornette's liberation of the guitar must have figured prominently in Akchoté's musical education, and he takes to 'New York' (with Ribot), 'Street Woman', 'Peace Warriors' and that magnificent dirge 'Broken Shadows' (with the more abrasive Chadbourne) as if they had been written for him.

The impressive thing about Akchoté is how comfortably he has synthesized the clean-picked single lines of classic jazz with a more contemporary, noise-based approach. A piece like 'Chadology' recalls Frisell's duets with Living Color front-man Vernon Reid on Smash And Scatteration, but with a more graceful and laid-back quality.

Akchoté has greatly impressed as a member of drummer Steve Argüelles's Recyclers group and with Tim Berne's touring band. Striking out on his own, he suggests he's not going to be a sideman for long. Lust Corner is an impressive and confidently understated coming-out.

(*) Rien Winter & Winter 910057-2 Akchoté; Erik Minkkinen (computer); Andrew Sharpley (turntables, sampler). 10/99.

With the exception of the title-track, the pieces on this low-key set are given terse verbs as titles – in English, 'Spit', 'Cry', 'Shout', 'Speak', and so on. It's an odd decision, since the music is so blandly adjectival. Few of the pieces have much structure; the main exception is the closing 'Pousse', which is the best thing on the record and the only occasion when Akchoté seems to be playing straight guitar. Minkkinen and Sharpley (the latter a member of Stock, Hausen and Walkman) contribute interesting sounds and effects but if anything detract from any sense of purpose and direction. If your taste is for easy-going ambient, this may be your cup of tea. We'd prefer coffee.

 Alike Joseph /  Simple Joseph /  Perpetual Joseph Rectangle AM1 / AM2 / AL2 Akchoté (g solo). 00; 01; 02.

These are curious records. Very little happens, rather slowly and mostly quietly. Akchoté uses his amplifier to create an air not so much of dialogue but of a shifting backdrop against which these delicate and enigmatic improvisations are enacted. Tracks are identified by numbers – '3', '00', '101', '202', etc. – and there is no obvious or likely programmatic content. And yet they are subtly involving performances. Even when it sounds as though the guitarist is merely working through some of the technical resources of his instrument and his amplifier, there is a sense of not-quite-definable structure. Things become somewhat clearer on the final record of the trilogy, where the language is highly refined and simplified and some of the mystery evaporates. Impressive, but perhaps too much of an investment – of time, rather than cash – for most listeners.

 Impro-Micro-Acoustique Blue Chopsticks 12 Akchoté; Luc Ferrari (p, etc); Roland Auzet (perc, etc). 2/01.

The result of an invitation from musique concrète pioneer Ferrari to take part in a free improvisation at his Le Muse En Circuit studio. The results are patchy, and somewhat constrained by Ferrari's oddly conventional choice of piano as his main instrument, but these short pieces reveal more and more subtleties with each hearing. Something of a curiosity, but more than worthwhile.

(*) Sonny II /  So Lucky Winter & Winter 910 108-2 / 910 129-2 Akchoté (g solo). 5, 6 & 7/03; 06.

A less predictable sequence of tribute albums you could hardly hope to come across. The first of these is a homage to the late Sonny Sharrock, cast in a mixture of original themes and the American guitarist's own hardcore ideas. 'Dance With Me Montana', 'Dick Dogs', 'Portrait of Linda In Three Colors, All Of Them Black' and 'Black Woman' will be relatively familiar, though not in these spiky and mostly acoustic forms. Filling out the programme are Linda Sharrock's own 'Soon', drummer Daniel Humair's 'Melvins' and, a surprise, Donovan Leitch's 'There Is A Mountain'. Akchoté's raw roots guitar – hints of 'Duelling Banjos' here and there – is not so one-dimensional that it overlooks the subtleties in deceptive material, but it's still a demanding listen.

The second is a tribute to, ahem, Kylie Minogue, an extended love song that seems to meditate on the very nature of love song. It's a gentler album than the first, inevitably, but no less carefully crafted and engaging and it reveals Akchoté once again to be larger and more capacious than almost any subject or style he chooses to tackle. Great stuff, though we unsnobbishly still prefer the Sharrock record.

Also, in brief:

 J'En Doute Encore Stupeur & Trompette 1015. 99.

Interesting guitar-led songs from an artist clearly anxious to spread his wings, but 'Appendice' apart ultimately unconvincing.

 Noël Akchoté & Bruno Meillier SMI 209. 99.

Dismally recorded and musically shapeless duos with saxophonist/multi-instrumentalist Bruno Meillier.

(*) Cabaret Modern Winter & Winter 910 101-2. 1 & 2/03.

Quirky jazz/variety show.

(*) Adult Guitar Blue Chopsticks 13. N.D.

Remarkable career survey of non-chronological pieces, extracts and interview. Includes eavesdropped workshop sessions with the likes of Dave Liebman and Didier Levallet.

Toshiko Akiyoshi (born 1929)

PIANO, COMPOSER

Born in Manchuria, she studied some classical music before the war and moved to the US in 1956 under the tutelage of Oscar Peterson. Met Charlie Mariano at Berklee and they married in 1959. Her second husband is saxophonist Lew Tabackin.

 Live At Birdland / (*) Toshiko–Mariano Quartet Fresh Sound FSRCD 1021 / Candid 79012 Akiyoshi; Charlie Mariano (as); Gene Cherico (b); Eddie Marshall (d). 4/60–10/61; 12/60.

Akiyoshi's playing was based closely but not slavishly on Bud Powell's. The Candid session is forceful and intelligent and the only sign of 'orientalism' is a willingness to mix modes, as on the Mariano-composed 'Little T' and on the closing 'Long Yellow Road'. Recorded with an established band, the set has a coherence of tone which provides Mariano with an impetus for some of his best recorded playing.

The Birdland sets are worthwhile in themselves but they also offer a useful way of judging how the band evolved in its short life. A later version of 'Blues For Father' (introduced by stand-in compère Maynard Ferguson as a new composition) is taken slower than before and Mariano's solo opens on a series of curiously held notes that feed off his wife's accompaniment. Unfortunately, the sound is poor on the later date.

(*) Remembering Bud: Cleopatra's Dream Evidence ECD 22034 Akiyoshi; George Mraz, Ray Drummond (b); Lewis Nash, Al Harewood (d). 7 & 8/91.
Scandalously little of Akiyoshi's huge catalogue remains in print. The Concords have gone, as has most of the big-band work, though some items are still available in Japan, ironically. At least this Evidence set is once again available. Toshiko met Bud in New York in 1964, in the last phase of the great pianist's life. This tribute album is a mixture of Powell originals – 'Parisian Thoroughfare', 'Tempus Fugit', 'Dance Of The Infidels' – with her own 'Remembering Bud', originally written and recorded for orchestra. She maintains a strong rhythmic pattern throughout the session, which sometimes seems to rule out the need for bass and drums altogether. Mraz is the most effective collaborator, adding middle-register fills to her forceful solos, and a magnificent feature of his own on 'I'll Keep Loving You'. Some of her own ideas dissolve into predictability towards the end, but even so, this is a fine set and a reminder of how shabbily the current catalogues are treating a great artist.

Manny Albam (1922–2001)

ARRANGER, BANDLEADER

Started out as a saxophonist but moved into arranging in the '40s, and later education and film work.

(*) The Jazz Workshop Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10250 Albam; Nick Travis, Jimmy Nottingham, Joe Newman, Thad Jones (t); Billy Byers, Urbie Green (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Hal McKusick (as); Al Cohn (ts); Sol Schlesinger (bs); Milt Hinton (b); Osie Johnson (d). 12/55–3/56.

 Jazz New York Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10196 Albam; Bernie Glow, Ernie Royal, Donald Byrd, Art Farmer, Nick Travis (t); Jim Dahl, Tommy Mitchell, Frank Rehak (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Gene Quill, Phil Woods (as); Jerome Richardson (ts, f); Zoot Sims, Gene Socolow, Al Cohn (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Eddie Costa (p, vib); Bill Evans, Dick Katz (p); Milt Hinton, Joe Benjamin, Addison Farmer (b); Osie Johnson, Ed Shaughnessy (d). 4/58–5/59.
Ignored in the first years of the CD revolution, Albam is now better served than ever. The RCA Jazz Workshop now reappears with a handful of bonus tracks, further evidence of Albam's clean, limber West Coast arranging. There are ingenious reductions of 'Royal Garden Blues' and Ellington's 'Diga Diga Doo', and some nice frameworks for Green ('Urbanity') and Brookmeyer. There's no piano, so every horn comes through clearly, and Hinton works his socks to maintain the centre.

Jazz New York is credited to His Jazz Greats, but the emphasis falls mainly on Manny's crisp writing rather than on the soloist. There are lovely versions of the Gershwins' 'They All Laughed' and Bix's 'In A Mist', but Manny's own 'The Nether Regions' puts everything else in the shade. A great chart, worthy of revival.

Also, in brief:

 The Blues Is Everybody's Business Gambit 69211. 10/55–10/57.
Four long variations on a familiar form. Good solo work from Phil Woods (as) and Al Cohn (ts), but hardly demanding stuff and the package is padded.

(*) Jazz Greats Of Our Time Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10118 2CD. 4/57–5/58.
Culled from two (NY/LA) sessions with a strong cast for both. Bonus cuts from Town Hall on disc two with a Cohn rhapsody on 'My Funny Valentine'.

Joe Albany (1924–88)

PIANO

A bebop legend, he was Charlie Parker's room mate for a time. His own career was interrupted by drug addiction and spells in prison and he recorded little until his rediscovery in the '70s.

(*) The Right Combination Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1749 Albany; Warne Marsh (ts); Bob Whitlock (b). 57.
An enigma from first to last, Albany was supposed to be Bird's favourite accompanist, but never recorded with him. This very early date is in fact nothing more than a jam at engineer Ralph Garretson's home, but for all its technical failings it does reveal a remarkable stylist whose touch is reminiscent of both Parker (horn-like phrases in the right hand) and of Art Tatum's complexity. His sense of time is complex and idiosyncratic and the solos teeter with risk. Not too much should be read into this, since these improvisations were never intended for commercial release. Marsh is at his most fragmentary, his tone a foggy squeal, yet between them they create two superb versions of 'Body And Soul', one fast, one slow, and a dreamy, troubled 'Angel Eyes' that is arguably Albany's best recorded work.

 Portrait Of A Legend: Unissued 1966 Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 317 Albany; Leroy Vinnegar (b); Frank Capp (d). 66.
This reappeared after the '70s rediscovery/comeback. It's by no means a wonderful performance or recording, but Vinnegar's distinctive 'walk' gives the material, mostly Parker tunes with a few originals grounded in the blues, some coherence.

 Birdtown Birds Steeplechase SCCD 1003 Albany; Hugo Rasmussen (b); Hans Nymand (d). 4/73.
(*) Two's Company Steeplechase SCCD 1019 Albany; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 2/74.
Rediscovered via the home-made tape that formed the basis of the Spotlite LP Joe Albany At Home, he became a minor celebrity and recorded steadily during the '70s, in both Europe and the US. The better of this pair is Two's Company. NHØP had mixed memories of the encounter. Albany often sounds less radical than merely clumsy and the solo passages are rife with misfingerings.

 Epiphany Blue Jack BJJRCD039 Albany (p solo). 1/76.
(*) Live In Paris Fresh Sound FSRCD 1010 Albany; Alby Cullaz (b); Aldo Romano (d). 77.
A few Albany tapes have continued to turn up. Epiphany was recorded in Hollywood. There's no real epiphany, though Joe's wonky take on 'Au Privave', as well as older stuff like 'Jitterbug Waltz' (his two influences coming close together), 'Woody'N'You', 'There Is No Greater Love' and a slew of other standards is quite intriguing. The Paris date includes a solo section which begins with a densely allusive Jerome Kern medley but deteriorates with a desperate vocal treatment of 'Lush Life' (appropriate enough matter, but hideously done). Cullaz and Romano do the best they can. The sound is flat but not too bad for a private club recording.

 Bird Lives Storyville STCD 4164 Albany; Art Davis (b); Roy Haynes (d). 1/79.
One of the best sets Albany managed to record, in large part thanks to Davis and Haynes. The strong blues emphasis – most of the songs are Parker contrefacts – is quite unvaried but it also keeps Albany's mind on the job.

Alvin Alcorn (1912–2003)

TRUMPET

Led groups in his native New Orleans when a teenager and re-established himself there after successful stints with Don Albert and Kid Ory.

 Sounds Of New Orleans: Volume 5 Storyville STCD 6012 Alcorn; Jack Delaney, Bill Matthews (tb); Raymond Burke (cl); Stanley Mendelson (p); Lawrence Marrero (bj); Chink Martin, Sherwood Mangiapane, Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b); Abbie Brunies (d). 12/52–11/53.
Alcorn was lightly recorded as a leader, and might almost be termed a cool hornman in comparison with his New Orleans peers. His contribution to Storyville's archive series consists of two live dates from Joe Mares's Place and an informal studio session by the Alcorn Jazz Babies, using basically the same personnel. The playing has more spirit than finesse, but Alcorn's controlled lead (he was never much of a soloist) has a certain settled fluency.

 Live At Earthquake McGoon's: Volume 1 / (*) ... Volume 2 GHB BCD-238 / 239 Alcorn; Big Bill Bissonnette (tb); Paul 'Polo' Barnes (cl, as); James 'Sing' Miller (p); Jim Tutunjian (b); Alex Bigard (d). 7/69.
A group of old New Orleanians set down at Turk Murphy's club and played through a stack of old numbers. The music has its ragged edges, but what compensates is a gentlemanly camaraderie very different from the fierceness of much authentic New Orleans playing. Alcorn still sounds better as an ensemble man than as an improviser and Bissonnette's barking trombone can sound overheated; it's Barnes's charmingly old-fashioned alto-playing which is the most distinctive thing.

Also, in brief:

 Gay Paree Stompers American Music 65. 7 & 8/62.
A set shared with Harrison Verrett's dance hall band. Predictable enough, but worth a place in the collection given how little Alcorn is available.

 And The New Iberia Stompers: London 1973–1974 504 Records 64. 73–74.
London dates with Mike Casimir's group. Good recordings; decent performances.

Howard Alden (born 1958)

GUITAR

Cast as a 'young fogey', the Californian began playing banjo in pizza parlours before working in various swing to mainstream outfits and evolving a highly sophisticated personal take on jazz history.

 No Amps Allowed Chiaroscuro 303 Alden; Jack Lesberg (b). 85.
A couple of obscure solo numbers, including Carl Kress's 'Love Song' and John Smith's 'Slow Burning', offer a first proper glimpse of Alden as an imaginative reshaper of the classic tradition. The duos with Lesberg are crisp, if a little slight in improvisational terms. One has the impression that some of these tunes were very carefully arranged and rehearsed beforehand. No harm in that, but it's clear that the more familiar material has an added spontaneity.

() Hand-Crafted Swing /  Seven & Seven Concord CCD 4513 / 4584 Alden; George Van Eps (g); David Stone (b on Swing only); Jake Hanna (d on Swing only). 6/91; 12/92.
Alden's earliest Concords have been deleted. It's interesting to hear him play alongside a man who worked with Eddie Lang more than 60 years ago. Van Eps prefers stately chord-based playing and, while it might not inhibit Alden, he certainly reins in to accommodate the older man. (He also had a 7-string guitar made in emulation; a previous, deleted record was called Thirteen Strings.) The first of these is pleasant, the second dull, too slow and quiet with no rhythm players to egg them on.

(*) Live In 1995 Arbors ARCD 19280 Alden; Dan Barrett (tb); Chuck Wilson (as); Frank Tate (b); Jackie Williams (d); Terrie Richards (v). 1/95.
This was only released a decade on, which is strange because it's a cracking date and, for once, the singer adds to it. Williams's reading of 'Jeepers Creepers' is genuinely inventive, but the star cut of the session is a long interpretation of 'Fascinating Rhythm', cleverly crafted by Alden. 'When Lights Are Low' and 'Savoy Blues' receive similarly extended treatment. For once you wish a label might consider adding a second volume, but we guess this is all there was; pity some of the songs are so abbreviated.

(*) Full Circle Concord CCD2-4788 2CD Alden; Jimmy Bruno (g); Michael Moore (b); Alan Dawson (d). 3/95.
Not released until after Take Your Pick (below) these mellifluous but steely duets with fellow stringsman Bruno will appeal to most guitar followers. Lightweight at first hearing, but the measured touch of both men is a pleasure in itself on the likes of 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams'. Played softly, it makes for very hip easy listening. There is a bonus CD of the Jazz/Concord album cut in 1973 by a quartet with Herb Ellis and Joe Pass.

 Take Your Pick Concord CCD 4743 Alden; Lew Tabackin (ts, f); Renee Rosnes (p); Michael Moore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 5/96.
Was anyone making better mainstream-to-modern records at this point? Another impeccable choice of tunes sets Ellington and Herbie Nichols alongside Berlin and Porter, and Alden's masterstroke is to treat them all on the same terms. When he follows Nichols's 'The Gig' with a gorgeous, unsentimental 'My Funny Valentine' it's clear how thoroughly he's developed his own idiom out of jazz's compositional history. The band could hardly be better. Tabackin's gruff, swinging delivery (flute only on 'U.M.M.G.') sits perfectly next to Rosnes's crackling solos. Altogether thrilling in its calm intensity.

(*) Everything I Love Zephyr ZECD19 Alden; Dave Cliff (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 96–97.
Alden takes a solo guitar feature on George Harrison's 'Something' and typically makes it sound like some old song out of the classic era. This is a familiar enough context now, but Alden has the ability to refresh every new grouping and the recording has a plainness that suits his delivery very well indeed.

(*) My Shining Hour Concord CCD 4181 Alden (g solo). 01.
He's such a consummate group player that a solo disc might have limited appeal. Despite some dryness, familiar stuff like 'The Girl From Ipanema', 'Gone With The Wind' and the title-track are masterfully revitalized. He seems to think about the nuance of every plucked string, without the interpretations seeming merely academic, and with the superb recording the physicality of the instrument is felt more keenly than on the average jazz guitar record.

Also, in brief:

 In A Mellow Tone Concord CCD 2207. 12/00.
Seven-string duets with Bucky Pizzarelli. Elegant but slightly monotonous over the stretch.

 UK4 Live @ Lewes Woolf Notes WNCD 202. 10/04.
Recorded by bassist/producer Simon Woolf with Geoff Simkins (as) and Steve Brown (d). 'Music To Watch Girls Go By' and 'Very Early' stand out.

Charles Alexander

GUITAR

Scottish-born radio producer, magazine editor and distinguished historian of jazz guitar.

 Comparing Notes 33 Records 33JAZZ117 Alexander; Andy Robinson (7-string g).
Alexander has probably listened to every jazz guitar record ever made. His own work is elegant, lightly swinging and thoroughly melodic. 'My Funny Valentine' is nicely pacy and unclichéd.

Monty Alexander (born 1944)

PIANO

There have been many attempts to hybridize jazz and Afro-Cuban music, but relatively few to bring the rhythms of reggae, ska and mento into jazz. Jamaican-born Alexander remains the prime exponent, using steel pans in his Ivory And Steel group and exploiting Caribbean backbeats to a jazz idiom influenced by Nat Cole and Oscar Peterson.

(*) Jamento Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 904 Alexander; Ernest Ranglin (g); Andy Simpkins (b); Roger Bethelny, Duffy Jackson (d); Vince Charles (steel d); Larry McDonell (perc). 6/78.
Kingston-born, Alexander has never quite decided whether he is a Jamaican homeboy, an enthusiastic norteamericano, or indeed a European. He has fronted a style of jazz in which swing is recast in Caribbean rhythms, but also marked out by great formal control. Alexander's substantial back-catalogue reveals an exuberant sensibility schooled by Peterson's characteristic hybrid of percussive attack and lyrical tone, heavy on the triplets and arpeggiated chords, melodically inspired in the main, maximal but controlled.

Recorded in Hollywood, this is one of the best of Alexander's synoptic essays in jazz-plus-reggae/merengue/mento. The presence of the irrepressible Ranglin is some sort of guarantee and the groove the guitarist lays down on 'Sugar Loaf At Twilight' and the closing 'Mango Rengue' is deep and wide enough to ride a bus down. Alexander produced the session himself, and if we have quibbles they have to do with the balance of sound, which is less than faithful to the component parts. Much of the percussion sounds off-stage, and the piano is oddly located in the mixing, seeming to phase across its range. Good stuff of its kind, though.

 Solo Kingston World 2605 Alexander (p solo). 80, 87.
Released in 2005, this affords a valuable glimpse of Alexander's solo style(s) in earlier years. The set closes with three brief 'Boogie Woogie Variations', but it also includes a version of Stanley Meyers's 'Cavatina' from The Deer Hunter and delightful versions of 'My One And Only Love' and 'Mona Lisa'. The originals, including a version of 'Yellow Bird', which is far enough away from the traditional song to merit the composition credit, are swinging ideas rooted in bop and with a strong Caribbean inflection. There's no mistaking who's at work here, but the out-of-sequence release might give a casual listener pause for a moment or two.

 Summer Wind Kingston World 2606 Alexander; Johnny Griffin (ts); Ray Brown (b); Martin Drew (d). 80.
Another valuable find in the archive. What's distinctive here is the headlong swing, which with Griff and Ray Brown in the mix is hardly surprising. Alexander more than holds his own, playing with a stronger bop inflection here than usual but with his own distinctive signatures dropped in wherever possible. He's all over the piano on 'Blues For Groundhog', which opens the set, and it's that which establishes this very much as Alexander's record. He decides to sing on Ray Charles's 'Hard Times', which was a miscall, but a forgivable one. Griffin and Brown play together on an alternate take of 'Put Your Little Foot Out'; an incidental bonus, but one that contributes to a thoroughly enjoyable if slightly one-dimensional set.

 Triple Scoop Concord 2122 2CD Alexander; Herb Ellis (g); John Frigo (vn); Ray Brown (b). 3/82–6/87.
Concord, having lost Monty's services, have been repackaging early albums; Triple Scoop usefully brings together all three Triple Treat albums on a double disc. Kicking off with '(Meet The) Flintstones', followed by a now legendary version of 'Body and Soul', was a masterstroke. Few could resist.

Alexander worked with both Ray Brown and Milt Jackson before breaking through as a solo artist. The vibes were close enough to the steel drums to be familiar, but his approach to the lower end is interesting and untypical and Alexander bassists are often found playing arco, favouring big-toned pedals against which he can punch out sometimes surprisingly complex augmented chords. In the drummerless Triple Treat II, recorded live like its successor, he used the violinist, John Frigo, alongside Brown and Herb Ellis, to similar effect.

Though they were recorded at the same time, III is a more interesting record, and the quartet interpretation of 'My One And Only Love' stands out. The rather lowly rating largely stems from a very poor sound, with everything jumbled together towards the middle.

 Ivory And Steel Concord CCD 4124 Alexander; Othello Molineaux (steel d); Gerald Wiggins (b); Frank Gant (d); Robert Thomas Jr (perc). 3/80.
 Jamboree Concord CCD 4359 Alexander; Othello Molineaux, Len 'Boogsie' Sharpe (steel d); Marshall Wood, Bernard Montgomery (b); Robert Thomas Jr (perc); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 2–3/88.

 Island Grooves Concord CCD2-4940-2 2CD As above.
3/80–3/88.

One of the most interesting aspects of Alexander's career has been his attempt to assimilate the steel-drum sound of his native Jamaica to the conventional jazz rhythm section. In the earlier disc, the new sound is still a little tacked-on and Gant in particular seems slightly uneasy, but the balance of instrumentation is good and Alexander finds sufficient space on Ivory And Steel to rattle off some of his most joyous solos.

Jamboree is a marvellous record, partly because the playing is so good, but also because of the imaginative selection of covers. Bob Marley's 'No Woman, No Cry' and Joni Mitchell's 'Big Yellow Taxi' have not previously figured too prominently in the average fake book; indeed, with the very considerable exception of avant-garde trumpeter Leo Smith, reggae has made remarkably little impact on contemporary jazz. 'Smitty' Smith was an inspired addition on the later date, and he lifts the energy level a further notch. Both are highly recommended, but go for Jamboree. One love.

Island Grooves puts both albums together in an attractive box set, though again the original releases may still be offered for sale.

 Caribbean Circle Chesky JD 80 Alexander; Jon Faddis, E. Dankworth (t); Slide Hampton (tb); Frank Foster (ts); Dave Glasser (as); Ira Coleman, Anthony Jackson (b); Othello Molineaux (steel d); Herlin Riley, Steve Ferrone (d); Robert Thompson Jr, Marjorie Whylie (perc). 6/92.

An extension of his work with Ivory And Steel and the nearest thing to a big band Alexander has mustered so far, this is a jolly, romping session that slightly overplays the Jamaican accent that Alexander jokingly phoneticizes in his sleeve-notes. Credit for the arrangements goes to Hampton. They're characteristically bright and uncluttered, and features like Dankworth's solo on a bluebeat version of 'When The Saints' or Marjorie Whylie's one-woman-band percussion-breaks fit neatly into them. What don't are Alexander's own solos, which tend to go off in odd directions, a bit like his jivey monologues, which you'll find either charming or plain irritating, like the 'Cowboy Ska Melody'. A tribute to Miles called 'Oh Why?' shows the pianist still capable of writing and playing feelingly, but it's exceptional.

 Yard Movement Island 524 232 Alexander; Dwight Dawes (ky); Ernest Ranglin (g); Robert Thomas Jr, Roland Wilson (d). 7/95.

During the '90s, Alexander started to explore a rootsier and less sun-kissed aspect of Jamaican music. Yard Movement is a flawed but powerful record with a punchy, electric sound that suits Monty surprisingly well, especially when he is mixed forward and gated quite sharply on the recording. The legendary Ernest Ranglin is part of the group, chuffing out shuffle rhythms and reggae chords with no apparent effort, and every now and then punctuating a line with what seems to be pure sound, harmonically unrelated to what he's playing. It would be fascinating to hear the rehearsal tapes and alternatives from these sessions; our assumption is that they must be much rougher (in an entirely positive sense) and more exploratory than the rather polished final product. Yard Movement is a more compelling and authentic record than the later tribute to the music of Bob Marley, but it does rely on uneasy stylistic compromise.

(*) Echos Of Jilly's Concord CCD 4769 Alexander; John Patitucci (b); Troy Davis (d). 97.

Thirty years after he first moved to New York from his first exile in Miami, Alexander meditates on the legacy of Jilly's most famous habitué. By the start of the last year of his life, jazz tributes to Frank Sinatra were becoming more frequent. Having played at the club himself, Alexander could claim a closeness of connection few others had and there is something about this session which recalls those years with exceptional vividness. It's partly the nicotine blue of the piano lines, partly the choice of Sinatra-connected material; but more importantly it's an attitude that hovers between aggression and devil-may-care relaxation. 'Strangers In The Night' comes from later in Frank's career, but it's full of that dry, threatening spirit. An exceptional record, from a musician whose shifts of identity and changeable solidarities have done him no favours. This is his most effective turf.

 Stir It Up: The Music Of Bob Marley Telarc 83469 Alexander; Steve Turre (tb); Dwight Dawes (ky); Robert Angus, Daniel Dicenzo (g); Glen Browne, Tony MacKenzie, J. J. Wiggins (b); Troy Davis, Sly Dunbar, Rolando Wilson (d). 99.

 Monty Meets Sly And Robbie Telarc 83494 Alexander; Steve Jankowski (t); Jay Davidson (sax); Handel Tucker (ky); Robbie Shakespeare (b); Desmond Jones, Sly Dunbar (d). 01.

Stir It Up was one of those rare jazz albums that simply flew off the shelves, thanks largely to the composer. It's not, to be frank particularly strong, though there are some excellent set-pieces like Steve Turre's solos on 'I Shot The Sheriff', which is taken at real high-speed pursuit pace and 'Running Away' (ditto). The title-track is very good, and more than one critic has rightly pointed out the debt to Ahmad Jamal. Indeed, the whole set smacks of the pop covers of an earlier day. Pointless to be snobbish about it, but Alexander has created a rod for his own back by combining a jazz trio with the Jamaican members of the Gumption Band, who know this stuff like the back of their hands and aren't going to let some bunch of jazzers steal it away from them.

The acid test was always going to be 'No Woman, No Cry' and it is a very strong performance, with Monty turning in some of his most compelling playing on an otherwise rather anonymous set. Mostly, though, the two rhythm sections cancel one another out and Monty is left to pick over rather unadorned melody lines The album also includes a reworking of 'Could You Be Loved' by the legendary Sly Dunbar who, to his credit, puts heart and sou into his cameo.

The legendary duo return on the follow-up record, which frankly is better because it seems so much less self-conscious Glen Browne produces as if he were making a straight reggae record. Alexander may have managed to get the piano moved a bit forward, but what one hears is the group sound, not an individual solo voice with accompaniment. 'Moanin'', 'Monty's Groove' and the melodica-led tribute to reggae organist Jackie Mittoo (why not on organ?) are beautifully done, and there is a vivid version of '(Do The) Kool Step'. A clever, effective crossover record, with big market appeal, though not perhaps the surprise value of its predecessor.

 My America Telarc 83552 Alexander; Leroy Barbie Romans (ky); Dalton Browne, Derek Dicenzo (g); Glen Browne, Leon Duncan (b); Desi Jones (d); Bobby Thomas Jr (perc); Cat, Freddy Cole, Kevin Mahogany, John Pizzarelli (v). 3–4/02.

Alexander sets out in this one to show what other musica influences fed into his imagination. A reggaefied version of Duke and Harry Carney's 'Rocking In Rhythm' – or 'Riddim' here – underlines that Caribbean influences aren't too far away, while 'Mack The Knife' is probably part of every jazz guy's armoury The more surprising cuts are things like James Brown's 'Sex Machine' and Marvin Gaye's 'Sexual Healing', not tunes that necessarily lend themselves to jazz improvisation. Alexander gives 'The Battle Hymn Of The Republic' a certain sentimental grandeur but for the most part this album feels like a self-conscious playing with styles, saved from cynicism by the sheer verve of the performances, though marred by some ill-judged vocal performances.

 Impressions In Blue Telarc 83578 Alexander; Hassan J. J. Wiggins Shakur (b); Mark Taylor (d). 12/03.
An eclectic set, with Gershwin, Ellington, Rodrigo bumping up alongside originals like 'Eleuthra' and standards like 'I'm An Old Cowhand'. Alexander seems more than ever determined to show that he's not limited to reggae and ska. The effect is slightly grandiose and overproduced, but the rhythm section keep it tight and there is no doubting how well Alexander is playing, accurate but loose-limbed and responsive.

 Rocksteady Telarc 63581 Alexander; Ernest Ranglin, Junior Jazz (g); Quentin Baxter (d). 6/03.
He starts with the soul classic 'Double Barrel' and closes with Marley's 'Redemption Song', so a partial return to the reggae/pop material that has stood him in such good stead. Properly, this is jointly credited to Ranglin and the old master's touch is as good as ever, though sometimes he seems to be working to an entirely different agenda. The rhythm guitarist does some interesting work throughout, but makes this sound even more uncertain in style.

Also, in brief:

(*) Concord Jazz Heritage Series /  Ballad Essentials Concord CCD 4812 / 4903 79–97, 80–96.
The Concord years left an enormous back catalogue of marketable jazz. The Heritage Series disc puts the emphasis on mid-paced swingers and familiar themes, while the ballad selection is inevitably a bit more laid-back and meditative. A superb 'Body And Soul', with Ray Brown (b) and Herb Ellis (g), and a solo reading of 'Estate' are among the standouts.

 Threesome Soul Note 121152 11–12/85.
Alexander makes the most of trio partners NHØP (b) and Grady Tate (d), turning in a sparkling and varied set.

() Goin' Yard Telarc 83527 10/00.
After Stir It Up, Monty was always going to extend the reggae concept. A couple of Marley tunes included here, but the meat of the set is original material, albeit Alexander-by-numbers.

 Live At The Iridium Telarc 83610 5/04.
A fine display of pianism without affectation. The opening 'Work Song' is a high-point, but the calypso stuff is great, too.

Rashied Ali (born 1935)

DRUMS

The former Robert Patterson played R&B in his native Philadelphia before moving to New York, where he became involved in the avant-garde and came within the orbit of John Coltrane, in whose group he succeeded his own greatest influence, Elvin Jones. After Trane's death, Ali continued to work in the master's shadow, developing his little-understood rhythmic ideas. Ali founded his own record label and started his own jazz club.

 New Directions In Modern Music Knitting Factory KFCD 3022 Ali; Carlos Ward (as); Fred Simmons (p); Stafford James (vn). 71.
 Duo Exchange Knitting Factory KFCD 3020 Ali; Frank Lowe (ts). 72.
 Swift Are The Winds Of Life Knitting Factory KFCD 3026 Ali; Leroy Jenkins (vn). 9/75.
No musician has greater title to the legacy of Coltrane. After the iconic encounter of Interstellar Space, he seemed fated – some might say condemned – to work very often in duo formats. Presumably these were also easier and cheaper to record for his Survival label, a well-named imprint that enjoyed a brief but significant life in the early '70s. Thanks to Knitting Factory the catalogue is once again available.

The encounter with Lowe is a valuable recovery. Always an interesting figure, the saxophonist looks as much back as forward, his tenor-playing redolent of the old swing masters as much as of the (post-) Coltrane generation. It creaks a bit over two long tracks, but Ali's fire and concentration hold things together. There are long solo passages, here as on the slightly earlier New Directions, a live date with an intriguing, bassless line-up, but Ward's fiery and beautifully structured solo on 'As-Salaam-Alikum' is a perfect representation of what came to be known as Fire Music, with all of its spirituality as well as intensity.

Swift is a forgotten classic. The unusual instrumentation takes away any temptation to further Trane comparisons. Jenkins is in astonishing form, complex, aery, earthy, ruthlessly direct by turns. All the compositions are his, and while 'The Past' and the title-track, which begin and end the album, have their moments of abstraction, the blues are never far away and on 'The Stomp' the two players go for it in a joyously unfettered way. Short measure, like most of these reissues, for which no unreleased tapes seem to have survived.

(*) Moon Flight Knitting Factory KFCD 3023 Ali; James Vass (as); Marvin Blackman (ts); Charles Eubanks (p); Benny Wilson (b). 8/75.
Intriguing as some of the other Survival records still are, this is probably the only one that stands up entirely on its own terms. Or, realistically, with only minimal support from the Coltrane legend, for versions of 'Naima' and Waldron's 'Soul Eyes' are the outstanding cuts, a sign perhaps that this is a gentler, more reflective and lyrical Ali. There's plenty of fire elsewhere. Eubanks learned how to live in the drummer's turbulent wake and Vass is an under-explored talent. His composition 'A Light' suggests he deserves closer study. Blackman provides the title-cut. Poor old Wilson struggles to make himself heard, as was typical of the time.

 The Dynamic Duo Remember Trane And Bird Ayler 009 Ali; Arthur Rhames (ts, p). 7/81.
This opens with Ali's spoken recollections, illustrated here and there with audio samples of him playing with Coltrane. The duos with Arthur Rhames, who died young of an AIDS-related complaint, distressingly under-recorded and now little discussed, are not so much in the manner of Interstellar Space, as an attempt to capture something of the spirit of the classic quartet. Rhames's facility on the piano owes as much to McCoy Tyner as his tenor style does to Coltrane and his piano-playing on part of 'Mr P.C.' – a lengthy work-out – is very impressive indeed. That tune segues into 'I Want To Talk About You' via a superb Ali solo. The duo also tackles 'Giant Steps' (actually the changes are played more than once, but there are tape-break problems) and parts of 'A Love Supreme'. The set is rounded out with an original piece, built around Ali's rhythmic repetition of 'Extra, Extra, Read All

About It', and they conclude with Rhames back on piano for 'The Work Of The Master'. Perhaps most significant for its valuable glimpse of a lost genius – if the Trane catalogue is now almost meaninglessly bloated, while Rhames's is vanishingly small – there's some great Ali here as well.

(*) No One In Particular Survival SR Ali; Ravi Coltrane (ss, ts); Greg Murphy (p); Gene Ess (g); Matt Garrison (b). 92.
Released on the resuscitated Survival imprint almost a decade after the sessions were taped, this is Ali's working group in an unexpectedly straight-ahead post-bop session. A growing interest in Jaco Pastorius as a composer is evident (as it would be again on the later Judgement Day), with an interesting interpretation here of 'Three Views Of A Secret'. There's also an excellent version of Wayne Shorter's 'Witch Hunt', though despite the line-up nothing from the Coltrane legacy. Guitarist Ess – formerly Shimosato – is co-producer, which might explain why he manages so many features; they're worth hearing, though, similar in shape and tonality to Stafford James's violin work on the early New Directions (above). Murphy is right out of Tyner's bag, though his main influence would seem to be the post-Coltrane work. Ali himself might be hard to identify in places. He keeps the metre fairly tight and straightforward, though at a couple of junctures he sounds (ironically) much like the later Elvin Jones, who led a very similar band.

(*) The October Revolution Evidence ECD 22166 Ali; Joe McPhee (flhn, ts); Borah Bergman, Myra Melford (p); Wilber Morris (b); Tom Rainey (d). 10/94.
Thirty years after trumpeter Bill Dixon's epochal 'October Revolution' loft event, an epochal moment in the American avant-garde, three groups convened to mark the occasion. In the event, material by Zane Massey's group couldn't be used, but what we have here is two sets by Ali's quartet, bracketing a shorter sequence by the Myra Melford trio. As one of the original participants, Ali marks the most obvious continuity with the past, but one senses that McPhee and Bergman work to both later and more traditional agenda, so there is an odd mismatch in musical language. They had never played together before, and it shows. The two parts of 'For Bill Dixon' (a shame he couldn't have been there in person!) ramble portentously, but seem to make no real progress. By contrast, Melford's 'Death Of Danny Love' is crisp, responsive and engagingly short. Again, invites the question why one of the most innovative percussionists of recent time should be largely represented on record with commemorative projects.

 The Rings Of Saturn Knitting Factory KFCD 232 Ali; Louie Belogenis (ts). 8/97.
The inevitable comparisons were swiftly made and if this was considered less epoch-making than its distinguished ancestor, no one – and least of all Belogenis – was complaining. Ali's language has continued to develop in line with a new generation of players who have taken Trane's harmonic advances as a given. At times, Belogenis takes them too much for granted and sounds slightly glib, but for the most part these are ringingly successful cuts and a chance to sample a much underrated reedman.

 Live At Tonic DIW 940 Ali; Louie Belogenis (ts); Wilber Morris (b). 00.
Another tribute too many. Opening on Belogenis's 'Invocation: Trane Is In The House', the set meanders through a sequence of collective improvisations before concluding – with admitted poignancy – on 'Brazilia' and a briefly stated 'Spiritual'. Ali is boilingly intense throughout and Belogenis gives his usual convincing performance, making a virtue of his very different tonality. Morris drifts in and out of the mix, perhaps deliberately because the real action remains that drum/saxophone axis that is so much part of this story. If you get the chance to sample the record, try the fifth track: 'Heavenly Start' is another Belogenis composition, and one of his very best, delivered crisply and feelingly. Impressive, but not representative of a rather shapeless set.

 Deals, Ideas & Ideals Hopscotch HOP 6 Ali; Assif Tsahar (ts, bcl); Peter Kowald (b). 5/00.
This is a powerful unit, but it's the late bassist who gives it its coherence and much of its vigour. Much of the music is in Albert Ayler mode, but with some strong contemporary references, as on 'The Rap', which isn't quite the trendy, streetwise thing it maybe sounds. The other long track is the title-piece, which again leans heavily on Kowald's supple lines. Tsahar knows his instruments inside out, but occasionally lapses into technique for its own sake. Ali himself has sounded stronger, and there are places where his energy seems to flag. However, anyone who appreciates free jazz of this vintage will enjoy the record.

 Judgement Day: Volumes 1 & 2 Survival SR 121 Ali; Jumaane Smith (t); Lawrence J. Clark (ts); Greg Murphy (p); Joris Teepe (b). 2/05.
Ali as the latter-day Art Blakey? It's not so far-fetched. There isn't quite the same revolving-door approach to personnel. Clark and Murphy seem to have been around for some time; Teepe is as solid as a rock; and Smith shows unmistakable signs of class. The repertory approach is interesting, though. This one kicks off with Frank Lowe's 'Sidewalks In Motion', includes another Pastorius piece ('Dania', which roars along) and Shorter's 'The Big Push' (all on Volume 1), while the other disc offers covers of 'Lush Life', 'Round Midnight' and Don Cherry's 'Multi-Kulti'. Ali still commands centre stage much of the time, but this is very much a working unit with what sounds like a healthily collective philosophy and approach. Murphy is solid and combines nicely with Clark, though it's hard to get the head around Rashied Ali playing modal jazz after all those years as a lone gun of the avant-garde.

Also, in brief:

 Rashied Ali Quintet Knitting Factory KFCD 3021. 73.
Oddly disappointing, but important for an early glimpse of James Blood Ulmer (g), whose 'Theme For Captain Black' occupied the original second LP side.

 NY Ain't So Bad: Ali Plays The Blues Knitting Factory KFCD 3025. 7 & 8/75.
Another nod in Trane's direction, in subtitle at least. Ali is joined here by singer Royal Blue and a strong group, but the chemistry isn't compelling.

Jan Allan (born 1934)

TRUMPET

Began as a pianist but switched in the '50s. Worked in the Carl-Henrik Norin orchestra and numerous small groups. He also has a doctorate in particle physics.

♛ * Jan Allan – 70 Phono Suecia PSCD 130 Allan; Lennart Axelsson, Weine Renliden, Bertil Lövgren , Rolf Ericson (t); Olle Holmqvist, George Vernon, Jörgen Johansson (tb); Olle Lind (btb); Sven-Ake Landström , Bengt Belfrage (frhn); Arne Domnérus (as);

Lennart Aberg (ts, ss, f); Claes Rosendahl (ts, f); Bernt Rosengren (ts); Bengt Christianson, Jerker Halldén (f, picc); Nils Lindberg, Bobo Stenson (p); Rune Gustafsson (g); Palle Danielsson, Roman Dylag (b); Egil Hohansen, Jon Christensen (d); Rupert Clemendore (perc). 12/68–9/69.

He is the most eminent Swedish modernist, with dismayingly few records to show for it. Poised between a cool lyricism and a bashful affection for the long melodic line, Allan's unfussy playing refuses to draw attention to itself.

His finest hour stretches back nearly 40 years. There are two small-group scores by Carl-Axel Dominique and one piece by Palle Danielsson, but the main focus is on the three superlative scores by Nils Lindberg. The music is Byzantine in detail, but it flows and the brass and woodwinds are compellingly voiced. 'Polska For Trumpet' sparkles with rhythmic and harmonic invention and the 'Ballad' is serenely beautiful, but it's the deeply felt and profoundly moving 'In Memoriam' to Rolf Billberg that brings out the best in composer, soloist and orchestra. Allan refuses to preen or overplay; his solos are part of a genuine dialogue with the orchestra and he never once loses his way. Essential.

() Trio Con Tromba / () Trio Con Tromba Dragon DRCD 226 / 385 Allan; Bengt Hallberg (p); Georg Riedel (b). 84.

Despite the confusingly reused title (which presumably refers to the group) these are quite different. Though they probably belong together in a double set, there are differences. The first volume is more thoughtful, even brooding in places, with an extraordinary 'Body and Soul' and originals like 'Absolution' which are unlike anything else you'll hear in the European jazz canon. Hallberg has a majestic touch, patient, authoritative and full of harmonic cunning. Riedel makes his instrument sing. 'Django', 'Valse Hot', 'Poor Butterfly' all appear on the second, more lightly lyrical, set. Nothing to choose between them qualitatively, so do what the label should have done and buy them as a set.

(*) Sweet And Lovely Dragon DRCD 254 Allan; Rune Gustafsson (g); Georg Riedel (b). 3/92.

A sequence of wonderful miniatures, different in approach to the trio above in being more impressionistic, less concerned with line. Some might be reminded of Chet Baker's late, drummerless groups, but since Lars Gullin, Reinhold Svensson and Jan Johansson are all represented as composers, the record also stands as a meditation on the achievements of the great modern jazz schools.

Dave Allen

GUITAR

Talented newcomer who's shaping up nicely.

 Untold Stories /  Real And Imagined Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 220 / 297 Allen; Seamus Blake (ts); Carol DeRosa (b on Stories); Drew Gress (b on Real); Mark Ferber (d). 4/04; 07.

The themes on the debut disc veer between the technically demanding, like the off-kilter opener 'Momentum', and darker ideas like 'Searching'. DeRosa makes his presence felt on the latter track, and Ferber struts his stuff confidently. Blake, though, is a disappointment, often merely clever and seemingly detached from his colleagues. Allen himself derives somewhat from the Pat Metheny school. He often sounds shaded and occluded on the more sombre numbers which predominate here. There's the same thoughtfulness on the follow-up, but Allen swings out more and Gress is an enormous asset, strong, needling, provocative. The title-track and 'Untold Story' are the picks.

Geri Allen (born 1957)

PIANO, SYNTHESIZER

Studied piano as a child, then later taught in Washington, DC, before moving to New York in 1980. Associated with the M-Base Collective early on, but came to work in a broad variety of contexts and has recorded for Blue Note and Verve as a leader.

 The Printmakers Minor Music 8001 Allen; Anthony Cox (b); Andrew Cyrille (d, perc). 2/84.

* Open On All Sides In The Middle Minor Music 801013 Allen; Marcus Belgrave, Rayse Biggs (t, flhn); Robin Eubanks (tb); Steve Coleman (as, ts); David McMurray (ss, f); Jaribu Shahid (b); Tani Tabbal (d); Mino Cinelu (perc); Shahita Nurallah (v). 12/86.

To suggest that Geri Allen is something of an enigma is not to withdraw our enthusiasm for her work. She is a formidable technician, drawing elements from all over the modern piano tradition – Bud Powell, Monk, tinges of Cecil Taylor, less-celebrated figures like Herbie Nichols and Mary Lou Williams – and from non-pianists like Eric Dolphy, whose spiky, restless ideas are also reflected in her writing. And yet, for all this creative weaponry, there is something unaccountably soft-centred, almost whimsical about much of Allen's work under her own name. Therein lies the puzzle, for Allen has often seemed a more confident and accomplished performer on other leaders' dates than on her own.

As if to suggest this, the opening section of her debut album, The Printmakers, is devoted to a longish feature for Cyrille, on drums and mouth percussion. The swirling, Afro-theme that follows isn't instantly identifiable even in retrospect as Allen's typical register, but it's effective, as is the Dolphy tribute that follows and the mournful 'Andrew' (on which the dedicatee plays tymps). There's some great writing, but it doesn't, so to speak, come off the page as it should and one is left with the impression of Cyrille and Cox accompanied by piano rather than anything more distinctive. The later Minor Music disc, the solo piano Home Grown may be hard to find now, is dire. One can see what Allen is pitching for, some new kind of song-based jazz, but the vocal features from singer Shahita Nurallah fall completely flat and the long-form pieces don't deliver much.

(*) Etudes Soul Note 121162 Allen; Charlie Haden (b); Paul Motian (d). 9/87.

 In The Year Of The Dragon Winter & Winter As above. 3/89.

 Segments DIW 833 As above. 4/89.

Allen was officially guest soloist with the veteran Haden/Motian team, but hogged the praise for Etudes so completely that she was officially inducted into the freemasonry, immediately losing the freshness and the spontaneity that had made the 1987 record so striking.

In The Year Of The Dragon was restored to catalogue in 2002, when Winter & Winter began reissuing the JMT catalogue. It's one of the best of the trio sets, kicking off with Bud Powell's 'Oblivion' and moving from there into new compositions that were at the time the benchmark for piano trio jazz. Her reworking of Parker's 1949 'Segment' on the other DIW disc is equally good; the phrasing is bold but not showy, the grasp of a complex harmonic pattern (her own, rather than Bird's) very impressive indeed. Even so, one retains a certain feeling that the quality of these records comes as much from the bassist and drummer; Allen can't entirely claim ownership.

 Three Pianos For Jimi Douglas Music CATTBD011 Allen; Mark Batson, Scott Batson (p). 12/89.

The Batson brothers, classically trained players who've taken masterclasses with Allen, first encountered Hendrix repertoire when they took part in a 'Not Just Jazz' series at the Town Hall in 1988. The following year they convened with Allen as the Triad Trio to play a session at the Knitting Factory. There is nothing surprising any longer about hearing Hendrix tunes – '1983 (A Merman I Should Turn To Be)', 'The Wind Cries Mary' and 'Manic Depression', among others – given jazz treatment. The Batsons can't quite shake off their classical schooling and their duet on 'Manic Depression' sounds a bit forced and formal. However, the unusual instrumentation works well and Allen has such a graceful and generous approach that her example inspires the whole set and invests it with real musicality that is both idiomatic and bold. Cautiously recommendable.

 Some Aspects Of Water Storyville STCD 4212 Allen; Johnny Coles (flhn); Henrik Bolberg Pedersen (t, flhn); Kjeld Ipsen (tb); Axel Windfeld (tba); Michael Hove (as, f, cl); Uffe Markussen (ts, ss, bcl, f); Palle Danielsson (b); Lenny White (d). 3/96.

The Danish Jazz Centre gave Allen the 1996 Jazzpar Prize, a striking acknowledgement of her growing international reputation. The payback was a pair of concerts which were to include a commissioned work – the long title-piece here – and to involve a contingent of Scandinavian players.

The Copenhagen performance included long trio versions of Allen compositions, 'Skin' and 'Feed The Fire', with a flowing rendition of the Jule Styne and Sammy Cahn classic, 'A Beautiful Friendship', once again underlining how insecure Allen can still be on standards; she plays as if she understands the chords but has only recently heard the melody for the first time. Danielsson and White are both excellent. Wallace Roney was supposed to have guested with the trio but was detained on his own tour. Taking his place, the veteran Johnny Coles hijacks 'Old Folks' with his warm, buttery tone and unhurryable approach. To her credit, Allen enjoys the moment for what it is and shows no signs of wanting to recapture the spotlight.

The commissioned piece is a multi-part suite that sounds as if it had been assembled out of a good many sketchy ideas in Allen's workbasket. It certainly isn't incoherent (Allen is now far too consistent a stylist for that) but the title gives away the essentially episodic character. Coles is again the star and there is an excellent bass clarinet passage from Uffe Markussen, who is also a featured soloist on 'Smooth Attitudes', a piece commissioned for the nonet from Jens Winther, an earlier Jazzpar artist.

Allen's own contributions are gracefully Ellingtonian, but not quite arresting enough to secure ownership in a competent group performance, not quite note-perfect but accomplished enough, given limited rehearsal time and unfamiliar charts.

* The Life Of A Song Telarc CD 83598 Allen; Marcus Belgrave (flhn); Clifton Anderson (tb); Dwight Andrews (as); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 1/04.

After making something of a round of the labels, Allen has found a sympathetic berth at Telarc, where they value piano-players. This is essentially a trio date, with the horns reserved for a delicious closing version of Mal Waldron's 'Soul Eyes'. If Geri found sympathetic partners in Charlie Haden and Paul Motian in earlier years, the association with Holland and DeJohnette (heard to wonderful effect in their work with Betty Carter) has attained an organic wholeness and empathy that makes this one of the most effective piano trios around.

In her liner note, Allen suggests the possibility – almost the reverse of what Eric Dolphy said – that when music is over it continues to reverberate outwards. By extension, are our attempts to make music the product of will or are we just caught up in a time-line of past music? These are heavyweight philosophical questions, but Allen, Holland and DeJohnette answer them by creating a graceful mixture of originals and standards which not only reference past performances but create a shimmering unity of sound that one can very readily imagine hovering in the ether long after the record is over. Allen's readings of 'Lush Life' and of Bud Powell's 'Dance Of The Infidels' are both historically rooted, but also aware of present-day harmonic imperatives. DeJohnette's sudden change of metre halfway through the second chorus is typical of the way this trio manages to invest familiar, even hackneyed material with new emphases. Holland's soloing is impeccable throughout, notably on 'Lush Life' and 'Mount And Mountains', where he phrases like a saxophonist, though without losing touch with a string bass idiom.

More conventional in attitude than some previous records, this is none the less an album that repays repeated listens.

(*) Timeless Portraits And Dreams Telarc 83645 Allen; Wallace Roney (t); Ron Carter (b); Jimmy Cobb (d); Atlantic Jazz Chorus (v). 3/03, 3/06.

Allen has always had a more than usually acute sense of jazz history, either as a nurturing source or else as something grand and commanding to be aspired to. This disc falls into the latter category, bordering on the sententious in places. The opening solo 'Oh Freedom' establishes an air of authority which is carried over into Roney's fine 'Melchizedek', but the later interpretations of 'I Have A Dream' (from Mary Lou's Mass by Allen's great role model Mary Lou Williams), of 'Lift Every Voice And Sing' and a tribute to Billie Holiday called (somewhat blasphemously) 'Our Lady' are much less assured, seemingly hogtied by their own ambition. Unarguably, Allen is playing as well as ever, but much as in the late '80s she seemed to seek a new idiom and market dabbling in pop/crossover formats, so here the sheer grandness of some of these structures is their undoing. The best of the set comes in 'Ah-leu-cha', a thoroughly original interpretation of the Parker theme, and in 'Just For A Thrill' by another important influence, Lil Hardin Armstrong.

Harry Allen (born 1966)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in DC (dad was a big-band drummer), he studied at Rutgers and began playing in clubs. Lionized as a young mainstreamer, he's a rarity in his generation in not being a Coltrane clone.

(*) How Long Has This Been Going On? Progressive 7082 Allen; Keith Ingham (p); Major Holley (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 6/88.

 Someone To Light Up My Life Mastermix CHECD 00100 Allen; John Horler (p); Peter Morgan (b); Oliver Jackson (d). N.D.

 I Know That You Know Mastermix CHECD 00104 Allen; John Colianni (p); Michael Moore (b). 1/92.

 I'll Never Be The Same Mastermix CHECD 00106 Allen; Howard Alden (g); Simon Woolf (b). 11/92.

Allen's full-blooded tenor sound offers countless tugs of the forelock to Zoot, Lester, Hawkins et al., so it's hardly surprising that these records have been given the kind of approbation that greeted early Scott Hamilton. Allen plays nothing but standards, delivers them with confidence and luxuriance and generally acts as if the avant-garde had never happened. On their own terms, these are perfectly enjoyable records. The two earliest are marred by tenor-and-rhythm clichés but the removal of a drummer from the others was a canny tactic, freeing himself up from any fear that he might turn out to be merely a young fogey. The interplay with Alden, who has also found a way of investing himself in the mainstream, offers some piquant moments.

(*) The King (Jazz Im Amerika Haus: Volume 1) Nagel Heyer 011 Allen; John Bunch (p); Dennis Irwin (p); Duffy Jackson (d). 5/94.
Now retitled, either because foreign labels don't 'play' in the US or because Allen claims an authority larger than the series, this is a sign of his growing stature at the time. His improvisation on ''Deed I Do' has a steamrollering swing, and he's sewing phrases and licks together with all of Zoot Sims's assurance. With a rhythm section of real quality, this has to go down as Allen's best to date.

 A Night At Birdland : Volumes 1 & 2 Nagel Heyer 5002 / 010 Allen; Randy Sandke (t); Brian Dee (p); Len Skeat (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 11/93.
 Turnstile (The Music Of The Trumpet Kings) Nagel Heyer 5011 Allen; Randy Sandke (t); RIAS Big Band, Berlin. 11/96.
These live sessions (Hamburg, rather than New York) will be snapped up by the label's genre devotees, especially in these freshly remastered versions. The rhythm section is perhaps no more than adequate, though Jackson, on some of his final recordings, seems enlivened by the situation. Interest centres on the two principals: Allen doesn't quite have Sandke's catholic taste, but they strike some pleasing sparks. The second disc almost shades out the first, though one disc from two might have been a better bet. The Trumpet Kings date is really more the trumpeter's, even though the tenorman's name comes first. Sandke arranged nearly all the charts, but he defers to Harry on things like the Beiderbecke discovery 'Cloudy'. 'The Moontrane' and 'All Blues' are more modern pieces that go well enough, though the band sounds over-bright and over-eager.

(*) A Little Touch Of Harry Mastermix CHECD 00118 Allen; Kenny Barron (p); George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 97.
Big-band experiments aside, the quartet was where Allen's destiny lay. This has far and away the best rhythm section he'd worked with and a thoughtful blend of familiar and more elusive standards. One point away from the masterpiece he may have in him.

 Hey, Look Me Over Arbors ARCD 19333 Allen; Joe Cohn (g); Joel Forbes (b); Chuck Riggs (d). 8/04.
An odd-looking gap in the sequence here, explained by the fact that RCA Japan only released a few of Allen's records for the label in Europe and the US and then promptly deleted them. This was Harry's working group at the time and the interplay suggests that. Cohn, identified as co-leader on a self-released CD from around this time, contributes more original stuff, including the coda 'Danielle', which is too long, but the classics stand out, notably a romping 'Seven Come Eleven'.

(*) Hits By Brits Challenge CHRCD 73258 As above, except add John Allred (tb). 11/06.
 Music From Guys And Dolls Arbors ARCD 19354 As above, except add Rebecca Kilgore, Eddie Erickson (v). 2/07.
As the title suggests, all the songs on the first of these are by British (or British-born) composers. So 'Roses Of Picardy', 'Limehouse Blues' and a nightingale in a central London square, but also 'Cherokee' and 'These Foolish Things', which aren't quite so obvious. Allen plays with authority and calm, but it's Allred and Cohn who give the set its class, the former only on selected tracks, but what a difference he makes! This is almost up to the standard of the mid-'90s, but Allen still seems to be lacking the extra spark of imagination to make that one iconic record.

Could the problem be that he seems to need a concept to drive a new album? The all-Loesser programme presents no problems, but there is a lack of variousness in harmonic approach that grates after a while. The singers are present pretty much all the way through and they do pretty well for the most part, though surprisingly better on the humorous songs than the more sentimental ones. Or are there just too many Allen albums out there? His website lists a lot of Japan-only stuff that's now available over the internet. Overkill, maybe?

Also, in brief:

 Love Songs Live! Nagel Heyer 1014. 93–96.
Compiled from four years of activity with the label.

 Jazz For The Soul /  Jazz For The Heart
www.mcmahonjazzmedicine.com. no number. 96.
With Liver And Lights to follow, no doubt. Just a sample of what's available on the Web.

 Live At Renouf's Mastermix CHECD 00117. 8/96.
Marred by a plinky piano sound (John Colianni) and an excess of bass solos (Phil Flanigan).

 Tenors Anyone? Slider Music 3004. 11/96.
With the John Pizzarelli (g) Trio. Each track is dedicated to a different tenor giant.

 Night Birds Gemini GMCD 95. 8/97.
Recorded on a stop-over in Oslo with fellow guest George Masso (tb). Light and polite, but pleasantly done.

Henry 'Red' Allen (1908–67)

TRUMPET, VOCAL

Born in New Orleans, where his father ran a famous parade band. Worked with King Oliver, Luis Russell and Fletcher Henderson, but then recorded as small-group leader from the '30s to early '60s. An idiosyncratic, unique stylist; his nickname referred to his reddened cheeks when playing.

[illegible]

* Henry 'Red' Allen & His Orchestra 1929–1933
Classics 540 Allen; Otis Johnson (t); J. C. Higginbotham, Jimmy Archey, Dicky Wells, Benny Morton (tb); Charlie Holmes (cl, ss, as); Russell Procope, Edward Inge, Albert Nicholas, William Blue (cl, as); Hilton Jefferson (as); Teddy Hill (cl, ts); Coleman Hawkins, Greely Walton (ts); Luis Russell (p, cel); Don Kirkpatrick, Horace Henderson (p); Will Johnson (bj, g, v); Bernard Addison (g); Bob Ysaguirre, George 'Pops' Foster (bb, b); Ernest 'Bass' Hill (bb); Walter Johnson, Manzie Johnson, Paul Barbarin (d); Victoria Spivey, The Four Wanderers (v). 7/29–11/33.

 Henry 'Red' Allen–Coleman Hawkins 1933
Hep 1028 As above, except omit Blue, Otis Johnson, Higginbotham, Archey, Russell, Holmes, Walton, Will Johnson, Foster, Barbarin, Spivey; add Russell Smith, Bobby Stark (t); Claude Jones (tb); John Kirby (b). 3–10/33.

He was once described as 'the last great trumpet soloist to come out of New Orleans', but that was before Wynton came along. He was, though, the last to make a mark in the '20s, recording his astonishing debut sessions for Victor in the summer of 1929. 'It Should Be You', 'Biff'ly Blues', 'Feeling Drowsy' and 'Swing Out' are magnificently conceived and executed, with the whole band (by day the Luis Russell Orchestra) playing with outstanding power and finesse, while Allen's own improvisations outplay anyone aside from Armstrong. Though sometimes unfocused the ideas run together with few seams showing and the controlled strength of his solo on 'Feeling Drowsy' is as impressive as the more daring flights on 'Swing Out'. The beautifully sustained solo on 'Make A Country Bird Fly Wild' works through a tricky stop-time passage with some of Pops's rhythmic risk and nobility of tone but with less predictability and less reliant on telegraphed high notes. Higginbotham is wonderfully characterful, agile but snarlingly expressive, and the vastly underrated Holmes matches the young Johnny Hodges for hard-hitting lyricism. An outstanding band.

The Classics CD carries on through the first sessions by the Allen–Hawkins Orchestra. Both were working with Fletcher Henderson and this could have been an explosive combination, but the records were comparatively tame, with pop material and vocals taking up too much space. The Hep includes all the Allen–Hawkins tracks (with three on the next Classics disc) and adds a session under Horace Henderson's leadership which includes the most swinging 'Ol' Man River' on record and a splendid feature for Hawkins on 'I've Got To Sing A Torch Song'. Excellent remastering; the Classics version is patchy in comparison.

 Henry 'Red' Allen 1933–1935 Classics 551 Allen; Pee Wee Irwin (t); J. C. Higginbotham, Dicky Wells, Benny Morton, Keg Johnson, George Washington (tb); Buster Bailey, Cecil Scott, Albert Nicholas (cl); Edward Inge (cl, as); Hilton Jefferson (as); Coleman Hawkins, Chu Berry (ts); Horace Henderson (p); Bernard Addison (bj, g); Lawrence Lucie (g); Bob Ysaguirre (bb); John Kirby (b, bb); Elmer James, Pops Foster (b); Manzie Johnson, Kaiser Marshall, Walter Johnson, Paul Barbarin, George Stafford (d). 11/33–7/35.

 Henry 'Red' Allen 1935–1936 Classics 575 Allen; J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Albert Nicholas (cl); Rudy Powell, Hildred Humphries (cl, as); Cecil Scott (cl, ts); Pete Clark, Tab Smith (as); Happy Caldwell, Joe Garland, Ted McRae (ts); Edgar Hayes, Norman Lester, Jimmy Reynolds, Clyde Hart (p); Lawrence Lucie (g); Elmer James, John Kirby (b); O'Neil Spencer, Cozy Cole, Walter Johnson (d). 11/35–8/36.

 Henry 'Red' Allen 1936–1937 Classics 590 Allen; Gene Mikell, Buster Bailey, Glyn Paque (cl); Tab Smith (as); Ted McRae, Sonny Fredericks, Harold Arnold (ts); Clyde Hart, Billy Kyle, Luis Russell (p); Danny Barker (g); John Kirby, John Williams (b); Cozy Cole, Alphonse Steele, Paul Barbarin (d). 10/36–4/37.

(*) Henry 'Red' Allen 1937–1941 Classics 628 Allen; J. C. Higginbotham, Benny Morton (tb); Edmond Hall, Glyn Paque (cl); Tab Smith (as); Harold Arnold, Sammy Davis (ts); Lil Hardin Armstrong, Kenny Kersey, Billy Kyle, Luis Russell (p); Bernard Addison, Danny Barker (g); Pops Foster, Billy Taylor (b); Paul Barbarin, Zutty Singleton, Alphonse Steele (d). 6/37–7/41.

A man just out of time, Allen arrived just too late to make a significant impact on the first jazz decade and had to work through the Depression and the beginning of the swing era recording novelty small-group sessions. Like Armstrong and Waller, he had to record as many bad songs as good ones, and though he was an entertaining singer he couldn't match either Fats or Louis. The Classics sequence is a valuable and pretty consistent documentation. The groups tend to be rough-and-ready, but whenever Higginbotham is on hand, Allen comes up with exuberant jazz. And sometimes unpromising material releases a classic performance, as when on 'Roll Along, Prairie Moon', Higginbotham blows such a fine solo that Allen hands over his own spot. The 1937–41 set has fewer duff tunes. Allen switched to Decca in 1940 and started playing uncompromised jazz again. The sound on all four Classics (and the one below) is generally OK with just a few blemishes.

(*) Live, 1965 Storyville STCD 8290 Allen; Sam Price, Lannie Scott (p); Clarence Moten (b); George Reed (d). 6/65.

(*) Henry 'Red' Allen With Alex Welsh Jazzology JCD 318 Allen; Alex Welsh (t); Roy Wiliams (tb); Al Gay (cl, ts); Fred Hunt (p); Jim Douglas (g); Ronnie Rae (b); Lennie Hastings (d). 67.

Allen's best latter-day recordings are out of print. The Storyville dates from an engagement at a Long Island lounge and finds him in good enough later form, but the recording is awful, with drop-outs all the way and the group isn't performing with distinction. Allen was already ill on the final tour, but the astonishing spirit of the man makes the record both a poignant and a delightful farewell. If some of the phrases fall down, the old bravado is still there and band and audience eat out of his hand.

Also, in brief:

 The Alternative Takes: Volume 1 – 1929–1941 Neatwork 2031. 29–41.

For specialists only, surely?

 The Dynamic Trumpet EPM Musique 15968. 29–46.

One of many similar anthologies. Shaded by the item below.

 Ride, Red, Ride ASV Living Era 5356. 30–46.

A perfect introduction; 25 cuts, nicely remastered and packaged.

() Henry 'Red' Allen 1944–1947 Classics 1067. 4/41[SIC]–7/46.

A very mixed bag, with some dispiritingly bad music leavened with some excellent cuts like 'The Crawl'. Some leftovers from a previous volume.

J. D. Allen

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Detroiter who served an apprenticeship with Betty Carter, Wallace Roney and Cindy Blackman.

 In Search Of ... Red 123283 Allen; Fabio Morgera (t); Sheldrick Mitchell (p); Eric Revis (b); Rodney Green (d). 8/98.

 Pharoah's Children Criss Cross 1221 Allen; Jeremy Pelt (t); Orrin Evans (p); Eric Revis (b); Gene Jackson (d). 12/01.

Ornette's 'Lonely Woman' at the end of the debut album is a quiet reminder that Allen isn't one of those Coltrane-obsessed tenors who crowded the studios in the '80s and '90s. His interest is above all in melody and rhythm and he weaves fine solos on those grounds. The first one could have done with a couple of standards for reference, but it's a great group, with Morgera a revelation. Jackson stokes the second disc beautifully and confirms the music in a confidently retro mould. 'Mademoiselle Blackman' and 'Queen Elisabeth' repay debts to great ladies.

Marshall Allen (born 1924)

ALTO, FLUTE, PICCOLO, OBOE

From Kentucky, he enlisted in the 92 Infantry, the Buffalo Soldiers, before joining Sun Ra; he is current MD of the Arkestra.

 Mark'N'Marshall – Monday /  ... – Tuesday CIMP 171 / 180 Allen; Mark Whitecage (ts); Dominic Duval (b); Luqman Ali (d). 3/98.

 PoZest CIMP 207 Allen; Paul Smoker (t); Steve Swell (tb); Perry Robinson (cl, penny whistle); Wilber Morris (b); Lou Grassi (d). 5/99.

(*) The All-Star Game Eremite MTE 44 Allen; Kidd Jordan (ts); William Parker, Alan Silva (b); Hamid Drake (d, perc). 12/00.

Allen's reputation was still growing as he passed his 80th birthday. His plangent tone has steadily grown in authority over the years. As he moves to the foreground in these largely improvised sessions, it carries with it unmistakable echoes of Sun Ra's swing-era background, but also a profound knowledge of the '60s avant-garde – Dolphy, Ornette, Trane – and of other more esoteric musics. On PoZest, he's teamed with drummer Lou Grassi's Po Band and blends with its dry, slightly academic sound rather well. On '(Midnight) Blues', the horn-lines are trenchant but contemplative. 'Bird Symphony' and 'LouRa' are different kinds of ensemble piece, the former a sprawling, intense thing, the latter more upbeat and affirmative. Allen isn't a showy or conventionally expressive soloist, but he commands.

The earlier sets document a two-day encounter with fellow saxophone veteran Whitecage. The first is very different, a mixture of standards and original pieces. 'When You Wish Upon A Star' is an obvious echo of Sun Ra's Disney fascination, but there is also the coda-like 'Star Wishing' to demonstrate how much further Allen is prepared to push things. 'Out Of Nowhere' is a titanic performance, while 'Fly Me To The Moon' ensures that the interplanetary strain hasn't been overlooked. The second disc is just as good, but one senses that, the introductions over, the chemistry isn't quite as intense. Surely a single, full-length CD would have sufficed? 'Altobatics' is as close to a showpiece as Allen has released, and 'My Funny Valentine' will challenge any blindfold testee.

Though the best of these is strictly an all-star jam, and quite properly billed as such, it was Allen who put the gig together and he more than holds his own with his fellow reedman (Jordan just beginning to establish a wide reputation beyond New Orleans) and the astonishing rhythm section. The real interest of this date is how subtly and strongly the two bass-players work together, developing an involving discourse as the set continues and almost pushing the saxophones into an accompanying role in places. Recorded at the Institute of Contemporary Arts in London, and all credit to them for making the space available to Allen and friends.

Ben Allison (born 1966)

DOUBLE BASS

Allison is the talented and tireless artistic director of the Jazz Composers' Collective in New York City and a leading light in the research, performance and recording group the Herbie Nicols Project. Mingus-inspired as a bassist and composer, he combines power and subtlety.

 Seven Arrows Koch Jazz 3-7832-2 Allison; Ron Horton (t); Ted Nash (ts, cl, f); Frank Kimbrough (p); Tim Horner (d). 6/95–4/96.

 Medicine Wheel Palmetto PM 2038 As above, except omit Horner; add Michael Blake (sax); Thomas Ulrich (clo). 98.

(*) Third Eye Palmetto PM 2054 As above, except add Ara Dinkjian (oud, cumbus). 99.

* Riding The Nuclear Tiger Palmetto PM 2067 As above. 5/00.

Even in an industry prone to hype and oversell, Allison always looked likely to make a major impact. His sophistication was evident from the very first record, in compositions as buoyantly various as 'Dragzilla', 'King Of A One Man Planet' and the Monkish 'Delirioso'.

All these records bespeak a settled understanding among the players and many, many hours spent developing ideas. There is not a slackly run-down idea on any of them. Allison's is seldom the dominant voice, though the pairing of bass and cello in the group that became known as Medicine Wheel offers an intriguing counterbalance to the horns and piano. The structures are very solid and patiently worked out.

The gentleness of the debut album largely evaporates on Medicine Wheel; Allison may have been listening to or hanging out with the Knitting Factory crowd. It's a more assertively downtown album, marked by some notably pungent conceptions. 'Blabbermouth' and 'Apostles Of The Ugly' stand out, while 'Spy' has touches of John Zorn. There's the beginnings of a synthesis and a consolidation on Third Eye, but it's the bold sweep of Riding The Nuclear Tiger, all the way from its exhilarating opening on the title-track to its reworking of Charles Mingus in 'Love Chant Remix', that grabs and holds the attention. The group now has a thoroughly seasoned feel and a desire to explore yet more new textures. The addition of oud hadn't made much impact on Third Eye but here pianist Kimbrough plays direct on open strings and prepares his piano on 'Swiss Cheese D', while on 'Weazy' saxophonist Blake plays two horns simultaneously (and without sounding like Roland Kirk!). Horton has more than one bag to dip into: some of his statements are smokingly pungent, reminiscent of Booker Little, but he can also play with a melting simplicity. Kimbrough is a seasoned leader in his own right and it is worth tracking his contributions through these records: a model of control.

(*) Peace Pipe Palmetto PM 2086 Allison; Michael Blake (ss, ts, bcl); Peter Apfelbaum (ts); Frank Kimbrough (ky); Tomas Ulrich (clo); Mamadou Diabate (kora); Michael Sarin (d). 3/02.

Allison continues to progress and to surprise. Though there are obvious precedents on earlier recordings, the new element here is kora-player Diabate, who features strongly on the opening 'Third Rail'. It's inspired by Duke Ellington and marked by an Allison solo plucked with a subway ticket and some astonishing prepared piano from Kimbrough. Diabate also makes a superb entrance on 'Slap Happy' and figures in an amazing duet with the leader – 'Music Is Music' – which was taped at rehearsal. He can also be heard in duet with drummer Sarin on the brilliant 'Disposable Genius'.

Interestingly, Allison is now sufficiently aware of his own playing history to include a new version of 'Mantra' from Third Eye, an entirely reconceived interpretation which takes the tune's secondary subject and lifts it into new prominence. The album breaks new ground with an intriguing cover of Neil Young's 'Goin' Back', a showcase for the melodious Blake, but it also shows Allison attempting to underline his jazz dues with the straightahead 'Realization', which uses relatively orthodox changes.

* Buzz Palmetto 2101 Allison; Clark Gayton (tb, btb); Michael Blake (ss, ts); Ted Nash (ts, f); Frank Kimbrough (p); Michael Sarin (d). 11/03.

Hugely accomplished, unpretentiously ambitious and endlessly listenable, this is Allison's most confident and satisfying disc yet. At a time when pop covers were almost de rigueur Allison begins with what sounds like a copped riff (played by Kimbrough) but turns it into something completely original and unexpected. It's only at the end of the record that he delivers the killer punch with a version of the Beatles' 'Across The Universe', with Gayton's bass trombone strongly featured; almost everyone will immediately recue the track, if not the whole album. There is room as ever for other compositional voices, like Blake's 'Mauritania', but it's Allison's own reworked 'Buzz' (like so many of these pieces, played in a daringly off-centre metre that would sound arch in other hands) and the delightful 'Green Al' which find the band working together with most confidence. One gets the impression that Allison and his colleagues work this material hard until the blend and the integration of parts is exactly spot-on. On this showing, it's well worth the time spent. Highly recommended.

(*) Cowboy Justice Palmetto 2117 Allison; Ron Horton (t, flhn); Steve Cardenas (g); Jeff Ballard (d). 12/05.

If this is Americana, it isn't afraid to touch the dark side of the dream. Horton's shouts and split-tones on 'Emergency' sum up some of the record's brooding urgency. On the surface, though, things are mostly well. Allison's complexities aren't always immediately evident and these songs often have a buoyant bounce to them, picked up by Cardenas but then very often subverted by the guitarist as well, with his ringing power chords and broken runs on 'Weazy' and 'Tricky Dick'. Ballard is, of course, a long-standing Allison colleague and he contributes greatly to the success of the record. Like the leader, though – Allison only solos on 'Hey Man' – he's kept pretty much to the technical detail, rapping out brisk lines and cross-rhythms with typical dexterity; the hectic 'Blabbermouth' offers a chance to go slightly loco. Allison continues to mature as a composer and leader. 'Talking Heads' and 'Ruby's Roundabout' might almost be lifted from some satirical soundtrack and a read of 'Midnight Cowboy', dropped plumb centre in the album, suggests something of the record's fine balance of violence, tawdriness, refined beauty and raw satire. Great stuff, though this unit might need another six months to settle down and let the guitar – so far an unfamiliar presence in an Allison group – blend in.

Mose Allison (born 1927)

PIANO, VOCAL, TRUMPET

The quintessential Mississippi jazzman, he soaked up black music as a child and played countless Southern gigs before moving to NY in 1956. His principal setting is the piano trio, where he sings knowingly world-weary songs over idiosyncratic, bumpy rhythms.

(*) Back Country Suite Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 075 Allison; Taylor LaFargue (b); Frank Isola (d). 3/57.

 Local Color Original Jazz Classics OJC 457 Allison; Addison Farmer (b); Nick Stabulas (d). 11/57.

(*) Autumn Song / * Ramblin' With Mose Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 894 / Prestige PRCD 1109 Allison; Addison Farmer (b); Ronnie Free (d). 58; 4/58.

 Down Home Piano / (*) Creek Bank Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 922 Allison; Addison Farmer (b); Nick Stabulas, Ronnie Free (d). 58; 1–8/58.

By the time Mose Allison came to listen to bebop, a little of which creeps into his playing, he was already hooked on the light swing of Nat Cole's trio. Mose has always been a modernist: his hip fatalism and mastery of the wry put-down have always been teamed with a reluctantly knowing vocal style, as though he tells truths under duress. Coupled with a rhythmically juddering, blues-directed piano style, there's no one like him.

Back Country Suite, his debut, remains one of his best. The deft miniatures are winsome and rocking by turns, and LaFargue and Isola read the leader's moves beautifully. Local Color is nearly as good, with a rare glimpse of Allison's muted trumpet on 'Trouble In Mind', an unusual Ellington revival 'Don't Ever Say Goodbye' and his first and best treatment of Percy Mayfield's 'Lost Mind'. Autumn Song is nicely balanced between vocal set-pieces ('Eyesight To The Blind', one of his classic one-liners) and his serious stuff with a rare piece of straight bop on 'Groovin' High'. Ramblin' starts with 'I Got A Right To Cry' and then takes 'Stranger In Paradise' at a sprint; it's curiously disarming. Down Home Piano restores the countrified feel with 'Crepuscular Air' and 'Devil In The Cane Field'. Creek Bank couples the album of that name with the slightly earlier Young Man Mose: more standards, blues and Allison vignettes in a generous package.

(*) High Jinks Columbia/Epic/Legacy J3K 64275 3CD Allison; Aaron Bell, Bill Crow, Addison Farmer, Henry Grimes (b); Gus Johnson, Osie Johnson, Paul Motian, Jerry Segal (d). 12/59–9/60.

This pulls together four different sessions and three original LPs – I Love The Life I Live, V-8 Ford Blues and The Transfiguration of Hiram Brown – with a smattering of unreleased extras on each disc. The suite takes up half of one and is among Allison's best instrumental outings, another tough evocation of country-meets-the-city. Gems elsewhere include 'A Pretty Girl Is Like A Melody', 'Life Is Suicide' and 'Make Yourself Comfortable'. Mose reminisces in the notes about each song.

* I Don't Worry About A Thing Rhino/Atlantic R2 71417 Allison; Addison Farmer (b); Osie Johnson (d). 3/62.

(*) I Don't Worry About A Thing / Mose Alive! Collectables 6261 As above, except add Stanley Gilbert (b); Melvin Lee (d). 3/62; 65.

No real change or advance, but for some this is the classic Mose album with the first version of two of his sharpest pieces, 'Your Mind Is On Vacation' and the title-song; also one of his best Nat Cole treatments, 'Meet Me At No Special Place'; and three of his own oblique slices of instrumental Americana. Short shrift on playing time, but the Collectables twofer detracts if anything.

[illegible]

* The Word From Mose

Atlantic 8122 72394 Allison; Ben Tucker (b); Don Lundberg (d). 3/64.

Fans can never agree – and nor can the present writers – as to which is Mose's finest achievement. We arm-wrestled and this came out top. 'Don't Forget To Smile', 'I'm Not Talking' and 'Days Like This' should be on anyone's list of the greatest songs ever written. Don't have it? Get it.

 I've Been Doing Some Thinking Collectables 6350 Allison; Red Mitchell (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 7/68.
And he has. This is Allison's darkest and most world-aware record. 'Everybody Cryin' Mercy' is as savage a cut at soggy liberalism as you'll hear, while 'You Are My Sunshine' is an intense solar flare of a track. Lots of fiery piano, and great stuff from Mitchell, too.

 Western Man / Mose In Your Ear Collectables COL 6262 Allison; Clyde Flowers, Chuck Rainey (b); Eddie Charlton, Billy Cobham (d). 71–72.
This was the beginning of a quiet period for Mose, who didn't record much at all in the '70s, and you wouldn't say these were his finest moments. He plays electric on the first date and there is a coldly remote studio sound, with Cobham a pretty unlikely choice of drummer. The second was recorded live at the In Your Ear club in Palo Alto, and here the sound is all over the place, though vocals and songwriting are well up to snuff. 'Powerhouse' is almost avant-garde.

(*) The Mose Chronicles: Live In London Volumes 1 & 2 Blue Note 29747 / 29748 Allison; Jim Mullen (g on Volume 2 only); Roy Babbington (b); Mark Taylor (d). 1/00.
Most of the Blue Note albums of the '90s have been deleted but this is a nice stroll round the block for the great man, 'at the only gig left in the world where you can play three weeks in a row, six nights a week, twice a year'. The venue is London's Pizza Express. This isn't a bought-in rhythm section, either – Mose says he's played over a thousand gigs with them. Mullen arrives to join the fun later. There's a roaring 'Excursion And Interlude', just one of 17 great tracks. Is there a more consistently enjoyable record-maker?

Also, in brief:

 Greatest Hits / * Sings And Plays Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 6004. 3/57–2/59.
Two respectable introductions, but nothing beats the original records.

 Stop The Machine Collectables COL 6347. 11/62.
The addition of Jimmy Knepper (tb) does nothing. Mose never sounds good with horns, for some reason.

Bill Allred (born 1936)

TROMBONE

Played Dixieland as a youngster, but spent time working in tourist bands for Disney. More recently led a swing–mainstream band out of Florida.

(*) Absolutely Nagel Heyer 024 Allred; Roy Williams (tb); Johnny Varro (p); Isla Eckinger (b); Butch Miles (d). 9/95.
Plenty of fun, and a rare addition to the tiny canon of two-trombone records. Allred's chops are impeccable and he cedes nothing to the more renowned Williams. The warhorse 'It's Only A Paper Moon' is given a brusque Latin arrangement and though the rhythm section plays well – even the boisterous Miles, behaving himself – it's all about the 'bones, with Allred taking the honours.

Also, in brief:

() Swing That Music Big Bear ESJCD 353. 7/89.
Precision-tooled Dixieland by the 'day-job' band. Shrill sound.

John Allred

TROMBONE

Son of Bill, and a chip off the old block.

 In The Beginning ... Arbors ARCD 19115 Allred; Mary O'Hara (double bell euph); Johnny Varro (p); David Stone (b); Ed Metz Jr (d). 9/92.

(*) Head To Head Arbors ARCD 19261 Allred; Wycliffe Gordon (tb, v); John Sheridan (p); Charlie Silva (b); Ed Metz Jr (d). 12/01.
A quality first appearance for Allred Jr, who sticks to a fairly predictable roster of themes, but for his own (over)long 'Blues For The Rich', whose ironies don't quite stand up over 13 minutes. O'Hara, who's always a gas to have on board, totes her extraordinary horn on 'Stompin' At The Savoy' only. A couple more numbers might have allowed her to establish more of a presence, but for the moment the illusion of a trombone choir is appealing. Varro eats up this repertoire, and the other two are solid as Gibraltar.

The main thing that would improve Head To Head is the elimination of the rhythm section altogether, though we guess these guys don't think in those terms. Allred and Gordon do enough to sustain interest on their own, and while the obvious background model for this is Jay and Kai, what they produce is nothing like that. The overdubbing on 'Curse Of A Broken Heart' creates an extraordinary, rich sound, and with a little more invention, the rest of the date could have had that air of surprise and enterprise. As it is, it's rather dull, and all the rhythm guys' fault.

Gunnar Almstedt (born 1926)

DOUBLE BASS

'Ankan' started playing in the late '40s and formed a long-standing group with Ove Lind. He was an authority on animals, kept a pet shop and worked as a DJ on his retirement to Spain.

 Swingin' The Blues Dragon DRCD 251 Almstedt; Jan Allan, Arnold Johansson (t); Ove Lind (cl); Bjarne Nerem (ts); Bengt Hallberg, Rune Öfwerman (p); Rolf Berg (g); Sture Kallin, Ulf Carlsson, Anders Burman (d). 4/57–5/58.
Almstedt and Lind led their swinging group from 1955 to the early '60s. Their coup was to enlist Hallberg, a modernist, to take the piano chair in an outfit modelled on the Goodman quartet. There are 13 tracks by this edition of the band, with six more by a sextet with Allan, Nerem and Öfwerman, and another four by a concert septet. Aside from these final pieces (recorded at Stockholm's Konserthus), everything is brief, neat, dancingly delivered and unfailingly enjoyable. If Lind and Hallberg offer the more obvious enjoyments, but Almstedt's steady walking lines are archetypal. A typically likeable Dragon excavation.

Amalgam

GROUP

Powerful British improvising unit which along with free bop and open-form improvisation explored aspects of folk melody as well.

♛ * Prayer For Peace FMR 109 Trevor Watts (as); Jeff Clyne, Barry Guy (b); John Stevens (d). 5/69.
(*) Innovation FMR 119 As above, except add Keith Tippett (p); Kent Carter, Lindsay Cooper (b); Terri Quaye (perc). 11/74.
 Another Time FMR 116 Trevor Watts (ss, as); Steve Hayton (g); Pete Cowling (b); Liam Genockey (d). 7/76.

The original Amalgam created some of the most stirring improvised music ever heard in Britain. The classic Prayer For Peace opens on an Ornette-like dirge in C minor before opening out into total freedom. Watts's wailing alto figures sound like a Celtic folk-theme sounded across a heavy bass pedal. The remaining tracks would be anti-climactic if they were not so good. The three-part 'Judy's Smile' builds into a suite of majesty and power, with Stevens generating much of the information from his small kit. Clyne appears on the title-track only and it's Guy who provides those richly resonant chords and fast-fingered ghost melodies.

Thereafter, Amalgam evolved into a more beat-driven outfit, in keeping with Watts's growing interest in African music. Innovation has a raw, punchy feel but still some element of freedom. Another Time is a different band altogether. Genockey was to be the saxophonist's creative partner as long as Stevens had been and the relationship is palpably close on this.

Ari Ambrose (born 1973)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Studied and played locally in Washington, DC, before further research at Manhattan School from 1991.

 Introducing Ari Ambrose Steeplechase SCCD 31450 Ambrose; Dennis Irwin (b); Billy Hart (d). 4/98.
(*) Cyclic Episode Steeplechase SCCD 31472 Ambrose; George Colligan (p); Joe Martin (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/98.

The gruff, almost barking sound suggests a lineage back through Rollins to Jacquet and early Webster, even if he does start the debut CD with a Coltrane tune. He says he wanted something that felt like a piano trio rather than a saxophone burn-out and Irwin and Hart certainly help with that. The awkwardness of Monk's 'Ugly Beauty' is smoothed away without sacrificing any of the grit, but Ambrose is not imaginative enough to carry the slow tempo effectively and it all starts to sound like bits and pieces.

The quartet session benefits from Colligan's astuteness, which immediately cools things down. This time Ambrose seems determined to tear 'Gingerbread Boy' limb from limb but it's the only diversion from a rather inscrutable set of interpretations. Though themes like Sam Rivers's title-track and Hutcherson's 'Roses Poses' are turned over and over, they're made to seem like extracts from something longer. There's much to ponder here.

(*) Chainsaw Steeplechase SCCD 31481 Ambrose; Luis Perdomo (p); Carlo De Rosa (b); Ari Hoenig (d). 5/99.
(*) Early Song Steeplechase SCCD 31496 Ambrose; George Colligan (p); Joe Martin (b); Rick Montalbano (d). 99.

Hoenig is a terrific partner for Ambrose. He crisply centres the music, even as the saxophonist is careering all over the place, and his rhythm part on 'Think Of One' is a one-man show in itself. Sometimes Ambrose is needlessly grotesque on standards like 'Ghost Of A Chance', though he at least avoids accusations of playing soundalike tenor. Perdomo is more facile than Colligan but the music is full of real excitement. There's more on Early Song. Colligan returns and continues the absorbing dialogue. The 24-bar blues 'Waiting' offers food for thought, and there's an engaging read of a Jobim tune which normally escapes jazz notice, 'Useless Landscape'. Even with the discs coming this close together chronologically, one can hear Ambrose develop.

 Jazmin Steeplechase SCCD 31535 Ambrose; Michael Leonhardt (p); Joe Martin (b); Rick Montalbano (d). 3/01.
(*) United Steeplechase SCCD 31518 Ambrose; Jay Anderson (b); Jeff Williams (d). 12/02.
 Waiting Steeplechase SCCD 31560 Ambrose; Alex Norris (t); Jon Cowherd (p); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Joe Strausser (d). 03.
 On Another Day Steeplechase SCCD 31587 Ambrose; Joe Magnarelli (t); Gary Versace (org); Mark Ferber (d). 4/05.
(*) Whatever Happens Steeplechase SCCD 31617 Ambrose; George Colligan (p); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Billy Drummond (d). 1/06.

Ari's recorded nine records as leader for the label in just eight years, as well as fronting a couple of their jam sessions, which is an impressive commitment on both sides. The strong trio set confirms that Ambrose likes open country and few harmonic maps. On the quartet record, he isn't becalmed but rather hemmed in. Both are satisfying, though no more so than the earlier dates. Waiting is generic post-bop, the dullest of the bunch. Versace has become a regular at Steeplechase and makes an interesting change in sound here. 'Bang' and 'Clueless' provide some involving exchanges. He's a more settled player, but some of the excitement has dribbled away. That's confirmed on Whatever Happens, though this is the best one for a while, with Colligan almost diplomatic in approach but with more emotional resonance from Ambrose on 'More Than You Know' and 'Like Someone In Love', long, fertile readings.

Scott Amendola

DRUMS

Exciting innovator with a strong and individual writing style.

 Cry Cryptogramophone 116 Amendola; Eric Crystal (sax); Nels Cline (g); Jenny Scheinman (vn); Todd Sickafoose (b); Carla Bozulich (v). 03.
 Believe Cryptogramophone 123 Amendola; Nels Cline, Jeff Parker (g); Jenny Scheinman (vn); John Shifflett (b). 8/05.

Cry begins arrestingly with 'His Eye Is On The Sparrow', which provides a platform for Scheinman's classically tinged violin. The group is in more familiar territory on the funky 'Bantu'. The following track, 'A Cry For John Brown', is at first hearing slightly schematic and mechanical in its approach to solo space, but on subsequent exposure one starts to hear the ordering principle; it is as if, one by one, the members of the ensemble step forward not to demonstrate their virtuosity, but to bear witness; very powerful. 'Streetbeat' is a more straightforward jazz theme, while 'Whisper, Scream' explores elements of freedom. The finishing touch is applied by a superb version of Dylan's 'Masters Of War' with a guest vocal by the ever-subversive Bozulich.

On the later record Scheinman is again prominently featured, but the real drama comes from the twinned guitarists, Parker most closely associated with post-rock group Tortoise. The mix of material is again eclectic. 'Cesar Chavez' adds a new Latin touch, but it's the inside–outside feel of the title-cut, the Neil Young tribute 'Buffalo Bird Woman' and the hefty guitar sound of 'Resistance' that most stand out. Some reviewers noted a Bill Frisell influence, but we feel that to be misleading. Amendola has a weighter agenda.

AMM

IMPROVISING ENSEMBLE

AMM's 35-year history is one of the most extraordinary and disciplined in improvised music. It is also completely sui generis. The group's membership has changed over the years, with only Eddie Prévost a constant; what has remained unchanged is the members' devotion to engaged music-making that is neither abstract nor conventionally expressive but always intensely beautiful.

(*) AMMusic 1966 Matchless/rer no number Cornelius Cardew (p, transistor radio); Lou Gare (ts, vn); Eddie Prévost (d); Keith Rowe (g, transistor radio); Lawrence Sheaff (cl, acc, transistor radio). 6/66.

* The Crypt – 12 June 1968 Matchless MRCD 05 2CD Cornelius Cardew (p, clo); Lou Gare (ts, vn); Christopher Hobbs, Eddie Prévost (perc); Keith Rowe (g, elec). 6/68.

* Laminal Matchless MRCD 31 3CD As above, except add John Tilbury (p). 12/69–5/94.

In a rather dense and difficult book called Noise (Bruits), the French cultural theorist Jacques Attali identifies four main stages in the political economy of music, culminating in a final utopian phase which Attali calls composition. This is a music 'beyond exchange ... performed for the musician's own enjoyment, as self-communication, fundamentally outside all other communication, as self-transcendence, a solitary, egotistical, noncommercial act'. It's an argument and a model that applies very cogently, though not always entirely accurately, to the music of AMM, who for three decades have stood outside every commercial and critical nexus and continued to make rich, astonishing music. One would have to quibble with 'egotistical', for it is almost axiomatic of 'AMMusic' (no other category exists) that ego is effectively suspended. AMM's origin lies in the British free-jazz movement, but the political and philosophical instincts of the founding members quickly dictated its transformation into an improvising collective in which process rather than gesture was important and which redefined the growing division in new music between performers and audience. Early AMM performances were conducted in the dark – The Crypt seems an entirely appropriate setting – and often deliberately blurred starting and finishing times.

Though 'beyond exchange' and defined entirely by the context and the collective understanding of the changing membership, the music has begun to enjoy a second life on record. The advent of CD meant that for the first time whole performances could be issued without breaks or editing, and founder member Eddie Prévost has used his own Matchless imprint to document the group's early and ongoing history. The Crypt was previously available in a two-LP boxed set, but the improvement in sound quality, a richness of texture and of detail in quieter passages, is revelatory, here and throughout the older catalogue. In a superb liner-note to the earliest performance, Prévost points out that the Jazz Journal once identified the group as the 'Cornelius Cardew Quartet', a nonsensical and ironic attribution on all sorts of counts.

This is a music which rejects instrumentalism. It matters very little after a few minutes who is playing what, particularly when conventional technique is almost entirely overthrown. In later years, as can be heard in the later performances on Laminal, Prévost was to return to something that demonstrated at least a kinship with jazz drumming, and Tilbury's piano-playing is more conventionally expressive than Cardew's. Rowe is perhaps the key to the sound-world. He is credited as 'guitarist', but only in the most deconstructionist sense, laying the instrument flat on a table and manipulating feedback, overtones, percussive effects and accidentals, using the instrument as a sound source without a playing history. Veterans will insist that the 1966 record and The Crypt are essential texts, but the newcomer should certainly settle on Laminal, which documents an early overseas performance (in Aarhus, Denmark) with much later work from what was to become the '90s version of the group. There is much more (and perhaps better) from them below, but the juxtaposition of their intent, uneffusive music with the turbulent swirl of the late-'60s group is instructive.

 At The Roundhouse Anomalous ICES 01 Lou Gare (ts); Eddie Prévost (d). 8/72.

 To Hear And Back Again Matchless MRCD 03 As above. 6/73–4/75.

Like the similarly convened Spontaneous Music Ensemble, AMM functioned for a time as a duo. What's odd about these early-to-mid-'70s tracks and what distinguishes them most clearly from the Trevor Watts–John Stevens version of SME is the extent to which Gare and Prévost seem to have reverted to the free-jazz idiom they were presumed to have left behind more than a decade before. The two long studio tracks which occupied sides one and two of the original LP, 'To Hear' and 'Back Again', are very much more abstract than the half-hour's worth of live performances from London and Berlin that fill out the CD reissue. It's the additional material, and particularly the opening item, 'Unity First', which reminds the listener that Gare and Prévost started out as Sonny Rollins and Max Roach acolytes and retained a good measure of that basic sound feel, that sense of musical organization in even their most 'out' performances. Three stars may seem diffident, or even damning. It's simply that this disc is far from representative of AMM and, while Prévost could doubtless point up some quite obvious continuities, this is probably better grouped with the recordings made under his own name.

Issued for the first time in 2004, At The Roundhouse is a surprisingly good-quality recording of AMM's appearance at Harvey Matusow's International Carnival Of Experimental Sound event. The single continuous performance, titled 'The Sound Of Indifference' here (though what is meant by 'indifference' should be looked at carefully), is punctuated by silences and occasional drone passages, where Prévost plays underneath sustained tones from the saxophonist. Some of the duo's later work, including purely drone-based gigs, is anticipated here. A most valuable document of a remarkable period in British free jazz.

 Generative Themes Matchless MRCD 06 John Tilbury (p); Keith Rowe (g, elec); Eddie Prévost (d). 12/82.

 Combine + Laminates + Treatise '84 Matchless MRCD 26 As above. 84.

(*) The Inexhaustible Document Matchless MRCD 13 As above, except add Rohan De Saram (clo). 87.

* The Nameless Uncarved Block Matchless MRCD 20 As above, except omit De Saram; add Lou Gare (ts). 4/90.

The trio represented on Generative Themes and Combine + Laminates was to be the basic AMM line-up thereafter. Interestingly, the early '80s saw the group rethinking and in some respects greatly simplifying the approach of the Cardew years. Tilbury is a more conventionally expressive, but by no means a conventional, player. His use of space, light and shade is extraordinary, constantly suggesting (as does Prévost) the possibility of linear development without ever allowing it to emerge. That is particularly clear on Generative Themes, which can be heard as a sequence of five potential compositions in which the transformational rules and functions are laid out but given no straightforwardly meaningful substance. On reflection, this is perhaps the most abstract record AMM has issued. That is an attempt at description, not criticism. The third item on the 1984 album (originally a Pogus LP of a performance at the Arts Club in Chicago) introduced material which drew on Cardew's theoretical/conceptual work, suggesting that, just a year or two after his untimely death, his partners were working through ideas and procedures which it had not been possible hitherto to accommodate in AMM terms. The addition of cellist Rohan De Saram, who appears on The Inexhaustible Document, was a reminder of Cardew's other instrumental voice, except that De Saram, a member of the blue-chip new music group the Arditti Quartet is probably closer in instinct to a philosophical tradition in which suspension of the self is a premiss rather than a problematic goal. He certainly fits into the music seamlessly.

Gare, who reappears on the 1990 album, is a more problematic presence. Critics gleefully queued up to nominate The Nameless Uncarved Block as AMM's 'rock' record – ironically enough, given Prévost's very fruitful association with high-octane outfit God and other groups later in the decade when AMM began to receive paternity suits as progenitors of the new ambient and process-driven music. Again, the saxophonist doesn't sound quite in context. There are moments in the huge 'Igneous' (there are many longer AMM tracks, but this one feels burstingly oversized) when the whole thing seems poised on the brink of a catastrophic finale, much as John Coltrane's long-form improvisations with Pharoah Sanders did. There the similarities end, of course. This is music which is not exhausted by repetition, and even seasoned AMM admirers (ourselves included), who might once have rejected the very idea of 'mechanical reproduction', have begun to accept the importance of documentation. This is music which transcends its moment. It does make sense to listen to it many times. It is never the same, always fresh, always developing, or developing new pathways in the listener.

* Newfoundland Matchless MRCD 23 Keith Rowe (g, elec); John Tilbury (p); Eddie Prévost (d). 7/92.

* Live In Allentown USA Matchless MRCD 30 As above. 4/94.

(*) From A Strange Place Modern Music PSFD 80 As above. 10/95.

(*) Before Driving To The Chapel We Took Coffee With Rick And Jennifer Reed Matchless MRCD 35 As above. 4/96.

Composer Howard Skempton's sleeve-note for the marvellous Newfoundland makes salutary reading. 'It is surely easy to resort to adjectives' – we have tried to resist – 'this music is so stunningly immediate, so palpable, that it makes a nonsense of such musings.' Emphatically, yes, but it still demands some kind of response, and reactions to AMM are notoriously difficult to verbalize. Comparison is perhaps the safest resort. In purely timbral, textural terms, recent performances have been gentler, less confrontational than of yore. Some of this may be explained by passing years, some by changing expectations. In the '90s AMM have been hailed as the progenitors of a whole slew of post-rock idioms, and there may be some subconscious attempt to build bridges to a younger generation. The dynamics of a trio are always intriguing. Prévost continues to suggest and imply a pulse even when it cannot be securely quantified. Tilbury is delicacy itself, somewhere between Satie and Bill Evans, but filtered through gauze. It's Rowe who is the anarchist, the deconstructor, splashing colours across the Allentown set and providing the most significant estrangements on From A Strange Place, a rare AMM appearance on another label. It is extraordinarily hard to separate these sessions. Different as they are, each has its beauties, and all three have their longueurs. The most recent of the bunch – and if there's a longer or worse album-title in the book you should probably claim discount – is curiously formulaic, cast in a language that often seems to be striving after effect rather than going straight for the unfettered jouissance that makes this music so absolute and so exceptional.

 Tunes Without Measure Or End Matchless MRCD 44 As above. 5/00.

(*) Fine Matchless MRCD 46 As above. 5/01.

We were present when the first of these was recorded, as part of the Free RadiCCAls event in Glasgow's McLellan Galleries, the temporary home of CCA. As a recorded experience, it is even more subtly detailed and inflected than the original performance, and eminently listenable. Taken as a pair, these records strongly reflect Matchless's marketing tag-line about AMM records being as like and unalike as trees. The sound-world is now instantly identifiable, but in constant variation and flux. We marginally prefer Fine, which was recorded at a festival in France and in the company of Fine Kwiatkowski. It's not for us to comment on the relationship between music and physical movement, but there is a wonderful grace and centredness to the almost hour-long set, and one can almost envisage using it as a meditation or t'ai chi device.

 AMM/Formanex Fibrr 005 As above, except add John White, Laurent Dailleau (elec). 7/02.

An unusual festival collaboration with French electro-acoustic ensemble Formanex, who had previously recorded parts of Cornelius Cardew's Treatise. Recorded in Nancy, it blends found sound (including some intriguing pastoral noises) with white and pink noise, but as ever it's Tilbury and Prévost who command attention with their almost telepathic understanding. The addition of other instrumental voices, notably Dailleau's theremin, is interesting, but the language of AMM music is by now so completely sui generis and familiar/unfamiliar that any outside influence is faintly corrosive. This will be hard to find, in any case.

* Apogee Matchless MRCD 61 2CD As above, except omit White, Dailleau; add Alvin Curran (various); Frederic Rzewski (p); Richard Teitelbaum (syn). 4–5/04.

A historic encounter. No other improvising ensemble has explored the philosophy of sound and its technologies more thoroughly than Musica Ellettronica Viva. By contrast to AMM's substantial archive of recordings, MEV is only sparsely documented, partly because the group's membership and ethos has changed so radically over the decades. The key elements in this configuration are Rzewski's classically aware and thoroughly Europeanized pianism (very different to Tilbury's, which ironically draws more from American examples) and Teitelbaum's virtuosic use of synthesizers.

On the last day of April and the first day of May 2004, AMM/MEV first made a studio recording as a collective and then played separately as part of the Freedom Of The City festival in London. The three studio improvisations are unmistakably not the work of either ensemble alone, though parsing the differences takes some effort. As ever, it is pointless trying to determine who is playing what. Prévost's percussion effects and Rowe's tabletop abstractions and outbreaks of radio noise sometimes emerge from the mix; Teitelbaum has a liking for shimmering figures of great harmonic complexity. Beyond that, it is not worthwhile to explore; the encounter generates a hugely involved synthesis in which elements of both groups seem to remain intact but inseparable from the whole.

We'd recommend listening to the live sets first, not just to establish contact with MEV's less familiar improvisational languages (check out Curran's huge opening blasts on the Hebrew shohar) but because the quiet drama of collaboration only makes complete sense after one has sampled the more linear approach of the Americans. A long, demanding listen, but packed with astonishing music. Even if only as a historical document Apogee is worth having.

(*) Norwich Matchless MRCD 64 John Tilbury (p); Eddie Prévost (perc). 2/05.

The departure of Keith Rowe some months before saw AMM once again functioning as a duo. Prévost and Rowe's personal and aesthetic differences occasioned some public acrimony, though unlike some of the noisy altercations that have punctuated British improv over the years, this one did seem predominantly philosophical, though no less heatedly argued. It would be mistake to listen to this most quiet, luminous performance as if in some way it illustrated Rowe's absence. Prévost may have incorporated some devices intended to occupy some parts of Rowe's sound-world (he would later release a record of solo tam-tam, much of it played with freely rotating wire brushes), but his basic language seems unchanged. Tilbury works inside the sound-box of his piano at the beginning, with various preparations on the strings. There are occasional outbursts later, highly charged sound-events that might be fleeting collisions in a cloud chamber, but for the most part this is deeply reflective music, absolutely in the spirit of AMM's 40-year history.

Albert Ammons (1907–49)

PIANO

Playing from the mid-'20s onward but had most success during the boogie-woogie craze of the late '30s.

(*) Albert Ammons 1936–1939 Classics 715 Ammons; Guy Kelly (t); Dalbert Bright (cl, as); Ike Perkins (g); Israel Crosby (b); Jimmy Hoskins (d). 2/36–10/39.

 Albert Ammons, 1939–1946 Classics 927 As above and below, except add Artie Starks (as); Don Byas (ts); Lonnie Johnson, Ike Perkins (g); Israel Crosby, John Lindsay (b); Tom Taylor (d); Mildred Anderson, Sippie Wallace (v). 4/39–4/46.

(*) The Boogie Woogie Man /  The Boogie Woogie Man ASV AJA 5305 / Topaz 1067 As above, except add Harry James, Frankie Newton, Hot Lips Page (t); J. C. Higginbotham, Vic Dickenson (tb); Meade Lux Lewis, Pete Johnson (p); Teddy Bunn (g); Johnny Williams (b); Eddie Dougherty, Big Sid Catlett, James F. Hoskins (d). 2/36–2/44.

 Albert Ammons, 1946–1948 Classics 1100 Ammons; Marvin Randolph (t); Riley Hampton (as); Gene Ammons (ts); Ike Perkins (g); Israel Crosby (b); Alvin Burroughs, Jack Cooley (d). 11/46–48.

Arguably the least individual of the great triumvirate (Pete Johnson, Meade Lux Lewis) of boogie-woogie pianists, Ammons lacked nothing in power and swing. Classics usefully round up all his '30s tracks: two Decca sessions by the Rhythm Kings, and 18 solos cut for Vocalion, Solo Art and Blue Note (the label's first artist), with a selection of Chicago airshots. 'Shout For Joy' and 'Boogie Woogie Stomp' are sheer exuberance, though the 1939 Solo Art session reveals him to be a considerable blues piano man, 'Chicago In Mind' contemplating the form with real insight. ASV and Topaz go for a broader cross-section, with material from various band sessions for Blue Note and Commodore. The second Classics volume covers the Solo Art and Commodore material, some great stuff with Hot Lips and a batch of Chicago tracks with vocalists. Exuberant and entertaining.

Son Gene appears on the last of the Classics volumes, and the Ammonses cheerfully celebrate the generation gap on 'St Louis Blues'. 'Hiroshima' seems to be a version of 'Nagasaki', and there are lots of echoes and anticipations through the rest. Some nice playing by the Rhythm Kings. The career was cut short abruptly at the start of December 1949; a stroke.

Also, in brief:

 Alternate Takes, Radio Performances, Unissued Home Performances Document 1008. 36–46.

Self-explanatory and a must for collectors, especially the home recordings.

 The Boogie Woogie Trio: Volumes 1 & 2 Storyville 8057 2CD. 39–54.

Solos, duos and a dozen trios with Pete Johnson and Meade Lux Lewis (p). Some bonus tracks.

Gene Ammons (1925–74)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Son of Albert, 'Jug' worked with Billy Eckstine and Woody Herman before leading his own bands through the '50s and '60s, a career interrupted by prison terms for drug offences. Recorded extensively in a swing-to-bop style and exerted a huge influence on subsequent soul-jazz.

(*) Gene Ammons 1947–1949 Classics 1251 Ammons; Gail Brockman, Jesse Miller (t); Ernest Macdonald (as); Leo Parker, John Dungee (as, bs); James Craig, Junior Mance, Christine Chatman (p); Leo Blevins (g); Gene Wright, Leroy Jackson, Lowell Pointer (b); Chuck Williams, Ellis Bartee, Wesley Landers, Ike Day (d); Mary F. Graham, Earl Coleman, Marcel Daniels (v). 6/47–2/49.

(*) Gene Ammons 1949–1950 Classics 1329 Ammons; Jesse Miller, Bill Massey (t); Matthew Gee, Eph Greenlea, Bennie Green (tb); Ernest Macdonald (as, bs); Christine Chatman (p, v); Junior Mance, Duke Jordan, Charlie Bateman (p); Leo Blevins (g); Lowell Pointer, Leroy Jackson, Tommy Potter, Gene Wright (b); Ike Day, Wesley Landers, Jo Jones, Art Blakey (d); Teddy Williams (v). 2/49–5/50.

(*) Gene Ammons 1950–1951 Classics 1367 Ammons; Billy Massey (t); Matthew Gee, Al Outcalt (tb); Sonny Stitt (ts, bs); Duke Jordan, Charlie Bateman, Junior Mance (p); Gene Wright (b); Wesley Landers, Teddy Stewart, Art Blakey (d). 6/50–5/51.

(*) Gene Ammons 1951–1953 Classics 1406 Ammons; Bill Massey, Johnny Coles (t); Eli Dabney, J. J. Johnson (tb); Lino Murray (ts); Sonny Stitt (ts, bs); Rudy Williams (bs); Clarence Anderson, John Houston (p); Earl May, Ernie Shepard, Benny Stuberville (b); Teddy Stewart, Bob Wilson, George Brown (d); Sally Early (v). 6/51–6/53.

(*) The Gene Ammons Story: The 78 Era Prestige PRCD-24058-2 Ammons; Bill Massey, Nat Woodyard (t); Matthew Gee, Eli Dabney, Bennie Green, Henderson Chambers (tb); Sonny Stitt, Rudy Williams, McKinley Easton (bs); Duke Jordan, Charlie Bateman, Junior Mance, Clarence 'Sleepy' Anderson, John Houston (p); Gene Wright, Earl May, Ernie Shepard, Ben Stuberville, Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey, Wesley Landers, Teddy Stewart, George Brown (d); Earl Coleman (v). 4/50–2/55.

(*) All-Star Sessions Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 014 Similar to items above, except add Freddie Redd (p); Addison Farmer (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 3/50–6/55.

Jug made a lot of records. Classics have dealt effectively with the pre-history, the small-combo sessions set down for Mercury, Aladdin, Chess and Aristocrat at the end of the '40s, mostly bleary stuff and boppin'-the-blues clichés. More sessions for Aristocrat and Mercury open Classics 1329 before they pick up the first Prestige dates (duplicated on The 78 Era). Classics 1367 takes in five more Prestige sessions and two stray ones for Chess: the usual mix of hung-over ballads and blues shuffles. A few head-turning moments: Matthew Gee plays a nice chorus on 'Jug Head Ramble'; the two-part 'Stringin' The Jug' is an early tussle with Stitt; and the final Chess date catches the tenor sound better than anything previously. Classics 1406 mixes sessions for Prestige, Decca and United and points up how the jukebox market threw up unlikely material: 'When The Saints', 'Undecided' and 'Charmaine', but even if 'Hot Stuff' isn't much more than a tired blues riff, it prompts some of Jug's warmest improvising.

Jug's style had been forged as a first-generation bopper, but these early records find him walking a line between bop and R&B honking. Perhaps the darker passions of a Parker were beyond him. The 78 Era is rough-and-ready music, and listening to it is like thumbing coins into a jukebox of the day. The earliest tracks on All-Star Sessions are also typical of the kind of stuff he recorded prior to the LP era, roistering through two-tenor battles with Stitt, a kindred spirit. A later date with Farmer and Donaldson is more restrained until the collective whoop of 'Madhouse'.

 The Happy Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 013 Ammons; Art Farmer, Jackie McLean (as); Duke Jordan (p); Addison Farmer (b); Art Taylor (d); Candido Camero (perc). 4/56.

(*) Jammin' With Gene Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 211 Ammons; Donald Byrd (t); Jackie McLean (as); Mal Waldron (b); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 7/56.

 Funky Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 244 As above, except omit Byrd; add Art Farmer (t); Kenny Burrell (g). 1/57.

 Jammin' In Hi Fi Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 129 As above, except omit Farmer, Watkins; add Idrees Sulieman (t); Paul Chambers (b). 4/57.

 The Big Sound /  Groove Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 651 / 723 Ammons; John Coltrane (as); Paul Quinichette (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Jerome Richardson (f); Mal Waldron (p); George Joyner (b); Art Taylor (d). 1/58.

(*) Blue Gene Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 192 Ammons; Idrees Sulieman (t); Pepper Adams (bs); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 5/58.

The next seven records all follow similar patterns: long, expansive tracks and variations on the blues and standards. Ammons takes the leading solos, but so often resorts to quotes and familiar licks that one is left wishing for a less open-ended environment; of the other players, McLean and Waldron are the most reliably inventive. Jammin' In Hi Fi sounds like a warm-up, while Jammin' With Gene has a very long and overcooked 'Not Really The Blues' balancing two superior slow pieces. Funky and Blue Gene are decent if unremarkable, but the session that makes up both The Big Sound and Groove Blues has a couple of interesting points: a rare (if undistinguished) appearance by Coltrane on alto and some unexpectedly piquant flute from Richardson.

 The Gene Ammons Story: Organ Combos Prestige PRCD-24071 Ammons; Joe Newman (t); Frank Wess (ts, f); Jack McDuff, Johnny 'Hammond' Smith (org); Wendell Marshall, Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor, Walter Perkins (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 6/60–11/61.

 Boss Tenor Prestige PRCD 7180 Ammons; Tommy Flanagan (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 6/60.

 Angel Eyes Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 980 Ammons; Frank Wess (ts, f); Johnny 'Hammond' Smith (org); Wendell Marshall, Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor, Ed Thigpen (d). 6/60, 9/62.

 Jug Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 701 Ammons; Richard Wyands (p); Clarence 'Sleepy' Anderson (org); Doug Watkins (b); J. C. Heard (d). 1/61.

(*) The Gene Ammons Story: Gentle Jug Prestige PRCD-24079 Ammons; Richard Wyands, Patti Bown (p); George Duvivier, Doug Watkins (b); J. C. Heard, Ed Shaughnessy (d). 1/61–4/62.

 Late Hour Special Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 942 Ammons; Hobart Dotson, Clark Terry (t); Oliver Nelson (as); George Barrow, Red Holloway (bs); Bob Ashton (bs); Patti Bown, Richard Wyands (p); George Duvivier, Wendell Marshall (b); Walter Perkins, Bill English (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 6/61–4/62.

(*) Live! In Chicago Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 395 Ammons; Eddie Buster (org); Gerald Donovan (d). 8/61.

 Up Tight! Prestige PRCD 24140 Ammons; Walter Bishop Jr, Patti Bown (p); Arthur Davis, George Duvivier (b); Art Taylor (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 10/61.

 Preachin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 792 Ammons; Clarence 'Sleepy' Anderson (org); Sylvester Hickman (b); Dorral Anderson (d). 5/62.

 Jug And Dodo Prestige PRCD 24021 Ammons; Dodo Marmarosa (p); Sam Jones (b); Marshall Thompson (d). 5/62.

(*) Bad! Bossa Nova Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 351 Ammons; Hank Jones (p); Bucky Pizzarelli, Kenny Burrell (g); Norman Edge (b); Oliver Jackson (d); Al Hayes (perc). 9/62.

(*) We'll Be Together Again Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 708 Ammons; Sonny Stitt (as, ts); John Houston (p); Buster Williams (b); George Brown (d). 68.

(*) The Boss Is Back! Prestige PRCD 24129 Ammons; Prince James, Houston Person (ts); Junior Mance (p); Sonny Phillips (org); Billy Butler (g); Buster Williams, Bob Bushnell (b); Frankie Jones, Bernard Purdie (d); Candido Camero (perc). 11/69.

Sadly, even the superior Ammons albums are spotty. Great performances follow weary ones, even on the same record, and there doesn't seem to be a particular setting that guarantees top form. The clinkers here are Preachin', where he scarcely seems motivated to play, and The Boss Is Back!, which compiles the original album (not bad) with Brother Jug (rotten). We'll Be Together Again should have been an incendiary meeting with Stitt, but it leaves a trail of smoke rather than any fire. Bad! Bossa Nova smells like a bad corporate idea, but he blows hard enough to make it worthwhile.

Boss Tenor, Jug and Organ Combos (which takes in Twistin' the Tenor and the item below) are all solid. Still available on its own, Angel Eyes is almost worth it for the gorgeous girl on the cover, but there's some good playing as well from the leader (who was about to serve a seven-year prison stretch) and from Wess. The reissue also includes material from two years on, with Waldron, Marshall and Thigpen. Late Hour Special has four tracks with an Oliver Nelson-arranged band that sound fine (Clark Terry sparkles) and three amiable quartet tunes. The best records, though, are Jug and Dodo, a rare appearance by Marmarosa, and Gentle Jug, which revives The Soulful Moods (where he plays with Hawkins-like authority) and Nice'n'Cool. Same situation with Up Tight!, which combines two decent 1961 LPs.

 Chicago Concert Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1091 Ammons; James Moody (ts); Jodie Christian (p); Cleveland Eaton (p); Marshall Thompson (d). 11/71.

 Fine And Mellow Prestige PRCD 24281 Ammons; Sonny Phillips (org, p); Ernie Hayes (org); Hank Jones (p); Joe Beck, Maynard Parker (g); Ron Carter (b); Idris Muhammad, Mickey Roker, Billy Cobham (d); strings. 10–11/72.

 God Bless Jug And Sonny /  Left Bank Encores Prestige PRCD 11019 / 11022 Ammons; Sonny Stitt (as, ts); Cedar Walton (p); Sam Jones (b); Billy Higgins (d). 6/73.

Not quite the end of the line, for there were another five dates after these. On Fine And Mellow he lumbers through pop material, but manages to maintain a tough individuality through the string arrangements and dud tunes. The Chicago disc is from an undistinguished hotel engagement, excess piled on excess, with an interminable 'Yardbird Suite'. The Baltimore dates with Stitt are better, abrim with atmosphere even if the playing sometimes falters. Stitt sounds the stronger but the best moments are when they play tag, and the playing almost justifies two CDs.

(*) Goodbye Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1081 Ammons; Nat Adderley (c); Gary Bartz (as); Kenny Drew (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 3/74.

Gene's last date. It's a terrific band and they play well, but Ammons is clearly ailing; he sounds sour in the ensembles and his solos start enigmatically before petering out into his oldest honking clichés. A mixed farewell.

Also, in brief:

 Legends Of Acid Jazz Prestige 24188. 62–68.

Usefully puts together two '60s records and a couple of tracks from a session with Don Patterson (org).

(*) Greatest Hits: Volume 1 – The Sixties Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 6005. 61–69.

Reasonable trawl through a rich catalogue.

 Soul Summit Prestige PRCD 24118. 6/61–4/62.

Shared with Jack McDuff (org) and Sonny Stitt (ts).

 A Stranger In Town Prestige PRCD 24266. 54–70.

Compiles Night Lights, Sock! and Velvet Soul from across a 15-year period, half of which was spent in jail.

(*) The Chase! Prestige PRCD 24166. 7/70.

Not exactly an old-fashioned two-tenor battle, since either Jug or Dexter Gordon sits out much of the time. Fun, though.

 And Friends At Montreux Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1023. 7/73.

The Adderleys, Dexter Gordon (ts) and Hampton Hawes (ky), but no sparks.

Dave Amram (born 1930)

FRENCH HORN, PIANO

Ferociously prolific and eclectic, he has written music in just about every imaginable form and has been listed as one of the 20 most performed American composers.

 The Music Of David Amram: Jazz Portrait Fresh Sound FRSCD466 Amram; George Barrow, Harold Land (ts); Bobby Jaspar (ts, f); Maurice Vander (p, hpd); George Borrow, Eddie de Haas, Arthur Phipps (b); Jacques David, Al Harewood, Leon Petties (d). 7/55, 1/57, 61.

Amram cut the first of these sophisticated sides in Paris in the summer of 1955. Like anyone who has experimented with jazz on French horn (one thinks of Tom Varner later), it's difficult not to sound like a slower-paced trombone-player. Nevertheless, he sounds effortlessly fleet on 'I Married An Angel', one of the standard performances from the Paris date. His own 'Rue Mazarine' and 'Hess Goes West' are more impressionistic, while 'The Birds Of Montparnasse' (with Vander on harpsichord and Jaspar on flute) comes across like film music. The later New York dates have Amram mostly on piano, formidably competent but fairly characterless as a soloist, for all the horn-like phrasing. A remarkable figure, with an established place in American music.

Franck Amsallem (born 1961)

PIANO

Algerian-born graduate of the Nice Conservatory, he's played with Gerry Mulligan, Charles Lloyd and Bobby Watson, and been MD at the Grand Casino in Monte Carlo.

(*) Out A Day Nocturne NTCD532 Amsallem; Gary Peacock (b); Bill Stewart (d). 7/90.

 Is That So Sunnyside SSC 1071 Amsallem; Tim Ries (ts); Leon Parker (d, perc). 97.

 On Second Thought Naïve 226105 Amsallem; Tim Ries (ss, as); Johannes Weidenmuller (b); Marc Miralta (d). 2/01.

 Summer Times Nocturne NTCD340 Amsallem; Johannes Weidenmuller (b); Joe Chambers (d). 03.

He hails from Oran, Albert Camus's home town, and is no stranger to talent. Further study at Berklee and the Manhattan School of Music refined what was already there and Amsallem became a valued sideman. The debut has been reissued and it's still his best record, with a top-flight trio and a first glimpse of 'Affreusement Votre' – 'Horribly Yours' – which is a signature Amsallem piece, playful but with backbone; it reappears on the second disc. The next album introduces a partnership that has remained in place, though we remain unpersuaded by the saxophonist, who tries too hard to impress. The trio with Parker is more effective. On Second Thought introduced 'Chanson Triste' and 'Thirty Two More Bars To Go', vividly expressive ideas. The sound is very live and present, with nice separation. Amsallem himself is impressive rather than engaging: too many notes, not enough reflection, even when the silhouette of something grander is evident.

The last of the group is briskly delivered. Standards predominate this time, but the effort to be different sometimes leads him astray. He does more interesting things with the ballads. A decent entry in a crowded market.

Also, in brief:

 A Week In Paris Nocturne NTCD551. 05.
Ambitious group effort, but lacking in drama or spirit.

Erik Amundsen (born 1937)

DOUBLE BASS

Made an early debut playing in his brother's trio and has worked steadily ever since with most of the major Scandinavian figures.

 Portrait Of A Norwegian Artist Gemini GMOJCD 9909/9910 2CD Amundsen; large collective personnel. 60–99.
'Jazz from the heart' is the Gemini motto and Amundsen's big-hearted playing and solid pulse are definitive of what is best in Norwegian jazz, and certainly what separates it from the cooler, more abstract image that settles round ECM's Norwegian artists. Here is a generous representation of Amundsen's work over a three-decade period, too generously proportioned to analyse in detail but featuring Karin Krog, Laila Dalseth, Ole Jacob Hansen, Joe Cohn, Totti Bergh and many others.

Arild Andersen (born 1945)

DOUBLE BASS

Like many players of his generation in Scandinavia, Andersen was much influenced by exiled guru George Russell's Lydian Chromatic approach to harmony. The bassist has worked in a wide range of contexts and was leader of Masqualero. His characteristic manner is resonant and fleet, with much of the harmonic complexity Russell's influence imbued.

(*) Molde Concert ECM 159497-2 Andersen; John Taylor (p); Bill Frisell (g); Alphonse Mouzon (d). 8/81.
This is that rarity, an ECM reissue with extra material. The original concert album has been expanded to some 78 minutes of music with four extra tracks. It's an untypical Andersen group: Mouzon is a combative and over-aggressive drummer, but for once the Norwegian bassist seems to enjoy working alongside such naked power, and Frisell treats it almost as a power-trio situation. Taylor has to find his own way into this, but he's adept enough to do so, and we still consider 'The Sword Under His Wings' especially to be a memorable group performance. The extra tracks add weight, which the intense performance is able to carry.

(*) Sagn ECM 849647-2 Andersen; Bendik Hofseth (ts, ss); Bugge Wesseltoft (ky); Frode Alnaes (g); Nana Vasconcelos (perc, v); Kirsten Bråten Berg (v). 8/90.
 If You Look Far Enough ECM 513902-2 Andersen; Ralph Towner (g); Audun Kleive (d); Nana Vasconcelos (perc). 88, 7/91, 2/92.
* Hyperborean ECM 537342-2 Andersen; Bendik Hofseth (ts); Tore Brunborg (ts, ss); Kenneth Knudsen (ky); Paolo Vinaccia (d, perc); Cikada String Quartet. 12/96.
(*) Achirana /  The Triangle ECM 1728 / 1752 Andersen; Vassilis Tsabropoulos (p); John Marshall (d). 10/99; 1/03.
Andersen's music is an intriguingly unstable amalgam of Miles Davis (an influence evident in the bassist's group, Masqualero) and Norwegian folk forms. Sagn is weighted towards the latter, an early shot in ECM's effort to integrate the Nordic tradition and American jazz and one of the most successful, though Berg is not as compelling a presence as her countrywomen Agnes Buen Garnås or Mari Boine. She is the weak link in an otherwise splendid record.

If You Look Far Enough is constrained by its origins – recorded over nearly four years – and by the original purpose of much of the material. Written as a soundtrack for the film Blucher, it limps along for lack of supporting images, and some of the playing is notably limp, too. It does, however, feature Andersen prominently as soloist, sometimes unadorned, sometimes making use of real-time delay and a cathedral-proportioned reverb. The lines positively sing.

Hyperborean is a reference to the cool, ageless land the Greeks believed lay beyond the northern mountains. The music is disciplined, unromantic and timeless. Andersen dispenses with effects pedals, combining his increasingly elaborate improvisations in real time with keyboards and string quartet, lending the whole – ironically enough – a jazzier feel than anything he has done since Masqualero. Hofseth and Brunborg are reduced to supporting cast and it's the Cikada Quartet that dominates the first half. Things loosen up later, albeit leaving an uneasy sense that Andersen has delivered his main ideas upfront and is then struggling to fill the slot. Though structurally less elaborate than Sagn, which is organized as a three-part suite, Hyperborean has a unity of tone and an overall sense of direction lacking on the earlier discs. Andersen dominates completely. His sound is immense and his soloing involved and compelling, once again prompting the question why he hasn't yet recorded unaccompanied.

Achirana resembles nothing more than Paul Bley's trios of the early '70s with Kent Carter and Barry Altschul. Tsabropoulos favours tiny, disengaged phrases strung together into long, long lines. Marshall has long been an unsung hero – why is he heard so little of on record? – and Andersen is in top form on 'The Spell' and 'She's Gone'. Lovely, delicately cadenced jazz.

The follow-up record is almost a retread of the first, which is not to say that it lacks interest. Some of the pieces are almost explicitly classical in conception; 'Choral' ('Chorale', surely?) is Tsabropoulos's composition and 'Pavane' is the pianist's arrangement of Ravel's lovely piece 'for a princess of a bygone age'. See Larry Coryell's version for comparison. The only improvised track is the relatively brief 'European Triangle'. Andersen's own tunes, led off by the fine 'Saturday', are mostly in the same modal, lyrical style he deployed with Masqualero. This bids fair to be his most durable group since then.

 Electra ECM 1908 Andersen; Arve Henriksen (t); Eivind Aarset (g); Patrice Heral (d, tabla); Paolo Vinaccia (perc); Nils Petter Molvaer (d, prog); Elly Casdas, Chrysanthi Douzi, Fotini Grammenou, Savina Yannatou (v). 02–03.
Slightly difficult to judge purely on its merits as a CD experience, since this was music written for a performance of Sophocles' play at the Spring Theatre in Athens as part of the Cultural Olympiad. In spirit, the music is a maturer version of the so-called Nu Jazz that has infected label catalogues over the last few years and which seems to have put down deep roots in Scandinavia. Andersen, though, is such a subtle and thoughtful musician that he avoids its pseudo-profound vulgarities almost entirely and comes up with something quite grand and compelling. Henriksen's trumpet prelude sets the tone: trumpet, guitar, two drummers and the leader's bass and arco loops turn 'Mourn' into a major statement ... and then regrettably the vocals kick in. Greek is an awkward language to meld effectively with the kind of metres Andersen favours. He modulates them significantly on 'Electra Song' and 'Chorus II', but there is a hint of strain none the less. The bass/guitar duo on 'Divine Command' is a small gem and the full instrumental group do wonderful things on '7th Command'. Otherwise, this seriously lacks the visual component which would have given it cohesion. Snapshots of the musicians might have been replaced with more production photos, but really a DVD is what is needed.

Also, in brief:

 :rarum: Selected Recordings ECM 8019. 75–99.
A generous compilation with due weight given to other leaders and rising talent. Arguably one of the most useful discs in the series.

Jacob Anderskov

PIANO

Danish revisionist.

(*) Even Worse Scraggly 003 Anderskov; Michael Formanek (b); Anders Mogensen (d). N.D.
 Accident Scraggly 004 Anderskov; Kasper Tranberg, Gunnar Halle (t); Peter Dahlgren (tb); Laura Toxvaerd (as, cl); Ned Ferm (ts); Jesper Løvdal (bcl); Jeppe Skovbakke (b); Rune Kielsgaard (d). 3-7/02.
Anderskov is doing his bit to reshape piano trio jazz. The first of these is elegant, spacious, quietly intense, with haunting melodies that seem disturbed by troubling undercurrents from Formanek and Mogensen. 'Day One' is a strong example, an 11-minute journey that eventually resolves into time. There are three brief piano tracks; teasing, but the trio's the thing here.

Accident isn't quite as good, but it has a droll feel, and it amplifies on the trio music. Anderskov plays Fender Rhodes and gets a squat, unglamorous sound out of it in a dry mix. Ferm's tenor blow-out on 'Weekly Hand' comes over a dour counterpoint from the others: a highlight.

Cat Anderson (1916–81)

TRUMPET

William Alonzo Anderson graced the Ellington trumpet section for two decades, turning in some of the finest high-note playing since the heyday of Louis Armstrong. A strong blues feel and an ability to write convincing lines of his own confirm his quality.

 Cat's In The Alley Fresh Sound FSRCD 460 Anderson; Ernie Royal, Ray Copeland, Reunald Jones, Clark Terry (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Quentin Jackson, Frank Rehak, Henderson Chambers (tb); Earl Warren (as); Rudy Powell (as, cl); Jimmy Forrest, Ernie Wilkins (ts); Budd Johnson (ts, cl); Sahib Shihab (bs); Jimmy Jones, Leroy Lovett (p); Ray Nance (vn); George Duvivier, Jimmy Woode (b); Panama Francis, Sam Woodyard (d). 8/58, 59.
Duke never fudged the reason Cat Anderson was in his band, to produce the frisson of excitement that only a high-note man can deliver. Cat had other virtues besides, but they were rarely much discussed. His approach to 'Birth Of The Blues', one of the later tracks from Cat On A Hot Tin Horn, first of the two LPs compiled here, is fascinating: generally low-toned to begin with, strongly aware of Pops's own interpretation, but subtly dissenting from it. More familiar perhaps is the round of solos and fours that kicks off the album on 'Little Man', pitching in the whole trumpet-section after spots on tenor, baritone and trombones, all designed to throw Cat's improbably pitched choruses into the sharpest contrast. The material that made up the slightly later Ellingtonia is more predictable and the performances far smoother but the All-Stars group of Dukesmen that made the recording is of such quality that one simply basks in 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing' (a Nance feature, to all intents) and 'Chelsea Bridge' for the sheer loveliness of them. The best work, of course, always came when Ellington stepped forward to announce him like a ringmaster introducing a high-wire act, but Cat's occasional outings as leader have their joys, too.

Chris Anderson (born 1926)

PIANO

Herbie Hancock's teacher and first influence, the Chicagoan has played with some of the finest jazz names of his generation. He made some fine LPs in the '60s and then seemed to disappear for a time.

 Love Locked Out Mapleshade 512692 Anderson (p, v solo). 10/87.

 You Don't Know What Love Is Naim 030 Anderson; David Williams (b); Billy Higgins (d); Sabina Sciubba (v). 98.
 From The Heart Naim 1035 Anderson (p, v solo). 10/98.
The cover of Love Locked Out majors on Anderson's tutelage of Herbie Hancock and thus primes an alert listener for any signs of the younger man's style. It's there in abundance, in the bright, positive attack and occasionally skittish approach to harmonic improvisation. Anderson, though, also has a darker strain to his work, reminiscent at moments of Waldron or Tapscott. The vocal versions of 'Detour Ahead' and 'The Folks Who Live On The Hill' are forgettable, but testimony to Chris's interest in song.

On the first Naim disc, he takes a couple of instrumentals, but for the most part acts as accompanist to Sciubba, who to our ears doesn't have much feel for jazz, but does at least allow the fine trio to work out the more sophisticated dimensions of the material. 'Ain't Misbehavin'' and 'Estate' are particularly good. The other one marks out what will now be a familiar course. Chris's singing on 'In Love In Vain' is genuinely touching. He can invest familiar tunes with a fresh air of mystery and the opening version of 'Here's That Rainy Day' and the equally epic 'Spring Will Be A Little Late This Year' are among the high-points of his long career.

Clifton Anderson (born 1957)

TROMBONE

Sonny Rollins's nephew and sometime sideman.

 Landmarks Milestone MCD 9266 Anderson; Wallace Roney (t); Kenny Garrett (as); Monty Alexander (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Al Foster (d); Victor See Yuen (perc). 1/95.
A pity there isn't more of him around. Anderson has a smooth, J.J.-influenced approach and the trombone dominates here, with Roney and Garrett in for just one appearance apiece. Alexander is an unusual choice of accompanist (though it explains the calypso) but the rhythm section gels nicely in an undemanding sort of way, allowing Anderson to weave his elegant lines.

Ernestine Anderson (born 1928)

VOICE

Sang with the Johnny Otis road show in her teens, recorded for Mercury and later Concord, moving between R&B and torchier material.

 My Kinda Swing Verve 842409 Anderson; Ernie Wilkins Orchestra. 60.

 The New Sound Of Ernestine Anderson Collectables 5756 Anderson; personnel unknown. 64.

 Never Make Your Move Too Soon Concord CCD 4147 Anderson; Monty Alexander (p); Ray Brown (b); Frank Gant (d). 8/80.

(*) When The Sun Goes Down Concord CCD 4263 Anderson; Red Holloway (ts); Gene Harris (p); Ray Brown (b); Gerryck King (d). 8/84.

 Love Makes The Changes High Note HCD 7118 Anderson; Donald Harrison (as); Lafayette Harris (p); Rodney Jones (g); Chip Jackson (b); Carl Allen (d). 7/03.

She isn't the kind of singer you'd expect to find on Concord. Originally an R&B shouter who sounded better on the belters than on the ballads, she evolved into a more urbane performer. That's evident on My Kinda Swing, which puts 'All Of My Life' alongside 'See See Rider' and over some tepid arrangements. The Collectables reissue brings back an obscure record cut for the Sue label. She's in good voice but the material is often dreadful, epitomized by 'Evil Spelled Backwards Means Live', and the anonymous accompaniments don't help.

The least satisfying of the surviving Concords – there are many more deleted – is ironically the most bluesy. When The Sun Goes Down wastes the subtleties in Anderson's voice, with Holloway and Harris also stuck in routine. Never Make Your Move Too Soon has too many familiar tunes, but Alexander's knowing vivacity is a tonic.

Love Makes The Changes settles her into a congenial situation, with some strong standards and a few less familiar tunes. The voice has spread and thickened, but she sounds in good spirits and Harrison enjoys his moment as blues-band alto man. 'It's Easy To Remember', taken at a wistful lilt, is a standout.

Also, in brief:

 Concord Jazz Heritage / (*) Ballad Essentials Concord CCD 4840 / 4886. 76–90.

Two respectable collections drawing on a rich back-catalogue.

(*) I Love Being Here With You Concord CCD 2126 2CD. 87–90.

All drawn from guest spots on other people's dates, so an interesting compilation for Anderson fans.

Fred Anderson (born 1929)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

After devoting years to running his club, the Velvet Lounge, the Chicagoan resurfaced in the '90s to re-establish a recording career that was late enough in starting.

 Dark Day: Live In Verona 1979 Atavistic 218 Anderson; Billy Brimfield (t); Steven Palmore (b); Hamid Drake (d). 5/79.

 The Milwaukee Tapes: Volume 1 Atavistic 62204 As above, except omit Palmore; add Larry Hayrod (b). 80.

The first of these is an important release, coming on an imprint devoted to recovering music that has previously only had limited availability. The title is slightly misleading in that the set includes material recorded back home in Chicago as well as in Italy less than a week later.

The other real delight of this is a first hearing of the young Hamid Drake. He resembles nothing more than Tony Williams at a similar age, or perhaps Denardo Coleman. Trumpeter Billy Brimfield has never been widely acknowledged, though he was a respected member of the AACM collective, and bassist Steven Palmore is another fine musician. 'Dark Day' is the definitive Anderson performance, sombre and cutting by turns, packed with muscular phrases but also strangely tender and vulnerable.

The Milwaukee sessions are pretty much of a piece with the slightly earlier set, but there is a tendency to meander through solos in a second-gear version of late Coltrane. Fred's blues sensibility surfaces more frequently, especially on the opening 'Ballad For Rita'. Not the cleanest or most faithful of recordings, but more than reasonable for the vintage and provenance.

(*) The Missing Link Nessa NCD 23 Anderson; Larry Hayrod (b); Hamid Drake (d); Adam Rudolph (perc). 9/79.

 Vintage Duets: 1.11.1980 Okkadisk OD 12001 Anderson; Steve McCall (d). 1/80.

 Birdhouse Okkadisk OD 12007 Anderson; Jim Baker (p); Harrison Bankhead (b); Hamid Drake (d). 4/94, 2/95.

Anderson first made his presence felt three decades ago on fellow saxophonist Joseph Jarman's ground-breaking Delmark record, Song For. Thereafter he disappeared for a decade and more, to concentrate on the Velvet Lounge. It was only in the '80s, and then again more securely in the '90s, that he became a presence on the scene.

He shares with Von Freeman a knack for sounding absolutely contemporary and completely steeped in the tradition. If there is a single reference-point for his playing, it has to be Gene Ammons; it's in the phrasing and in the shape of almost every solo. Anderson is raw and spare, feeding directly off the percussion rather than the chords, which is why he never sounds quite as focused working with a piano-player. Like Jug, he doesn't rush to make his point. The duets with McCall are as laid back and unhurried as could ever be, sometimes to the point where the listener feels excluded.

The Missing Link catches him early enough for all the components – Jug, Ornette, the AACM experiment – to be severally audible. It now reappears with a long extra track, Hamid Drake's composition 'Tabla Peace', and is certainly the disc of choice. Birdhouse never quite fires, perhaps because the pianist is so restrictive, though 'Like Sonny', a tribute to Sonny Stitt with no hint of pastiche, is worth the wait. The duets suffer from a poor transfer.

 Chicago Chamber Music Okkadisk OD12010 Anderson; Tatsu Aoki (b); Afifi Phillard (d). 96.

 Fred Anderson & DKV Trio Okkadisk OD12014 Anderson; Ken Vandermark (reeds); Kent Kessler (b); Hamid Drake (d). 12/96.

The DKV Trio collaboration was an important turning-point in perceptions of Fred Anderson's music, since these younger players were leading something of a charge in contemporary Chicagoan jazz. The steaming opener 'Planet E' had been part of Fred's bag for some time. It's not exactly chamber music. In fact the record is very similar to Fred's recordings of the period, marked by the same qualities and an occasional tendency to overplay as camouflage for the absence of a chordal instrument.

(*) Live At The Velvet Lounge Okkadisk OD 12023 Anderson; Peter Kowald (b); Hamid Drake (d). 6/98.

This has the self-indulgent relaxation of focus that comes with a home gig. Kowald is a master, but even he seems to be taking a night off and, apart from the emotionally driven 'To Those Who Know', barely registers as anything more than an accompanist. Drake is more forceful, though sometimes over-emphatic. The opening track, 'Straight, But Not Straight', may well be a homage to Monk, but it lacks the master's wry refusal of self-importance.

 Fred Anderson Quartet: Volume 1 Asian Improv 00049 Anderson; Billy Brimfield (t); Tatsu Aoki (b); Chad Taylor (d). 98.

Around this time, many of Fred's admirers were pointing out his similarity to the older-school tenormen. Comparisons ranged from Gene Ammons to Hank Mobley. We were also struck by strong similarities to the neglected John Gilmore, which may be mere coincidence. The group sounds tight and well organized, with a fine version of the classic 'Dark Day' and rarely drifts off into the noodling, hectoring sound that mars some items in the Anderson discography.

(*) 2 Days In April Eremite MTE 23/24 2CD Anderson; Kidd Jordan (ts); William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 4/99.

This only appeared in 2005 and relative to that year's priorities was accepted more as a belated glimpse of Jordan, who's still egregiously under-recorded and undervalued. The untitled improvisations weave together fragments of melody, blues shouts, inchoate cries and laments and create what increasingly seems like an undifferentiated body of sound which one either surrenders to or is dismayed by. There is no possibility of detachment from this music, which is either a token of its power or a sign that perhaps it is so intensely private that it fails to communicate. The recording somewhat favours the two saxophonists.

 Blue Winter /  Back Together Again Eremite MTE 047/48 2CD / Thrill Jockey 70139 Anderson; William Parker (b, nagaswaram on Blue Winter only); Hamid Drake (d, perc). 12/04.

Rush-released in the spring of 2005, one can see why Blue Winter generated some urgency. Anderson is on cracking form, pouring out long lines of blues-inflected melody on the opening improvisation, pacing himself a little more carefully on the three shorter pieces that make up the second disc. Parker is a much more compelling presence than Aoki and he stamps his authority on the session, varying the palette later with nagaswaram. Drake is tighter and more linear here than on many of his recent appearances, digging in tight behind the saxophone with an unflagging hi-hat figure. Fred sounds warmer than usual in the acoustic of the Dibden arts centre at Johnson State College, Vermont. His iron tone has acquired a softness round the edges which is highly effective even on the faster sections.

Anderson and Drake had been working together for an astonishing 25 years when the duos on Back Together Again were released. The album is testament to one of the closest partnerships in Chicago jazz. Disappointingly, there are moments when they seem to be working on parallel tracks rather than listening to one another. However, such is their closeness of vision that it doesn't jar too much and the title-piece is a classic. The CD also includes a valuable video component and interviews, with live footage and interviews.

Also, in brief:

(*) Duets 2001: Live At The Empty Bottle Thrill Jockey 101. 5/99.

A cracking set of mostly fairly short live duets with former Arkestra percussionist Robert Barry.

* On The Run: Live At The Velvet Lounge Delmark 534. 3/00.

Slackly conceived and executed album, overfull of saxophone posturing and rambling solo construction.

 Back At The Velvet Lounge Delmark DE 549. 11/02.

Increasingly hard to keep tabs on these similarly titled dates. This one is fairly routine, though the young Maurice Brown (t) and experienced Harrison Bankhead (b, g) keep the interest level up.

 The Great Vision Concert Ayler AYL 052. 03.

Stirring duets with Harrison Bankhead (b) once again.

 Timeless: Live At The Velvet Lounge Delmark DE 568 CD/DVD. 7/05.

Another intense night at the old club, with Harrison Bankhead (b) in for Parker. The closing title-piece, not much shy of half an hour in length, is colossal.

Ray Anderson (born 1952)

TROMBONE, OTHER BRASS AND PERCUSSION, VOCAL

Joined Anthony Braxton in 1977, replacing his teacher, George Lewis. His work encompasses jazz, funk and the avant-garde.

 Right Down Your Alley /  Wooferlo Soul Note 121087 / 121187 Anderson; Mark Helias (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 2/84; 11/87.

The first of these is the BassDrumBone trio in essence, the second in name. Anderson's work is marked out by lots of free play but with the same blurts, smears and huge portamento effects that punctuate his funk work. Like Lewis, Anderson favours a horn with an F-key, which allows him to drop the sound a fourth as required, and there's often a depth here that suggests a bass instrument. For all the exuberance, this is sometimes a shade dry. Anderson's Enja and hat ART records are currently out of circulation, so thin pickings.

Reid Anderson

BASS

Contemporary bassist at work on the current New York scene. He is now renowned as one of the three members of The Bad Plus.

(*) Dirty Show Tunes / * Abolish Bad Architecture Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 030 / 062 Anderson; Mark Turner (ts); Ethan Iverson (p); Jorge Rossy (d on Dirty only); Jeff Ballard (d on Abolish only). 5/97; 5/99.

 The Vastness Of Space Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 096 Anderson; Andrew D'Angelo (as); Bill McHenry (ts); Ben Monder (g); Marlon Browden (d). 3/00.

Why are Anderson's groups and records different from so many other, seemingly similar ones? Is it his book of tunes, all morning-fresh yet naggingly familiar? His mix of inscrutability and openness? His band of contrary personalities who manage to work together as one?

Despite the title of the first disc (also the name of his publishing company), there isn't a show tune in sight, dirty or otherwise. Anderson writes material that continually changes its shape as it moves forward. The harmonic structure is elusive, never fully manifest, and there's a feeling of complete freedom even as each element leads inevitably into the next. Tempos evolve out of collective playing, particularly noticeable with Browden on board, simple but never simplistic. Similarly, the effect is melodious without being tied to lines of melody. The extraordinary "Mystery Girl" on Abolish Bad Architecture isn't a real ballad but is as serenely contemplative as it is oblique. It helps Anderson that he has two magnificent contributors in Iverson and Turner.

The second disc is the superior one because the empathy is even more attuned and Ballard is a less conventionally swinging drummer, even using rock patterns in places. On the third album, the pale timbres of D'Angelo and McHenry conceal a real ferocity. Monder, too, shifts in and out of focus, sometimes mimicking saxophone or piano lines, and Anderson himself weaves in and out, establishing the music's melodic heart as well as its fundamental rhythm. One thinks of one of George Russell's earliest and most ingenious workshop records, though this music could only have been played moments ago. Anderson's subsequent activity with The Bad Plus seems to have stemmed solo work. On this evidence, that's a shame.

Lotte Anker

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Danish saxophonist, working between free and cool.

 Beyond The Mist Stunt STUCD 18909 Anker; Mette Petersen (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Jesper Elen (d). 89.
(*) Infinite Blueness Av Art AACD 1003 Anker; Hasse Poulsen (g); Peter Friis-Nielsen (b). 95.
 Triptych Leo CD LR 441 Anker; Craig Taborn (p); Gerald Cleaver (d). 8/05.

Lotte Anker has yet to make a splash. The first record is worth searching out for the interplay between two of the most interesting female performers in European free. The improvisations here are well centred and almost earthy in impact, not at all 'misty'. The Av Art set is a free-form situation in which the really strong moments have to be picked out of some fairly routine idiomatic stuff. Poulsen is a master in his modest way and this shows him off to best advantage. Anker's tone is bright and often quite vocalized, occasionally reminiscent of John Tchicai, which makes sense given her background. The Leo set is also very impressive, with Anker playing long, looping lines that seem to weave in and out of Taborn's typically subtle and inflected piano. Cleaver plays melodically and with faultless sense of space.

Charly Antolini

DRUMS

Swiss-born, and based in Germany. He recorded with Bill Coleman in the '50s and has since led his own band, Jazz Power, and anchored dozens of big-band and expatriate swing sessions.

 Power Drummer Universal/Jazz Club 1730452 Antolini; Dusko Goykovich, Conny Jackel (t); Lee Harper, Shake Keane, Klaus Osterloh, Ack van Rooyen (t, flhn); Hermann Breuer-Capri, Rudi Fusers, Gerhard Lachmann, Jiggs Whigham (tb); Bernd Fischer, Bernd Rabe (as); Joki Freund, Wilton Gaynair (ts); Heinz von Hermann (ss, ts, bs); Johnny Fiegl, Herman Schoonderwalt (bs); Francis Coppieters, Jesse Tanksley (p); Dieter Reith (p, org, syn); Karlheinz Kastel (g); Wolfgang Schmid-Grandy (g, b); Werner Dies, Gary Todd, Jean Warland, Peter Witte (b); Andy Witte (d, perc). 66–80.

The title's the giveaway. Antolini likes drum pyrotechnics and most of these tracks, recorded in Europe over a decade and a half, are securely focused on the leader, which may put off those allergic to long, clattery drum features. Antolini's no mean technician, though, and when he uses brushes, as on 'Drum-Organ' with Dieter Reith, he can be subtle, too. For some, the joy of this will be glimpses of celebrated Brits like Keane and the elusive 'Bogey' Gaynair (who was also based in Germany). These were tough times for jazz and there's a superficial trendiness about some of the music. It's saved by sheer energy, though.

Peter Apfelbaum (born 1960)

WOODWINDS, KEYBOARDS, PERCUSSION

A teenage member of the Berkeley Arts Co and High Jazz Ensemble before forming his own Hieroglyphics Ensemble to pursue avant-garde/ethnic musics.

 It Is Written ACT 9437 Apfelbaum; Peck Allmond (t, woodwinds); Steven Bernstein (slide t); Jeff Cressman, Natalie Cressman, Josh Roseman (tb); Craig Handy (as); Jessica Jones (as, ts); Tommy Jones (ts); Norbert Stachel (woodwinds); Charles Burnham, Juliana Cressman (vn); Trey Anastasio, Will Bernard, Viva de Concini, David Phelps (g); Jai Uttal (g, hca, v); Patrice Blanchard, John Shifflett (b); Deszon X. Claiborne, Aaron Johnston, Dafnis Prieto (d, perc); Josh Jones, David Frazier (bata d); Cyro Baptista (perc); Abdoulaye Diabate (v). 9–10/04.

Apfelbaum never seems to have secured regular label interest. Consequently most of his early work is out of print and new records only appear infrequently. The aesthetic comes out of the '60s, but freshly reconceived. Jai Uttal's voice on 'Rainbow Sign' is the clearest indication of Apfelbaum's desire to mix ethnic idioms with progressive jazz writing. The scores are rich and varied, with complex textures rather than long solos defining most cuts. Most tracks stick to a horns, guitar and rhythm format, with strings added on the long 'Apparition/Projectiles', and exotic percussion on 'Petroglyph Extension' and 'Shotgun Bouquet'. Apfelbaum himself isn't a virtuosic player, but his work shouldn't be overlooked.

Arcado (String Trio)

GROUP

Originally just Arcado, the generic suffix was added a little later. What they do is sui generis, though, intricate writing and virtuosic playing.

(*) Behind The Myth Winter & Winter 919039 Mark Feldman (vn); Hank Roberts (clo); Mark Dresser (b). 3/90.
 For Three Strings And Orchestra Winter & Winter 919050 As above, except add Kölner Rundfunkorchester . 6/91.
(*) Live In Europe '94 Avant 58 As above, except omit Roberts; add Ernst Reijseger (clo). 3 & 4/94.

Arcado follow in the path of Billy Bang's String Trio Of New York. The debut album oozed promise and enterprise, but lacked STNY's investigative spirit. Behind The Myth, also originally on JMT, was recorded in studio during a successful 1990 tour. The long title-track has moments of exceptional beauty, with Feldman stretching above the lower strings. Though all the tracks are self-written, along the way they touch on influences as various as Django Reinhardt, Charles Mingus and hints of Jimi Hendrix.

The orchestral album is an interesting side-project, inevitably further from a jazz sensibility, but still engaging. The subsequent addition of Reijseger changed the dynamic of the group somewhat, making it more 'European' and 'classical' in one direction, but also more playfully improvisational in another. This is a beautifully recorded sample from another impressive tour. The opening 'Harkening' is dull, but it serves to reintroduce the group's basic language. By the time they get into Feldman's 'Xanax', something really interesting is afoot, and the high standard is observed all the way through to the climactic closing sequence. 'Behind The Myth' was by this stage a repertory piece, but they play it with unfettered enthusiasm and with a loose, jazzy quality that always seemed to be this group's default position.

Jimmy Archey (1902–67)

TROMBONE

A Virginian, he moved to NY in the '20s and played with most of the era's big names. Later moved easily between trad, swing and mainstream.

 Dr. Jazz: From Jimmy Ryan's, West 52nd St Volumes 4 & 13 Storyville STCD 6044 / 6053 Archey; Henry Goodwin (t); Benny Waters (cl, ss, as); Dick Wellstood (p); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Tommy Benford (d). 1–4/52.

* Reunion GHB BCD 310 Archey; Punch Miller (t); Albert Burbank (cl); Dick Griffith (bj); Dick McCarthy (b); Sammy Penn (d). 2/67.

() At The Emporium Of Jazz GHB BCD461 2CD Archey; Bill Price (t); Frank Chace (cl); Don Ewell (p); Bill Evans (b); Red Maddock, Sammy Penn (d). 4/67.

Rare examples of the redoubtable 'bone man as leader or co-leader. The Storyvilles are airshots, and though the band was booked to play overheated Dixieland, some good moments survive. Waters is in good form for this period and the rarely heard Goodwin stands comfortably with Archey. Reunion and the other late date are both from the North, Connecticut and Minnesota respectively. The playing is bedraggled and Burbank's tone is a disgrace. There's some better stuff from April, though Jimmy, who's still head and shoulders above the rest this close to the end, is playing well.

Neil Ardley (1937–2004)

COMPOSER, SYNTHESIZER

A scientist by training, Ardley had some experience in big bands before Ian Carr introduced him to jazz producer Denis Preston. The resultant New Jazz Orchestra yielded some of the most imaginative jazz writing heard in Britain. Ardley later devoted himself largely to science writing for children. At the end of his life, he dabbled in electronic jazz with Zyklus and was again writing vocal music.

(*) Western Reunion Dutton Vocalion CDSML 8427 Ardley; Tony Dudley, Bob Leaper, Mike Phillipson (t); Ian Carr (t, flhn); John Mumford, Paul Rutherford (tb); Peter Harvey (btb); Mick Palmer (frhn); Dick Hart (tba); Trevor Watts (as, f); Barbara Thompson (as); Dave Gelly, Tom Harris (ts); Sebastian Freudenberg (bs); Les Carter (f, af); Mike Barrett, Lionel Grigson (p); Tony Reeves (b); Jon Hiseman (d). 65.

Often mistakenly listed as Western Union (we plead guilty), this is a first, impressive flowering of Ardley's talents as composer ('Shades Of Blue'), arranger (Lewis's 'Django', Gerry Mulligan's title-tune) and bandleader. Though some of the horn-players have lapsed into obscurity, the quality of the orchestra is immediately evident and there are fine features for Carr, Watts and others. Though essentially 'cool' in tonality and sound-colour, there is a solid swing to all these tracks, testimony to Hiseman's undervalued talents as a (straight) jazz drummer. Miles's 'So What' (arranged by Carter and Rutherford, interestingly) is a highlight, but so too is 'If You Could See Me Now', the only track featuring Grigson. A welcome return to circulation for a lost British classic of big-band jazz.

 Greek Variations & Other Aegean Exercises Impressed Re-pressed 986 6899 Ardley; Ian Carr (t, flhn); Mike Gibbs (tb); Don Rendell (ss, ts, af, cl); Barbara Thompson (ss, as, f); Karl Jenkins (ob, ss, bs); Brian Smith (ss, ts); Stan Robinson (ts, f); Frank Ricotti (vib, mar); Chris Spedding (g); Jack Bruce, Jeff Clyne (b); Trevor Tomkins (d, perc, strings). 69.

This falls into two main parts, with Ardley's impressionistic variations on a Greek folk song taking up one side of the original disc, far superior, if shorter, pieces by Ian Carr and the main cadres of his Nucleus group taking up the rest. Ardley's writing is thoughtful and in some aspects quite advanced, but there is a willed and slightly strained quality to some of his ideas, to the extent one feels the interest lies in the process and not in the actual sounds.

 Will Power Vocalion ZDA 164/165 2CD Ardley; Ian Carr, Kenny Wheeler (t); Tony Coe (reeds); Gordon Beck, Stan Tracey (p); Paul Buckmaster (clo); Ron Matthewson (b); Pepi Lemer, Colin Walker, Norma Winstone (v). 74.

Recorded at Southwark Cathedral to celebrate the tercentenary of Shakespeare's birth, this actually represents the work of three other composers as well: Stan Tracey, Mike Gibbs and Ian Carr. As the only one of the group not living, it might sentimentally belong to Ardley. To be frank, his two compositions – 'Shall I Compare Thee' and 'Charade For The Bard' – are the weakest and most time-locked of the set. Gibbs's 'Sonnet' and, in particular, Tracey's 'Alas, Sweet Lady' are much more compelling and stand the test of time far more convincingly. Even so, Ardley's blend of advanced compositional ideas and free jazz has its appeal and there are some lovely moments.

() Kaleidoscope Of Rainbows Duskfire Records DUSKCD 101 Ardley; Ian Carr (t, flhn); Brian Smith (ss, ts, f); Bob Bertles (ss, as, f); Tony Coe (ts, cl, bcl); Barbara Thompson, Stan Sulzmann (ss, as, f); Geoff Castle, Dave Macrae, John Taylor (ky); Ken Shaw (g); Paul Buckmaster (clo); Roger Sutton (b); Roger Sellers (d); Trevor Tomkins (vib, perc). 76.

Ardley recorded for Decca as early as1965 but later moved on to a trilogy of large-scale works, The Greek Variations, Symphony Of Amaranths and, the best-known of the three, Kaleidoscope Of Rainbows. Some of its fame derived from the arcane understanding that it was based on a five-note Balinese scale (drummer Trevor Tomkins wanted to call it 'Bali Boogaloo'), and on hearing it again one is most aware of a studied exoticism relieved by some very fine playing indeed. Kaleidoscope was performed by an augmented version of Ian Carr's Nucleus group. Carr himself takes a fine solo on 'Rainbow One' alongside his Nucleus colleague Smith. The second section is arranged for keyboard-players Castle and Macrae, and the third provides an interesting musical footnote with the presence of cellist Paul Buckmaster, who exerted a considerable influence on Miles Davis's ground-breaking On The Corner album. Coe and Barbara Thompson both have featured spots later and play entirely in character, Coe with sly invention, Thompson with grace but no real substance. By the later sections, the structure has dissolved into impressionism, music of some beauty but no great profundity. The later Harmony Of The Spheres project was far more interesting and significantly saw Ardley back with Decca.

Julian Argüelles (born 1966)

TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Brother of drummer Steve, he emerged from Loose Tubes as a singular imagination and player. Currently based in Scotland.

 Home Truths Babel BDV 9503 Argüelles; Mike Walker (g); Steve Swallow (b); Martin France (d). 5/95.

(*) Scapes Babel BDV 9674 Argüelles; Steve Argüelles (d, perc). 95.

 Skull View / * Escapade Babel BDV 9719 / Provocateur PVC 1019 Argüelles; Mark Bassey (tb); Django Bates (thn); Iain Dixon (ts, cl, bcl); Mário Laginha (p); Mike Walker (g); Steve Watts (b); Martin France (d). 96; 6/99.

 As Above So Below Provocateur PVD 1033 Argüelles; Henry Lowther (t, flhn); Jim Rattigan (fr hn); Stan Sulzmann (f, af); Iain Dixon (cl, bcl); Mike Walker (g); Steve Watts (b); Martin France (d); strings. 5/03.

* Partita Basho 172 Argüelles; Michael Formanek (b); Tom Rainey (d). 10/06.

The first is an encouragingly personal sax-and-rhythm date from the 29-year-old. Abjuring obvious role-models has led him back to such players as Warne Marsh and some contemporary Europeans like Garbarek. It is a measure of the reputation of young Brits like Argüelles and Walker that Steve Swallow should have taken time out to record with them. To be frank, he makes the session sing, weaving a skein of sound that is almost too beguiling.

The fraternal duos on Scapes are brief, clever, funny and thoroughly musical. Julian has a distinctive character on his different horns; Steve is a more than functional presence, inhabiting the music and propelling it at the same time, turning even the shortest track into a mini-odyssey.

Skull View suggests that Argüelles will turn into a fine composer for larger ensembles. His command of small detail is matched by a generous musical sweep, and there is a mature exuberance even to pieces which seem to flirt with the macabre humour of Loose Tubes days. With the same group on a new label, Argüelles delivers one of the best British jazz albums of recent memory on Escapade. It's one that repays the closest attention or can be put on simply for the groove. 'The Pow Wow' is reminiscent of things John Surman and John McLaughlin were doing on Extrapolation and the whole album has the serious, insouciant perversity of those days. Guitarist Walker has carved out a hefty reputation which until now hasn't always communicated on record. His understated introduction to '9 Grammes Of Lead' is a measure of how subtle he can be. Bassey's mournful brass-band trombone and Django's now familiar peckhorn lines are singularly well adapted to the concept.

Argüelles has been in outstanding form, live and on record, since moving to Scotland, but As Above is discouragingly tame after the last one. The string parts are nicely done, the ensembles sleekly tailored, but while the saxophonist plays well, the impression is of something introverted and uncommunicative.

Partita finds Argüelles more than punching his weight in a demanding situation and international-class company. There's a mature rigour to everything here, tempered with a wry spirit of fun and occasional flashes of danger. A lot of material, some of which might have been more effective developed at greater length, but of undeniable quality.

Bruce Arkin

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, PERCUSSION

New Yorker based in Barcelona.

 Wake Up Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 265 Arkin; Albert Bover (p); Chris Higgins (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 2/06.

If this isn't quite the revelation the title and lightning strike on the cover might promise, it's still arrestingly original. Arkin writes nice, angular melodies, with a lot of attitude, though we'd suggest he needs to test his chops in more demanding company than here.

Lil Hardin Armstrong (1898–1971)

PIANO, VOCAL

Born in Memphis, she demonstrated pianos at a Chicago store before joining King Oliver and there meeting her future husband, Louis Armstrong. She helped drive his career, but they divorced in 1938. She was house pianist at Decca for a while and later re-established a presence on the Chicago club scene.

 Lil Hardin Armstrong And Her Swing Orchestra 1936–1940 Classics 564 Armstrong; Joe Thomas, Shirley Clay, Ralph Muzzillo, Johnny McGee, Reunald Jones, Jonah Jones (t); Al Philburn, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Buster Bailey, Tony Zimmers (cl); Don Stovall (as); Russell Johns, Prince Robinson, Robert Carroll, Chu Berry (ts); Frank Froeba, James Sherman, Teddy Cole (p); Arnold Adams, Huey Long, Dave Barbour (g); John Frazier, Wellman Braud, George 'Pops' Foster, Haig Stephens (b); O'Neil Spencer, Sam Weiss, Manzie Johnson (d); Midge Williams, Hilda Rogers (v). 10/36–3/40.

Although a modernist in her youth, the former Mrs Armstrong never advanced much as a piano-player, which may be why keyboard duties are often entrusted to others. Her vocal talents are likeable and she comes across as a precursor of Nellie Lutcher and other vaguely racy post-war singers. The accompaniments offer a rough distillation of small-band swing and older styles, suggested by the presence of such '20s veterans as Robinson and Clay alongside the more modernistic Thomas and Berry. Tunes like '(I'm On A) Sit-Down Strike For Rhythm' have a self-explanatory charm and there's a more distinctive jazz content in Bailey's hot and fluent playing. On the final, 1940, date, Lil returns to the piano and leaves the singing to others.

 Lil Hardin Armstrong – Chicago: The Living Legends Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1823 Armstrong; Bill Martin, Roi Nabors, Eddie Smith (t); Preston Jackson, Al Wynn (tb); Darnell Howard, Franz Jackson (cl); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Booker Washington (d). 9/61.

These oldtimers play with astonishing vitality, even mania; 'Royal Garden Blues' has seldom had such a shaking down. Howard's clarinet goes from a woody moan to a near-shriek and the "trumpets take their turn to rattle the roof. There is some solid blues, an enjoyable vocal feature for Lil on 'Clip Joint' and 'Boogie Me', where she duets with Washington and makes you wonder why she didn't play piano like that with the Hot Five. Not subtle, but great fun.

Louis Armstrong (1901–71)

TRUMPET, CORNET, VOCAL

Born in New Orleans, he learned to play cornet as a young teenager in a waifs' home. By 1919, he was a formidable player and began recording with King Oliver in 1923 before going to NY to join the Fletcher Henderson Orchestra. He began recording under his own name in Chicago, 1925, with the Hot Five and Hot Seven for OKeh Records. By the end of the '20s, he was a great soloist, influencing everyone in jazz, shifting the emphasis from group playing to solo improvising and creating a new vocal style. Toured in the '30s with the remnants of Luis Russell's orchestra but suffered a slump post-war despite Hollywood appearances. His invincible personality brought him back, concentrating on the sextet All-Stars format to the end of his career. Jazz's best-loved individual figure.

[illegible]

♛ * Hot Fives & Sevens
JSP LOUISBOX 100 4CD As for JSP discs, below. 25–30.

♛ * The Complete Hot Fives And Hot Seven Recordings
Columbia C4K 63527 4CD As listed below. 25–30.

* Complete Hot Five And Hot Seven Recordings: Volumes 1–3
Columbia CK 86999 / 87010 / 87011 As listed below. 11/26–12/28.

* Hot Fives And Hot Sevens: Volume 1
JSP CD 312 Armstrong; Kid Ory (tb); Johnny Dodds (cl, as); Lil Hardin Armstrong (p); Johnny St Cyr (bj); Butterbeans & Susie, May Alix (v). 11/25–11/26.

* Louis Armstrong, 1925–1926
Classics 600 As above. 11/25–11/26.

* Hot Fives And Hot Sevens: Volume 2
JSP CD 313 As above, except add Bill Wilson (c); Honoré Dutrey, John Thomas (tb); Boyd Atkins (cl, ss, as); Albert Washington (ts); Earl Hines (p); Lonnie Johnson (g); Rip Bassett (bj, g); Pete Briggs (bb); Baby Dodds, Tubby Hall (d). 5–12/27.

* Hot Fives And Hot Sevens: Volume 3
JSP CD 314 Armstrong; Homer Hobson (t); Fred Robinson, Jack Teagarden (tb); Jimmy Strong (cl, ts); Don Redman (cl, as); Bert Curry, Crawford Wetherington (as); Happy Caldwell (ts); Earl Hines, Joe Sullivan (p); Carroll Dickerson (vn); Eddie Lang (g); Mancy Cara (bj, v); Dave Wilborn (bj, g); Pete Briggs (tba); Zutty Singleton, Kaiser Marshall (d). 5–12/27.

 Louis Armstrong 1926–1927
Classics 585 As above. 11/26–12/27.

* The 25 Greatest Hot Fives And Hot Sevens
ASV AJA 5171 Basically as above. 25–29.

Armstrong's music is one of the cornerstones of jazz and these, his most famous records, remain a marvel. While we are envious of any who are discovering the likes of 'Wild Man Blues' or 'Tight Like This' for the first time, we acknowledge that the sound of the records – particularly the earliest, acoustic Hot Five dates – can seem 'difficult' to ears raised on digital sound. Considering he was playing with his peers – Ory and Dodds were two of the most respected performers in the field – the group's basic sound seems unexpectedly rough and unsophisticated. Yet when one focuses on Armstrong himself, that all falls away in the presence of his youthful mastery. Not yet 25 and still playing cornet, he is still trying out for greatness, even if his spell with Henderson a year earlier had alerted the jazz community to his incipient brilliance. Earlier pieces like 'Jazz Lips' or 'Cornet Chop Suey' have a rough and ready quality which Armstrong's burgeoning power either barges past or transcends. There is a degree of vaudeville in the music already – 'Heebie Jeebies' – but much of the time he elevates his surroundings by sheer charisma.

By the time of the Hot Sevens, in 1927, with Dodds assuming a second-voice role that has even Armstrong compelled to play his best, the music seems mystical in its poetry and majesty. 'Potato Head Blues', with its incredible stop-time solo, the astounding improvisation on 'Wild Man Blues' and the glittering blues playing on 'Willie The Weeper' are but three examples.

By the time of the second Hot Five, with Hines arriving on piano, Armstrong was approaching the stature of a concerto soloist, which makes these final small-group sessions something like a farewell to jazz's first golden age. Hines is also magnificent on these discs, and notably on the duet showstopper 'Weather Bird' the results seem like eavesdropping on great men speaking among themselves. There is nothing in jazz finer than 'West End Blues', 'Beau Koo Jack' or 'Muggles'.

It goes without saying that these are indispensable. They have been reissued countless times. John R. T. Davies's remastering for JSP is superlative. Armstrong scholars argue over whether the Columbia 'definitive' edition – mystifyingly delayed – is superior, but it's hard to see anyone being disappointed with either. Columbia do score heavily with a magnificent book and add a few rare takes and even offer 'Cornet Chop Suey' at two different speeds (therefore in different keys). The label has also released a shortened version as three individual CDs.

Classics do their usual methodical job, though these transfers pale by comparison with those above. The ASV disc isn't far behind in terms of sound and as a single-disc representation it works pretty well. Everybody chips in with this material, of course, sometimes with imaginative spin; mostly not. These are the best available, or likely to be.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1928–1929 Classics 570 As above and below. 6/28–3/29.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1929–1930 Classics 557 Armstrong; Homer Hobson (t); Fred Robinson, Jack Teagarden, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Jimmy Strong (cl, ts); Albert Nicholas, Charlie Holmes, Bert Curry, William Blue, Crawford Wethington (as); Happy Cauldwell (ts); Joe Sullivan, Luis Russell, Buck Washington (p); Eddie Lang, Lonnie Johnson (g); Eddie Condon (bj); Pops Foster (b); Paul Barbarin, Kaiser Marshall (d); Hoagy Carmichael (v). 3/29–5/30.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1930–1931 Classics 547 Armstrong; Leon Elkins, George Orendorff, Harold Scott (t); Lawrence Brown, Luther Graven (tb); Leon Herriford, Willie Stark, Marvin Johnson (as); Les Hite (as, bs); Charlie Jones (cl, ts); Wiliam Franz (ts); Harvey Brooks, Henry Prince (p); Bill Perkins, Ceele Burke (bj, g); Reggie Jones (tba); Joe Bailey (b); Lionel Hampton (d, vib). 7/30–4/31.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1931–1932 Classics 536 Armstrong; Zilner Randolph (t); Preston Jackson (tb); George James (cl, ss, as); Lester Boone (cl, as); Albert Washington (cl, ts); Charlie Alexander (p); Mike McKendrick (g, bj); John Lindsay (b); Tubby Hall (d). 4/31–3/32.

After the final Hot Five records, Armstrong recorded almost exclusively as a soloist in front of big bands until the formation of the All-Stars in the '40s. Although the records become more formal in shape – most of them are contemporary pop tunes, opened by an Armstrong vocal and climaxing in a stratospheric solo – the best of them showcase him as grandly as anything he'd done previously. Since his vocal stylings were becoming as important as his trumpet-playing, it was critical that he got some of the best tunes of the day.

The Classics sequence has the benefit of uninterrupted chronological presentation at an attractive price. The second of the sequence covers the period when Armstrong was fronting the Luis Russell band. 'Black And Blue', 'Dallas Blues' and 'After You've Gone' offer superb improvisations against functional backdrops, and while some of the sheer daring has gone, he's become more poised and more serenely powerful than before. Finer still are the records made in LA in 1930 with the young Lionel Hampton. There are few Armstrong performance superior to 'Body And Soul', 'I'm A Ding Dong Daddy From Dumas' and 'Memories Of You'. The singing is integral and inventive. By contrast, the 1931–2 performances find him in front of another anonymous orchestra, but they throw his solos into focus and 'Star Dust', 'Lawd, You Made The Night Too Long' and 'Chinatown, My Chinatown' are outstanding. These were his last records for OKeh before moving to Victor in 1933.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1932–1933 Classics 529 Armstrong; Louis Bacon, Louis Hunt, Billy Hicks, Charlie Gaines, Elmer Whitlock, Zilner Randolph (t); Charlie Green, Keg Johnson (tb); Pete Clark, Scoville Brown, George Oldham (cl, as); Edgar Sampson (as, vn); Louis Jordan, Arthur Davey (as); Budd Johnson (cl, ts); Elmer Williams, Ellsworth Blake (ts); Don Kirkpatrick, Wesley Robinson, Teddy Wilson (p); Mike McKendrick (bj, g); John Trueheart (g); Edgar Hayes, Bill Oldham (bb, b); Elmer James (b); Chick Webb, Benny Hill, Yank Porter (d). 12/32–4/33.

Armstrong's Victors are among his most majestic statements. If he had simplified his style, his tone and timing are extraordinary, with an inevitability to his attack on a phrase. 'I Gotta Right To Sing The Blues' and 'Basin Street Blues' are conclusive offerings from jazz's greatest virtuoso. Even so, weaker material is creeping in, a foretaste of the poor choice of tunes later at Decca.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1934–1936 Classics 509 Armstrong; Jack Hamilton, Leslie Thompson, Leonard Davis, Gus Aiken, Louis Bacon, Bunny Berigan, Bob Mayhew (t); Lionel Guimaraes, Harry White, Jimmy Archey, Al Philburn (tb); Pete Duconge (cl, as); Sid Trucker (cl, bs); Henry Tyre, Henry Jones, Charlie Holmes, Phil Waltzer (as); Alfred Pratt, Bingie Madison, Greely Walton, Paul Ricci (ts); Herman Chittison, Luis Russell, Fulton McGrath (p); Maceo Jefferson, Lee Blair, Dave Barbour (g); German Arango, Pops Foster, Pete Peterson (b); Oliver Tines, Paul Barbarin, Stan King (d). 10/34–2/36.

(*) Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1936–1937 Classics 512 As above, except add Snub Mosley, Bobby Byrne, Joe Yukl, Don Mattison (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Jack Stacey (cl, as); Fud Livingston, Skeets Herfurt (cl, ts); Bobby Van Eps (p); George Archer, Harry Baty (g, v); Roscoe Hillman (g); Sam Koki (steel g); Andy Iona (uke, v); Jim Taft, Joe Nawahi (b); Ray McKinley, Lionel Hampton (d); Bing Crosby, Frances Langford, The Mills Brothers (v). 2/36–4/37.

* Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1937–1938 Classics 515 Armstrong; Shelton Hemphill, Louis Bacon, Henry 'Red' Allen (t); George Matthews, George Washington, J. C. Higginbotham, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Pete Clark, Charlie Holmes, Rupert Cole (as); Albert Nicholas, Bingie Madison (cl, ts); Luis Russell (p); Lee Blair (g); Pops Foster, Red Callender (b); Paul Barbarin (d); The Mills Brothers (v). 6/37–5/38.

(*) Louis Armstrong & His Orchestra 1938–1939 Classics 523 As above, except add Bob Cusumano, Johnny McGee, Otis Johnson, Frank Zullo, Grady Watts, Sonny Dunham (t); Al Philburn, Murray McEachern, Russell Rauch, Pee Wee Hunt (tb); Sid Stoneburn (cl); Art Ralston, Clarence Hutchenrider (as); Pat Davis, Dan D'Andrea, Joe Garland (ts); Kenny Sargent (bs); Nat Jaffe, Howard Hall (p); Jack Blanchette, Dave Barbour (g); Haig Stephens, Stan Dennis (b); Sam Weiss, Big Sid Catlett, Tony Briglia (d). 5/38–4/39.

 Louis Armstrong 1939–1940 Classics 615 Armstrong; Shelton Hemphill, Otis Johnson, Henry 'Red' Allen , Bernard Flood (t); Wilbur De Paris, George Washington, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Charlie Holmes, Rupert Cole (cl, as); Joe Garland, Bingie Madison (ts); Luis Russell (p); Lee Blair (g); Pops Foster (b); Big Sid Catlett (d); The Mills Brothers (v). 4/39–4/40.

(*) Louis Armstrong 1940–1942 Classics 685 As above, except add Gene Prince, Frank Galbreath (t); Claude Jones, Norman Greene, Henderson Chambers, James Whitney (tb); Sidney Bechet (cl, ss); Carl Frye (as); Prince Robinson (cl, ts); Bernard Addison, Lawrence Lucie (g); John Simmons, Hayes Alvis, Wellman Braud (b); Zutty Singleton (d). 5/40–4/42.

* Rhythm Saved The World / * Satchel Mouth Swing / (*) Jeepers Creepers Naxos 8.120735 / 8.120735 / 8.120815 As above. 34–4/36; 5/36–1/38; 5/38–4/39.

Armstrong's Decca recordings have long been the least favoured of his career. This is both a right and a wrong view. While there are many throwaway songs and plain bad ideas – even Louis couldn't do much with 'She's The Daughter Of A Planter From Havana' and its sorry ilk – he does rise above the circumstance; the sheer sound of Armstrong, whether playing or singing, is exhilarating and there are overlooked merits in these sessions. Decca's studio sound is very handsome and caught a silvery quality in Armstrong's tone which is not apparent on other records. Otherwise, he plays with steely finesse: no longer the bubbling genius, not yet the benign patriarch.

The first Classics disc includes a memorable session made in Paris with the fine pianist Herman Chittison, and an excellent 'St Louis Blues'. From there, Armstrong is mostly backed by the Russell orchestra and it performs creditably, with a few good band solos. The next volume includes two tremendous pieces in 'Swing That Music' and 'Mahogany Hall Stomp', as well as a peculiar meeting with a Hawaiian group and two dates with the Mills Brothers. The fine session from January 1938 is on the next disc, with Nicholas almost stealing the show on 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue', until Louis takes his own solo. The 1938–1939 volume has a session with Casa Loma, another with a white-toned gospel group, the lovely 'My Walking Stick' with the Mills Brothers and a concluding date which remakes 'West End Blues'. Classics 615 has some miserable stuff, but peaks with a new 'Confessin'' and a stunning new 'Sweethearts On Parade'. The final disc is again rather mixed, although it includes the complete reunion date with Bechet from May 1940 and has a majestic 'When It's Sleepy Time Down South', not the last track, but a suitable climax.

Classics now have some opposition from Naxos. David Lennick isn't shy of a bit of surface noise, but the transfers are full-bodied and, of course, the price is very attractive.

 Louis Armstrong 1944–1946 Classics 928 Armstrong; Roy Eldridge, Billy Butterfield, Jesse Brown, Fats Ford, Sleepy Grider, Lester Currant, Charlie Shavers, Moons Mullens, Neal Hefti, Chieftie Scott (t); Bobby Hackett (c); Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Russell Moore, Adam Martin, Norman Powe, Al Cobbs, Taswell Baird, Larry Anderson, Lou McGarity (tb); Barney Bigard, Ernie Caceres, Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Bill Stegmeyer (as, ts, cl); John Brown, Willard Brown, Johnny Hodges, Sid Stoneburn, Jules Rubin, George Koenig, Donald Hill, Amos Gordon (as); Don Byas, Jack Greenberg, Art Drelinger, Coleman Hawkins, Joe Garland, Johnny Sparrow, Ted McRae, Dexter Gordon, Nick Caiazza, Arthur Rollini (ts); Ernest Thompson, Paul Ricci, Milton Shatz (bs); Duke Ellington, Billy Strayhorn, Ed Swanston, Joe Bushkin, Art Tatum, Dave Bowman, Johnny Guarnieri (p); Al Casey, Emitt Slay, Herb Ellis, Carl Kress, Remo Palmieri, Danny Perri, Elmer Warner (g); Trigger Alpert, Chubby Jackson, Arvell Shaw, Oscar Pettiford, Alfred Moore, Al Hall, Bob Haggart (b); Big Sid Catlett, James Harris, Cozy Cole, Johnny Blowers, Sonny Greer, Butch Ballard (d); Ella Fitzgerald, Velma Middleton, Dorothy Dandridge (v). 1/44–4/46.

A very fine cross-section of Armstrong as bandleader and guest star. The five tracks from the Esquire Metropolitan Opera House Jam Session are by a peerless supergroup – Pops, Teagarden, Tatum, Eldridge, Hawkins, Bigard and more – and despite scrappy ensembles the music lives up to the billing. Two sessions for Decca bookend two V-Discs, including a superb 'Jack-Armstrong Blues' where for once Tea duets with McGarity and Armstrong solos by himself. Another Esquire date has Louis with Ellington and others on a lovely 'Long Long Journey', before two sweet duets with Ella and a Bob Haggart band; then a final big-band session for Decca, with Armstrong playing fine.

CORE COLLECTION

(*) Louis Armstrong 1946–1947
Classics 992 Armstrong; Bob Butler, Sleepy Grider, Ed Mullens, William Scott, Louis Gray, Fats Ford (t); Vic Dickenson, Alton Moore, Russell Moore, Waddet Williams, Nathaniel Allen, James Whitney, Jack Teagarden (tb); Edmond Hall, Barney Bigard (cl); Don Hill, Amos Garden, Arthur Dennis (as); Joe Garland, Johnny Sparrow, Lucky Thompson, Flip Phillips (ts); Ernest Thompson (bs); Charlie Beal, Leonard Feather, Earl Mason, Charlie Bateman (p); Allen Reuss, Bud Scott, Elmer Warner (g); Red Callender, Johnny Williams, Arvell Shaw (b); Big Sid Catlett, Zutty Singleton, Minor Hall, Jimmy Crawford, James Harris (d); Billie Holiday (v). 9/46–4/47.

 Louis Armstrong 1947
Classics 1072 Armstrong; Bobby Hackett (c); Jack Teagarden, Tommy Dorsey (tb); Benny Goodman, Peanuts Hucko, Barney Bigard (cl); Ernie Caceres (cl, bs); Charlie Barnet (as); Lionel Hampton (vib); Dick Cary, Mel Powell (p); Al Casey, Al Hendrickson (g); Bob Haggart, Harry Babasin, Arvell Shaw, Al Hall (b); Big Sid Catlett, George Wettling, Cozy Cole, Louie Bellson (d); Jeri Sullivan, Golden Gate Quartet (v). 5–11/47.

(*) Complete Town Hall Concert 1947
Fresh Sound FSRCD 701 Armstrong; Bobby Hackett (c); Jack Teagarden (tb); Peanuts Hucko (cl); Dick Cary (p); Bob Haggart (b); George Wettling (d). 5/47.

 Complete New York Town Hall And Boston Symphony Hall Concerts
Fresh Sound DRCD 11291 3CD Armstrong; Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Barney Bigard, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Dick Cary (p); Bob Haggart, Arvell Shaw (b); George Wettling, Big Sid Catlett (d); Velma Middleton (v). 5 & 11/47.

 Louis Armstrong 1947
Classics 1072 Armstrong; Bobby Hackett (c); Jack Teagarden, Tommy Dorsey (tb); Benny Goodman, Peanuts Hucko, Barney Bigard (cl); Ernie Caceres (cl, bs); Charlie Barnet (as); Lionel Hampton (vib); Dick Cary, Mel Powell (p); Al Casey, Al Hendrickson (g); Bob Haggart, Harry Babasin, Arvell Shaw, Al Hall (b); Big Sid Catlett, George Wettling, Cozy Cole, Louie Bellson (d); Jeri Sullivan, Golden Gate Quartet (v). 5–11/47.

After some years of comparative neglect, Armstrong bounced back via the film New Orleans, made during the period covered by the earliest tracks here, and the formation of the All-Stars, following the celebrated 1947 Town Hall concert. The earlier of the discs here starts with four little-known but excellent tracks cut for the French Swing label and has three final big-band tracks for RCA and some stray V-Discs material, including 'Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans' alongside Holiday and an interview with Louis.

The next Classics has six tracks from the Town Hall event, all of the four-title session for Victor a month later, two jam-session tracks with an all-star band for Capitol and the first ten tracks by the 'original' All-Stars. Throughout, Armstrong sounds ready to resume his eminence, playing with riveting intensity.

 C'est Si Bon Proper PROPERBOX 4CD As for relevant dates above, except add Billie Holiday (v); Louis Jordan Tympany Five, Sy Oliver Orchestra. 4/40–8/50.

 C'est Si Bon Dreyfus FDM 36730 As above. 41–50.

The Proper package skims through most of Louis's studio dates from the decade. It contains nothing that can't be heard elsewhere, but the remastering is up to scratch. The Dreyfus selection is more idiosyncratic, but interesting enough in its way.

() Satchmo At Symphony Hall / () ... 1947, Volume 2 GRP 051661 / Classics 1144 Armstrong; Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Barney Bigard (cl); Dick Cary (p); Arvell Shaw (b); Big Sid Catlett (d); Velma Middleton (v). 11/47.

Live from Boston with some 70 minutes of music, this is a rerun of the Town Hall situation with some bonus points. One is hearing Sid Catlett at some length, a rarity in that this master drummer mostly had ensemble work in his recorded career. Another is the interplay between Armstrong and Teagarden, if anything even more affectionate here.

 Louis Armstrong 1950–1951 Classics 1233 Armstrong; Aaron Izenhall (t); Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Barney Bigard (cl); Louis Jordan (as, v); Josh Jackson (ts); Bill Doggett, Billy Kyle, Earl Hines (p); Bill Jennings, Everett Barksdale (g); Bob Bushnell, Arvell Shaw, Joe Benjamin (b); Chris Columbus, Cozy Cole, Johnny Blowers (d); Sy Oliver Orchestra; Ella Fitzgerald, Velma Middleton (v). 6/50–1/51.

 Louis Armstrong 1951–1952 Classics 1283 Similar to above, with orchestras led by Gordon Jenkins, Sy Oliver, John Scott Trotter, Dave Barbour; add Bing Crosby (v). 2/51–8/52.

(*) Satchmo Serenades Verve 543792 Armstrong; orchestras led by Sy Oliver, Toots Camarata. 9/49–10/53.

 Satchmo In Style Verve 549594 Armstrong; orchestras led by Gordon Jenkins. 9/49–4/54.

These bring together Armstrong's early '50s sides for Decca. Produced by Milt Gabler, they at least had strong jazz personnels. Oliver used Budd Johnson and Buck Clayton in the ensembles; Jenkins, though no jazz arranger, adored Armstrong and gave him as much free rein as possible – which wasn't much in this becalmed trough between swing and rock. As jazz records, they're nothing much; as Armstrong showcases they're consistently delightful and superior to the 're-creation' sessions he would do for Columbia. There are a few feeble songs, but not many, and Pops makes something of even 'Chloe' and 'Trees' on In Style. Classics continue their journey: 1233 includes the whole Pasadena 1951 All-Stars concert; the rest, and 1283, is all studio material, including some singles missed by the Verves, such as the immortal 'Gone Fishin'' with Bing.

(*) Plays W. C. Handy Columbia CK 64925 Armstrong; Trummy Young (tb); Barney Bigard (cl); Billy Kyle (p); Arvell Shaw (b); Barrett Deems (d); Velma Middleton (v). 6/54.
 Satch Plays Fats Columbia CK 64927 As above, except add personnel from sessions of 6/28–3/32. 4–5/55.

The Handy includes a brief, touching interview with W. C. himself and a sequence of very serious rehearsal tracks. It's still one of the best of Armstrong's latter-day records. If he is most himself on the slower tunes, there's a geniality about 'Memphis Blues' and even 'Loveless Love' which is comparatively rare. The Waller collection is nearly as good though the showbiz characteristics renege on jazz content. The All-Stars play well, though Young is hardly a replacement for Tea. This addition has seven early OKeh cuts as a bonus.

* The California Concerts GRP 050613 4CD Armstrong; Jack Teagarden, Trummy Young (tb, v); Barney Bigard (cl, v); Earl Hines, Billy Kyle (p); Arvell Shaw (b); Barrett Deems, Cozy Cole (d); Velma Middleton (v). 1/51–1/55.
(*) The Great Chicago Concert 1956 Columbia C2K 65119 2CD As above, except omit Teagarden, Bigard, Hines, Shaw, Cole, Middleton; add Edmond Hall (cl); Dale Jones (b). 6/56.
 Historic Barcelona Concerts At The Windsor Palace 1955 Fresh Sound FSRCD 3005/6 As above. 12/55.

The All-Stars period has often been treated unfairly. While there are many indifferent, lo-fi concert recordings of dubious provenance and quality, these well-packaged and well-remastered collections call for a new appraisal of the group. The superb MCA set covers the original All-Stars with Teagarden and Hines and the more familiar later group. Pops is in good form, and though the vaudevillian aspects of the group often come to the fore, there is always some piece of magic from the leader, either with the trumpet or vocally. There are many previously unreleased tracks and lots of straight-ahead jazz. The Chicago concert is slighter but there are memorable versions of 'Black And Blue', 'Tenderly' and 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue'. The Barcelona recordings turned up in a flea market. The sound is decent in the circumstances and Armstrong's refusal to let down his fans – the group was delayed and had to put on three shows in a day – shines through.

 Satchmo The Great Columbia CK 62170 Armstrong; Edmond Hall (cl); Billy Kyle (p); Dale Jones (b); Barrett Deems (d); Ed Murrow (narr); orchestra conducted by Leonard Bernstein. 1–7/56.
 Ambassador Satch Columbia CK 64926 As above, except omit Jones, Murrow, orchestra; add Arvell Shaw (b). 12/55–3/56.

The Great is the soundtrack to a film biography of Armstrong, with amusingly effulgent narration by Murrow. It doesn't make much sense as a listening experience, though the performances are from a decent All-Stars vintage. Bernstein conducts the Lewisohn Stadium Symphony in a mighty 'St Louis Blues'. The other strings together a number of European concert shows (and one from Hollywood); some likeable performances include 'Tin Roof Blues', a majestic 'West End Blues' and a neat 'Some Day You'll Be Sorry'. A few tracks are studio masquerades.

 Louis And The Angels / Louis And The Good Book Universal MLCD 19379 Armstrong; Trummy Young (tb); Hank D'Amico, Edmond Hall (cl); George Dorsey, Phil D'Urso (as, f); Lucky Thompson (ts); Dave McRae (bs); Billy Kyle (p); Nick Tragg (org); Everett Barksdale, George Barnes (g); Mort Herbert, Joe Benjamin, Sid Block (b); Rudy Taylor, Barrett Deems (d); strings 1/57, 2/58.

Armstrong's two 'sacred' albums for Decca (both available separately as Verve Master Editions) are about as secular as one can imagine. The first is more arranged and dependent on the strings with chestnuts like 'A Sinner Kissed An Angel' alongside 'Angela Mia'. The other is more fun, Armstrong swapping notes with his very white-sounding choir, although there's a surprisingly feelingful 'Nobody Knows The Trouble I've Seen'. If this is all a bit light and obvious, it's hugely enjoyable.

(*) Louis Armstrong: The Silver Collection Verve 823446 Armstrong; Russell Garcia Orchestra. 8/57.
 Louis Armstrong Meets Oscar Peterson Verve 539060 Armstrong; Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 7–10/57.
 Verve Jazz Masters: Louis Armstrong Verve 519818 As two items above, except add Trummy Young (tb); Edmond Hall (cl); Billy Kyle (p); Dale Jones (b); Barrett Deems (d); Ella Fitzgerald (v). 8/56–10/57.
 Jazz Around Midnight: Louis Armstrong Verve 843422 As above, except add Tyree Glenn (tb); Buster Bailey (cl); Marty Napoleon (p); Alfred Di Lernia (bj); Buddy Catlett (b); Danny Barcelona (d). 7/57–9/64.
(*) Let's Do It Verve 529017 As above discs, except add Big Chief Russell Moore (tb); Joe Darensbourg (cl); Everett Barksdale (g); Arvell Shaw (b). 8/57–9/64,

Verve recorded Armstrong with a little more initiative as regards concepts, but it didn't always work out. The Silver Collection finds him fronting Garcia's hearty though not graceless orchestra with familiar aplomb: comparing, say, 'I Gotta Right To Sing The Blues' with his version of 25 years earlier isolates the maturity of the later art. He hasn't the chops for grandstand improvisations any more, but his timing and treatment of pure melody are almost as gratifying. Some songs are merely dull, though.

The meeting with Peterson's trio is a mixed success. The pianist can't entirely avoid his besetting pushiness, yet he's often sotto voce in accompaniment and the chemistry works on the slower tunes. It's good to hear Pops on more obviously 'modern' material, and though he sometimes gets the feel wrong, he finds a surprising spin for some lyrics. The compilations are thoughtfully chosen and with the spotlight firmly on Louis's singing the VJM disc is particularly good.

Dan Morgenstern's selection and notes on the comprehensive Let's Do It makes a good case for reconsideration of this period, and if one wants a single selection, this is the one.

 Mack The Knife Pablo 2310941 Armstrong; Trummy Young (tb, v); Edmond Hall (cl); Billy Kyle (p); Squire Gersh (b); Barrett Deems (d). 7/57.

Of all the All-Stars concerts that survive from this period, this one stands out for particular attention, with a strong quota of jazz material and some fluid playing from the horns.

(*) Porgy And Bess Verve 827475 Armstrong; Ella Fitzgerald (v); Russell Garcia Orchestra. 8/57.
() Ella And Louis / () Ella And Louis Again Verve 543304 / 825374 Armstrong; Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d); Ella Fitzgerald (v). 57.
 Verve Jazz Masters 24: Ella Fitzgerald & Louis Armstrong Verve 521851 As above. 56–57.
(*) The Complete Ella Fitzgerald & Louis Armstrong On Verve Verve 537284 3CD As above. 56–57.
 The Wonderful World Of Louis Armstrong Universal Classics & Jazz 60249836861 Armstrong; various accompanists from Verve albums. 58–68.

The two greatest voices in jazz ought to have been a dream pairing, but with Pops used to trading innuendo with Velma Middleton and Ella always going her own queenly way, maybe it never was a match made in jazz heaven. There are compensations, though, which make the music hard to resist. Though Garcia's orchestrations tend to loom over the Gershwin opera, there are a handful of sublime moments which make up for the stiffness. 'Summertime' in particular is turned into a profoundly moving meditation and the closing bars are transcendent. The two small-group dates have material that suits Ella better than her partner, and some of the tunes end up either bland or merely workmanlike; others – 'I Won't Dance' and 'Isn't This A Lovely Day' – are a delight, with the deftest support from Peterson's team. The VJM selection isn't bad, the three-CD Complete eccentrically designed, and Wonderful World Armstrong for dummies.

 Doctor Jazz Blue Moon BMCD 3067 Armstrong; Peanuts Hucko (p); Billy Kyle (p); Mort Herbert (b); Danny Barcelona (d). 9 & 10/59.

This isn't a vintage band and the material is all absolutely predictable and, for the most part, generically performed, but as ever Louis plays with unswerving enthusiasm and authenticity and on 'St James Infirmary' digs deep for something fresh and expressive. Hucko is no Bigard or Hall, but he has things to say and clearly relishes the experience. The rhythm section is slack, but Kyle works manfully to keep them on course.

 The Legendary Berlin Concert: Parts 1 & 2 Jazzpoint 1062 / 1063 Armstrong; Tyree Glenn (tb); Eddie Shu (cl); Billy Kyle (p); Arvell Shaw (b); Danny Barcelona (d). 3/65.
 The Best Live Concert: Volumes 1 & 2 Emarcy 013031/013032 As above. 6/65.

By mid-decade, Armstrong's powers as a trumpeter were in serious decline and there are sad moments among the glimmers of greatness. Numerous All-Stars shows have survived and most of them get called 'Legendary' or 'The Greatest' when they are no such thing: not just because Pops is in decline, but because the band indulge in showboating instead of offering sensitive support to the boss. The Berlin show at least has a fine 'Black And Blue' and Pops's singing lives on.

(*) What A Wonderful World MCA 811876 Armstrong; strings. 68.
 Louis Armstrong And His Friends RCA Victor Gold 74321 747942 Armstrong; orchestra led by Oliver Nelson. 5/70.

The spirit abides in these late sets, but the showbiz material hurts and only his great heart gets him through with any effectiveness. On the later of the pair, he doesn't play at all and talks more than he sings. The old humour abides, though: in Pharoah Sanders's awful 'The Creator Has A Master Plan', he can spot a load of baloney when he hears it. The strongest instinct here is to take it off and head straight back to that glorious beginning …

Also, in brief:

() Complete Louis Armstrong: Volume 1 – Chimes Blues / () Volume 2 – Sugar Foot Stomp / (*) Volume 3 – Cornet Chop Suey Frémeaux 1351 / 1352 / 1353 3CD each. 23–26.
A remarkable round-up of early Armstrong with Fletcher Henderson, King Oliver and others. Excellent prehistory.

(*) The Quintessence: Volumes 1–3 /  Quintessence – The Vocalist Frémeaux 240–243 2CD each. 23–52.
Cheap and cheerful compilations with nothing particular to recommend them beyond the buoyant quality of the performances.

 Live At Winter Garden New York And Blue Note Chicago Storyville STCD 8242. 6/47–12/48.
Two brief broadcasts by the All-Stars, though the group wasn't formally founded until after the first of these.

 Complete Decca Studio Master Takes: 1935–1939 /  1940–1949 /  1950–1951 Fresh Sound DRCD 11171 4CD / 11172 2CD / 11188 2CD. 35–51.
Self-explanatory, and a reasonable cheap option.

 Satchmo: A Musical Autobiography Verve 543822 3CD. 11/47–1/57.
The spoken intros are wonderful, but the arrangements are mostly too tight and Dixielandish.

 I Love Jazz Verve 543747. 4/50–10/58.
A curious hotch-potch of All-Stars (and one big-band) tracks from the '50s. 'Frog-I-More Rag' harks back to his time with Oliver.

 Louis Armstrong 1952–1953 /  … 1954 Classics 1352 / 1402. 9/52–10/53.
Classics are now well into the LP era. These duplicate the Verve and Columbia material.

(*) I've Got The World On A String / Louis Under The Stars Verve 559831 2CD. 8/57.
The sheer grandeur of Pops's singing and interpretation comes over strongly on this beautifully remastered set with Garcia and Paul Smith (p).

(*) In Chicago, August 1 1962 Storyville 101 8237. 8/62.
Made before failing health began to impair his performing, this is a game enough All-Stars date.

… and literally countless others of markedly uneven quality.

Jeff Arnal

PERCUSSION

Brilliant sound-artist, whose organic sense of time makes him a favourite with choreographers.

 Transit Clean Feed CF055 Arnal; Nate Wooley (t); Seth Misterka (as); Reuben Radding (b). 01.

Arnal has the ability to make improvised music sound as polished and achieved as written-out composition, but without losing vigour and spontaneity. In that, Wooley, Misterka (who has worked with Anthony Braxton and within a similar philosophy to the leader) and the full-voiced Radding are ideal companions. The trumpeter favours the minimalist approach of Axel Dorner and Birgit Ulher, though perhaps with more of a 'jazz' feel. The two-part 'Brick City' and 'Journal Square' are the heart of this fine set, which we'd guess failed to find a berth Stateside, but was welcomed by the open ears at the Portuguese label. (Arnal can also be heard in equally challenging company on various discs from Generate Records.)

Bernhard Arndt

PIANO, ELECTRONICS

German experimenter and visionary.

* Inside Insight FMP OWN 90005 Arndt (p, elec). 7/92–2/95.
Ah, the piano! There's nothing you can't do with it. Close attention to this remarkable set reveals a world of micro-sounds, endlessly shifting but somehow always logical and directed. He deploys (we're guessing; no indication on the disc itself) delay devices, octave dividers, various 'preparations' and both keyboard and inside technique. Arndt doesn't start from jazz but somehow finds his way to the same place as a lot of post-bop piano, including Paul Bley (electronics) and Cecil Taylor (overtones). Only 'Metropolis' remains a mystery: ten minutes of dead air. An earlier FMP called Working is worth searching for secondhand; no CD as yet.

Harry Arnold (1920–71)

BANDLEADER

His Swedish big band of the late '50s and early '60s was almost good enough to pass off as an American outfit.

 Studio Sessions 1956–58 Dragon DRCD 296 Arnold; Benny Bailey, Ernie Englund, Sixten Eriksson, Arnold Johansson, Weine Renliden, Bengt-Arne Wallin (t); Gunnar Medberg, Åke Persson, Andreas Skjold, George Vernon (tb); Gordon Ohlsson (btb); Rolf Bäckman , Arne Domnérus , Fritz Fust, Rolf Lindell, Rolf Blomqvist, Bjarne Nerem, Carl-Henrik Norin, Johnny Ekh, Lennart Jansson (reeds); Bengt Hallberg, Gunnar Svensson (p); Bengt Högberg , Rolf Berg (g); Simon Brehm, Georg Riedel (b); Nils-Bertil Dahlander, Egil Johansen (d). 10/56–10/58.
 Big Band In Concert, 1957–1958 Dragon DRCD Arnold; Benny Bailey, Sixten Eriksson, Weine Renliden (t); Bengt-Arne Wallin (t, flhn); Arnold Johansson (t, vtb); Åke Persson , Andreas Skjold, George Vernon (tb); Godon Ohlsson (btb); Arne Domnérus (cl, as); Tony Scott (cl); Rolf Bäckman , Rolf Lindell (as); Rolf Blomqvist (ts, f); Bjarne Nerem (ts); Johnny Ekh, Rune Falk, Lennart Jansson (bs); Bengt Hallberg (p); Rolf Berg, Bengt Högberg (g); Simon Brehm, Lasse Pettersson (b); Egil 'Bop' Johansen (d); Alice Babs (v); Quincy Jones (arr, cond). 2/57, 4/58.
(*) Big Band 1964/65: Volume 1 / * ... Volume 2 Dragon DRCD 379 / 382 Arnold; Nat Pavone, Weine Renliden, Gösta Nilsson , Bosse Broberg, Lars Färnlöf , Bengt-Arne Wallin, Lars Samuelsson, Bertil Lövgren , Jan Allan (t); Kenny Rupp, Andreas Skjold, George Vernon, Olle Holmquist, Gunnar Medberg (tb); Arne Domnérus , Rolf Bäckman , Bertil Erixon (as); Lennart Jansson, Claes Rosendahl, Bjarne Nerem, Rolf Blomqvist, Lennart Åberg , Rune Falk (reeds); Jan Johansson (p); Rune Gustafsson (g); Georg Riedel, Roman Dylag, Sture Åkerberg (b); Egil Johansen (d). 12/64–3/65.
Arnold's American recordings languish in obscurity, but Lars Westin has done his usual excellent job in bringing back these almost forgotten dates. The first showcases the mark one edition of the Orchestra, with arrangements mostly by Arnold but also Gösta Theselius and Bengt Hallberg. They swing mightily on the flag-wavers, and the lengthy 'Kinda Blues' has Basie-like authority, but the more thoughtful 'Laura', a feature for Nerem, is delightful and Theselius's 'In The Fall' still fascinates.

At this point the Orchestra was still basically copping American moves, as can be heard on the live date, which features some interesting moments from Tony Scott as well as a Quincy Jones arranging/conducting job on the latter numbers. A decade on, it developed a more singular identity. Jan Johansson, Georg Riedel and Pete Jacques all contributed arrangements and the reed section acquired a rich and unique sonority. 'If You Could See Me Now' is a showpiece for Domnérus; Jacques offers a trim, clever reading of Ornette's 'Tomorrow Is The Question'; there is some folk material adapted by Wallin; and Johansson offers offbeat ideas. The second disc unfolds with one memorable theme after another. Astonishingly, this stuff wasn't released at the time.

Ben Aronov

PIANO

Russian technician with an interesting touch.

 Introducing Progressive PCD 7022 Aronov; Jay Leonhart (b); Billy Hart (d). 77.
(*) The Best Thing For Me Arbors 19302 Aronov; Ken Peplowski (cl, ts); Murray Wall (b); Tom Melito (d). 12/97.
It's too much of a cliché to point out how overcrowded a market this is. Aronov has great technique, a good ear for harmony and excellent instincts for sidemen. Leonhart and Hart are bang on for the first of these and Ben responds busily on a nicely chosen range of standard material. He's worked quite a bit with Peplowski, who returns the favour handsomely on the Arbors disc, switching between his unmistakable Goodmanish clarinet and the surprisingly forceful tenor. Two nice sets, though scarcely revelatory.

Art Ensemble Of Chicago

GROUP

Born out of Chicago's AACM collective, this co-operative group began as Roscoe Mitchell's sextet. Phillip Wilson drummed for them early but it was as a quartet that Mitchell, Lester Bowie, Joseph Jarman and Malachi Favors went to Europe in 1969. They met Don Moye and returned to the US in 1972, becoming a leading concert attraction, though they recorded only sporadically together.

(*) A Jackson In Your House / Message To Our Folks Charly-Snapper 509 Lester Bowie (t); Joseph Jarman (sax, perc); Roscoe Mitchell (sax, perc); Malachi Mahgostut Favors (b). 6–8/69.
 Reese And The Smooth Ones /  Live In Paris Sunspot 510 / Charly-Snapper 512 As above. 69; 10/69.
 Certain Blacks America 067848 Lester Bowie (t); Joseph Jarman (ss, as, ts, vib, perc); Chicago Beau (ts, hmca, p, perc); Roscoe Mitchell (bsx); Julio Finn (hca); Malachi Mahgostut Favors (b); William A. Howell (d). 2/70.
(*) With Fontella Bass America 067865 As above, except omit Howell; add Famoudou Don Moye (d); Fontella Bass (v). 8/70.
 Phase One America 067866 As above, except omit Bass. 2/71.
Those who know the Art Ensemble only by their considerable live reputation may well be disappointed by their work on record.

Bowie, Mitchell, Jarman and Favors (who are heard as a quartet on the scrappy A Jackson In Your House/Message To Our Folks), later joined by Don Moye, have been celebrated as among the most innovative musicians in the intensely creative environment centred on Chicago's AACM. As such, they were widely ignored by the business and had to uproot for Europe in order to work (and later record). There were other, internal pressures. The AEOC always seemed in a crisis of temperament, with Bowie's sardonic arsenal pitched against Mitchell's schematic constructions, Jarman's fiercely elegant improvising against Favors's other-worldly commentaries. Satire, both musical and literal, sustained much of their work: long and short forms break down jazz structure into areas of sound and silence. At their best, they were as uncompromisingly abstract as any European ensemble, yet their materials are cut from the heart of the traditions of black music. That's strongly evident on Reese And The Smooth Ones and the live date, played still without Moye but rhythmically strong and fiercely joyous.

A very expensive Nessa five-CD set compiling early work from 1967 and 1968 now has to be considered out of print. Unfortunately, that means some of the earliest survivals are also in supposedly limited edition. The Ensemble's three albums for America are spottier than the slightly earlier Paris recordings but all have interesting moments along with passages of incoherence and seemingly pointless gestures of 'freedom'. The long title-piece of Certain Blacks goes nowhere in the end, but Chicago Beau and Julio Finn are actually rather interesting participants in the bluesiest AEOC album ever (and with Mitchell playing only bass saxophone a unique item). The meeting with Bass (Bowie's partner at the time) has its moments, but not many, and the cloudy sound is damaging. Phase One is a pair of long pieces: 'Ohnedaruth' is a succession of solos, and 'Lebert Aaly' a fairly obvious dedication. Unglamorous records in glamorous packaging.

 Live Delmark DE-432 Lester Bowie (t, perc); Joseph Jarman (sax, perc); Roscoe Mitchell (sax, perc); Malachi Favors (b); Famoudou Don Moye (d). 1/72.
(*) Bap-Tizum Atlantic 7567-80757-2 As above. 9/72.
(*) Fanfare For The Warriors Atlantic 8122-7235 / Koch 8501 As above, except add Muhal Richard Abrams (p). 9/73.
The Delmark date, taped at Chicago's Mandel Hall, was something of a homecoming affair and there is much jubilation in the playing. On the other hand, the recording is flawed, detail skimped and there are dead spots in the 76-minute performance which were to be repeated for the rest of their career together. Bap-Tizum comes from the Ann Arbor Festival and is more coherent and purposeful. The studio Fanfare is one of their most finished efforts, with Mitchell's 'Nonaah' and 'Tnoona' among the group's most challenging original structures, while Jarman's fierce title-piece is delivered with concentrated force. As a guest, Abrams thickens the stew. No theatre; just hard music.

 Nice Guys ECM 827876 As above, except omit Abrams. 5/78.
 Full Force / (*) Urban Bushmen ECM 829197 / 829394 2CD As above. 1/80; 5/80.
It wasn't until now that AEoC were finally able to record in the sonic detail their work demands. Even so, the two studio albums were good but unexceptional instances of the group at work. Nice Guys has two absorbing Jarman pieces, but the attempt at a ska beat in 'JA' is unconvincing and much of the music formulaic, improvisation limited. Full Force is a little more outgoing without cutting loose and the lengthy 'Magg Zelma' is long-winded rather than epic. The Ensemble's live appearances could still generate music of blistering intensity, so Urban Bushmen, though robbed of the group's theatrical appeal, is their best record for years. Over the course of 90 minutes, they display their virtuosity on a vast panoply of devices (Jarman is credited with playing 14 different horns) and the patchwork of musics seems to cohere this time.

 Tribute To Lester ECM 017066 As above, except omit Bowie, Jarman. 9/01.
The saxophonist took a long sabbatical. The trumpeter succumbed to a heart attack. The group missed Jarman's elegance and Lester's unquenchable spirit. This is beset by absences, though the trio plays with a new serenity. 'Suite For Lester' and 'He Speaks To Me Often In Dreams' are beautiful, with Mitchell radiantly focused on soprano, flute and bass saxophone.

 The Meeting / (*) [Sirius Calling] PI 07 / 011 As above, except omit Favors; add Joseph Jarman (sax). 03.
In the end, Jarman decided to return, but with Favors gone, this ought to have been the finale. There is something poignant in seeing these four old men, wrapped up against a Chicago winter on the CD cover. As ritualistic as ever, from the solemn gaiety of Jarman's 'Hail We Now Sing Joy' inwards, this is an autumnal record, reflective, perhaps rambling and only occasionally bursting into stiffly volatile life. Fittingly, Favors's piece 'It's The Sign Of The Times', which begins with each man soloing in turn, is the AEOC at its most delicately effective and there's an eerie moment towards the end when someone plays what sounds uncannily like a Lester Bowie break …

 Non-Cognitive Aspects Of The City PI 019/020 2CD As above, except add Corey Wilkes (t); Jaribu Shadid (b). 3–4/04.
Recorded live at Iridium with two new members. It would be nice to say that Wilkes and Shadid add a youthful spark to the Ensemble. Instead, they tend to underline the ageing of the older members, not necessarily in a negative way. Shadid, who's no spring chicken, is all fire and bustle, often when what is needed is a measured throb, or simply silence; except on 'Big Red Peaches', which is unapologetic funk. Wilkes has something of Bowie's esprit, but sounds very different, and one catches oneself pausing and wondering at moments: who's this? Jarman more than ever seems the centre of the group. Mitchell's iron resolve is all bound up with structures and harmonic equations, leaving the other saxophonist to blow the real effective solos. 'Song For My Sister' is a weird, boppish idea. 'Red Sand Green Water' explores elements of freedom, while both discs are concluded with the theme 'Odwalla', played with a very different conception on the two nights.

Also, in brief:

 :rarum: – Selected Recordings ECM. 78–87.
Improbably, ECM probably had some of the Ensemble's best work on record. This fillets some of the very best.

 Live In Milano Leo Golden Years 16. 8/80.
Formerly a Praxis bootleg, this legitimate issue restores correct track information, including 'Tutankhamun' and 'A Jackson In Your House'.

(*) The Third Decade ECM 823213. 6/84.
A tired title and a tired-sounding band.

(*) Coming Home Jamaica Birdology FDM 37003. 12/95–1/96.
Jarman had retired; Bahnamous Bowie was in on keyboards. This has its moments, but the fires are almost out.

Tom Arthurs (born 1980)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Part of a burgeoning community of young players on the London scene and a member of the F-ire collective.

 Centripede Babel BDV 2341 Arthurs; Ingrid Laubrock (ss, ts); Jez Franks (g); Max de Wardener (b); Tim Giles (d). 1/03.
 Squash Recipe Babel BDV 2560 Arthurs; Bruce McKinnon (p); Joe Sorbara (d). 8/04.
(*) Mesmer BDV 2767 Arthurs; Richard Fairhurst (p). 05.
The first record maps out his interests. Some of these are perhaps self-conscious to a fault, as dedications to Messiaen and Jackson Pollock suggest, but the music is friendlier than that sounds, a home-baked version of Franz Koglmann's rigour and intensity. The leader has a bright but soft-hued approach, which contrasts with the grouchier timbres of Laubrock's playing; sometimes the opposition works, sometimes not. Franks's open tone and Giles's spidery drumming fill out the mix.

The second, more obviously co-operative venture is surprisingly introspective, reminiscent ('Touched' especially) of Kenny Wheeler and John Taylor with a drummer coming in here and there. Less lyrical paths are also trodden and there's a teasing glimmer of Brahms halfway through. Engaging minute by minute, but doesn't add up to much overall.

Fairhurst is always interesting. He takes the opening number on Mesmer solo (though Arthurs wrote it) and gives 'Beautiful Indifference' a timeless, insouciant quality that suggests an older song. On flugelhorn only, Arthurs is thoughtful and highly focused and the title-duo provides a nice, stark contrast to 'The Great Unwashed'. The early promise starts to pay dividends.

Joe Ascione (born 1961)

DRUMS

An Italian-American from Long Island, whose CV seems to embrace everything from Cab Calloway to Donald Fagen.

 My Buddy Nagel Heyer 036 Ascione; Randy Sandke (t); Dan Barrett (tb); Brian Ogilvie (cl, as, ts); Billy Mitchell (ts); Mark Shane (p); James Chirillo (g); Bob Haggart (b). 11/96.
 Post No Bills Arbors ARCD 19174 Ascione; Jerry Weldon (ts); Dave LaLama (p); Ron Affif (g); Tim Givens (b). 12/96.
Ascione idolized Buddy Rich and the first of these is a worthy homage. The Nagel Heyer repertory crew is in good form, but it's nice to welcome the gruff, booting tenor of Mitchell back to the studios. The trumpet/drums duet of 'Nica's Dream' and the floating tempo on 'Soft Winds', deliciously set up by Barrett, are useful changes of pace.

Post No Bills takes some similar cues, but is more boppishly inclined and built round the piano trio. Joe finds some soft light on 'Chelsea Bridge', and with Weldon adding some muscular tenor to the likes of 'Moment's Notice', this is about as modern a record as Arbors seems likely to deliver. No follow-up, significantly.

Dorothy Ashby (1932–86)

HARP

The first jazz harpist? Not quite – Casper Reardon got there first.

(*) Fantastic Jazz Harp / Live At The Top Collectables 6617 Ashby; Jimmy Cleveland, Quentin Jackson, Sonny Russo, Tony Studd (tb); Richard Davis (b); Grady Tate (d); Willie Bobo (perc). 65.
(*) In A Minor Groove Prestige PCD 24120 Ashby; Frank Wess (f); Eugene Wright, Herman Wright (b); Roy Haynes, Art Taylor (d). 3–12/58.
The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz describes Ashby as 'the only important bop harpist', which seems a rather empty accolade. Ashby came to notice playing with Louis Armstrong but tried valiantly to fit her instrument into the new horn-dominated idiom. There are affinities with Wes Montgomery's playing and she learned something from Bud Powell. The Collectables set teams one of her best albums with a Junior Mance set. Given the low dynamics of her instrument, Wess was her ideal partner and the best of their partnership is on In A Minor Groove. She solos well and swings harder than you would dare hope.

Harold Ashby (1925–2003)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Kansas-born, he worked in Mid-West obscurity before moving to NY in the late '50s. Worked with Ellington from time to time, permanently from 1968.

 Scufflin' Black & Blue BB932 Ashby; Booty Wood (tb); Raymond Fol (p); Aaron Bell (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 5/78.
 The Viking Gemini GM 60 Ashby; Norman Simmons (p); Paul West (b); Gerryck King (d). 8/88.
 What Am I Here For? Criss Cross 1054 Ashby; Mulgrew Miller (p); Rufus Reid (b); Ben Riley (d). 11/90.
(*) Just For You Mapleshade MPS 06232 Ashby; John Hicks (p); Keter Betts (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 12/98.
Ashby was effectively Ben Webster's replacement in the Ellington sound: he delivered the same huff on ballads and the grouchy, just-woke-up timbre on faster tunes (and he was better than Webster at quicker tempos). He liked to take his time and fashioned storytelling solos that freshen up the material. There isn't much to choose between the three earlier recordings. The Black & Blue, Fol's last date and a good one, is about as kosher as an Ellington outfit can be without the Duke at the piano. 'Salty Mama' and 'Earma Jean' are nothing much compositionally, but provide a prop for generous blowing.

The Criss Cross has an ideal Ellingtonian programme and the playing is jauntily assured. The Gemini sounds perkier and Ashby is comfortable on the four original lines produced for the date. Just For You was his last record; he's frail and tired, which adds some poignancy to 'Lotus Blossom', though elsewhere the rhythm section blows straight past him.

Dave Askren

GUITAR

A lively composer, who hasn't yet made the deserved impact.

* Some Other Things Sea Breeze 3077 Askren; Jeff Benedict (ss, ts); Mike Flick (b); Jon Nathan (d). 11/04–4/05.
An earlier disc paid tribute to Bill Evans, but this one is more about line, bounce and energy. The throwaway title is misleading. These are carefully thought-out tracks, designed as ensemble pieces rather than merely blowing heads and, on 'More Or Less' and 'Harry Haller', Askren and his men deliver a powerful sting, technically astute and emotionally satisfying.

Svend Asmussen (born 1916)

VIOLIN, VIBRAPHONE, VOCAL

Working professionally since the '30s, though later work drifted closer to salon music.

 Musical Miracle Phontastic PHONTCD 9306 Asmussen; Svend Hauberg (t, cl, g); Olaf Carlsson (t); Kai Ewans (cl); Aage Voss, Kai Moller, Johnny Campbell (as); Henry Hagemann, Banner Jansen, Valdemar Nielsen (ts); Kjeld Bonfils (p, vib); Kjeld Nørregaard (p); Hans Ulrik Neumann, Helge Jacobsen, Jimmy Campbell, Børge Ring , Oscar Alemán (g); Niels Foss, Christian Jensen, Alfred Rasmussen (b); Bibi Miranda, Erik Frederiksen, Rik Kragh (d). 11/35–12/40.

Asmussen should be celebrated as one of the major jazz violinists. He is at least as fluent as Grappelli or South and has little of their marring sweetness. His vigorous variation on 'Limehouse Blues' from 1938 is as striking as the flawless impetus of 'After You've Gone' from two years later. The earliest tracks feature him as sideman, but the majority are by small groups that feature him as soloist, occasional vibist and Armstrong-inspired singer. Aside from Alemán, none of the guitarists challenges him the way Reinhardt did Grappelli and there's a hint of café society kitsch already.

 Two Of A Kind Storyville STCD 8383 Asmussen; Stéphane Grappelli (vn); Ole Molin, Jørn Grauengaard (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); William Schiöpffe (d). 1/65.

The antecedents are obvious and so is some of the material, but there are some excellent tracks here, including a delightful version of Toots Thielemans's 'Blue Lady' and a couple of good Asmussen originals. Lukewarm, though, rather than strictly Hot Club.

 Prize Winners Music Mecca 2060 Asmussen; Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 2/78.

This was originally the debut release on Drew's only short-lived Matrix label. It's a brisk and mostly effective set from Asmussen, with some nice flourishes on 'Donna Lee' and the traditional Danish tunes, but the impetus isn't sustained and too often the violinist lapses into showy salon stuff.

 At Slukafter Phontastic PHONTCD 8804 Asmussen; Arne Domnérus (cl, as); Bengt Hallberg (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 7/84.

Dompan was a perfect foil, and while there is a lot of warmth to the front-line playing here, it's contentious, too, particularly on things like Bigard's 'Barney Goin' Easy', Rollins's 'Pent Up House' and the best of the standards, 'Out Of Nowhere'. The rhythm section is absolutely top-notch.

 Fiddling Around Imogena IGCD 039 Asmussen; Jacob Fischer (g); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 3/93.

 Fit As A Fiddle /  Still Fiddling Storyville 4257 / 4252 As above. 5 & 12/99.

A delightful surprise late in the day. These are briskly varied sets from the quartet, showing that Asmussen's superiority to Grappelli (who died between the two dates) was more than momentary. Fiddling Around is padded out with insubstantial originals, and the music is inconsistent, a slow, thoughtful 'Cherokee' set alongside the merely silly 'Alabama Barbecue'. Even so, Svend has lost none of his panache. The second disc, originally on DaCapo, was put together by Lundgaard from concert dates in Denmark and Sweden. Hard to beat the opening 'Running Wild'. There's a spiritual undercurrent to much of the material on the third disc, but earthily so, if that makes sense. 'My Yiddishe Momme', 'Shalom Elechem' and 'Hallelujah' all stand out strongly.

Also, in brief:

 Phenomenal Fiddler, 1941–1950 Phontastic PHONTCD 9310. 41–50.

Too many novelty numbers and average arrangements, but still brightly swinging in places.

Peter Asplund (born 1969)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Studied in Stockholm's Royal College of Music, then played big-band gigs and led his own group.

 Open Mind Dragon DRCD 281 Asplund; Johan Hörlén (ss, as); Ion Baciu (p); Christian Spering (b); Johan Löfcrantz (d). 95.

 Melos Sittel SITCD 9260 Asplund; Johan Hörlén (ss, as, f); Anders Holtz (ky); Jacob Karlzon (p); Dan Berglund (b); Johan Löfcrantz (d); Rigmor Gustafsson (v). 1/99.

(*) Lochiel's Warning Prophone PCD 071 Asplund; Jacob Karlzon (p); Hans Andersson (b); Johan Löfcrantz (d). 03.

Asplund is a post-bop trumpeter who likes to push hard, nothing laid-back or impressionistic here. Löfcrantz likes to pick up the rest of the band if he feels they're lagging, and that urgency carries over into all but the most sedate pieces. It all works slightly differently on the big-band tribute to Armstrong, though it's still Asplund and the rhythm section who drive it (we'll pass over the singer and rapper in silence). Open Mind benefits from the decisiveness, since it's not that individual a body of material, though there are some attractive melodies and the horns have something to chew on. Asplund saves his best for a very long and detailed 'Stardust'.

Melos is a shade different, though not as unorthodox as the leader's notes imply. He claims that the female voice and synths reflect a new romantic element in his writing; Gustafsson is used both instrumentally and as a lyric interpreter, but oddly Asplund takes something of a back seat and leaves a lot of space for Karlzon.

The genuine highs of the Armstrong set are offset but some hints of pastiche. On the final record of the group, he's exposed as solo horn and rises to the challenge with creditable power. The four standards are characterized by real intensity and a severe lyricism, while the originals, such as the biting, tricky '26 Steps' and the title-piece, have lots of substance and humour.

(*) Satch As Such Sittel SITCD 9268 Asplund; Patrik Skoog, Anders Gustafsson, Hans Dyvik (t); Mats 'Dicken' Hedrenius , Mikael Råberg , Mattis Cederberg, Karin Hammar (tb); Johan Hörlén (as); Per 'Texas' Johansson (ts, cl); Karl-Martin Almqvist (sax, f); Magnus Lindgren (sax, cl); Alberto Pinton (bs); Jacob Karlzon (p); Hans Andersson (b); Johan Löfcrantz (d); Rigmor Gustafsson, Magnum Coltrane Price (v). 99.

Michaël Attias (born 1968)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Improvising on the NY scene since 1994.

(*) Renku Playscape PSR 080504 Attias; John Hebert (b); Satoshi Takeishi (d). 8/04.

* Credo Clean Feed CF051 Attias; Reut Regev (tb); Mark Taylor (fr hn); Sam Bardfeld (vn); Chris Lightcap (b); Igal Foni (d). 4–6/99.

Renku is Attias's limber trio, making light, thoughtful work of an interestingly bumpy free bop, the turns in the tunes negotiated without sharp angles but never straight-ahead either. Hebert is busy and able, and Takeishi plays deftly and quietly. Attias's alto has a songful, unsquealing timbre, making his long lines move with fluency and logic. He plays soprano on the Lacyish 'Lubago Boogaloo' and does a surprise turn on baritone for 'Ciao Monkey', which moves from a slow groaning intro to something approaching violence. Monk's 'Work' is the coda.

The second disc took a long time to appear. It's not easily pigeonholed music, which may be why. The instrumental mix is fascinating and the soloists seem to revel in the almost frolicsome feel engendered by Lightcap and Foni. Great stuff.

Gilad Atzmon (born 1963)

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, FLUTES, SOL, ELECTRONICS, VOCAL

An Israeli who came to the UK in 1994, he plays post-bop with considerable chutzpah. Also a novelist.

 And The Orient House Ensemble Tiptoe 888839 Atzmon; Frank Harrison (p, melod); Oli Hayhurst (b); Asaf Sirkis (d, bandir). 00.

 Nostalgico Tiptoe 888841 As above, except add Joe de Jesus (t, tb); Brian Neil (g). 01.

(*) musiK / Re-arranging The 20th Century Tiptoe 888848 Atzmon; Dumitru Ovidiu Fratila (vn); Frank Harrison (p); Romano Viazzani (acc); Matthaios Tsahourides (bouz); Yaron Stavi (b); Asaf Sirkis (d); Tali Atzmon, Robert Wyatt (v). N.D.

(*) Refuge Tiptoe 888849 Atzmon; Paul Jayasinha (t); Frank Harrison (p, ky); Yaron Stavi (b); Asaf Sirkis (d). N.D.

Anyone expecting some sort of fusion of bop and klezmer jollity will be pulled up short by any of these. The early Take It Or Leave It is no longer readily available, but it was a valuable introduction to his idiosyncratic approach to standards material. For the first of the Tiptoes, he seems to have decided to 'mature'. He puts down the alto, sets the jazz and standard material aside, picks up the sol and introduces Turkish and Ladino tunes. The results are much tamer and much of the fire has been smoothed away. There's some lovely playing, though, and 'Miserlou' is beautiful. Nostalgico follows similar paths but more intensely. The pastiche of '20th Century' that juggles 'It Ain't Necessarily So' with 'Caravan' doesn't count for much: too many bases touched at once; and to play 'Petite Fleur' so sweetly and lined up against 'Love For Sale' (here called 'Lust For Sale') is almost vaudevillian.

Even though he has an incendiary reputation for his remarks on Zionism, his novels and full-on performing style, the records are still only so-so. The third of the group is another hotch-potch, with a medley of 'Mack The Knife', 'It Ain't Necessarily So' and 'Roll Out The Barrel' introduced by Wyatt. If Atzmon dislikes the homogenization of categories, he still hasn't found a vivid enough counter. The most recent record retreads similar ground: impressionistic pieces, a slice of electro-funk, an epic 'Levantine' composition, folkish ballads. As a listening experience, it's decidedly second-rate.

Also, in brief:

() Artie Fishel And The Promised Band WMD WMDCD1968. 06.
Awful, sophomoric nonsense.

Georgie Auld (1919–90)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Born John Altweger in Toronto, he started bandleading in his teens and worked with Bunny Berigan and Artie Shaw before starting his own big band. Appears in Scorsese's New York, New York.

 Georgie Auld 1940–1945 Classics 1322 Auld; Chuck Peterson, Nelson Shelladay, Bernie Privin, John Best, Harry Geller, Charlie Shavers, Sonny Berman, Manny Fox, Howard McGhee, George Schwartz, Billy Butterfield, Dizzy Gillespie, Al Killian, Jimmy Roma, Freddy Webster (t); George Arus, Les Jenkins, Harry Rodgers, Rude DeLuca, Jerry Dorn, Bobby Lord, John D'Agostino, Eli Robinson, Trummy Young, Bob Ascher, Roger Smith (tb); Les Robinson, Harry Freeman, Musky Ruffo, Gene Zanoni (as); Ben Webster, Ronnie Perry, Coleman Hawkins, Tony Pastor, Al Cohn, Irv Roth, Al Epstein, Joe Megro, Jack Schwartz (ts); Manny Albam, Irv Greenberg, Larry Molinelli (bs); Bob Kitsis, Bill Rowland, Harry Biss, Erroll Garner, Tony Aless (p); Dave Barbour, Hy White, Mike Bryan, Turk Van Lake, Al Avola (g); Dick Horvath, Israel Crosby, Morris Rayman, Chubby Jackson, Doc Goldberg (b); Ralph Hawkins, Henry Adler, Specs Powell, Lou Fromm, Shadow Wilson, Irv Kluger (d); Patti Powers, Kay Foster, Kay Little, Gordon Drake (v). 1/40–3/45.

 Jump, Georgie, Jump Hep CD27 As above. 40–45.

This is a curious string of sessions. The first two find Auld fronting the Artie Shaw band during one of the leader's sabbaticals. Then comes a sextet where the saxophonist stoutly shares the front line with Ben Webster and Coleman Hawkins. And then finally three 1944–5 dates where the 'genuine' Auld band holds forth with Dizzy Gillespie and Erroll Garner in the line-up. Auld was an accomplished swing man, hardly individual but with some style: 'Taps Miller' and 'I Can't Get Started' offer fine solos. The 1945 tracks hint at bebop without the meat of it. Needless to say, Hep offers better sound.

 Georgie Auld 1945–1946 Classics 1351 Auld; Al Aarons, Danny Blue, Art House, Al Porcino (t); Mickey Datz, Rudy DeLuca, Al Esposito, Tracey Allen (ts); Musky Ruffo, Gene Zanoni, Lou Prisby (as); Herman Rubinstein, Jack Schwartz, Al Cohn, Joe Megro, Irv Roth (ts); Serge Chaloff (bs); Joe Albany, Harry Biss, Roy Kral (p); Turk Van Lake, Barry Galbraith (g); Robert Shevak, Ed Cunningham (b); Stan Levey, Buddy Christians, Art Madigan (d); Lynne Stevens, Sarah Vaughan (v). 45–46.

 Georgie Auld 1946–1952 Classics 1371 Auld; Neal Hefti, Sonny Rich, George Schwartz, John Anderson (t); Micky Datz, Gus Dixon, Johnny Mandel, Billy Byers, Frank Rosolino (tb); Gene Zanoni, Clint Neagley, Sam Zittman, John Rotella (as); Irv Roth (ts, bs); Pete Terry, Al Cohn (ts); Serge Chaloff (bs); Harvey Leonard, Jimmy Rowles, Lou Levy (p); Joe Pellicane, Joe Mondragon, Max Bennett (b); Art Madigan, Alvin Stoller, Tiny Kahn (d); Karl Kiffe (perc); Sarah Vaughan (v). 46–52.

 Double Image Ocium 33 *Auld; John Anderson, Neal Hefti (t); Billy Byers (tb); John Rotella (as); Irv Roth (ts); Pete Terry (bs); Larry Bunker, Frank Emilio Flynn, Lou Singer (vib); Harvey Leonard, Milt Raskin, Arnold Ross, Jimmy Rowles, Don Trenner (p); Barry Breen, Red Callender, Mike Rubin, Curly Russell, Phil Stephens, Alvin Stoller (b); Tiny Kahn, Sam Weiss (d); Karl Kiffe (perc); Jud Conlon's Rhythmaires (v). 1/49–9/52.

 Airmail Special Fresh Sound FSRCD 366 2CD Auld; Don Fagerquist (t); Frank Rosolino (tb); Lou Levy (p); Larry Bunker (vib); Howard Roberts, Johnny Gray (g); Max Bennett, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Tiny Kahn (d, v); Mel Lewis (d). 1/51–7/63.

The big band continued post-war. There are some space-filling ballads from Lynne Stevens on Classics 1351, but on the more booting numbers the band flexes its muscles to advantage, Tadd Dameron's chart for 'Stompin' At The Savoy' a nice bop makeover. The band had no major hits and made their last session for Musicraft in June 1946, a date which opens Classics 1371. Sarah Vaughan's 'You're Blasé' is a sublime example of young Sassy, but sadly her only appearance on the disc. Two 1949 sessions for Discovery follow, with agreeable charts by Hal Vernon. From there, the collection jumps forward to 1951 and a group of sessions for Roost with a small group featuring Auld and Rosolino. It's in these that the Auld familiar to most listeners emerges: a succulent vibrato, a tendency to growl at problematic tempos and an unfussy style of phrasing that imparts an unexpected agility. A preposterous pace for 'Air Mail Special' almost undoes him and it's Rosolino who most impresses here.

The same set also opens the Fresh Sound disc. Auld had recently opened a New York club and the quintet was doing good business, but it broke up and, troubled by his health, Auld went west, recording the remaining three sessions in Hollywood over a period of four years. The Ocium set covers material recorded for Discovery in the early months of 1949, coupled to some anodyne vocal arrangements for Coral three years later. There are moments even here, like the unexpectedly raw 'Lullaby Of Broadway', where Auld really bites into his reed.

The first disc on Airmail Special consists of the Homage sessions in which Auld played tribute to Benny Goodman, the second of two albums released on Philips as Plays The Winners and Here's To The Losers, the first a reunion with Rosolino, the second with Bunker and Gray. Rosolino is terrific, but it's the saxophonist's big humid sound that takes the ear.

Also, in brief:

(*) You Got Me Jumpin' Sounds Of Yesteryear 668. 49.

A terrific live date from the Empire in Hollywood. Gerry Mulligan (bs) and Jimmy Rowles (p) are in the line-up.

 Swinging In The Land Of Hi-Fi Jasmine 429. 55, 56.

Two quite compelling Emarcy sessions of similar titles, now usefully pulled together. Also available on Fresh Sound Jazz City.

Lovie Austin (1887–1972)

PIANO

Born in Chattanooga, she was an educated musician who ran her own vaudeville show before settling in Chicago and leading pit bands and record dates as a Paramount house pianist. Worked in munitions during the war but returned to music through dance recording classes before recording again in the early '60s.

 Lovie Austin 1924–1926 Classics 756 Austin; Tommy Ladnier, Bob Shoffner, Natty Dominique (c); Kid Ory (tb); Jimmy O'Bryant , Johnny Dodds (cl); Eustern Woodfork (bj); W. E. Burton (d); Ford & Ford, Edmonia Henderson, Viola Bartlette, Henry Williams (v). 9/24–8/26.

A remarkable woman, she was one of the first female musicians to make a significant contribution to jazz. There are 17 surviving sides by her Blues Serenaders, plus various accompaniments to blues and vaudeville singers, and they're all on this valuable CD. Austin's music was a tight, sophisticated variation on the barrelhouse style prevalent in Chicago. The two trios by the trio with Ladnier and O'Bryant create a densely plaited counterpoint amazingly advanced for the time. The quartets and quintets are harsher, with Burton playing what sounds like a military side-drum, very loudly, but the simple breaks and stop-time passages have a rough poetry that transcends the grimy recording.

Available Jelly

GROUP

Dutch free-boppers, active from 1984 to 1996.

 Available Jelly Ramboy 014 Jimmy Serensky (t); Michael Moore (cl, as, p); Stuart Curtis (ss, ts, whistling); Barry Block (cl, ts); Gregg Moore (b, tb, tba); Michael Vatcher (perc, hca, zith, v). 84.

 In Full Flail Ramboy 017 Eric Boeren (t. co); Michael Moore (cl, bcl, as, p, mar, hca, etc); Gregg Moore (tb, tba, b, mand); Michael Vatcher (d, dulc, mar). 6/88.

 Monuments Ramboy 07 As above, except add Jimmy Sernesky (t); Tobias Delius (ts, hca); Alexei Levin (p, org, acc); Eric Calmes ((b, perc). 8–10/93.

 Happy Camp Ramboy 10 Eric Boeren (c, melod); Wolter Wierbos (tb); Michael Moore (as, cl, bcl); Tobias Delius (ts); Ernst Glerum (b); Michael Vatcher (d). 6/96.

Organized by Moore (whose label Ramboy is) and later by Eric Boeren, there was nothing else around like Available Jelly. The first record is a surrealist music hall turn (they'd worked as accompanists to a mime troupe in the '70s), marked by razor-sharp musicianship. In Full Flail still has a theatrical feel, with 11 of the 21 pieces done and dusted in less than three minutes each, and some tossed out like spontaneous ideas. Boeren's arrival makes the waggery seem more organized, though sometimes it can come across as a little arch.

Al(l)ways, arguably their best record, is perversely unavailable. Monuments, by contrast, overdoes it. The new members add weight, but mostly in the form of excess baggage. Boeren's firecracker playing is swamped by the lugubrious arrangements and the concert-hall ambience of the mix doesn't suit them. There are still moments to savour, such as Moore's 'Shotgun Wedding', a classic sad-sack dirge, and a couple of Boeren miniatures.

Happy Camp is the loosest and sparkiest of the lot. Recorded live at the Bimhuis, the band seem ready to go back to jazz, what with two Ellington tunes and the extra weight lost as the instrumentation goes back to six. Glerum makes the band swing more and fits well with Vatcher. Moore does most of the writing and enjoys himself.

Franck Avitabile

PIANO

Sponsored by Martial Solal and Michel Petrucciani, he gained a deep background in musical theory at the Ecole Normale Supérieure in his home town of Lyons. His work is marked by deft touch and effortless swing.

 Lumières Dreyfus FDM 3545 2 Avitabile; Louis Petrucciani (b); Thomas Grimmonprez (d). 98.
 In Tradition Dreyfus FDM 3569 2 Avitabile; Riccardo Del Fra (b); Luigi Bonafede (d). 99.
 Right Time Dreyfus FDM 36608 2 Avitabile; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen, Louis Petrucciani (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 2/00.
(*) Bemsha Swing Dreyfus FDM 36639 2 Avitabile; Rémi Vignolo (b); Dré Pallmaerts (d). 5/02.
(*) Just Play Dreyfus FDM 36672-2 Avitabile (p solo). 11/04.
Bud Powell is the main jazz influence, but where the American could be dark and brooding, there is nothing but sunshine and optimism in Avitabile's playing. The first album, produced by Petrucciani, is the most direct, but it is perhaps too engagingly simple. Avitabile has more to offer than this and succeeding records have delivered steadily more.

The pianist's understanding of bebop doesn't merely extend to reworking standard material. His own composition 'Right Time!' is a brilliantly idiomatic piece, strongly abetted by NHØP. Franck continues to show his breadth of rhythmic understanding with a Latin-tinged original, 'Facin' Up', and a delightful waltz, 'Miss Laurence', also on the third album.

With Bemsha Swing he seems to have gained full confidence in his skills. There are nods here and there to both Petrucciani and Solal, but the Monk tune that gives the record its title, a stunningly good 'Body And Soul' and an unaccompanied version of Duke's 'Prelude To A Kiss' all suggest that Avitabile is a pianist to watch very carefully. He may have recorded too much and too quickly and one would like to have heard each of these groups recorded during a long residency somewhere; however, there is nothing pat or studio-conscious about them.

Playing solo, Avitabile sounds more mannered, as if trying to meld Debussy with Bud Powell before our startled gaze. There are lots of false starts and unrequited promises here, and a sketchy feel throughout. We'd want to rescue 'Autumn In Paris' and the closing 'Nature Boy'. The rest is dispensable.

Omer Avital (born 1971)

BASS, VOCAL

Israeli-born member of the NY 'new jazz' community.

 Think With Your Heart Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 104 Avital; Myron Walden (as); Gregory Tardy (ts, bcl); Jay Collins (ts, ss, f); Joel Frahm (ts); Joshua Levitt (nay f, v); Daniel Freedman (d, v). 9/00.
 Third World Love Songs Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 114 Avital; Avishai Cohen (t); Yonatan Avishai (p); Daniel Freedman (d). 02.
(*) Omer Avital–Marlon Browden Project Fresh Sound World Jazz FSWJCD 031 Avital; Avishai Cohen (t); Omri Mor (p); Marlon Browden (d). 7/03.
(*) Arrival Fresh Sound World Jazz FSWJ035 Avital; Avishai Cohen (t, v); Abi Lebovich (tb, v); Joel Frahm (ss, ts, v); Jason Lindner (p, ky, v); Jonathan Blake (d, perc, v). 06.
Avital's music has a strongly vocalized quality, even if the only actual singing on the first of these is on 'Marrakesh'. Having no fewer than six wind-players (never fewer than four at a time) makes for a diverse gathering of voices, sometimes fierce but mostly harmoniously blended. Apart from Bob Marley's 'Redemption Song', done as a bass solo to open the album, and 'Stella By Starlight', everything is Avital's. For all the virtuosity in the group, the music has an untutored feel and the standard shows up his shortcomings. There's a vague Mid-East feel, but the solos tend to nail it down in New York.

The second Fresh Sound extends the promise and introduces the fresh-voiced Yonatan Avishai, who has a touch as soft as Bill Evans or as percussive as Abdullah Ibrahim, and a nice folkish range. He definitely steals the leader's thunder. Avital has a disproportionately large discography, given the Smalls material below. The co-led quartet with Browden is rawly exciting, but again largely owing to the piano-player (Mor gets something individual out of a Fender Rhodes) and the trumpeter. Recorded live at the Yellow Submarine in Jerusalem, they play like triumphant homeboys back among friends. The third studio album has an implicitly ambitious title and you have to grant it to him. With this one, Avital seems to have reached the kind of sound and substance his talent promises. Lots of rich harmony, less of a gear-changing clunk between the ensembles and solos. Adding a second brass voice was a masterstroke. Impressive.

Also, in brief:

 Asking No Permission / * The Ancient Art Of Giving /  Room To Grow Smalls 11 / 14 / 20. 96; 97; 06.
From the celebrated NY club's own imprint, these might be hard to find, but they effectively document an evolving aesthetic.

Bent Axen

PIANO

Redoubtable Danish section man who enjoyed a brief moment in the spotlight.

 Axen Steeplechase SCCD 36003 Axen; Allan Botschinsky (t); Bent Jaedig, Frank Jensen (ts); Erik Mølbach, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Jørn Elniff, Finn Frederiksen (d). 12/59–1/60.
The back pages of Danish jazz history. Axen subsequently left the music, but he helped pioneer modern jazz on record in Denmark and this documents some early steps. The CD gathers together three sessions, two quintets and a trio, for what are rough-and-ready approximations of American bebop refracted through the Scandinavian affection for Stan Getz's cool. NHØP was still only 14 when he made the trio tracks and Botschinsky was barely out of his teens. Axen's own tunes follow familiar models and his playing is decent if unexceptional. The most interesting player represented is probably Jaedig, a dyed-in-the-wool hard-bopper.

Albert Ayler (1936–70)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Cleveland, he played R&B on alto as a teenager, then switched to tenor during army service. Left for Sweden in 1962, recorded in Europe, and returned to the USA in 1963, recording for ESP and later Impulse!. The most intense of avant-gardists, he also explored other vernacular styles. Found dead in New York's East River in 1970.

(*) The First Recordings: Volume 2 DIW 349 Ayler; Torbjørn Hultcrantz (b); Sune Spångberg (d). 10/62.
Ayler's music has been the object of endless debate. It is now generally understood to be a highly personal amalgam of New Orleans brass, rhythm and blues and some of the more extreme timbral innovations of the '60s New Thing.

The first recordings, made in Denmark, are astonishingly sparse, with no harmony instrument and a concentration on stark melodic variations in and out of tempo. What distinguishes him from early Ornette Coleman is the hypnotic concentration on a single motif, which he repeats, worries, splinters into constituent harmonics, until even familiar standards are virtually unrecognizable. Ayler's impatience with bebop is evident throughout, and for all their unrelieved starkness, these rather solitary experiments are still remarkably refreshing. Not called on to keep time, Hultcrantz and Spångberg occasionally resort to marking it, but they seem unfazed by Ayler's primitivism. There is some evidence that Ayler didn't want these sessions to be released. The second batch of material from October 1962 consists of four disjointed repertory pieces – 'Moanin'', 'Good Bait', 'I Didn't Know What Time It Was' and a take of 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise' – which see Albert effectively ignore the harmonic structure of the song and simply follow the logic of his own invention. Not once, though, does the rhythm section follow him 'out', and it is already clear that the saxophonist needs not only sympathetic interpreters but also a new body of material.

() Witches And Devils / () Spirits 1201 Music 9006 / Breathless 52006 Ayler; Norman Howard (t); Henry Grimes, Earle Henderson (b); Sunny Murray (d). 2/64.

Pace the garbled text in our last edition, these are identical and afford a first recorded glimpse of Ayler in full flow. He reaches peaks of intensity here that are among the most arresting and evocative in his brief career. The title-piece has an eldritch, haunted quality, but it is 'Witches And Devils', on which Grimes with his bow plays a central role (Henderson supplies the more orthodox bass-line and is featured alone on 'Holy Holy'), that is the real high-spot, a lowing, pungent wail that hovers between anguish and ecstatic celebration. Howard was a friend from home in Cleveland; like Don Ayler, he is not a virtuosic or even technically secure player, but unlike Don lacks a saving expressiveness as a soloist. The real action is between saxophone and drums and Murray is a towering presence throughout.

(*) Bells / Prophecy ESP 4006 Ayler; Donald Ayler (t); Charles Tyler (as); Gary Peacock, Lewis Worrell (b); Sunny Murray (d). 6/64, 5/65.

Prophecy was Ayler's first session for the ESP label, though it was not released until after Spiritual Unity. It was important in laying down some of the basic language of the saxophonist's career but its release also began the hopeless confusion of Ayler themes and titles. The rule of thumb is: rely on your ears, not the liner-note. Two versions of 'Ghosts' represent the central action of the record. The difference is less in Ayler's playing, which is definitive, but in the role of Murray and Peacock. In the first to be taped, the bassist provides a drone figure which underpins the saxophone's wilder utterances; in the second, his playing is more obviously rhythmic. Bells was the notorious one-sided LP. As a single, hectic performance in three parts, recorded at Town Hall, it still retains its power.

CORE COLLECTION

♛ * Spiritual Unity

ESP Disk 1002 Ayler; Gary Peacock (b); Sunny Murray (d). 7/64.

The poet Ted Joans likened the impact of this trio to hearing someone scream the word 'fuck' in St Patrick's Cathedral. Subjectively, there may be some validity in this, but it makes a nonsense of what was actually going on in this group. The intensity of interaction among the three individuals, their attentiveness to what the others were doing, ruled out any such gesture. Even amid the noise, the 1964 Ayler trio was quintessentially a listening band, locked in a personal struggle which it is possible only to observe, awe-struck, from the side-lines.

(*) At Slug's Get Back 1018 Ayler; Donald Ayler (t); Michael Sampson (vn); Lewis Worrell (b); Ronald Shannon Jackson (d). 5/66.

Recorded on May Day 1966, this is a session of incendiary power and ranks with some of the very best Ayler performances. 'Bells' is a magnificently powerful thing, beginning with a mournful violin figure and then bringing in trumpet – Donald in characteristically raw and expressive form – then bass and saxophone with a significant harmonic shift. 'Truth Is Marching In' has never sounded so close to its origins in 'Battle Hymn Of The Republic' and its anguished intensity marks as significant a subversion of familiar and homely material as Coltrane's 'My Favorite Things'. The other interesting aspect of this set is an early glimpse of Ronald Shannon Jackson.

(*) Lörrach, Paris 1966 hatOLOGY 3500 Ayler; Donald Ayler (t); Michael Sampson (vn); Bill Folwell (b); Beaver Harris (d). 11/66.

More than ever, Ayler sounds like a radical preacher, taking energy from the murmured 'Amen's and 'Praise God's of his fellow players, but basically ignoring them as he creates ever more intense harmonic rainbows across these deceptively childlike themes. 'Bells' and 'Ghosts' (two versions and occasional allusions elsewhere) are both part of the sermon; there is a huge version of 'Truth Is Marching In' and a long medley of 'Spiritual Rebirth'/'Light In Darkness', which freezes the blood before it warms the heart. Sampson's violin is integral to it all, though it's to be doubted whether he understood what this group was about any better than troubled brother Don did. They came and played their parts, leaving it to Albert out front to bring the congregation in. Magnificent.

* Live In Greenwich Village: The Complete Impulse Recordings Impulse! IMP 12732 2 CD Ayler; Donald Ayler (t); George Steele (tb); Michel Sampson (vn); Joel Freedman (clo); William Folwell, Henry Grimes, Alan Silva (b); Beaver Harris, Sunny Murray (d). 3/65–2/67.

Whatever technical and aesthetic shortcomings the Lörrach and Paris live dates may have had (there is a nihilistic, fragmentary quality to the latter), the Village Theater and Village Vanguard sessions are hugely affirmative and satisfyingly complete without losing a jot of Ayler's angry and premonitory force. These are essential post-war jazz recordings, and they include some of Ayler's best playing on both alto ('For John Coltrane') and tenor (the apocalyptic 'Truth Is Marching In'). The second bass, in addition to either violin or cello, actually sharpens the sound considerably, producing a rock-solid foundation for Ayler's raw witness.

This reissue supersedes In Greenwich Village and The Village Concerts without adding very much of significance. There is a single track ('Holy Ghost') from March 1965, originally issued on the Impulse! compilation The New Wave In Jazz. One other track, 'Universal Thoughts', is incomplete, presumably because the tape ran out. However, having these performances together on one set is of value. John Coltrane was present, ailing and tired, when 'Truth Is Marching In' and 'Our Prayer' were recorded at the Village Vanguard. John was to die in the summer of the following year, but his spirit is everywhere here, even though Ayler was firmly in command of his own style and approach. These are Don Ayler's finest moments. Always an approximate technician, but driven by loyalty to his brother, he produces a stream of pure sound which is unique in jazz. Not even Ornette Coleman on brass sounds so alien.

 Love Cry Impulse! GRD 108 Ayler; Donald Ayler (t); Call Cobbs (hpd); Alan Silva (b); Milford Graves (d). 8/67.

By the summer of 1967, Donald's mental health was increasingly unsteady and this was his last appearance on a record with his brother. Not long after this strange and strangely beautiful session, he was hospitalized. If it was difficult to characterize the philosophy of Ayler's great trio, the group that made Spiritual Unity, it is near impossible to define with any precision what this group was about. The unsettling jangle of Call Cobbs's harpsichord and the ferocious desynchronization of Milford Graves's drumming are by this stage the first things you hear. Ayler's wail is almost familiar and insofar as it cleaves to a melodic logic, almost comforting. Albert's forays into the false upper register are increasingly controlled, though.

Love Cry has rarely featured on anyone's list of his best or more controversial works. It is certainly one of the best recorded. The tunes are mostly very short and pungent, though 'Love Cry II' extends over seven minutes. The CD reissue includes two takes each of 'Universal Indians' and 'Zion Hill', but these only tend to emphasize how tight a rein Albert was keeping on songs and his fellow players.

 New Grass Impulse! 000426902 Ayler; Burt Collins, Joe Newman (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Seldon Powell (ts, f); Buddy Lucas (bs); Call Cobbs (p, org, hpd); Bill Folwell (b); Bernard Pretty Purdie (d); Rose Marie McCoy, Mary Maria Parks (v). 9/68.

So controversial and vilified that it only appeared on CD in 2005, this isn't the ghastly sell-out some fans would love you to think. True, there are strong commercial elements, but Albert's sound here – the broad vibrato and honking phrases – isn't so very different from that of the revered Spiritual Unity. Much as Miles Davis started to use funk rhythms and rock beats to re-energize his conception in this same year (why is New Grass never considered alongside Bitches Brew?), Ayler made an apparently radical stylistic switch in order to maintain the integrity of his vision. Albert anticipated the critical backlash; the 'Message From Albert Ayler' incorporated into the opening track lays bare his fears.

Co-written with Mary Parks (Maria), 'New Ghosts' is the obvious back-reference here and the most obvious point of comparison. The R&B element takes a bit of getting used to, but once one learns to hear Albert in a different context, the message seems broadly the same. Likewise on 'Heart Love' and even the rather flabby 'Sun Watcher'. Only 'New Generation' seems like a lapse of taste.

Bert de Coteaux arranged the horns and helped give the session its commercial sheen. He delivered what he was asked for and on its own terms it works absolutely fine.

 Music Is The Healing Force Of The Universe Impulse! 9191 Ayler; Bobby Few (p); Henry Vestine (g); James Folwell, Stafford James (b); Muhammad Ali (d); Mary Maria (v). 8/69.

Like New Grass, this is not quite the unreconstructed R&B album some may have been led to expect. It certainly has some of that quality and the addition of Canned Heat guitarist Henry Vestine on 'Drudgery' underlines the connection. But Music Is The Healing Force also includes some wonderful playing from Albert and some of his most innovative use of sound; the addition of bagpipe chanter and ocarina to 'Masonic Inborn' perhaps pointed the way to a new approach. Impulse! records were, by the standards of their time in jazz, strong on production values and producer Ed Michel gives the sound new layers and a richness of tone that is much more interesting than questions of commercial 'sell-out'.

Even if the album is not demonized, one of the band has been. Mary Parks (here Mary Maria) was Albert's business manager and girlfriend and as such might seem to be a questionable presence on record. But repeated hearings and recent revelations about the last months of Albert's life suggest that she had a natural musicality ('Island Harvest' is hers) and a genuine commitment to the saxophonist's vision. Albert's singing on 'Oh Love Is Life' is initially risible but uses that fact to deliver a real emotional punch, and that is a lesson to be drawn from his music as a whole. This final studio statement touches on all the major themes of Ayler's life: sorrow, loss, guilt and, above all, redemption.

(*) Live On The Riviera ESP Disk Us 4001 Ayler; Steve Tintweiss (b); Allan Blairman (d); Mary Parks (v, ss). 7/70.

(*) Nuits De La Fondation Maeght Water 434 As above, except add Call Cobbs (p). 7/70.

Recorded in the south of France a matter of months before his disappearance and death, these (recorded two days apart) now stand as a final manifestation of one of jazz's most complex and most readily misunderstood geniuses. Given the line-up and the sensibilities of players like Blairman and Tintweiss, this has less of an R&B stamp than Music Is The Healing Force. The title-tune of that album is included as a curtain-piece on the final record and as an opener on Live. There is a further version of 'Truth Is Marching In', but without Donald's bugling lines or a mournful violin the latter lacks bite and real intensity. On piano, Cobbs is a competent but rather ordinary player and he coasts through much of this session. Released in 2005, the later album, for trio with Parks singing and playing some soprano, is a useful addition to the picture but hardly a revelation in itself. It's important not to fetishize final statements since they are only that by unhappy accident, not design. Listening to these unsatisfactory cuts again, cold and without prejudice, it is hard to reconcile them with some of the great statements of previous years, but it is also hard to miss the precarious balance of anger, pain and sheer, uncomplicated joy.

Also, in brief:

(*) New York Eye And Ear Control Calibre 1012. 7/64.

Soundtrack for a now-forgotten short film; the music comes in two undigested blocks, albeit with valuable glimpses of Roswell Rudd (tb) and John Tchicai (as), but Ayler wasn't an abstract player and this overrated set doesn't represent him well.

 The Copenhagen Tapes Ayler 33. 9/64.

A club performance at the Jazzhus Montmartre with a slightly later studio session. Don Cherry (t) plays on the live date. More than usually repetitive material.

 Spirits Rejoice Calibre 1020. 9/65.

Judson Hall was an important venue for new music in New York City. The intensity is extreme and the addition of altoist Charles Tyler alongside the Ayler brothers adds to the stew. Call Cobbs's harpsichord gives an extra frisson.

* The Complete ESP-Disk Recordings ESP-Disk 001. 64–65.
Freshly remastered, but somehow the packaging adds nothing to the impact of the originals (unlike the paradigm-shifting Holy Ghost). No mistaking the power of this music.

* Holy Ghost Revenant 9CD box + bonus disc, book & artefacts. 6/62–7/70.
Probably now all but sold out, this Grail of Ayler studies almost doubled the available discography at a stroke. Titanic, expensive and immaculately presented. Full details in our last edition.

Ab Baars

CLARINET, SOPRANO, TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

An intelligent improviser, who's worked with Marten Aaltena.

(*) 3900 Carol Court /  Sprok Geestgronden 12 / 14 Baars; Wilbert De Joode (b); Martin van Duynhoven (d). 3–6/92; 3–10/94.
After the abstractions of the solo records (see below, 'in brief'; there's a version of 'Krang' here as well), it comes as a mild shock to hear him with an almost conventionally swinging rhythm section on John Lewis's 'Plastic Dreams' on the first trio date. The other pieces, revolving round remote kinds of interplay, are more typical. Baars's solos still tend to grind through curtly defined areas of timbre and phrasing, but there's a sense of communication as well. Sprok is better still, though scarcely ingratiating music.

(*) A Free Step: The Music Of John Carter Geestgronden 20 As above. 1/97–4/98.
One of the figures acknowledged on the second solo album was clarinettist John Carter, one of the long-neglected giants of modern jazz. This fascinating exploration of his oeuvre is among Baars's very best works, not because it draws on Carter's authority, but because it gives the trio something to get their teeth into. A brief 'Shuckin' Corn' is memorable for its staccato violence, while 'Juba Stomp', 'Enter From The East' and 'Night Dance' are all done with respectful seriousness and wit.

(*) Four Data 012 As above, except add Roswell Rudd (tb). 6/98.
Rudd is one of Baars's great heroes and the 'bone man's weird take on Dixieland has an obvious place in this music. A lot of the set is taken up with Rudd's own suite 'The Year Was 1503', which fails to deliver up much internal logic but is quite effective taken item by item. This was a happy collaboration repeated later with another trombonist, Joost Buis.

(*) Party At The Bimhuis Wig 09 As above, except add Mariette Roupe Van Der Voort (as, f, bf, picc); Guus Janssen, Misha Mengelberg (p); Ig Henneman (vla). 1/03.
Celebrating ten years of the trio (they start with a revisit to '3900 Carol Court'), he invites along some guests to join in the fun. And fun it is, with the pianists joining in at different parts and all seven getting together for three tracks where the ensemble has real particularity. Baars takes a cracking solo on Monk's 'Reflections' and there are further dedications, to Carter again, Roswell Rudd and Von Freeman.

 Kinda Dukish Wig 12 As for trio, except add Joost Buis (tb). 6/05.
Baar takes on Ellington, with sundry revisions and deconstructions of 'Jack The Bear', 'Drop Me Off At Harlem' ('Kinda Bear', 'Kinda Harlem') and so on. The wintry blow on 'Solitude', which opens the record, is misleading since most of this is quite easy-going and tuneful, with Buis adding some extra pepper. Here and there it lumbers, though.

Also, in brief:

 Krang / (*) Verderame Geestgronden 2 / 17. 12/87–6/89.
He makes heavy weather of his solo appearances. A couple of fine tracks on baritone and tenor redeem the first, and a handful of dedications on the second offer a certain stylistic map-referencing, but mostly it's cartoonish.

 Hef Atavistic 130. 02.
Duos with Terrie Ex (g) of rock anarchists The Ex. Zany and delightful.

Harry Babasin (1921–88)

BASS, CELLO

A Texan, 'The Bear' was one of the first to play jazz on the cello. His recording career as leader lasted just three years.

 And The Jazz Pickers VSOP 39 Babasin; Terry Gibbs (vib); Dempsey Wright (g); Ben Tucker (b); Bill Douglas (d). 7/57.
By no means a major figure, Babasin did turn in some exceptionally good and entertaining jazz. His cello sound is bright, vocalized and expressively intense, very different to similar work on the same instrument by Oscar Pettiford or Ron Carter. The originals are cleverly interspersed with chestnuts, all of them delivered rather briefly, but Gibbs makes a difference to the sound: pure sunshine.

Gérard Badini (born 1931)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, PIANO

'Mr Swing' is a Parisian with a big, bruising sound in the Lockjaw Davis mould. After health problems, he led various small groups and the (Super) Swing Machine big band from the piano.

(*) Jazz In Paris: The Swing Machine Black & Blue 974 Badini; Xavier Chambon, Cootie Williams, Cat Anderson (t); Booty Wood (tb); Marc Hemmeler, Raymond Fol (p); Jack Sewing, Michel Gaudry (b); Michel Denis, Bobby Durham, Sam Woodyard (d). 12/73–6/77.

 A Night At The Popcorn: Jazz In Paris Black & Blue BB966 Badini; Milt Buckner (p); Jimmy Woode (b); Sam Woodyard, Panama Francis (d). 3/75.
The first disc cobbles together four sessions, including quartet material formerly available in Universal's 'Jazz In Paris' series. It's a tribute to the tenorist that he stands even taller than the distinguished Ellingtonians on these records, turning in overheated solos on the fast pieces and wrangling through a lot of vibrato-laden entreaties on the ballads. The Popcorn session documents two rowdy sets from a boisterous night in Geneva. The Americans seem thrilled to be in each other's company, joshing their way through the music while Badini roars out the blues. Francis sits in on one tune, possibly while Woodyard refreshed himself at the bar. It sounds like that kind of a night.

Badland

ENSEMBLE

Highly original improvising group, who mix power and subtlety.

 Badland Bruce's Fingers BF 14 Simon Rose (ss, as); Simon H. Fell (b); Mark Sanders (d). 95.
 Axis Of Cavity / (*) The Society Of The Spectacle Bruce's Fingers 40 / Emanem As above, except omit Sanders; add Steve Noble (d). 2/99; 4/03.
Badland throw up some interesting fresh variations on the old British argument about 'free jazz' versus 'free music'. This trio seems to belong closer to the former camp. The first CD has material by Ornette and Duke alongside the collectively improvised things, and it's interesting to hear Fell, one of the sharpest minds in the music, and Sanders creating a subtle pulse underneath Rose's wonderfully bleached and freeze-dried saxophone sound. Fine as Sanders is, he's outgunned by Noble on the next two, which develop the group language more fully. The Situationist title of the Emanem set shouldn't unduly trouble newcomers, but if this is what is meant by détournement of jazz language, then let's have lots more of it. Sharply recorded and very intense music.

The Bad Plus

GROUP

A high-profile project which grew out of various collaborations between the members.

* The Bad Plus Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 107 Ethan Iverson (p); Reid Anderson (b); David King (d). 12/00.
(*) These Are The Vistas / * Give Columbia 510666 / 515307 As above. 10/02; 10/03.
 Suspicious Activity? Columbia 94740 As above. 5/05.
 Prog Heads Up 3125 As above. 07.
The first of these was issued under Iverson's name, but the group name stuck and turned into hot property, signing to Columbia in 2002. You don't expect the stately trinity of piano/bass/drums to qualify as a power trio but that's what happens. On the debut, Iverson, Anderson and 'certifiable Midwestern drum star' King got at a group of originals, one standard ('Blue Moon') and two pop tunes. Abba's 'Knowing Me, Knowing You' is a textbook example of the jazz transformation of an uneventful melody, and Nirvana's 'Smells Like Teen Spirit' (which the others forced Iverson to learn!) is a glorious, helter-skelter set-piece, the tune stirred and thickened by the pianist's voicings while King swings them off the stand. Of the originals, 'Labyrinth' is severely beautiful, '1972 Bronze Medalist' peculiarly funky.

For sheer freshness the debut probably remains our favourite, but produced by Tchad Blake the group gained presence in the studio and the Columbia albums are exhilarating, funny, surprising. There are some remakes of tunes from the debut on These Are The Vistas. The Aphex Twin's 'Film' is beautiful and Blondie's 'Heart Of Glass' is destruction. Blake gives all three equal prominence, and while some have complained that the drums are too loud and too rock, the charge is misplaced. If anything, Anderson is louder.

Although they do an apocalyptic 'Iron Man' (Black Sabbath, not Eric Dolphy) to close Give, the originals are getting more prominence and are played with fierce conviction. The persistent suggestion that BP purvey jazz for Neanderthals is absurdly wide of the mark. These are required listening.

We were always divided on the merits of Suspicious Activity?; one of us loved the assault on Vangelis's '(Theme from) Chariots of Fire', the other didn't. Otherwise, it's mostly Bad Plus business as usual, the familiar assault on the shape and sound of the piano trio and some of its literature. With that in mind, and bearing in mind the provocative promise of the title, Prog is a disappointment. What was once fresh is now self-conscious, with tunes by Bowie, Bacharach, Tears For Fears and Rush thrown together without much logic. King's '1980 World Champion' comes last, with the promise that the group has better ideas in store.

Benny Bailey (1925–2005)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He won his spurs with Jay McShann, Dizzy Gillespie and Lionel Hampton in turn, staying with Hamp for five years. His bright, hard-edged tone softens markedly in small-group settings, but without losing its burnish. Largely based in Europe in later years.

 Big Brass Candid CCD 79011 Bailey; Julius Watkins (hn); Phil Woods (as, bcl); Les Spann (f, g); Tommy Flanagan (p); Buddy Catlett (b); Art Taylor (d). 11/60.
(*) Grand Slam Storyville STCD 8271 Bailey; Charlie Rouse (ts); Richard Wyands (p); Sam Jones (b); Billy Hart (d). 10/78.
Later known as trumpet with the Clarke–Boland band and for his playing on Eddie Harris's and Les McCann's Swiss Movement, Bailey is an impressive and entertaining soloist, with a number of distinguishing marks on his musical passport, notably his octave plummets and enigmatic lines that seem to have neither harmonic nor melodic significance, just a strangely specific logic of their own. His bebop background is still evident on Big Brass. The themes have begun to stretch out, though, into long, quasi-modal strings that contain any number of potential resolutions. Flanagan is an ideal accompanist. Woods and Rouse could hardly be more different, but Bailey responds magnanimously to the challenge of each. In fact, the Storyville set (originally on Jazzcraft) is one his best. The inclusion of three tunes by arranger Fritz Pauer is over the top but Benny's originals – 'Theloniousassault' and 'Who's Bossa Now?' – cover much of his range, from fiery bop to gentle swing. He also knows his jazz trumpet history, quoting frequently throughout this excellent disc.

Buster Bailey (1902–67)

CLARINET

Studied classical music before joining Fletcher Henderson in 1924. He stayed for more than a decade. Played with Henry Allen in the '50s and ended his career with his Henderson colleague Louis Armstrong's All-Stars.

(*) Buster Bailey 1925–1940 Classics 904 Bailey; Henry 'Red' Allen, Charlie Shavers, Frankie Newton (t); J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Pete Brown, Benny Carter, Russell Procope (as); Clarence Todd, Charlie Beal, Don Frye, Billy Kyle (p); Danny Barker, Jimmy McLin (g); Buddy Christian (bj); Elmer James, Johnny Williams, John Kirby (b); Walter Johnson, O'Neil Spencer, Zutty Singleton (d); Jerry Kruger, Judy Ellington (v). 5/25–6/40.
Bailey's many recordings with Henderson are his best legacy. These are a disappointing lot. His single coupling for Banner in 1925, with Todd and the vigorous Christian, is rather good, but it's dubbed from a very rough 78 and 'Squeeze Me' has some outrageous artificial echo. A 1934 session with Allen, Higginbotham and Carter is good but restrained, while most of the rest are drearily bouncy light music.

Craig Bailey (born 1960)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE

Raised in Cincinnati and educated in Miami, he served a long apprenticeship in big bands, with everyone from Charli Persip and Slide Hampton to Ray Charles and has since worked with Bobby Watson, Tom Harrell and Nancy Banks.

* A New Journey Candid CCD 79725 Bailey; Patrick Rickman (t); Billy Childs (p); Mark Feldman (vn); Bruce Cox, Kenny Washington (d). 3 & 4/95.

 Brooklyn Evidence ECD222212 Bailey; Derrick Gardner (t, flhn); Dupor Georges (tb); Kelvin Sholar (p); Olivier Gatto, Eric Lemon, Rufus Reid (b); Vincent Ector (d). 2/00.

Bailey was 35 before he made his debut as a leader. If only others followed his lead. A New Journey is a small masterpiece, beautifully paced and structured, its backward-looking side affectionately tempered with contemporary references like the hip-hop rhythm that cuts across one of the later tracks. There is a superb re-working of Neal Hefti's 'Li'l Darling' and a superb version of 'Laura', where Bailey (on flute) duets with Feldman.

Bailey's tone is bright and clear, with an ironclad sense of harmonic structure and an ability (as on a brilliant trio 'Cherokee' for alto, trumpet and drums) to give a warhorse tune a fresh feel.

Brooklyn is a much more ambitious project, reminiscent in many respects of erstwhile boss Bobby Watson's mid-size projects where the emphasis is on a full ensemble sound which retains individual textures as much as possible. Bailey has a rare touch with this. No hint of filler or wasted gesture on any of these cuts. Bailey's soloing is inevitably less prominent, but he is still strongly featured. 'Salute To Duke' suggests that Hodges may, after all, be his biggest single influence. Some have found him in thrall to the Messengers and point to Benny Golson's 'Along Came Betty' by way of confirmation. Bailey, though, seems to be working his own path. It's still a thin discography.

Dave Bailey (born 1926)

DRUMS

Studied percussion after leaving the USAF but returned to flying and teaching at the end of the '60s, having helped popularize bossa nova in America. Worked with Johnny Hodges, Charles Mingus, Gerry Mulligan and others.

 The Complete One And Two Feet In The Gutter Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD Bailey; Bill Hardman (t); Clark Terry (t, flhn); Curtis Fuller (tb); Junior Cook, Frank Haynes (ts); Billy Gardner, Horace Parlan (p); Grant Green (g); Peck Morrison, Ben Tucker (b). 7/60, 10/61.

Shrewd of Lone Hill to pick up these small gems, which deserve wider celebrity. Subtitled 'A Treasury Of Soul', the first date (possibly still available separately on Koch) is a vivid live date in which everyone plays for everyone else but still manages to get some serious solo time. The title-piece is Terry's, but he saves his best for a stunning flugelhorn solo on Monk's 'Well, You Needn't', which in turn spurs Cook on to his best solo on record. Parlan has a few nice choruses that mess with the original line, in a way that makes you suspect he just played his way out of a mess. They finish with 'Sandu', more than 20 minutes of it. Admirers of Fuller won't find him in his best form, though he does nothing amiss. Two Feet In The Gutter followed in 1961 after a modest success with the first record. It has the air of a follow-up and with an inferior group, though again they play well for the leader and turn in a terrific read of Harold Vick's 'Our Miss Brooks'.

Derek Bailey (1930–2005)

GUITAR

A figure of immeasurable importance in contemporary music, the Yorkshireman was a key figure in the development of British free jazz, performing solo and in groups like Joseph Holbrooke, Iskra 1903 and the Spontaneous Music Ensemble; other key associations were with drummer Tony Oxley and saxophonist Evan Parker, with whom he founded Incus records. Bailey was also for many years ringmaster of the annual Company week of free improvisation.

 Fairly Early With Postscripts Emanem 4027 Bailey; Anthony Braxton (reeds, f); Kent Carter (b); John Stevens (d). 7/71–10/98.

 Solo Guitar: Volume 1 Incus CD10 Bailey (g, syn solo). 2/71.

 Outcome Potlatch P299 Bailey; Steve Lacy (ss). 73.

(*) Dynamics Of The Impromptu Entrophy ESR004 Bailey; Trevor Watts (ss); John Stevens (d, bugle). 12/73–1/74.

* Incus Taps: Solo Guitar 101–104 Organ Of Corti 10 Bailey (g solo). 73.

 Improvisation Ampersand Ampere 2 Bailey (solo). 75.

* Domestic & Public Pieces Emanem 4001 As above. 75–77.

Bailey's sometimes forbidding but always challenging music illuminates certain important differences between European and American improvisers. Perhaps the best concrete illustration of the difference can be found in Bailey's duo performances with the multi-instrumentalist Anthony Braxton. Despite considerable mutual admiration, these confirm the old saw about Britons and Americans being divided by a common language. Braxton's formulations are still conditioned by the deep structures of jazz, Bailey's according to a mysterious meta-language by which a performance offers few guidelines as to its presumed origins and underlying processes.

Like a good many European improvisers, Bailey underwent an accelerated and virtually seamless transition from jazz to free jazz to free music. Since 1976 (albeit with important exceptions) his activities have centred on solo and duo work. His playing resists exact description and evaluation. Eschewing special effects (apart from a swell pedal on his amplified performances and a one-off use of VCS3 synthesizer on Solo Guitar: Volume 1), he plays intensely and abstractly, without obvious rhythmic or harmonic armatures, yet always recognizably himself. The early solo records are still the best place to start, though the release of Fairly Early offers a glimpse of Derek playing solo and with other musicians who share his philosophy. It also offers a rare insight into his political view, as he discusses current affairs to a free-form accompaniment in a series of 'cassette letters' to label-owner Martin Davidson. The CD has the additional advantage of offering material from a nearly 30-year span, valuable if you want a quick introduction.

In the most curious way, Solo Guitar now sounds quite old-fashioned – not anachronistic, but redolent of an earlier, more innocent phase in the free movement when the moment was everything. This is still the spirit that governs Domestic & Public Pieces, which, as the title suggests, brings performance material together with what can't be described as 'rehearsal' in this context but is closer to a process of private musing, diary-keeping, monologue. Some of these acoustic guitar pieces have spoken commentaries, which are, as ever, wry if mostly unenlightening. The amplified concert pieces are more familiar in nature but no less appealing to the Bailey enthusiast. As ever, Martin Davidson has done a meticulous job.

The 1973 duos with Lacy aren't quite the dialogue of the deaf his original encounter with Braxton sometimes seems, but there are similar problems. Lacy is still very wedded to melody, albeit of the most heterodox sort, and Bailey at this stage is so averse to any hint of structure that they don't really meet in the middle. The work with another soprano saxophonist, Trevor Watts, and with drummer John Stevens was recorded at the legendary Little Theatre Club in London. This material is at the root of much of what subsequently happened in British improvisation, so it has a historical importance beyond its slightly ramshackle aesthetic. Even Bailey doesn't sound as if he's quite doing it for real in places. One of Bailey's first attempts to sell his music commercially was in boxes of quarter-inch tape on three-inch reels. Some of these pieces are now reissued as Incus Taps (sic), documenting four fantastically aggressive and committed episodes of improvisation. They make for tough listening, but they're an essential part of the story.

(*) The London Concert Psi 05.01 Bailey; Evan Parker (ss, ts). 75.

Recorded at the Wigmore Hall, a classical venue whose woody acoustic lends itself surprisingly well to this kind of music. Parker and Bailey were to fall out a decade after this and in 1987 Parker resigned as director of Incus and took with him certain of his own tapes. This is the first CD issue of this material, which now appears complete, with an extra 31 minutes of fine music. There are solo spots, which are pretty generic, but it is in the interplay between two of the defining figures of British improvisation that the real value of the set lies. At one point, Bailey plays a strange 19-string guitar which has the oddest timbre imaginable. For the most part, though, he plays within his usual algorithms, using swells and no other sound-changing devices, producing strange prisms and crystals of guitar sound that seem to change with point of view. From the perspective of 30 years, this still seems fresh and inventive, for all its standing as a memorial to lost friendship.

 Tristan (Duo) Incus CD 53 Bailey; Tristan Honsinger (clo, v). 10/75, 2/76.

Bailey met the cellist at Massy near Paris in 1975 and immediately asked him to join in on the concert. The first half-dozen tracks are taken from that occasion. Honsinger's yelps and shouts are a form of deranged scat singing; the crowd seem uneasy how to respond, but they get used to it and as the dynamics gradually build they respond more warmly to the astonishing interplay of two very different stringed instruments. The remainder were originally released on Incus as Duo and are included here without sweetening or post-production of any sort. Derek uses his regular electric and his (approximately) 19-string guitar, as well as a gizmo called the Waiswich crackle box on 'The Shadow'.

 New Sights, Old Sounds Incus 48/49 Bailey (g solo). 78.

This reissue usefully torpedoes any notion that before the '90s Bailey was not interested in playing anything that had identifiable form or a rhythmic groove. On the very long 'Live In Kavalinka', he plays what sounds like flamenco and elsewhere there are outbreaks of blues and Spirits Of Rhythm-era swing. For the most part, though, what one hears is a Westerner modifying his language to reach out to his Japanese hosts and in the process influencing a whole generation of Japanese guitarists and free players, who regard Bailey as a demigod. A valuable double set of solo work, long unavailable.

 Cyro Incus CD01 Bailey; Cyro Baptista (perc). 86.
 1972 / (*) Han Cortical CD14 / Incus CD02 Bailey; Han Bennink (perc). 72; 3/86.

Bailey enjoyed working with percussionists, and a quick comparison of his recordings with the elegant Baptista and the forceful and witty Bennink demonstrates how thoughtfully contextualized all his work is. Baptista seems content to gloss and embellish Derek's ideas rather than take a proactive stance. Bennink drives the music along not in a rhythmic groove but by the sheer force and intensity of his sound. He can sound like one of the great swing drummers of the '30s, or like a Jean Tinguely sculpture, deconstructing itself. It is a relationship that has lasted many years and, apart from Tony Oxley, no other musician has ever shown a closer appreciation of what Bailey is about.

 Dynamics Of The Impromptu Entropy 4 Bailey; Trevor Watts (ss, as); John Stevens (d, c). N.D.

Though the Spontaneous Music Ensemble was co-led by John Stevens and Trevor Watts, Bailey was a core member and the perfect embodiment of the group's stance on radical abstraction. These self-titled improvisations are cast in a language which will be immediately familiar to anyone who came up with the British improvised scene in the early '70s. Once heard, Watts's plangent alto and Stevens's rushing, almost swing-inspired percussion are unforgettable, and Bailey seems to hold the balance of forces here. More than 70 minutes of music, played with absolute concentration and balance.

(*) Arch Duo Rastascan 45 Bailey; Evan Parker (ss, ts). 82.

A recent 'archive' release from old associates/antagonists who still found new means of communication each time they met. Parker utilizes ever-higher harmonics and extremes of tone; Bailey's characteristic idiom is still a furious hardscrabble. Together, they create a unique language, not so much unintelligible to others as beyond simple decipherment.

* Figuring Incus CD05 Bailey; Barre Phillips (b). 5/87–9/88.

It has been suggested that Bailey was an essentially unsympathetic collaborator, unwilling to compromise his driven and focused approach by having to respond to what anyone else was doing. With Phillips, interestingly, he seems to be doing just that, throwing back jagged and sometimes almost hostile reshapings of the bassist's complex and volatile ideas. This is perhaps the most accessible of the duo records and is certainly of the highest musical standard.

* Drop Me Off At 96th Scatter 02 Bailey (g solo). 5/86.
(*) Lace Emanem 4013 Bailey (g solo). 12/89.
(*) Solo Guitar: Volume 2 Incus CD11 As above. 6/91.

It's still Bailey's solo performances that afford the clearest impression of his pitchless, metreless playing, and these examples are among the best of their kind. Twenty years on from the first Solo Guitar, the basic premisses seem not to have changed one iota, though by this time in his career Bailey was opening up to all sorts of unexpected influences and associations. The sound is less dry, but that may simply be because recording technology has moved on a step.

Drop Me Off, issued by the Glasgow-based Scatter label, is a strong statement, and one of the toughest sets Bailey had released for many years, unexpectedly so in some respects. Though it isn't a particularly sophisticated recording, it picks up a lot of low-level detail and sounds true to the dynamics of live performance. Lace was recorded in Los Angeles (hence the acrostic title) and consists of just two long pieces and a short encore, 'Which Bit Would You Like Again?' – a characteristic Bailey comment to the audience. Bailey had worked in LA a few times before and was regarded there as something of a visiting celebrity. Certainly, this concert seems to have been a prodigal homecoming, and the playing is as warm and committed as ever, with Bailey's pre-war Epiphone Triumph sounding full-voiced and hugely atmospheric.

(*) Village Life Incus CD09 Bailey; Thebe Lipere (perc, v); Louis Moholo (d, perc, v). 9/91.

As ever, Bailey is inspired and inspirational in the company of inventive percussionists, here two African modernists with very different musical styles. The young Lipere is more obviously decorative and takes what is basically an associate's role, leaving the main dialogue between Bailey, who rips and tugs at his strings with delightful abandon, and the astonishing Moholo. The latter is much closer to Bailey's aesthetic than initially appears. An Afro-modernist, he moves freely between the most joyously groove-driven of township sounds to the most outside evasion of pulse. An exhilarating album.

(*) Playing Incus CD14 Bailey; John Stevens (d, mini-t). 8/92.

Despite Bailey's long association with Stevens, there was almost no duo material featuring the two together until Playing was recorded. Concentrated and flowing, it offers an ideal opportunity, as Steve Beresford points out in his liner-note, to examine at close quarters how this music works. Beresford's analogy to the 'butterfly effect', in which tiny events have disproportionately significant outcomes at considerable physical or temporal distances, is completely apt.

 Wireforks Shanachie 5011 Bailey; Henry Kaiser (g). 95.

(*) Banter Oo Discs 20 Bailey; Gregg Bendian (perc). 95.

(*) Harras Avant AVAN 056 Bailey; John Zorn (as); William Parker (b). 95.

* The Last Wave DIW 903 Bailey; Bill Laswell (b); Tony Williams (d). 4/95.

Typically, Bailey celebrated his 65th birthday with a fresh challenge rather than a comfortable downshift. The duets with Kaiser and Bendian are interesting in the context of our earlier comments about the difficulties he has sometimes had squaring his radical conception with the more groove-based work of Americans. With neither of these players does he have any problem, nor with the self-aware but cartoonish post-bop of Zorn on the apparently big-selling Harras CD. Of the others, Bendian is a fantastically open-minded musician whose interests embrace straight composition, folk forms, free jazz and more straight-ahead, pulse-driven things, while Kaiser is an eccentric (in the strict sense) who is always able to put his instincts out on the line and take chances. On all three of these discs it is the absolute concentration of Bailey's playing that compels attention.

The real shocker is The Last Wave, which can be described as a post-modern revenant of Williams's notorious Lifetime by a group officially known as Arcana. One simply isn't used to hearing Derek Bailey in a context like this. It is both exhilarating and rather unsettling, like seeing a favourite uncle give up chitting seed potatoes and debudding chrysanthemums in order to take up ju-jitsu.

* Soho Suites Incus CD CD 26/27 2CD Bailey; Tony Oxley (d, perc). 2/77–9/95.

Bailey's contribution to Tony Oxley's '60s work was definitive: clangorous guitar chords which echoed the amplified strings and metal percussion the drummer added to his kit in those days. Latter-day Oxley is still utterly unmistakable, and these extraordinary sides roll back the years. Bailey always sounds relaxed, almost conversational in the company of his old friend, and these two discs seem to pass by in moments, when in fact they are among the most substantial performances from either man in recent years. The sound could be better, but the quality of playing and the sense of mutual involvement are beguiling enough to overcome that.

(*) Takes Fakes And Dead She Dances Incus 31 Bailey (g, v solo). 9/95–5/97.

A mixture of studio improvisations and a quite extraordinary concert performance of Bailey accompanying his own recitation of Peter Riley's poem 'Dead She Dances', a bleak work of verse that might have come from one of the neglected corners of a Paul Haines opera. Derek manipulates what might become melodic figures into dark, mutant shapes, spattering atonal sound all over the room.

 Saisoro Tzadik 7205 Bailey; Masuda Ryuishi (b); Yoshida Tatsuya (d). 95.

(*) Tohjinbo Paratactile PLE 1101 As above, except omit Ryuishi; add Sasaki Hisashi (b). 4/97.

After Derek And The Dominoes, this is Derek And The Ruins, further evidence of Bailey's fruitful association with Japanese performers. The surprise is how much of the music recalls the free jazz of the '60s, and again how completely at ease Bailey sounds, without having to alter his usual attack and trajectory. Tatsuya is the key element, a bright, lateral-thinking percussionist whose stop–start playing and use of vocals irresistibly recall Ken Hyder. The earlier album, which apparently represented the Ruins' first attempt at live improvisation in the studio, has a freshness and candour that doesn't carry over into the second, which seems by contrast rather deliberate and mannered. Item by item, it's difficult to be greatly enthused by Tohjinbo but, like most of Bailey's projects with young Japanese rockers, it has a certain cumulative impact.

(*) Guitar, Drums 'N' Bass Avant AVAN 060 Bailey; DJ Ninj (d prog). 96.

Guitar, Drums 'N' Bass became one of the most talked-about records of recent years, and further proof of Bailey's extraordinary adaptability and willingness to experiment with new genres. As so often before, though, what one hears isn't a synthesis so much as an intriguing conjunction of almost entirely unconnected elements. Bailey certainly doesn't accommodate himself to drum'n'bass but simply carries on doing his own thing against a sequence of backgrounds which become ever less relevant to his spasmodic and abrasive discourse as the record proceeds. By the end, the exercise seems almost entirely played out, and many listeners have reported rapidly diminishing returns. We're inclined to think better of it than that, but lengthening retrospect suggests this may soon seem like an amusing sidebar rather than the revelatory change of direction that was hailed on first release.

 Close To The Kitchen: London Guitar Duos August 96 Blue Chopsticks 6 Bailey; Noël Akchoté (g). 8/96.

A studio recording, this was originally issued on a French label before being taken up by the small Chicago imprint. Whatever the provenance, it is a fine performance by Bailey and Akchoté, though in terms of existing track record it must count as a more significant addition to Akchoté's discography than to Bailey's, which is – as you are seeing – enormous. Both men play electric, Bailey in his usual manner, the Frenchman in a fiery hardscrabble that occasionally calls for some preparation of the guitar strings. On one number, 'Toi Et Moi', the guitars are heard unamplified.

* The Sign Of Four Knitting Factory KFW 197 3CD Bailey; Pat Metheny (g); Gregg Bendian, Paul Wertico (perc). 12/96.

Metheny bravely threw himself into the roughest, toughest playing situations. This specially priced three-CD set was recorded live and in studio during Bailey's pre-Christmas '96 visit to New York. Apart from the short studio track, 'The Rule Of Three', on which Wertico bows out, all the material is for twinned guitars and percussion, with Bailey and Wertico sharing the right channel, Metheny and Bendian the left. Most of the material is for amplified instruments, though both guitarists play acoustically on 'The Rule Of Three', which features Pat's sitar-guitar. The whole of the first disc is taken up with the live 'A Study In Scarlet', which sounds like an edited live performance. The Sherlock Holmes titling doesn't seem to have any particular significance, for the music is as resolutely abstract as ever. Bendian plays wonderfully, conjuring a huge range of sound from his arco disc and other percussion, often vying with the guitarists for the foreground.

* No Waiting Potlatch P 198 Bailey; Joëlle Léandre (b). 5/97.

In anthropology, a potlatch is an extreme form of conspicuous consumption, a gift-giving splurge intended to show how generously funded the giver is. That's almost the opposite of what is going on in these quiet, grave interchanges. Léandre has, of course, worked with Bailey before, most obviously under the aegis of his Company project. Like Barre Phillips, she is one of the few players with whom he seems prepared to exchange ideas and challenges, rather than galloping along on his own course. There are moments on the second and third improvisations (all of which were recorded at Les Instants Chavires), when he almost seems to be accompanying her. Léandre's low, sonorous line is reminiscent of the jazz bass of people like Scott LaFaro, Eddie Gomez and Marc Johnson, and here and there Bailey willy-nilly strays into quasi-harmonic territory that wouldn't have startled Bill Evans had he still been around. More than ever, we are convinced that the guitarist absorbs historical influences without even being aware of it. On this occasion, the results are absolutely fascinating.

* Trio Playing Incus CD 28 Bailey; John Butcher (ts, ss); Oren Marshall (tba). 97.

With the exception of 'I'd Love A Key', which is almost a quarter of an hour in length, these are all relatively short pieces, seven expansive and almost jazz-like trios that recall nothing more than Jimmy Giuffre's early groups with Paul Bley and Steve Swallow; though the idiom is very different, there is the same lightness of touch and something of Giuffre's folksy abstraction. Marshall has established himself as a considerable improviser on an improbable instrument, and Butcher is now one of the most effective free players in Europe: exact, unfussy and full of ideas.

 Play Backs Bingo 4 Bailey; Henry Kaiser, Jim O'Rourke (g); Bundy K. Brown, John French, Sasha Frere-Jones, John Herndon, Darryl Moore, John Oswald, Casey Rice, Ko Thein, Tied and Tickled Trio (various). 98.

(*) Viper /  Flying Dragons Avant AVAN 50 / Incus 51 Bailey; Min Xiao-Fen (pipa). 98; 99.

More explorations of sound, in the company of more recent collaborators. The guitar/pipa duets on Viper are as close as it will ever get to Derek Bailey Lite, an oddly unsatisfying experience and somewhat grating over the span of a whole CD. The live cuts from New York on Flying Dragons are better but still not essential Bailey material. The associations on Play Backs are more various, but hard to pin down verbally. We've found it to be one of his oddest records of recent years, without being able to describe its elusive essence.

 Departures Volatile VCD002 Bailey; Vadim Budman (g, c, reed c); Ron de Jong (d, perc). 5/98.

Bailey in London in company with the Canadian duo Vertrek Ensemble, whose previous release, Another Idea Of North, was one of the freshest free-improvising records of the late '90s. Most of the titles here come from American poet Wallace Stevens, who is an ideal inspiration for improvisers, given his belief that the imagination can transform everything. De Jong is a wonderfully playful percussionist who resembles Han Bennink more than any other familiar name, but still has his own approach and idiom. Budman is obviously influenced by Bailey's free-form approach but is more given to electronic manipulation of his sound. The opening 'A Moving Part Of A Motion, A Discovery' is a guitar/percussion duet. The following piece, 'More Nights, More Days, More Clouds, More Worlds', is for guitar and cornet, a choice of horn that will inevitably conjure up memories of the late SME founder John Stevens's bugle passages. Derek's acoustic guitar almost plays chordal accompaniment to Budman's muted 'solo', further sign of Bailey's willingness to work closer to a jazz aesthetic in recent years. The trio 'Waving Adieu, Adieu, Adieu' is perhaps the least effective thing on the set, but there are wonderful things on the solo-driven 'Stockwell Suite'. A remarkable record all round, beautifully recorded by Tony (Hrycek-)Robinson, who seems to be the guitarist's engineer of choice.

* LOCationAL Incus CD37 Bailey; Alex Ward (cl). 10/98, 1/99.

Ward's vocalized lines have a plaintive immediacy that comes across with great power on the opening studio cut. It finds him improvising freely over sustained drones and feedback-like tones from Bailey, who seems increasingly interested in exploring static, almost monumental shapes in contrast to his usual skittering hyperactivity. Ward's control in overblowing is as impressive as Bailey's command of electronic signals. At the start of 'Studio 2', he moves to a softer chalumeau register while Derek examines a koto-like voice interspersed with jagged single notes. There is one more studio track, two 'domestic' pieces recorded in 'rehearsal' and a long live piece which despite a very shaky recording, distant and echoey, confirms what a close working relationship exists between these players. Recommended.

 Post Improvisation, Volume 2: Air Mail Special Incus 35 Bailey; Han Bennink (d). 99.

Needless to say, they don't do a swinging cover of 'Air Mail Special'. The idea was ridiculously simple. In default of a face-to-face encounter, the two old friends would post one another taped performances, over which the relevant improvisation would then be dubbed. This is the closest to 'post'-production that a Bailey project has got. Only seasoned listeners will notice anything different and even then they won't be sure. Whether the overdubs were made 'live' (i.e. at first hearing) or whether there was a sneak audition beforehand we'll never know, but there is certainly no sign of second-guessing anywhere here. Derek is brisk and to the point on most of the tracks, and it's Han who seems the more expansive and ebullient, much as you might expect. More than a gimmick, this one-off seems a perfectly logical extension of Bailey's lifelong improvisational networking. Volume 1 has been credited to the drummer, since he starts it off.

 Ore Arrival 01 Bailey; Eddie Prévost (d). 3/00.
Two of the Desert Fathers of British improvisation, heard together in a rare but never rarefied collaboration, released in Canada. All of the tracks are named after metallic elements, and there is an elemental condensation of language on the shorter pieces. The opening 'Bismuth' is there to facilitate an X-ray of the duo's language. It's slightly too long and almost discursive, but it fires Derek and Eddie into some of the most remarkable playing of both their careers. The drummer is a master of implied rhythm; he is also capable of playing with extraordinary delicacy, and in this department at least he can on his day make Max Roach sound like Ringo Starr. Derek is almost filigreed in places, leaving more space between his notes than usual and allowing the decays to do more work than the attacks. On 'Ruthenium' he plays acoustic, and one wouldn't have been astonished to hear him break into song, some raspy old tale of northern mills and canals.

 Duos London 2001 Incus CD 51 Bailey; Alan Wilkinson (bs, v); Julian Kytaasy (f, bandura); Roger Turner (perc). 3 & 10/01.
These were recorded at different times and locations, which explains a variation in acoustic as well as improvising dynamic. Bailey knows both Wilkinson (perpetually underrated) and Turner very well indeed and there is a kind of elided understanding to some of the playing with both of them. The passages with the saxophonist are heavy and almost aggressive in places but also surprisingly delicate. Bailey loves working with percussionists and his duos with Turner are brilliant, clever and ironic but never arch. The work with the flautist is too similar to his duets with pipa-player Min Xiao-Fen, which has always been one of our least favourite Derek Bailey projects.

 Ballads / * Standards Tzadik 7007 / 7620 Bailey (g solo). 1 & 3/02.
The idea of Derek Bailey playing standards would once have seemed absurd. Indeed, we've often mentioned it in an ironic context. Bailey's language doesn't come off a blank page but exists in the presence of a vast reservoir of blues, swing, bop, free and, yes, ballads. These projects were suggested by Tzadik executive producer John Zorn, and they're quite wonderful. Bailey approaches these 12 themes (two versions each of 'Gone With The Wind' and 'Rockin' Chair') with an awkward tenderness, hinting at the melody rather than stating it and certainly not troubling himself over-much with the changes, though it's clear from 'Body And Soul' that he knows them inside out. On the Standards set, he does things like 'When Your Liver Has Gone' and keeps even further away from familiar melody than with the ballads, but the skeleton of song is there. The delicacy of his playing is astonishing, and there is something profoundly moving about the whole set, almost like hearing Samuel Beckett sit down in a bar snug to sing old Irish songs..

 Limescale Incus CD 56 Bailey; Alex Ward (cl); Tony Bevan (bsx); T. H. F. Drenching (Dictaphone); Sonic Pleasure (amp bricks). 02.
It's no longer any surprise, after Ballads and the drum'n'bass projects, to hear Derek Bailey playing something like conventional jazz guitar, and there are a couple of moments here, notably on the short closing track, 'Titles By Drenching', when he might again be the bastard son of Teddy Bunn and the Spirits Of Rhythm. Halfway into the track, he lays down a row of big chunky chords, utterly different from his usual triple-light acoustic work. For the most part, though, his playing is as unfettered and unconstrained as we've come to expect of him, though it's interesting that at some point in all six improvisations someone picks up what sounds momentarily like a rhythm line. It's usually brief, but it does act as a point of focus for the piece, particularly on subsequent hearings.

As often as not, it's Tony Bevan's bass saxophone that provides it, sounding not unlike a brass bass in a New Orleans band. Then, within a breath's length, he's lowing like a steer again. It's a wonderful sound, resolutely old-fashioned and a perfect foil to Alex Ward's wheedling clarinet, sometimes a bit lost in the recording, but packed with musical intelligence. His work on 'Charity Singles Ball' and 'French Archive' is stunning.

The two remaining participants are T. H. F. Drenching and Sonic Pleasure, credited with Dictaphone and 'bricks' respectively. Because there is no clear aural expectation for either of these, their contributions are harder to assess. Which is probably how it should be, because this is a genuine collective.

(*) To Play: The Blemish Sessions Samadhisound 008 Bailey (g solo). 2/03.
Pop vocalist David Sylvian had invited Bailey to contribute guitar tracks to his album Blemish. The guitarist went into the studio alone to record these remarkable calligraphies, of which three were eventually used, unsweetened, on the singer's record. The playing is pure Bailey, impactful and strong, and for the most part the wider context for these performances is irrelevant, though interested listeners should check what use Sylvian made of them.

 At The Sidecar Incus CD-SG5 Bailey (g solo). 2/04.
'Just what Spain needs, another *ing guitar player.' In the last years of his life, Bailey moved for a time to Barcelona, and this CD-R release was made there. It's a continuous performance arbitrarily divided into 'tracks' on the disc. Other CD-Rs exist in the same series.

(*) Carpal Tunnel Tzadik 7612 Bailey (g solo, v). 7/05.
As so often, the diagnosis of carpal tunnel camouflaged something more serious, but in the short term Derek Bailey was required to change his approach to the guitar to accommodate what at first seemed like an inconvenient inability to hold a plectrum. Even playing with his thumb, he doesn't turn into Wes Montgomery, but sounds very much like Derek Bailey. The tones aren't quite as ringing as of yore, but the idiom is near-identical. There is, however, something very touching about hearing the man who invented the wheel reinventing it in these circumstances. A spoken track at the beginning explains the problems he is encountering and the progress he is making. It was to be brief, alas. Within a short time of the recording, Bailey was no longer able to play. His health worsened rapidly and once he was no longer able to play any more he died suddenly but quietly.

Also, in brief:

 Drops Ictus/New Tone rdc 5037. 4/76.
Duos with percussionist Andrea Centazzo and originally released on his vinyl label Ictus; nine relatively short pieces on both acoustic and electric.

(*) Aida Incus 40. 8/80.
Three broad slabs of solo guitar, with effects pared to the bone.

 Legend Of The Blood Yeti Infinite Chug CD5. 96.
Bailey appears on Book One, with Thurston Moore, Alex Ward and Andrew Clare (g) all taking part.

 And Rectangle S2. 8/97.
A disappointing trio with Pat Thomas (ky) and Steve Noble (turntables) that finds Bailey sounding almost formulaic and hasty.

* Unanswered Questions – Intermission BvHaast 9906. 2/98.
Intermission is an extraordinary group consisting of one bass saxophonist and three double bassists. The low-frequency sound, mixed with high harmonics and overtones, is immensely powerful and provides a setting for Bailey's playing which is both hugely suggestive and also interestingly restrictive.

(*) Untitled Improvisations Illegal Radio CD1. 99.
Duos with drummer Michael Welch. Interesting enough, but hard to pick out of the throng.

 Daedal /  Bids Incus CD 36 / 52. 99.
Susie Ibarra (perc) comes out of the free-jazz tradition of Murray, Graves and Cyrille, but brings to it her own highly developed lyricism. Confronted by Derek's characteristic surges of volume she does not batter or declaim but simply puts her own emphatic signature on the moment.

* Mirakle Tzadik 7603. 99.
A power-trio situation with Jamaaladeen Tacuma (b) and Calvin Weston (d). Needless to say, the guitarist goes his own way.

 String Theory Paratactile 11092. 00.
A whole album of feedback effects. No distinctive dry picking or those big, pedal-swelled dissonances. Some of the tracks are dull, though Vanessa Mackness's (v) contribution is interesting. Alex Ward telephones, interrupting the final number.

 Llaer /  Seven Sofa 503 / Incus CD 54. 10/00; 01.
Recorded in Norway with percussionist Ingar Zach, who's still virtually unknown outside his local scene. Llaer has Bailey amplified throughout, but on Seven he plays acoustically and Zach is so closely wired to the guitarist's thinking that at moments it might almost be a single musician.

(*) Barcelona Hopscotch HOP 10. 11/01.
Agustí Fernández favours the water-drop-and-trill style of improvised piano-playing and rarely sounds as if he's listening to his partner.

 Poetry & Playing Paratactile PLE 1116-2. 02.
After the drum'n'bass, the avant-rock and the ballads, here's the poetry album. For a totalizing artist, with a generous philosophy of improvisation, it makes perfect sense. Often cast as a leader, or maybe oracle, Bailey is also a deep listener.

(*) Soshin Ambiances Magnétiques AM 113. 12/02.
Mostly the work of the young Canadian guitarist Antoine Berthiaume, who recorded at Bailey's London home and then brokered some December 2002 duets with Fred Frith as well.

 Scale Points On The Fever Curve Emanem 4099. 3/03.
These four duo pieces, recorded at a first-meeting gig in a London pub, are a good deal more interesting than anything Milo Fine (cl, ky, d) has done with Gnitka or the augmented Free Jazz Ensemble.

 Derek Amulet 023. 4/03.
Posthumously released, these reunite Bailey with percussionist Cyro Baptista for two long improvisations, both thoughtful and often quietly beautiful. ... and many others on and artist-led labels.

Mildred Bailey (1904–51)

VOICE

Mildred Rinker sent a demo record to Paul Whiteman, who hired her in 1929. After four years, and a hit with 'Rockin' Chair', she went solo and sang with husband Red Norvo's group. A tempestuous personality and health problems saw her star decline in the '40s, though there was a brief comeback near the end.

 Mildred Bailey 1929–1932 Classics 1061 Bailey; large personnel, including Casa Loma Orchestra and groups/orchestras led by Frankie Trumbauer, Paul Whiteman, Eddie Lang. 10/29–8/32.

(*) Mildred Bailey 1932–1936 Classics 1080 Bailey; Bunny Berigan, Sonny Dunham, Grady Watts, Bobby Jones, Gordon Griffin, Ziggy Elman, Manny Klein (t); Tommy Dorsey, Pee Wee Hunt, Billy Rauch (tb); Artie Shaw (cl); Jimmy Dorsey, Clarence Hutchenrider (cl, as); Johnny Hodges, Kenny Sargent (as); Larry Binyon, Pat Davis, Chu Berry, Francis Lowe (ts); Luton McGrath, Joe Hall, Teddy Wilson (p); Red Norvo (xy); Mel Jenssen, Matt Malneck (vn); Dick McDonough, Gene Gifford, Dave Barbour (g); Artie Bernstein, Stanley Dennis, John Kirby (b); Stan King, Tony Briglia, Eddie Dougherty, Cozy Cole (d). 8/32–11/36.

(*) Complete Columbia Recordings: Volumes 1 & 2 Definitive 11179 / 11180 4CD each As above and below; relevant dates. 10/29–3/42.

She had claims to be feted on a par with Holiday and Fitzgerald – and started recording before either of them, with her first version of 'Rockin' Chair' dating back to 1931 – but Bailey was more of a transitional figure. Her early records suggest a singer struggling, gently, with the old style of Broadway belting (difficult enough for someone with a small voice), while some of the later ones are almost too placid and formal; yet she never quite lost the vaudevillian tang which helped her put across risqué numbers like 'Jenny' or the wartime novelty 'Scrap Your Fat'. Lacking either Holiday's modern pathos or Fitzgerald's monumental swing, her art is modest, stylized and innately graceful.

The first of these starts with Bailey as an unlisted vocalist on sides by Lang, Trumbauer and Whiteman, plus a featured date with Casa Loma. Thereafter, she gets top billing, mostly with schmaltzy and usually unidentified bands. Most of the material seems to be songs of longing and regret. The second disc finds her hitting her stride. Sessions with Berigan and the Dorsey brothers are assured, fun on 'Is That Religion?', sweet on 'Harlem Lullaby', hot on 'Doin' The Uptown Lowdown'. Sessions for Vocalion and Decca include four tracks with Berigan, Hodges and Wilson, and throughout Bailey's voice keeps its appeal and kept selling records.

The Columbia sets are full and immensely detailed, and with mostly superior sound to the Classics, but surely only die-hard fans would be interested in these?

 Mildred Bailey 1937–1938 Classics 1114 Bailey; Roy Eldridge, Bill Hyland, Stew Pletcher, Eddie Sauter, Buck Clayton, George Wendt, Louis Mucci, Jimmy Blake, Zeke Zarchy, Barney Zudecoff (t); Alex Mastren, Wes Hein (tb); Edmond Hall (cl); Hank

D'Amico (cl, as); Scoops Carey, Len Goldstein, Charles Lamphere, Frank Simeone (as); Herbie Haymer, Herschel Evans, Chu Berry, Jerry Jerome (ts); Teddy Cole, Joe Liss, James Sherman, Bill Miller, Teddy Wilson (p); Red Norvo (xy); John Collins, Dave Barbour, Freddy Green, Red McGarvey, Allan Reuss, Allen Hanlon (g); Walter Page, Truck Parham, Pete Peterson (b); Zutty Singleton, Maurice Purtill, Jo Jones, Dave Tough, George Wettling (d). 1/37–3/38.

 Mildred Bailey 1938 Classics 1160 Bailey; Jimmy Blake, Zeke Zarchy, Barney Zudecoff, John Owens, Jack Palmer, Charlie Shavers (t); Wes Hein, Andy Russo, Al George (tb); Buster Bailey, Hank D'Amico (cl); Len Goldstein, Russell Procope (as); Charles Lamphere, Jerry Jerome, George Berg, Maurice Kogan (ts); Bill Miller, Billy Kyle (p); Red Norvo (xy); Allen Hanlon (g); Pete Peterson, John Kirby (b); George Wettling, O'Neil Spencer (d). 4–12/38.

 Mildred Bailey 1939 Classics 1187 Bailey; Charlie Shavers (t); Buster Bailey (cl); Russell Procope (as); Billy Kyle, Mary Lou Williams (p); Red Norvo (xy); Floyd Smith (g); John Kirby, John Williams (b); O'Neil Spencer, Eddie Dougherty, Cozy Cole (d). 1–6/39.

 Mildred Bailey 1940–1942 Classics 1279 Bailey; Roy Eldridge, Billy Butterfield (t); Jack Jenney (tb); Jimmy Lytell (cl); Robert Burns, Jimmy Carroll (cl, as); Carl Prager, Sal Franzella (bcl); Eddie Powell (f); Mitch Miller (ob, cor); Teddy Wilson, Billy Kyle, Herman Chittison (p); John Collins, Dave Barbour, Carmen Mastren (g); Pete Peterson, Frenchy Covetti, Charlie Barber (b); O'Neil Spencer, Bill Beason, Kenny Clarke, Jimmy Hoskins (d); Delta Rhythm Boys (v). 4/40–2/42.

(*) Mildred Bailey 1943–1945 Classics 1316 Bailey; Louis Armstrong, Roy Eldridge, Charlie Shavers, Dick Vance (t); Jack Teagarden, Henderson Chambers (tb); Barney Bigard, Hank D'Amico (cl); Aaron Sachs (cl, as); Coleman Hawkins, Emmett Carls (ts); Teddy Wilson, Vernon Duke, Ellis Larkins, Danny Negri (p); Red Norvo (vib); Al Casey, Tommy Kay, Chuck Wayne, Remo Palmieri (g); Oscar Pettiford, Clyde Lombardi, Billy Taylor, Al Hall (b); Sid Catlett, Eddie Dell, Specs Powell, J. C. Heard (d); Paul Baron Orchestra. 11/43–12/45.

(*) Mildred Bailey 1945–1947 Classics 1337 Bailey; Dick Vance, Irving Randolph (t); Henderson Chambers (tb); Hank D'Amico (cl); Emmett Carls (ts); Ellis Larkins (p); Red Norvo (vib); Chuck Wayne, Art Ryerson, Barry Galbraith, Gene Fields (g); Billy Taylor, Beverley Peer (b); J. C. Heard, Specs Powell, Jimmy Crawford (d); Julian Work Orchestra. 12/45–3/47.

 The Blue Angel Years Baldwin Street 306 Bailey; Dick Vance, Max Kaminsky (t); Henderson Chambers, Miff Mole (tb); Hank D'Amico, Pee Wee Russell (cl); Emmett Carls (ts); Red Norvo (vib); Ellis Larkins, Cliff Jackson, Vernon Duke (p); Chuck Wayne, Eugene Fields (g); Eddie Safranski, Billy Taylor, George 'Pops' Foster (b); J. C. Heard, George Wettling (d). 44–49.

 The Mildred Bailey Radio Shows: Original 1945 Broadcasts Nostalgia Arts 3030 Bailey; Charlie Shavers (t); Trummy Young (tb); Red Norvo (vib); Earl Hines, Teddy Wilson (p); Tommy Kay (g); Al Hall (b); Cozy Cole, Specs Powell (d); Paul Baron Orchestra. 1/45.

Classics' survey is complete but for two Decca sides from 1950 and is the best reference point, though there are other attractive compilations around. It's an impressive run, though, as with most vocal artists of the period, repertoire is the problem, quality songs intermixed with topical novelties and weaker tunes. Her accompanists – up to 1940 mostly directed by Norvo – often included good soloists, but they rarely get much chance to step out and a lot will depend how much Bailey's voice and straightforward manner appeal. There are also backings by the embryonic John Kirby group. Track for track, Mildred rarely gives less than a sympathetic and often a great performance. Classics 1316 is nearly all V-Disc material and starts with four titles with Teddy Wilson as sole accompanist; her delightful fluff on the intro to 'Rockin' Chair' was fortunately preserved. Even on 'Scrap Your Fat' she turns in a sterling effort. The post-war volume isn't far behind and shows how Bailey's art deepened over the years; grown-up songs such as 'These Foolish Things' and 'I'll Close My Eyes' receive thoughtful, tender or quietly passionate readings. Hank D'Amico's clarinet is often her answering voice in the ensemble.

The Blue Angel material on Baldwin Street refers to Max Gordon's club, where Bailey regularly sang with the Ellis Larkins Trio. Despite extensive sleeve-notes, the exact provenance of some of this material isn't clear, but they found some nice rarities. Mildred's CBS radio show ran briefly but effectively from September 1944 to February 1945; Nostalgia Arts have also put together a nice package.

Also, in brief:

(*) Mrs Swing Proper Properbox 57 4CD. 29–42.
Early sessions with the Dorseys up to the 1942 studio dates. Pity there's no room for later, more affecting work.

* Squeeze Me! Big Hits From A Great Lady Jasmine 2568. 4/33–11/39.
Much of the best work from the early years.

 The Incomparable Mildred Bailey Columbia/Legacy 89075. 9/33–3/42.
A well-selected alternative to the Definitive blockbusters.

(*) The Rockin' Chair Lady ASV / Living Era 2020 2CD. 10/29–5/47.
A centenary tribute that covers most of the stuff any casual listener would want.

Eugenie Baird

VOICES

Underrated singer.

 Eugenie Baird Sings – Duke's Boys Play Ellington Fresh Sound FSRCD 1610 Baird; Mercer Ellington Orchestra. 11/58.
It isn't one of the great, charismatic voices, but Eugenie Baird's absence from most fans' map of jazz singing is, on the face of it, strange. This session has an impressive roster of Ellingtonians – Ben Webster and Harold Ashby divvy up tenor duties – and a nice set-list of Ducal themes, though it's the Strayhorn-composed 'Lush Life' that will tug most at the heart-strings.

Chet Baker (1929–88)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VOCAL

The archetypal 'young man with the horn', brilliant, inward, self-destructive. He grew up in Oklahoma but was in New York to witness the birth of bebop. He developed a sound similar to Miles Davis's: quiet, restricted in range, and melodic rather than virtuosic. The famous pianoless quartet with Gerry Mulligan and a keynote performance of 'My Funny Valentine' were important in the development of cool jazz. A heroin habit destroyed the film star looks, and replaced them with a sunken and haunted image. Even so, his technique was precise and his playing and singing remained touchingly effective to the end.

 Witch Doctor Original Jazz Classics OJC 609 Baker; Rolf Ericson (t); Bud Shank (as, bs); Jimmy Giuffre, Bob Cooper (ts); Russ Freeman, Claude Williamson (p); Howard Rumsey (b); Max Roach, Shelly Manne (d). 9/53.

 Ensemble And Sextet Fresh Sound FSRCD 175 c8Baker; Bob Brookmeyer (tb); Jack Montrose, Phil Urso (ts); Herb Geller (as, ts); Bobby Gordon, Bud Shank (bs); Russ Freeman, Bobby Timmons (p); Jimmy Bond, Joe Mondragon, Carson Smith (b); Peter Littman, Shelly Manne (d). 12/53, 9/54, 7/56.

 Big Band Pacific Jazz 81201 Baker; Norman Raye, Conte Candoli (t); Bob Burgess, Frank Rosolino (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Art Pepper, Fred Waters (as); Bud Shank (as, bs); Phil Urso (ts, bs, as); Bob Graf, Bill Perkins (ts); Bill Hood (bs); Russ Freeman, Bobby Timmons (p); Jimmy Bond, Carson Smith (b); Peter Littman, James McLean, Shelly Manne, Larance Marable (d). 9/54, 10/56.

Baker's crucial years came right at the beginning of his career, 1952–3, when he played with Charlie Parker (undocumented in the studios) and in Gerry Mulligan's pianoless quartet; Stan Getz joined Chet in a similar group at the Haig in LA in June 1953, returning that Christmas for a more conventional, piano-driven quintet. Witch Doctor was recorded at the Lighthouse and sounds superior, though the diffuseness of the jam-session atmosphere tends to militate against it.

Ensemble And Sextet cobbles a bunch of Jack Montrose and Bill Holman arrangements, recorded in Hollywood in 1953 and 1954 (originally on a 10-inch LP), with a single track from a later Forum Theater engagement, reviewed below. The September 1954 material also appears on the Pacific Big Band CD, which pairs it with the ensemble tracks from an October 1956 band recording. It's unfortunate that the material falls the way it does, because collectors will certainly want to have all these sessions, irrespective of the overlap. Both are mono sets.

 Chet Baker & Charlie Parker: Complete Jam Sessions Definitive DRCD 11231 Baker; Charlie Parker, Sonny Criss (as); Russ Freeman, Al Haig, Jimmy Rowles (p); Harry Babasin, Carson Smith (b); Shelly Manne, Larance Marable (d). 6/52, 11/53.

When Charlie Parker auditioned for a new trumpeter on the West Coast in 1952, Chet's name was at the head of his list. There was an immediate rapport between the two, cemented by a genuine musical chemistry, rather than drugs. That's evident on these fascinating sessions. The first was taped at the Inglewood Club in June with Harry Babasin's All Stars. The 22-year-old Baker was no more uncomfortable a bebopper than Miles turned out to be, but on this occasion the playlist didn't include any of the Parker originals recorded the following year at the University of Oregon, but less-recondite material like 'Indiana', 'Liza', 'They Didn't Believe Me' and Tadd Dameron's 'The Squirrel', which turns into a nutty chase. Sonny Criss comes across like Bird's more sober self. His articulation is nothing like as assured as Parker's, and on a couple of occasions Chet seems to mimic his faint stutter on the attack of a phrase. Baker keeps his best and most open-shouldered work for 'The Chase' and takes his choruses with ease and grace. He's on less-certain ground in the November 1953 session with Jimmy Rowles, Carson Smith and Shelly Manne. The tempo seems to trouble him on 'Ornithology' and he doesn't have much to offer on 'Barbados' either, beyond a reworking of tried and tested licks. Bird went back east and told Miles there was a boy in California who could 'eat him up'. The reaction is not recorded.

 Chet Baker With Strings Columbia Legacy 65662 Baker; Mario Pezzotta (tb); Bud Shank (as, f); Jack Montrose, Zoot Sims (ts); Gianni Basso, Fausto Papetti (reeds); Russ Freeman (p); Giulio Libano (p, cel); Franco Cerri, Joe Mondragon (b); Shelly Manne (d); strings. 53–54.

'With strings' dates were a sign you had arrived. Chet takes to it with languid ease, floating through and over a set of arrangements by Marty Paich, Shorty Rogers and Johnny Mandel, and turning in some lovely, well-crafted solos. The mainly Italian orchestra is well drilled and nicely nuanced. He still wasn't entirely confident as a singer and so there are no vocal spots.

Given the quality of the band, and Chet's relative youth, it was inevitable that one or two of the other players would be asked to take solos. Zoot and Bud are nicely featured and Russ Freeman takes the spotlight on his own composition, 'The Wind', which is one of the high-points of the date. Three extra tracks – alternative versions of 'You Don't Know What Love Is', 'You Better Go Now' and Jack Montrose's 'A Little Duet For Zoot And Chet' – were included on the reissue.

(*) This Time The Dream's On Me: Chet Baker Quartet Live, Volume 1 Blue Note 25248 Baker; Russ Freeman (p); Carson Smith (b); Larry Bunker (d). 53, 54.

() Out Of Nowhere: Quartet Live, Volume 2 / () My Old Flame: Quartet Live, Volume 3 Blue Note 25263 / 31573 As above, except omit Bunker; add Bob Neel (d). 7–8/54.

 Jazz At Ann Arbor Jazz Beat 509 As above. 5/54.

 West Coast Live Blue Note 35634 Baker; Stan Getz (ts); Russ Freeman (p); Joe Mondragon, Carson Smith (b); Shelly Manne, Bobby White (d). 6/53–8/54.

 Chet Baker Sextet Blue Note 79969 Baker; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Bud Shank (bs); Bob Trock (bsn); Gene Allen (bcl); Russ Freeman (p); Seymour Barber (clo); Russ Saunders, Carson Smith (b); Shelly Manne (d). 9/54, 12/57.

 Boston, 1954 Uptown 2735 Baker; Russ Freeman (p); Carson Smith (b); Bob Neel (d). 54.

The first of these was Chet's first recorded performance as a leader, and it finds him in fine, relaxed form. The disc combines material from Los Angeles with a later gig recorded at a Masonic temple in Michigan. There are a few problems with the source material, which distorts some of Chet's sustained notes; it seems surprising that these couldn't be corrected during the remastering process, given that the background isn't too busy or intrusive. 'My Funny Valentine', always a signature piece, gets off to a slightly weird start with Bunker sounding as though he's introducing a high-wire artist.

That might have been more appropriate to 'Carson City Stage' on Out Of Nowhere, the second release from this early period. Written by the bassist, it's a wild shoot-em-up of a piece, not at all the kind of thing that would be associated with Chet in later years. Smith is also dominant on 'No Ties'. The later material on this disc was recorded at the Tiffany Club in LA (the rest is from the Civic Auditorium in Santa Cruz) and it carries over into Volume 3, My Old Flame. The Tiffany had a certain reputation, and that may explain the rather edgy and even abrasive character of the music. These are important discs in the Baker oeuvre, a clear sign that in the early days at least he was much closer, certainly in a live context, to the bop idiom that he seemed to be leaving behind. Hearing him with a piano-player also reminds how he could play when the chords were securely laid out under him. Even given the enormous and sprawling nature of the discography, these are records that even more casual Chet fans should make space for.

The Michigan date, formerly on Pacific, opens on a cool and thoughtful 'Line For Lyons', but the highlights are a terrific 'Lover Man', brilliantly introduced by Freeman, and the bouncy dance tune 'Maid In Mexico'. Nice atmospheric recording.

The other Blue Note makes officially available material that most ardent Chetophiles will have either bought or righteously spurned in bootleg form. These are scrupulously mastered and historically important, not least since Chet and Getz apparently loathed one another on sight. Gerry Mulligan was in the slammer at the time, which was why the stand-in was necessary. The earlier set was at the Haig in LA, the latter at the notorious Tiffany again, though here the sparky energy of the quartet sessions has been lost. Trumpet and sax seem to chase one another round the houses without getting down to any real musical interaction. It's a slightly dispiriting performance, though again historically very significant.

Sextet brings together unconnected dates from 1954 and 1957, arranged respectively by Jack Montrose and Bob Zieff. The first and better of these are the sextet cuts with Brookmeyer, Shank and rhythm section, but Zieff's curious arrangement with woodwinds and French horn have a quiet impact as well, similar to (and possibly better played than) similar ideas of Gil Evans's.

The Uptown airshots from the Storyville club in Boston are also worth having. Chet sings on 'Time After Time' but for the most part plays bright, up-tempo jazz with a bop tinge. 'Maid In Mexico' and 'A Line For Lyons' were both regularly programmed at this period and these are good performances of both. Some tracks are very short, presumably in response to a red light from the broadcast guys, but the set has some coherence.

(*) Chet Baker Sings Pacific Jazz 1222 Baker; Jimmy Bond (p); Russ Freeman (p, cel); James E. Bond, Carson Smith (b); Larance Marable, Bob Neel (d). 2/54, 7/56.

 The Route Pacific Jazz 92931 Baker; Art Pepper (as); Richie Kamuca (ts); Pete Jolly (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Stan Levey (d). 7/56.

 At The Forum Theater / (*) Chet Baker And Crew Fresh Sound FSRCD-168 / Pacific Jazz 82671 Baker; Phil Urso (ts); Bobby Timmons (p); Jimmy Bond (b); Peter Littman (d). Bill Loughborough (chromatic tymp on Crew only). 7/56.

 Chet Baker Cools Out Boplicity CDBOP 013 As above, except add Art Pepper (as), Richie Kamuca (ts), Pete Jolly (p), Leroy Vinnegar (b), Stan Levey (d). 7/56.

Richard Bock began recording Baker as a leader when the quartet with Mulligan began attracting rave notices and even a popular audience, and the records the trumpeter made for Pacific Jazz remain among his freshest and most appealing work. The material is currently a little scattered across the seven releases listed above, two of which are best-ofs, and one – The Route – which was subsequently put together from tracks strewn across various compilations over the years. The Route is effective: Kamuca is strong enough to match the other horns, and the rhythm section does a surprisingly better job on what are mostly standards. On Forum Theater and Cools Out, Urso's almost mentholated tenor is an apposite foil, but the music is rather underachieved and all too similar to many of the sessions being cut in the city in this period. A couple of tracks duplicate each other on these two CDs, and the Boplicity disc includes a single item from the Route band. The appearance in 1993 of And Crew, with two previously unissued tracks and material formerly issued on Jazz West Coast and Crown, offers pretty definitive coverage of this material, and there's no earthly reason to plump for the Fresh Sound instead.

To hear the best of Baker himself, one must turn to the other records. Controversy has simmered over the extent of Baker's powers: a poor reader, a restrained technician, he sticks to the horn's middle range and picks at bebop lines as if they were something that might do him harm; yet he can play with sometimes amazing accomplishment. The blues 'Bea's Flat', a scintillating line by Russ Freeman, provokes a solo of agility enough to dismiss charges of Baker's incompetence as ludicrous. It was on the various quartet sessions with Freeman that Baker did most of his best work for Pacific.

The other disc contains what are still Baker's most popular recordings, his first vocal sessions for Pacific. Chet's voice has a quiet, almost creepy beauty that became steadily more sepulchral as the years went by. Even this early, he sounds as if he's crooning quietly to himself. He certainly doesn't project. The new edition is programmed out of chronological sequence so that the 1956 material, by far the most accomplished, is heard first, and only then do we get the February 1954 session that began his career as a vocalist. He wasn't a revolutionary singer in the way that Louis Armstrong was but listening to 'Valentine' from the 1954 date underlines how different he must have seemed from just about anyone else on the scene at the time.

 Lost Holland Concert RLR 88621 Baker; Rolf Schneebiegl (t); Dick Twardzik (p); Jimmy Bond (b); Peter Littman (d). 9/55.

 Köln Concert Featuring Richard Twardzik RLR 88618 As above, except omit Schneebiegl; add Hans Koller (as); Willi Sanner (ts). 10/55.

There is also a Mainz tape from this leg of the tour, released on Philology. Like it, these are most worth having for a glimpse of the short-lived Twardzik, composer of 'Yellow Waltz'. He's featured on the Cologne date, but on the other disc an epic 'All The Things You Are' stands out. Great atmosphere on them both.

(*) Complete Sessions With Dick Twardzik Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 11031 Baker; Lars Gullin (bs); Dick Twardzik (p); Jimmy Bond (b); Peter Littman (d); Catherine Valente (v). 10/55.

And here's the material recorded with Twardzik in Paris, variously available on Barclay, Pacific Jazz and Polydor. The set usefully includes a few numbers (issued on Dragon) from Stuttgart with the Swedish baritone giant. Catherine Valente is only present for 'Cool Blues', which is a shame.

(*) Chet Baker In Paris Emarcy 543547-2 Baker; Benny Vasseur (tb); Jean Aldegon, Teddy Hameline (as); Armand Migiani, Jean-Louis Chautemps (ts); William Boucaya (bs); Francy Boland, Raymond Fol, Richard Twardzik, Gérard Gustin (p); Jimmy Bond, Benoît Quersin , Eddie De Haas (b); Jean-Louis Viale, Nils-Bertil Dahlander, Pierre Lemarchand, Peter Littman (d). 55–56.

Baker's Parisian sessions are among his finest and most considered work. Unfortunately, the fine four-disc survey of this music, previously on Emarcy, has now been boiled down to a single disc, with several important pieces missing. What's here is still excellent: spare and introspective quartet music, more swinging larger groups, and it's by no means all pale and melancholic: what's striking is the firmness of Baker's lines and his almost Tristano-like logic on occasion.

 Picture Of Heath /  Playboys EMI 9332 / Pacific Jazz 94474 Baker; Art Pepper (as); Phil Urso (ts); Carl Perkins (p); Curtis Counce (b); Larance Marable (d). 10/56.

 Complete Playboys Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 428 As above, except add Richie Kamuca (ts), Pete Jolly (p), Leroy Vinnegar (b), Stan Levey (d). 7 & 10/56.

Hugh Hefner didn't approve, not so much of the notorious cover showing a topless blonde covering her assets with two glove puppets but by the use of his marque by two known junkies. The EMI version is more PC, just a monochrome shot of the guys in studio. The music is pretty good, though it was the prospect of two of the most celebrated junkies on the West Coast actually working together that gave the album its spurious cachet. In fact, it's Urso who consistently impresses, particularly when he digs in behind the unusual chords Perkins favours and blows hard. Baker is less prominent than on some sessions, but plays with an interesting economy and often trades ideas with Pepper. The title isn't a misprint; most of the selections were written by Jimmy Heath and the best of them – 'CTA', 'For Minors Only' and 'For Miles And Miles' – might have been written for the trumpeter, so comfortably do they sit in his register and tempo.

The Fresh Sound puts together the studio recordings with an earlier gig at the Forum Theater, from which material has appeared on a bewildering array of releases.

 It Could Happen To You Original Jazz Classics OJC 303 Baker; Kenny Drew (p); George Morrow, Sam Jones (b); Dannie Richmond, Philly Joe Jones (d). 8/58.

 Chet Baker In New York Original Jazz Classics OJC 207 Baker; Johnny Griffin (ts); Al Haig (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/58.

 Chet Original Jazz Classics OJC 087 Baker; Herbie Mann (ts, f); Pepper Adams (bs); Bill Evans (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Paul Chambers (b); Connie Kay, Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/59.

 Plays The Best Of Lerner & Loewe Original Jazz Classics OJC 137 Baker; Herbie Mann (ts, f); Zoot Sims (ts, as); Pepper Adams (bs); Bill Evans, Bob Corwin (p); Earl May (b); Clifford Jarvis (d). 7/59.

These are all worthwhile records, but without a regular cast of players Chet sounds like a man trying to be one of the boys. He has no problem with the assertiveness of the group on In New York, which shows how far he'd come from the supposed early fumblings. But this set, and the Lerner & Loewe collection and the similarly directed Chet aren't very different from the standard bop outings of the time: good, but working off a predictable routine. It Could Happen To You is more of a singing record, and it includes a couple of his most charming efforts on 'Do It The Hard Way' and 'I'm Old Fashioned'.

 With Fifty Italian Strings / (*) In Milan Original Jazz Classics OJC 492 / 370 Baker; Mario Pezzotta (tb); Glauco Masetti (as); Gianni Basso (ts); Fausto Papetti (bs); Giulio Libano (p, cel); Renato Sellani (p on In Milan only); Franco Cerri (b); Gene Victory (d); strings. 9/59.

Back in Europe, Baker lived in Italy, where he eventually ended up in jail. The strings album is a good one of its kind: by now he was assured enough not to let the horn solos blow away on the orchestral breeze. 'Violets For Your Furs', for instance, makes the most of both the melody and the changes. In Milan features a good band – Basso was one of the leading Italians of the day – but it's an uneventful session.

 Baby Breeze /  The Most Important Jazz Album Of 1964/65 Verve 538328 / Roulette Jazz 81829 Baker; Phil Urso (ts); Frank Strozier (as, f); Hal Galper, Hilary James, Bobby Scott (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Michael Fleming (b); Charlie Rice (d). 1/64; 2/65.

Chet came back from Europe trying to get his act back together but also finding that the scene had changed quite considerably since his departure. The new group was an effort to toughen up his sound, in line with the new vogue for hard bop and a certain suspicion of West Coast cool. There is a nice little story behind this session. Chet had to play with a borrowed flugelhorn, having lost his own trumpet to an opportunistic thief. The sound is obviously still his but there is something different about it, and every now and then Chet seems to hesitate fractionally on a phrase as if his fingers are unfamiliar with the action. And yet he is very good indeed on the Hal Galper tunes and on familiar stuff like 'Everything Depends On You' and 'Born To Be Blue'. The pianist is in fine, expressive form, as is Bobby Scott, who comes in for some of the later tracks, though he overcooks some of his own material. February the 14th, but no 'Valentine', unaccountably.

The second disc, with that hopeful title, is dominated by Tadd Dameron tunes, not an area of repertoire that you'd normally associate with Chet but obviously a source of inspiration to him as he glides through 'Soultrane', 'Mating Call' and 'Tadd's Delight'.

 Groovin' /  Comin' On /  Cool Burnin' /  Boppin' Prestige PR20 7460-2 / 7478-2 / 7496-2 / 7512-2 Baker; George Coleman (ts); Kirk Lightsey (p); Herman Wright (b); Roy Brooks (d). 8/65.

The pairing with Coleman might seem unlikely, but the saxophonist has a highly sophisticated harmonic awareness and an ability to enunciate a soft and unemphatic melody line with absolute directness of purpose. Factor in the magnificent Lightsey, and these sessions begin to make sense, even if the material is spread rather thinly. Previously available under other names, this reissue restores the whole sequence, with original titles. The parallel with the classic Miles Davis discs Relaxin', Cookin' and so on was conscious and deliberate, designed to enhance Chet's reputation as the 'white Miles'. The main audible difference was that Baker played on flugelhorn throughout, getting a broad, 'fat' tone that worked superbly on ballads. There is scarcely a dud track in the sequence, but one or two inevitably stand out. 'On A Misty Night' (Boppin') is wonderful, there is an unexpected reading of Tadd Dameron's 'The 490' on Cool Burnin' and that record also closes with a delicious interpretation of Jimmy Mundy's 'Sleeping Susan'.

 You Can't Go Home Again Verve 543516-2 2CD Baker; Paul Desmond (as); Michael Brecker (ts); Hubert Laws (f, bf, picc); John Scofield (g); Richie Beirach (p, ky); Kenny Barron, Don Sebesky (ky); Ron Carter (b); Alphonso Johnson, Tony Williams (d); Ralph McDonald (perc); strings. 5/72.

In 1968, having moved to San Francisco, Baker was attacked and severely beaten. The loss of several teeth and a nearly unbreakable narcotics habit started to give his face that caved-in, despairing look it wears on a score of album covers from the '80s. If Chet began as a golden youth, he ended his days as a death's-head. The years between 1970 and his rather mysterious death in 1988 were a prolonged curtain-call. 'You Can't Go Home Again', a title borrowed from Thomas Wolfe and used for a wonderful quartet piece, recorded by the slowly rehabilitating trumpeter in 1972 with Paul Desmond, is by far the best thing on the otherwise slick and fusion-tinged A&M album.

 In Concert India Navigation IN 1052 Baker; Lee Konitz (as); Michael Moore (b); Beaver Harris (d). 4/74.

Not a label on which one would expect to find either of the two front-men, concentrating as it did largely on avant-garde music. This set, apparently Baker's first in America for some time, was recorded at Ornette Coleman's New York City loft. It's standard bop fare, freeze-dried and then set to the quite demanding rhythm set up by Moore and Harris. Sonny Rollins's 'Airegin' gets things moving, followed by a long 'Au Privave'. Later tracks are more representative of Chet's style, and he shapes some lovely solos on 'Body And Soul', 'Willow Weep For Me' and 'Walkin''. The sound is rather poor but the music is interesting enough.

(*) Once Upon A Summertime Original Jazz Classics OJC 405 Baker; Greg Herbert (ts); Harold Danko (p); Ron Carter (b); Mel Lewis (d). 2/77.

Having moved over to flugelhorn after his beating, he gradually restored his lip. The late sound is frail, airy, almost ethereal, less reminiscent of Miles than of Fats Navarro at his most delicate and attenuated. Unlike Miles, Chet did not favour mutes but developed a quiet, breathy delivery that made such accessories irrelevant.

Originally released on Galaxy, this is a fine, straightforward jazz session. Herbert acquits himself with honour in a no-frills ballad style, with occasional glimpses of a tougher, hard-bop diction peeking through. Chet plays very cleanly and sounds in better lip than at any time in the previous ten years. The rhythm section can't be faulted. Good versions of 'E.S.P.' and 'The Song Is You', with Danko well to the fore on the latter.

 Sings/Plays Live At The Keystone Korner /  Love For Sale High Note 7112 / Just a Memory 9157 2 Baker; Roger Rosenberg (ss, bs); unknown (ts); Phil Markowitz (p); Jon Burr (b); Jeff Brillinger (d). 2/78.

The piano apart, this sounds like an attempt to recapture the sound of the old Baker–Mulligan quartet. It no more than half succeeds. The story is that Chet broke his dentures shortly before going onstage, which is probably why the singing takes precedence. Baker's problems are only evident on 'Secret Love', the longest of four tunes, when he muffs part of his first entrance. Rosenberg has a delightful time, switching to soprano on the Richie Beirach tune 'Broken Wing' and wuffling through some nice choruses on baritone on 'But Not For Me'. The mystery of the set is the identity of the tenor-player who sits in on 'Secret Love' and a rather staccato 'Blue'n'Boogie'. Markowitz and Brillinger were part of the regular line-up at this time, but it's Burr who wins plaudits for his firm melodic lines.

Love For Sale was formerly released as The Rising Sun Sessions, after the Montreal jazz club where this was taped. It's a run-of-the-mill gig for Baker.

* Live At Nick's / (*) Live In France 1978 /  Oh, You Crazy Moon Criss Cross Jazz 1027 / Gambit 69202 / Enja 9453 Baker; Phil Markowitz (p); Scott Lee (b); Jeff Brillinger (d). 11/78; 11/78; 12/78.

Distinguished by a notably fresh choice of material, the Criss Cross is another fine jazz set. Richie Beirach's 'Broken Wing' was written specially for Chet, but the long version of Wayne Shorter's 'Beautiful Black Eyes' is the product of an unexpected enthusiasm that fed the trumpeter with new and relatively untried material. Markowitz is an admirably responsive accompanist and fully merits 'featured' billing on the sleeve. The Shorter track is by far the longest thing on the session, though two CD bonuses, the relatively predictable standards 'I Remember You' and 'Love For Sale', are both over ten minutes. Gerry Teekens is too sophisticated and demanding a producer to have settled for just another ballad album and, with the exception of the last two tracks, this is extremely well modulated, one of a mere handful of records from the last two decades of Chet's career that have to be considered essential.

Oh, You Crazy Moon is another part of Enja's Legacy sequence. Whatever Chet's condition at the time, his ability to pick out effective songs and make them his own was unparalleled. A 14-minute version of 'Beautiful Black Eyes' is one of his best performances of this final decade. By contrast, 'Love For Sale' is done as jazz-lite, though Lee turns in a perceptive solo.

The Gambit disc contains the whole of the Chateauvallon concert, which has been around in one form or another for years. It's not the greatest recording in the Baker canon, compromised by poor sound and inaccurate notes, and redeemed only by some fine piano from Markowitz.

(*) Broken Wing Emarcy 013043 Baker; Phil Markowitz (p); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Jeff Brillinger (d). 12/78.

A fine opportunity to hear Chet tackle challenging contemporary fare (two takes of Wayne Shorter's 'Black Eyes', as well as the Richie Beirach-composed title-tune). The trumpeter is in great form, as laid-back as ever, but still with an occasional crackle of unexpected energy in his mid-tempo solos. Brillinger is a decent enough accompanist, but it is Jenny-Clark who really shines, a complete star. Oddly, Chet's vocal on 'Oh, You Crazy Moon' is well off the money, one of his poorest on record, but it's easily made up for by the long, mostly jammed 'Blue Gilles' which completes the 'official session' and leaves the listener whetted for those extra takes.

(*) The Touch Of Your Lips Steeplechase SCCD 31122 Baker; Doug Raney (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 6/79.

 Daybreak /  This Is Always /  Someday My Prince Will Come Steeplechase SCCD 31142 / 31168 / 31180 As above. 10/79.

Chet relished this format. The absence of a drummer allowed him to develop long, out-of-tempo lines that were reminiscent of Miles Davis's ballad experiments in the '50s in which bar-lines were largely ignored and phrases were overlapped or elided. This broke down the conventional development of a solo, replacing it with a relatively unstructured sequence of musical incidents, all of them directly or more obliquely related to the main theme. This was easier to do on ballads, and Chet's dynamics became increasingly restrictive in the last few years. Chet's Choice, below, is more varied in pace, but in 1979 Baker was still suffering some intonation problems, presumably as a result of losing teeth, and he fluffs some of the faster transitions. On slower material he sounds masterful and is ably accompanied by Raney's soft-bop guitar and NHØP's towering bass. The Touch Of Your Lips is admirably done, though there's more than an element of overkill in the other three sessions, apparently from later that same year, in which there really isn't enough good material for more than one carefully edited CD.

 No Problem Steeplechase SCCD 31131 Baker; Duke Jordan (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Norman Fearrington (d). 10/79.

A more than usually boppish set for this vintage. Though none of the material is orthodox bebop, there is something about Chet's phrasing and Jordan's tight comping that looks back to a much earlier period. That may recommend the session to those who find the later material too far removed from the blues. Others may feel that Baker had moved too far beyond this kind of approach to be able to return to it comfortably.

 Why Shouldn't You Cry (Legacy, Volume 3) Enja 8538 Baker; Lee Konitz (as); Donald Johnston (p); Larry Coryell, Nicola Stilo (g); Wolfgang Lackerschmid (vib, perc); Günter Lenz, Buster Williams, Ron McClure (b); Jeff Hirshfield, Tony Williams (d); Lilias White (v). 79, 87, 93.

Another valuable compilation from Enja, bringing together material from Ballads For Two, Baker/Lackerschmid and Welcome

Back (which yields the title-track and 'Ballad For Berlin'). There is also a bonus track, recorded posthumously and based on 'Why Shouldn't You Cry'. The playing is mostly first-class, testimony to how close a creative relationship Chet had struck up with Lackerschmid, and the originals are bright and thoughtful.

(*) Burnin' At Backstreet Fresh Sound FSR CD 128 Baker; Drew Salperto (p); Michael Formanek (b); Art Frank (d). 2/80.
Unconsciously or no, this turns into a tribute by the white Miles Davis to the original and only Miles Davis: three Davis compositions – 'Tune Up', 'Milestones' and 'Four' – and a version of 'Stella By Starlight' that twice quotes from the classic version. Baker often did these tunes, but seldom with this concentration. In New Haven he had behind him a very good young band, including the excellent Formanek, and he had at the time (so it is said) a belief that every date could be his last.

(*) Live At Fat Tuesday's Fresh Sound FSR CD 131 Baker; Bud Shank (as); Hal Galper, Phil Markowitz (p); Ron Carter (b); Ben Riley (d). 4/81.
A great shame that Shank wasn't able to sit in on 'You Can't Go Home Again', thus wakening memories of the superb Baker–Desmond version; but there's no doubt that the altoist gives Chet a shot in the arm on their two tracks together. 'In Your Own Sweet Way' is handled with more fire than normal. Shank's tone (well captured on CD) is clear and bright, and Chet sounds more pungent and full-bodied than usual. Warmly recommended.

 Live In Sweden Dragon DRCD 178 Baker; Åke Johansson (p); Kjell Jansson (b); Goran Levin (d). 9/83.
Another stop-over on the long European sojourn, and with a very fine trio behind him Chet sounds not just good but also enterprising, bringing something new to 'You Can't Go Home Again' and a graciousness to 'Beatrice' and 'Lament' that will melt the heart of any sceptic of this period.

* Blues For A Reason Criss Cross Jazz 1010 Baker; Warne Marsh (ts); Hod O'Brien (p); Cecil McBee (b); Eddie Gladden (d). 9/84.
It's now clear that the near-abstraction and extreme chromaticism of Chet's last years were a perfectly logical outgrowth of bebop. Warne Marsh's style has been seen as equally problematic, 'cold', 'dry', 'academic', the apparent antithesis of Chet's romantic expressionism. When the two are put together, as on this remarkable session, most of the familiar generalizations and categorizations fall flat. While Baker is quite clearly no longer an orthodox changes player, having followed Miles's course out of bop, he's still able to live with Marsh's complex harmonic developments. Blues For A Reason stands out from much of the work of the period in including relatively unfamiliar original charts, including three by Chet himself. The best of these, 'Looking Good Tonight', is heard in two versions, demonstrating how the trumpeter doesn't so much rethink his whole strategy on a solo as allow very small textural changes to dictate a different development. Marsh, by contrast, sounds much more of a thinking player and, to that extent, just a little less spontaneous. The saxophonist's 'Well Spoken', with which the set begins, is perhaps the most challenging single item Baker tackled in his final decade, and he sounds as confident with it as with the well-worn 'If You Could See Me Now' and 'Imagination'.

(*) Diane Steeplechase 1207 Baker; Paul Bley (p). 2/85.
Considerably undervalued as a standards player, Bley is exactly the right duo partner for Chet. His accompaniments frequently dispense with the chords altogether, holding on to the theme with the lightest of touches and allowing the basic rhythm to stretch out and dismantle itself. Typically of this period, the material is quite straightforward, but the treatments are far from orthodox and Diane would certainly merit an unqualified fourth star were it not for rather murky sound. There's a story that, shortly after this, Chet fell asleep on stage while playing with Bley in Toronto and had to be carried off.

* Live In Bologna 1985 / Two A Day Dreyfus 36653 Baker; Phil Markowitz (p); Philip Catherine (g); Jean-Louis Rassinfosse (b); Jeff Brillinger (d). 4/85; 12/78.
A little-known Italian trio date from the spring of 1985 with Catherine and Rassinfosse, compiled here with a much earlier session by the working band of the time. The '80s trio drags its feet much of the way, though Miles's 'Tune Up' brings out the best they have to offer. Some nice work on the other half of the set, but it's a slightly odd compilation that doesn't quite come off.

* Chet's Choice Criss Cross 1016 Baker; Philip Catherine (g); Jean-Louis Rassinfosse, Hein van de Geyn (b). 6/85.
This was the most productive year of Baker's last decade, and in the association with Catherine he hit a purple patch. The Criss Cross session is among the most completely satisfying studio records of the period. Playing a basic standards set, he sounds refocused and clear-voiced, with a strength and fullness of tone that is undoubtedly helped by Gerry Teekens's typically professional production job.

(*) Candy Sonet SNTCD 946 Baker; Michel Graillier (p); Jean-Louis Rassinfosse (b). 6/85.
Recorded in the Sonet Library in Copenhagen and formerly available on Gazell, this is an excellent set with some fine playing from Baker and great interplay with the trio. The opening 'Love For Sale' is no more than workmanlike, but there are great versions of 'Nardis' and 'Bye Bye Blackbird', more associated with Miles than with Chet. 'Tempus Fugit' has some great work as well, and the vocals throughout are strong and lyrical.

 Hazy Hugs Challenge CHR 70058 Baker; Edu Ninck Blok (t); Evert Hekkema (bhn); Dick de Graaf (ts); Jan Vennik (bs); Bert van den Brink (p); Hein Van de Geyn (b); John Engels (d). 9/85.
Curiously not mentioned in some discographies, this is a fine mid-size ensemble record, with some genuinely strong playing from Chet and the Dutch musicians, whom he'd met the previous year. The CD issue includes some valuable alternates – 'Tergiversation', 'Shifting Down', 'Deep Soul', 'Some Day You'll Leave Me' – that underline his genius for changing a solo by changing timbre rather than the line or harmony. Intriguing album, worth searching out.

 Silent Night Jazzprint 1986 Baker; Christopher Mason (as); Mike Pellara (p); Jim Singleton (b); Johnny Vidacovich (d). 1/86.
The Christmas album, recorded in New Orleans, of all places. The band is no more than average but Chet's playing is uncommonly good and the whole session has a glow. 'Silent Night' opens and closes the set with a perfect cadence.

(*) When Sunny Gets Blue Steeplechase SCCD 31121 Baker; Butch Lacy (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Jukkis Uotila (d). 2/86.
A rather melancholic session, but one of the better ones from the period. Lacy is a much-underrated piano-player. He gives Baker a great deal of room, leaving chords suspended in unexpected places and rarely resorting to predetermined structures even on very familiar tunes. Indeed, he sets up conventional expectations on 'Here's That Rainy Day' and 'You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To' and then confounds them utterly with altered tonalities and out-of-tempo figures. Lundgaard and Uotila are both thoroughly professional and contribute to a fine, unpredictable set.

 Mister B / As Time Goes By / Cool Cat Timeless TTD 251/3 3CD Baker; Harold Danko, Michel Graillier (p); Jon Burr, Riccardo Del Frà (b); Ben Riley (d). 5/83–85.

 Live In Rosenheim / Sings Again / Heartbreak Timeless TTD 280 3CD Baker; Harold Danko, Luca Alex Flores (p); Nicola Stilo (g, fl); Marc Abrams (b); Ben Riley (d); strings; other personnel. 6/83–4/88.

As with Eric Dolphy, who also died in Europe, there has been an unseemly rush to claim Baker's 'last' recording. The date released as Live In Rosenheim is billed as his 'last as quartet', which opens the field for anyone with trio and duo material to jump on the same bandwagon. These three-CD reissues usefully mop up some interesting but inessential material from Chet's last years. These have never been his most interesting records but for the prurient fascination of watching him and listening to him get through another gig and make it to the airport for the next stage of the journey. They also begin the process of posthumous tinkering with Baker sessions; Heartbreak was arranged for strings after Chet was gone, with very mixed results. Mister B has been remixed to iron out the dull spots and fluffs. There are great musical moments – 'If I Should Lose You' from Rosenheim, 'Round Midnight' from Cool Cat, indeed almost any version of 'Round Midnight' from this period, when he clearly recognized that it was. Danko, Burr and Riley provided sterling support and Harold's own lyrical gift is often to the fore, on his own material and the standards.

 The Last Great Concert: My Favorite Things, Vols. 1 & 2 Enja / Justin Time 3311 Baker; Herb Geller (as); Walter Norris (p); John Schröder (g); Lucas Lindholm (b); Aage Tanggard (d); Radio Orchestra Hannover, NDR Big Band. 4/88.

Just a fortnight after this unexpectedly impressive concert, Chet Baker fell to his death from an Amsterdam hotel window. There are small-group, big-band and orchestral tracks featured here, with some excellent playing from Herb Geller on the first of those. The material is absolutely predictable, almost as if Chet were summing up the songs that have meant most to him. His playing on 'All Blues' is quietly arresting and the virtually unaccompanied 'My Funny Valentine' is all the more haunting for the spareness of the background. 'In Your Own Sweet Way' is also a highlight.

The big band is perhaps most effectively deployed on 'Django', but it's the small-group stuff that has the greatest impact. 'Look For The Silver Lining' and 'Well, You Needn't' are upbeat and Chet sounds in very good heart, rarely splitting a note or dropping off the end of a phrase. The astonishing, perversely heroic thing is that Chet remained a great artist to the very end of his life. Even in extremis he seemed able to find some grace.

Also, in brief:

 Live At The Trade Winds 1952 /  LA Get Together Fresh Sound FSCD-1001& 1022. 3–8/52, 6 & 12/53.
The Monday-night jams in Inglewood, California, are scrappily recorded but Baker already sounds like himself – cool, restrained, diffidently lyrical. Stan Getz features on the other.

 Young Chet Pacific Jazz 36194. 7/53–7/56.
The first of a wilderness of compilations.

* Prince Of Cool Blue Note 94655 3CD. 10/52–12/57.
Half a decade of glowing jazz, 52 tracks, beautifully presented.

 Each Day Is Valentine's Day Blue Note 41429. 4/53–12/57.
Attractive compilation with moody cover.

(*) The Best Of Chet Baker Plays / * Let's Get Lost: The Best Of Chet Baker Sings Pacific Jazz 92932 & 97161. 7/53–10/56, 2/53–10/56.
These are worthwhile compilations from the period, but check out the original sessions above.

 Plays Standards Emarcy 9842023. 55.
The Paris quartet. Cool to a fault.

(*) Verve Jazz Masters 32 Verve 840632-2. 55–65.
A good-value compilation for non-specialists. It includes a track from the October 1955 sessions, with later European material and a group of tracks recorded back in America in 1964 and 1965.

 Conservatorio Cherubini Complete Concert 1956 Lone Hill Jazz 10111. 4/56.
A decent live set from the time, but always question what Lone Hill mean by complete.

 Chet Baker Introduces Johnny Pace Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 433 2. 58.
By rights this is the singer's album, and there is something very attractive about Pace's Sinatra-influenced delivery, but it's Chet's relaxed fills and solos which really command attention.

 The Art Of The Ballad Prestige 11011. 8/58–8/65.
This is one of the first of a veritable rash of themed collections, mostly late-night smokers and romantic torch songs.

 Chet Is Back BMG International 79619. 1/62.
Hearing Chet with Bobby Jaspar (ts, fl) is the closest you'll get to a Chet–Pres summit, and it works very well indeed on this 'comeback' record.

 Baker's Holiday Emarcy 838204-2. 65.
Chet imitates what he thought was the most impressive aspect of Billie Holiday's singing, that she never raised her voice. On flugelhorn, he doesn't sound so very different, a little broader, a little less clipped in faster passages.

 Symphonically Soul Note 121134-2. 7/85.
Baker often performed well in front of big orchestras, but this was an over-produced and rather heavy-handed session and contains little of interest.

 Round Midnight Challenge 70052. 85.
Recorded in London with an Anglo-French group. Chet is in good form and singer Rachel Gould will presumably remember the day for ever.

… and many, many more, including compilations on Blue Note, Lone Hill, Definitive, Fresh Sound, Gambit, Proper.

Harold 'Shorty' Baker (1914–66)

TRUMPET

Born in St Louis, Shorty worked the riverboats for a time and then with Don Redman and Andy Kirk, whose pianist, Mary Lou Williams, he married. He is, though, forever associated with Duke Ellington, with whom he served for nearly 20 years. Made an early impact on Miles Davis.

 Shorty & Doc Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 839 Baker; Doc Cheatham (t); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Wendell Marshall (b); J. C. Heard (d). 1/61.

Baker's warm tone and lyrical approach offered the perfect foil to more-extravagant talents in the Ellington orchestra, but given how good a ballad player he was, it's surprising that he didn't record more on his own account. This is something of a mismatch, with Cheatham sounding very old-school in the company of these swingers. Baker's solos are almost always interesting, and though he combines well with Doc a number of times as they trade ideas, one often wishes he were the only featured horn. 'Good Queen Bess' is a reminder that he also spent some time with Johnny Hodges' breakaway band, while 'Night Train' is a useful reminder of his Midwest origins. What's intriguing here is just how immediately recognizable Baker is. As Ellington realized, he had his own way of approaching a melody and it never left him.

Kenny Baker (1921–99)

TRUMPET

A Yorkshireman who learned in brass bands, he played lead with Ted Heath in the '40s. Led his Baker's Dozen in the following decade, playing sweet as well as hot music, but came back to the Heath tradition towards the end, in the posthumous orchestra.

 Birth Of A Legend '41–'46 Hep CD 58 Baker; David Wilkins, Tommy McQuater, Stan Roderick, Alfie Noakes, Harry Letham, Alan Franks (t); Lad Busby, George Chisholm, Don McCaffer, Harry Roche, Jock Bain, Eric Breeze, Bruce Campbell, George Flynn, Jack Bentley, Jimmy Coombes, Woolf Phillips (tb); Harry Parry, Carl Barriteau (cl); Harry Hayes, Duggie Robinson, Reg Owen, Les Gilbert (as); Buddy Featherstonehaugh (cl, ts); George Evans, Reggie Dare, Aubrey Franks, Andy McDevitt, Jimmy Skidmore, Johnny Gray, Frank Reidy (ts); Bill Lewington, Charles Granville, Phil Goody, Jimmy Durant (bs); George Shearing, Dick Katz, Harry Rayner, Billy Munn, Ralph Sharon, Norman Stenfalt (p); Frank Deniz, Joe Deniz, Vic Lewis, Ivor Mairants, Archie Slavin, Dave Goldberg (g); Tommy Bromley, Charlie Short, Jack Collier (b); George Fierstone, Jock Cummings, Jack Parnell, Carlo Krahmer, Bobby Midgley (d). 11/41–1/46.

 The Half Dozen / After Hours Lake LACD88 Baker; George Chisholm (tb); Bruce Turner (cl, as); Derek Collins (cl, ts); Harry Smith, Dill Jones (p); Jack Fallon, Frank Clarke (b); Lennie Hastings, Derek Price (d). 5/55–4/57.

 Play Not Quite Two Dozen Jasmine JASCD 631 Baker; Tommy McQuater (t); Keith Christie, George Chisholm (tb); Derek Collins (ts, f); E. O. Pogson (bsx); Bill Le Sage (vib); Derek Smith (p); Joe Muddel (b); Phil Seamen (d). 55.

 The Spectacular Trumpet Vocalion CDLK 4240 Baker; Roland Shaw Orchestra. 69.

 Easy Jazz Vocalion CDLF 8114 Baker; Brian Lemon (p); others uncertain. 74.

Baker has left a vast legacy on record but little under his own name. Hep's fascinating compilation rounds up tracks by the likes of the Melody Maker Competition Band and First English Public School Session, as well as dates under the leadership of Chisholm, Featherstonehaugh and Shearing, plus some early Ted Heath. It's clear from the start that Baker was a tough nut and a pros' pro, his solos needle-fine in their precision and standing out among bands that were dance orchestras rather than jazz outfits. A few enlightened souls sound like radicals, and while none of this is deathless music, it steps out of history quite well.

Baker's Dozen were more renowned for their popular broadcasts than for any records, and the legacy is disappointingly slight. Lake's CD gathers together tracks from one Pye and one Polygon LP. A mix of swing, jump-band music and a more relaxed mainstream, the music has a faceless feel which the solos at least invest with colour and Baker remains impeccable. The Jasmine material was previously unreleased and the provenances aren't quite certain, but the playing has some heart and between Baker and Chisholm this really ushers in British mainstream, with affectionate lifts from the books of Basie and Ellington.

The Spectacular Trumpet yokes together a pair of MOR sessions, the earlier featuring Bobby Pratt in front of the venerable Frank Chacksfield Orchestra. Baker stars on a range of tunes from the Monkees' 'Valleri' to 'Mame' and 'Love Is Blue'. A classic period piece from 1969, but the Decca Phase 4 sound is spectacular and the trumpeter gets off some thrilling stunts on what was probably just another day in the studio. Easy/Jazz was recorded for Rediffusion in 1974. Lemon has some lovely fills and Baker breezes it.

(*) Kenny Baker's All Stars / Dick Morrissey Quartet Progressive PCD 7141 Baker; Tommy Whittle (ts); Tony Lee (p); Tony Archer (b); Bill Eyden (d); Dick Morrissey Quartet. 74 (63).

A great, swinging set from Kenny with Whittle in warm support on things like 'It Don't Mean A Thing', 'Sweet Sue' and 'Out Of Nowhere'. The bonus of the set is a date from 11 years earlier featuring another hero of British jazz. It's separately considered under Morrissey's entry, but worth having whichever way your taste lies.

 Ain't Misbehavin' Zephyr ZECD 17 Baker; Warren Vaché (c); Brian Lemon (p); Howard Alden (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 9/96–7/97.

John Bune takes the credit for organizing the earlier of these sessions. In his 70s, Baker was still turning in generous and enthusiastic playing, and it's hard to hear that there is a 30-year difference between him and Vaché, who is enjoying himself just as much: the bubbling treatment of 'Who's Sorry Now?' is marvellous.

Also, in brief:

* Too Hot: The Best Of British Mainstream Jazz Nixa NJL3 3CD. 55–56.

A compilation, but Baker is very strongly featured.

(*) Size 10 Raymer Sound RSCD677. 5/98.

Baker sat in as a guest with the Beachcombers, a trad-swing outfit from the Bristol area. Silly opening, but agreeable.

Red Balaban

BASS, TUBA, VOCAL

A jazz artisan in the Dixieland vein.

 And The Eddie Condon's All-Stars: Volumes 1 & 2 Jazzology 291/292 Balaban; Ed Polcer (c, v); Ed Hubble (tb); Bobby Gordon (cl, v); Jim Andrews (p); Ernie Hackett (d). 9/78.

The group started as a house band after Condon's death playing a rowdy but harmless version of Dixieland. There are some nice things on both sets, but there probably isn't enough top-notch material to justify a double disc. 'Royal Garden Blues' and 'I Double Dare You' are the picks from volume 1.

Juan Pablo Balcázar

BASS

Spanish composer, making waves with an eclectic approach.

 The Heckler – Heckler City Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 232 Balcázar; Fredrik Carlquist, Miguel 'Pintxo' Villar (ts); Alejandro Mingot (g); Hasier Oleaga (d); Sergi Sirvent (v). 8/04.

Of the rash of new bassist-led bands around at the moment, this is one of the best. It's unclear from the attribution what exact relationship obtains between Balcázar's quartet (Carlquist and Sirvent are guests) and The Heckler. In style, though, the group is a whipsmart blend of free jazz, indie rock and other less readily definable approaches. Villar and Mingot both know how to swing, even if the drummer doesn't encourage it, and on 'Lisboa' they create an indigo mood not a million miles from some of the jazz greats of the past. 'Nervio #1' is a more eclectic thing, while 'Tristeza' is almost pure rock. As a cityscape, it's vibrantly effective. The group sound needs work and they need a sensitive producer to make this music sing. A very promising start, though.

Burt Bales (1916–89)

PIANO

Montana-born but based largely in pre-war San Francisco.

 Burt Bales 1947–1961 GHB BCD 13 Bales; Bob Hodes (t); Frank Goudie (cl); Al Conger (b). 47–61.

 'They Tore My Playhouse Down ... But At Least I've Still Got My Bales And Lingle Records' Good Time Jazz 120252 Bales (p solo). 49.

Bales is one of those West Coast legends who left a very small footprint. Content to play in raggedy bars for most of his career, he recorded little of his fast ragtime and 'proper' early Jelly Roll stuff. The GHB gathers together seven solos from 1947 in hopeless lo-fi, though even through the murk one can detect Burt's unfussy virtuosity, and tacks on some quartet tracks from a 1961 club gig, which sound a little better. The other set is better, albeit shared with the even more obscure Paul Lingle.

Jon Balke (born 1955)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Brilliant Norwegian, influenced by rock and other sonics, who first came to notice in Arild Andersen's Masqualero.

 Nonsentration ECM 1445 Balke; Nils Petter Molvaer (t); Dag Einar Eilertsen, Torbjørn Sunde (tb); Erick Balke (as, bs); Tore Brunborg (ss, ts); Arne Frang (ts, bsx); Olave Dale (bs); Carl Morten Iversen (b); Jon Christensen, Audun Kleive (d); Miki N'Doye (perc). 91.

(*) Further ECM 1517 Balke; Jens Petter Antonsen (t); Per Jørgensen (t, v); Morten Halle (as); Tore Brunborg (ss, ts); Anders Jormin (b); Audun Kleive (d); Marilyn Mazur (perc); string quartet. 6/93.

* Kyanos ECM 1822 Balke; Arve Henrikson, Per Jørgensen (t); Morten Halle (sax, f); Svante Henryson (clo); Anders Jormin (b); Audun Kleive (d). 11/01.

Balke favours slow developments, dense textures and a very open-ended harmonic approach. The first album, which followed a promising LP, One To One, features Oslo 13 and sounds quintessentially 'Nordic'. Balke is an effective writer, though this sounds like a keyboard album writ large rather than idiomatic ensemble writing.

There are New Age longueurs on the second album, but these rarely get in the way for long. Apart from the leader, soloing is relatively sparse. Brunborg, Halle and Jørgensen are featured in the central section of what is effectively a continuous suite. The entrance of the strings, played pizzicato, on 'Horizontal Song' shows how crafty Balke can be. Many of these pieces function as wry musical puzzles, deceptively straightforward at first hearing, but constantly opening up layers of interest.

The third album, credited to Balke and the Magnetic North Orchestra, is a meditation on blue – kyanos in Greek – and therefore tinged with the blues. His first record for ECM for almost a decade, it's by far the best, making full use of some now very experienced soloists and much more confident in its language; there is a simplicity and straightforwardness about the arrangements which wasn't there before. Paring back the string-writing to a single cello was a brilliant stroke. Balke solos prominently and thoughtfully.

 Diverted Travels ECM 1886 Balke; Per Jørgensen (t, v); Fredrik Lundin (sax, bf); Bjarte Eike, Peter Spissky (vn); Thomas Pitt (b vn); Helge Andreas Norbakken, Ingar Zach (perc). 9 & 11/03.

This starts, conventionally enough, with a bluesy piano-line, but within a minute or so there are sinister gurgles and electronic whispers before the violins kick in. It's a similar language to Kyanos, but the electronic elements don't quite seem to relate to the foreground and it's three and a half minutes before 'Machinery' really gets going, by which time it's almost over. Jørgensen's trumpet begins the next piece, which again relies on interrotto effects and that same curious mismatch of fore- and background. It works episodically, but one suspects that Balke's vision is already moving in a new direction and isn't entirely engaged here. Jørgensen also sings, a combination of joik and scatting, but it is his trumpet in its freer movements that dominates a fine record.

 Statements ECM 1932 Balke; Arve Henriksen (t); Frode Nymo (sax); Kenneth Ekornes, Harald Skullerud, Helge Andreas Norbakken, Ingar Zach (perc); Sidsel Endresen, Miki N'Doye, Solveig Slettahjell, Jocelyn Sete Camara Silva, Jennifer Myskja Balke (v). 03, 04.

Balke is fascinated by the bata tradition of drumming, which connects West Africa and Cuba and represents an important agent of social cohesion and expression. Batagraf was established, parallel to the Magnetic North Orchestra, primarily as a musical laboratory. This is the result of long workshop sessions and considerable thought. It is also, though, the most unfettered album Balke has made to date, with a joyous quality that is deeply infectious. It is elemental music, caught between blows and words, caught up in a web of meaning that has little to do with conventional verbal semantics. The recitations in English and Wolof are powerful and often very moving, and for the first time Balke seems to have found a context that unifies his different musical idioms. A beautiful, and presumably difficult, production job..

Kenny Ball (born 1930)

TRUMPET, VOCAL

Born in Ilford, he worked in dance-band small groups before forming his own trad-to-Dixie outfit in 1958, bringing a new professionalism to the music. Their Pye records scored some hits in the early '60s.

(*) Back At The Start Lake LACD 114 Ball; John Bennett (tb); Dave Jones (cl); Colin Bates, Ron Weatherburn (p); Dickie Bishop, Diz Disley, Paddy Lightfoot (bj); Vic Pitt (b); Tony Budd, Ron Bowden (d). 6/59–3/62.

 Great British Jazz Bands Vol. 8: Kenny Ball & His Jazzmen 1960–1961 Lake LACD 76 As above, except omit Bishop, Budd; add Lonnie Donegan (bj). 5/60–5/61.

 At The BBC: The Airshots Upbeat URCD 157 Ball; Charlie Galbraith, John Bennett (tb); Dave Jones (cl); Pat Mason, Colin Bates, Ron Weatherburn (p); Diz Disley (g, bj); Dick Bishop (bj, v); Paddy Lightfoot, John Potter (bj); Vic Pitt, Jack Fallon (b); Ron Bowden, John Welling (d). 57–62.

() The Pye Jazz Albums / () The Pye Jazz Anthology Castle CMKBX 794 6CD / CMDD 138 2CD Mostly as for the above. 5/60–11/64; 60–74.

Ball's early records will surprise anyone who only knows him as a cabaret or TV star. He led a tough, hard-hitting outfit which he directed with great skill. Bennett, one of the longest-serving sidemen in jazz, played urbane but gutsy trombone and the rhythm section was taut and emphatic. Ball's signing to Pye, engineered by Lonnie Donegan, was the commercial making of the band and Ball was ruthless in pursuing a style of Dixieland that was disciplined enough to attract a popular audience. The two Lake discs bring together all of his early recordings, and they're an impressive lot, especially Back At The Start, which opens with three obscure tracks made for the Collector label and then proceeds through the early Pyes.

Ball's own playing is what stands out, unfussy but surprisingly risk-taking at points. If his chops later bothered him, there's no sign of it here. The second disc, while nearly as good, sows the seeds of a move towards pop, with 'Teddy Bears' Picnic' and 'I Got Plenty Of Nuthin'', later staples of his chicken-in-the-basket set. These are the discs you need if you want the early years in detail, but as a single source the Pye Jazz Anthology is also attractive. All the hits are here, and a sampling of the more hard-core material: 'Cornet Chop Suey' and Bechet's 'The Pay Off' will again surprise anyone who considers the Jazzmen mere entertainers.

Even more comprehensive is Castle's six-CD marathon, which adds the bonus of Kenny Ball In Japan from 1964, previously only available there (and including a couple of Japanese army songs – Kenny knew an audience better than anyone else). Pretty strange concept, since the whole album is made up of marches, with the even more bizarre exception of the Singing Nun's 'Dominique'!

The Upbeat collection is a thoroughly enjoyable bunch of BBC broadcasts, set down across a five-year period (with the rare sound of Galbraith, not Bennett, in a Ball front line on some of them). Mostly, this is the Jazzmen with their proper jazz shoes on. Lip problems and other issues meant that Kenny had to give up the trumpet, but he still leads and sings with the band, a genuine trouper.

Iain Ballamy (born 1964)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Guildford, Ballamy was a significant player in the new London jazz of the '80s. Since then he has worked steadily as a leader, and collected a lot of saxophones.

* Food Feral Records ASFA 101 Ballamy; Arve Henriksen (t, v, elec); Mats Eilertsen (b); Thomas Strønen (d, perc). 7/98.

Loose Tubes was the talent pool for white British jazz in the '80s, but it became something of a jail for those of its members who weren't prepared to sit their finals and move on. Ballamy always sounded like a man who wanted to learn as well as blow. Unfortunately, early solo albums came and went. Band commitments, coupled with some personal misfortune, meant that his own career seemed to go on the back-burner for periods of time.

Food was a complete surprise, and this time the credit has to be shared evenly. Ballamy's Norwegian colleagues create an entirely new environment for him: rich, tense and unfamiliarly abstract. This allows him to place his notes not with more care but with a more relaxed cadence. At moments, particularly on a track like 'Strange Burn', the music harks back to the British free jazz of the late '60s, which is another of Ballamy's sources. Recorded live to two-track at the Molde Jazz Festival, the sound is very raw and immediate, with Eilertsen's bass foregrounded and plenty of roomy ambience. The tracks are attractively spare, with a stark quality to the horns (Henriksen occasionally plays more than one trumpet simultaneously) that implies a much bigger sound-world than is actually present.

() Food Organic & GM / () Veggie Feral ASFA 104 / Rune Grammofon RCD 2027 Ballamy; Arve Henriksen (t, v, elec); Mats Eilertsen (b, elec); Thomas Strønen (d, elec). 5–6/00; 02.

Completely different. Recorded after a tour, the music is a deft and often exceptionally sensitive blend of folkish tunes, sparingly used electronics and grooving group performances. Since no one timbre gains the upper hand, there's neither Nordic brooding nor mere whimsy to deter the unconvinced. When they get to the final 'Technojoshi', Ballamy really digs in, which suggests that this combination of muscle and mood-painting suits him very nicely.

Veggie sees samplers and other electronic manipulations taking over even more, to the extent that the two horns are rarely heard in their own voices. The first track is almost all processed, spookily atmospheric. Henriksen opens 'Eat' in Miles Davis (or maybe Leo Smith) mode over scraped bass and random percussion and electronic effects. Trumpet and saxophone join in delicate canon here and there, but over rumbly electric bass-line or mock-orchestral effects. 'Chickpea' uses beats as a background to some highly processed horn-lines, which sound as if they're being emailed in from a space station.

(*) Anorak – More Jazz Basho SRCD 22 Ballamy; Gareth Williams (p); Orlando Le Fleming (b); Martin France (d). 3/07.

There were hints that Last Supper (below) marked if not the end then certainly a hiatus in Food's progress. Ballamy comes back to jazz refreshed and raring to go. This is his natural turf. 'Convolution', a tribute to Dudley Moore, is immaculately conceived and delivered, and the whimsy of 'Tribute To Alan Skidmore's Tribute To John Coltrane' extends to the title only. Ballamy knows what he's about with this and knows where he stands in British (and world) jazz history. It isn't a knowing performance; it isn't an aggressively retro return to 'real' jazz; it's just a very good record.

Also, in brief:

 Pepper Street Interludes Feral ASFA 102. 1/00.
Tenor saxophone, button accordion and Norma Winstone's voice. Irresistible, but perhaps hard to find.

* Last Supper Rune Grammofon 53141. 12/04.
The menu needed updating by this point, as 'Junkfood' perhaps suggested. Thomas Strønen (d, elec) declines to compromise, but he's struggling against the inevitable.

Dave Ballou (born 1963)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He took his place on the NY scene at the start of the '90s; works regularly as sideman and leader.

 Volition Steeplechase SCCD 31460 Ballou; Cameron Brown (b); Jeff Williams (d). 4/98.
* The Floating World Steeplechase SCCD 31486 Ballou; George Colligan (p); Doug Weiss (b); Darren Beckett (d). 12/99.
 Rothko Steeplechase SCCD 31525 Ballou; George Colligan (p); Cameron Brown (b); Mike Sarin (d). 8/01.
 Dancing Foot Steeplechase SCCD 31556 Ballou; Michael Formanek, John Hebert (b); Kevin Norton (d, vib). 4/03.
 Regards Steeplechase SCCD 31573 Ballou; Frank Kimbrough (p); John Hebert (b); Randy Peterson (d). 5/05.
* Insistence Steeplechase SCCD 31611 Ballou; Michael Formanek (b); Randy Peterson (d). 1/06.
Ballou's clear tone and deftness are a clear plus for any other leader, but these solo offerings are decidedly mixed. After the disappointment of the first record (see 'in brief'), it was a brave move to go to a bare-bones setting for Volition and there are some excellent moments. However, the inclusion of Booker Little's beautiful 'Opening Statement' and Monk's 'Light Blue' shows up the insufficiency of Dave's own writing.

The Floating World is easily his best set. On the only session with a piano he is abetted by the splendid Colligan, and the greater emphasis on familiar material (five covers of differing sources) is surely a help. 'Pannonica' brings in Monk again, with a nicely personal touch on the flugelhorn, while the trumpet and piano on 'Memories Of You' suggest a genuinely challenging partnership.

Rothko was approached on a one-take, this-is-a-gig basis and after a wan start, with a solo 'The Nearness Of You', moves through some interesting gears, even if Ballou tends to impress most when he's letting his tone and the grace of his ideas do most of the talking, as on 'I Should Care'. Dancing Foot presents an entirely different line-up, with the odd choice of two basses and a drummer doubling vibes. As before, Ballou does best out of serene and straightforward settings, and there is a coolly effective lyricism to be found in 'Sadhana' and 'Stagnate'.

Few jazz artists nowadays enjoy the kind of commitment from a label Ballou has had from Steeplechase. Regards and Insistence are his seventh and eighth records for the label in as many years. The first of the pair is again improved by being straight-ahead in conception and a mixed bag of originals (getting more coherent and individual) and repertory material like 'Bemsha Swing'. On Insistence he goes back to the skeletal format of Volition and a bag of his own tunes, but what a difference! These are confident, muscular melodies, well-crafted but not so highly finished that they can't offer up new revelations when interrogated by as strong a group as this. Ballou's tone is more hooded than before, though he can still blow open and straight, and on 'Once Round' and 'Silly Dance And Coda' he demonstrates real authority and a graceful wit. An impressive return on all that investment.

Also, in brief:

(*) Amongst Ourselves Steeplechase SCCD 31436. 9/97.
More false start than promising debut, over-dependent on stiffly scholarly originals.

 On This Day Steeplechase SCCD 31504. 12/00.
No point carping about the writing (all original again), but it suggests the need for a firm-handed producer.

Gabe Baltazar (born 1929)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

A veteran of the Stan Kenton Orchestra, Baltazar should be better known but has lived in Hawaii for much of his career.

 Back In Action VSOP 85 Baltazar; Tom Rainier (p); Richard Simon (b); Steve Houghton (d). 10/92.
 Birdology Fresh Sound 5001 Baltazar; Frank Strazzeri (p); Andy Simpkins (b); Nick Martinis (d). 10/92.
Back In Action is a sharp reminder of Gabe's boppish talent. A long version of 'Ruby, My Dear' suggests how original an interpreter he can be, while originals like 'Hurricane Iniki' point to a sharp writing talent. The group is a bit lacklustre, but they seem to come alive for 'Birth Of The Blues', a genuine ensemble piece, while the opening 'Is It True What They Say About Dixie?' is arresting enough to hold anyone's attention for the next 45 minutes.

Gabe was a grizzled oldtimer by the time these sets were recorded. One wouldn't know it from the level of energy, but there are clues to his longevity in the confident way he melds together Parker licks into a conception of his own on the eponymous 'Birdology 101' and on a moving version of 'In The Still Of The Night'. After the storms of the previous record, 'The Calm' is another fine original and to some extent a companion piece, both thematically and harmonically. No complaints about the rhythm section on either date, but it's the boss who earns the plaudits.

Lucian Ban (born 1969)

PIANO

Born in Cluj, Romania, he studied at the Music Academy in Bucharest and formed Jazz Unit. Moved to the US in 1999.

 Somethin' Holy CIMP 274 Ban; Alex Harding (bs). 8/02.
(*) Premonition CIMP 277 As above, except add Erik Torrente (as); Chris Dahlgren (b); Damon Reid (d). 8/02.
(*) Tuba Project CIMP 337 Ban; J. D. Allen (ts); Alex Harding (bs); Bob Stewart (tba); Derrek Phillips (d). 7/05.
Ban writes long, weaving lines, mostly with a flattened-out metrical profile, that at first hearing are utterly unlike anything else in contemporary jazz. Interestingly, though, his most sympathetic interpreter turns out to be baritonist Harding, present on all three of these releases, whose immediate and obvious antecedent is Harry Carney's ability to glide over the count but still somehow maintain it, holding on to melody even as he anchors the chords. There is an occasional tendency to overblow without dramatic point, but not often enough to be troubling. The duo record is fascinating but somehow unresolved and it's only with the quintet on Premonition that the sheer originality of Ban's concept becomes evident. Torrente's a new name and a very fresh voice and Dahlgren fulfils a key role alongside Harding, often featured strongly in front. This is ideal music for CIMP, open, democratic, more involved with line than with elaborate texture. The third album is, by a whisker, the best of the three. That Stewart's instrument is mentioned in the title is a reflection of its importance. Ban now has a wonderfully flexible ensemble, capable of producing the kind of swing in a free setting he seems to want. 'Bluesness Suite' and 'Muhal's Song' are ideas very much in that vein. 'Spirit Take My Hand' and 'Hieroglyphics' are more oblique, but all demonstrably come from the same imagination. Ban is a man to watch.

Phil Bancroft

SAXOPHONES

Sibling of drummer Tom and co-founder of the Caber label.

 Swings And Roundabouts Caber 007 Bancroft; Steve Watts (b); Marcello Pellitteri (d). 99.

* Headlong Caber 034 Bancroft; Mike Walker (g); Reid Anderson (b); Thomas Strønen (d, perc). 03.

A saxophonist of genuinely lyrical quality, Bancroft comes across strongly in the spare setting of the debut disc. What's immediately evident from 'Space Buffie 1999' and 'Rockhouse' is how strong his harmonic imagination is, supported by such a clear sense of pulse and direction that Watts and the impressive Pellitteri are freed to play more musically, rather than merely keeping time. There's a vast difference between the first and second records. Bancroft is more assured, the melodic resource even more commanding, and this time with challenging accompaniment from the hugely underrated Mike Walker. 'Golden Section' and 'Double Trouble' are the equal of anything coming out of New York.

Tom Bancroft

DRUMS

Brother of Phil and fellow Caber supremo. A drummer of power and imagination.

 Pieology Caber 001 Bancroft; Claude Deppa, Eddie Severn, Colin Steele (t); Paul Jayasinha (t, clo); Rick Taylor (tb); Lindsay Cooper, Oren Marshall (tba); Phil Bancroft (ts); Jorrit Dijkstra (as, cl); Dick Lee (as, cl, bcl); John Burgess (as); Karen Wimhurst (cl, bcl); John Telfer (bs); Brian Kellock, Chick Lyall (p, ky); Kevin MacKenzie (g); Kenny Ellis (b); John Rae (d). 2/93–2/97.

The debut release on the Bancrofts' home label is a fairly random selection of live and broadcast cuts. The opening 'Cat and Mouse' is a clever call-and-response theme, with a vocal-line originally written for Fionna Duncan. It tees up the first of several superb solos from Deppa and brother Phil, who is the dedicatee of the title-piece, an early attempt in the form which shows joins here and there but succeeds as a blowing tune. 'Scottish Heart' synthesizes jazz and folkish elements, dominated by Kellock's Ellingtonian statement. 'The Piano Is A Dark Horse' features a fine duo between Phil and Scotland's other ranking pianist, Lyall. For most of the way Bancroft cedes the drum stool to Rae, a nimbler player, to concentrate on conducting.

Billy Bang (born 1947)

VIOLIN

Born in Alabama, he served in Vietnam, and began playing seriously relatively late, drawing inspiration from Ramsay Ameen and Leroy Jenkins, but also from the swing violin of Stuff Smith. His characteristic sound is combative, sometimes harsh, but always melodic.

(*) Sweet Space / Untitled Gift 8th Harmonic Breakdown 048 2CD Bang; Butch Morris (co); Don Cherry (t); Luther Thomas (as); Frank Lowe (ts); Curtis Clark (p); Wilber Morris (b); Dennis Charles, Steve McCall (d, perc). 79.

There's a story that the record's first release was a disaster because only out-takes were issued. It was made in a lobby at New York University's Loeb Student Center, but the sound is virtual studio quality. It transfers pretty well, with Bang's skittering fiddle shapes weaving in and out of the two saxophonists: Human Arts Ensemble man Thomas relatively anonymous for all his stridency, Lowe working his usual furrow between the 'avant-garde' and the great tradition of Chu Berry and Coleman Hawkins. 'A Pebble Is A Small Rock' opens with Morris playing unaccompanied; Bang gives it a shape and metre and then the ensemble moves aside for a powerful Lowe solo. Frank again shines on the title-track, but it's the drummer who shines on 'Lowski For Frank', a quirky Bang composition that suggests a relatively unexplored area of his writing career. The reissue includes another 35 minutes of music recorded at a later date and featuring Don Cherry and Dennis Charles.

* Rainbow Gladiator Soul Note 121016-2 Bang; Charles Tyler (as, bs); Michele Rosewoman (p); Wilber Morris (b); Dennis Charles (d). 6/81.

 Invitation Soul Note 121036-2 As above, except omit Rosewoman; add Curtis Clark (p). 4/82.

Rainbow Gladiator is a terrific record, bright, percussive and packed with ideas. The group has a unique and immediately identifiable sound, especially when Tyler is playing baritone, and this has to count as one of Rosewoman's best early recordings. The violinist's articulation is as precise as ever and ranges from a huge, raw vibrato and a lighter, dry, almost bleached effect. The title-track opens the album on a high; almost a quarter of an hour in length, it doesn't let up for a moment. Everything else is a good deal shorter. 'Ebony Minstrel Man', 'Broken Strings' and 'Bang's Bounce' are less than five minutes each, but they show how comfortable Bang is with song forms: a dedication to Laurel Van Horn, 'Yaa – Woman Born On Thursday', is extraordinary.

It's not clear why the second record is so disappointing. Certainly one misses the distinctiveness of Rosewoman's attack, but Clark is an excellent player and idiosyncratic enough not to leave a hole. It is simply that there is nothing very distinctive about any of the music, and Bang's own playing seems lacklustre and formulaic.

(*) The Fire From Within Soul Note 121086-2 Bang; Ahmed Abdullah (t); Oscar Sanders (g); William Parker (b); Thurman Barker (mar, perc); John Betsch (d); Charles 'Bobo' Shaw (perc). 9/84.

 Live At Carlos I Soul Note 121136-2 As above, except omit Abdullah, Betsch, Shaw; add Roy Campbell (t); Zen Matsuura (d); Eddie Conde (congas). 11/86.

The combination of trumpet, guitar and percussion makes an effective foil for Bang's grainy lines, especially when the splendid Barker turns to his marimba. The sheer woodiness of the sound – with Parker also making a strong contribution – is beguiling, and the melodic and rhythmic language rich. The live record underlines the distinctiveness of this group – by default, unfortunately. Campbell is a much less individual player than Abdullah, whose debt to Louis Armstrong is always evident, even when playing outside. Betsch understands Bang's music as well as anyone and, Barker apart, seems the ideal sideman. The club date (Carlos I was an establishment in Greenwich Village) has a slightly plodding quality that even the mercurial William Parker can't quite mitigate.

* Valve No. 10 Soul Note 121186-2 Bang; Frank Lowe (ts); Sirone (b); Dennis Charles (d). 2/88.

A high-point: Bang's most convincing performance since Rainbow Gladiator. The album was recorded on the eve of a long European tour; some of the performances were uncanny and it would be fascinating to have a recording of these same tracks made a month later. Bang has always been drawn to bassists who think of their instruments as bass fiddles and who try to accentuate the singing harmonies of violin and cello; Sirone (formerly Norris Jones) is just such a player, as is Parker, of course. In Frank Lowe, Bang has a saxophonist who has managed to combine the freedoms and intensity of the avant-garde with a huge respect for tradition.

The album opens strongly with 'P.M.', an attention-grabber with its odd structure and tendency to begin solos mid-chorus and allow them to leak over into the next. Charles is the featured soloist here and establishes a strong presence on the rest of the record as well. 'Bien Hoa Blues' is a reminiscence of Bang's Vietnam posting, and there are two tributes to John Coltrane, to mark the 20th anniversary of his death; the disc closes with a searingly mournful 'Lonnie's Lament' on which Lowe's determination not to sound like Trane pays unexpected dividends. 'September 23rd' is less successful, a poem to Coltrane which draws on familiar album titles and the 'Love Supreme' chant.

 A Tribute To Stuff Smith Soul Note 121216-2 Bang; Sun Ra (p); John Ore (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 9/92.

Bang worked with Sun Ra's Intergalactic Arkestra for a time at the start of the '80s. It was his first regular contact with standard material, and his first full exposure to large-ensemble playing. Sun Ra's presence on this record, a rare appearance as a sideman, is the most remarkable thing about a set that never quite adds up to its promise or to more than the sum of its personnel. Cyrille is the key element, constantly suggesting new routes, changing the pace, lying back almost out of the picture, and then erupting in with another flurry of ideas. He and Sun Ra seem to be engaged in a constant dialogue, leaving the two strings to pick their way through some surprisingly conventional material. The opening track is Stuff Smith's 'Only Time Will Tell', and there is one other tune by the great fiddler, 'Bugle Blues'. For the rest, slightly uneven, neither entirely authentic nor ironic readings of 'Satin Doll', 'Deep Purple', 'Foggy Day In London Town', 'April In Paris', a rather good 'Lover Man' and a weak 'Yesterdays'.

* Bang On! Justin Time JUST 105 Bang; D. D. Jackson (p); Akira Ando (b); Ronnie Burrage (d). 4/97.

A complete surprise. This is by far the straightest and most mainstream sound Bang has ever committed to record, on the opening tracks at least. 'Sweet Georgia Brown' and then later 'Willow Weep For Me' and 'Yesterdays' are given light, sweet readings that concentrate heavily on the melody. 'Spirits Entering' is moodier and almost threatening, with Bang using drawn-out wails and glissandi to underpin a strong central idea. Jackson is superb, almost hijacking the session with his rapid-fire delivery and invention. Burrage deserves to be better known and is particularly effective on the slower tunes, using his cymbals to great effect and constantly referring to the tune.

(*) Vietnam: The Aftermath Justin Time JUST 165 Bang; Ted Daniel (t); Frank Lowe (ts); Sonny Fortune (f); John Hicks (p); Curtis Lundy (b); Michael Carvin (d); Ron Brown (perc); Butch Morris (cond). 4/01.

 Vietnam: Reflections Justin Time JUST 212 Bang; Ted Daniel (t); Butch Morris (c, cond); James Spaulding (as, f); Henry Threadgill (as); John Hicks (p); Nanh Thanh Ngo (dan tranh); Curtis Lundy (b); Michael Carvin (d); Co Boi Nguyen (v). 04.

It seems a long time after the event to be attempting an exorcism, but this remarkable suite of pieces inspired by Bang's tour of duty in South-East Asia is far from the doom-laden horrorfest one might have expected. Instead of attempting to convey just the horrors of the Vietnam war – experiences which drove the violinist to the brink of insanity – Bang has created a sound-picture of a wider world. He uses what sound like authentically Asian themes and scales to build up a surprisingly gentle collage into which the few eruptions of real violence – 'Tunnel Rat' and 'Tet Offensive' – arrive with even greater dramatic force. Billy's patented range of sonics, percussive stops, scratched dissonances and eldritch wails have never been more dramatically appropriate.

At least one other member of the group shared the Vietnam experience and Ted Daniel brings his own emotional agenda to the set, playing strong and proud but with an aching vulnerability as well. We are not sure if Frank Lowe or Sonny Fortune saw similar service, but they certainly understand the emotional dictates of Bang's music, and the band sounds as if it has been together for years, a musical platoon united by comradeship and mutual need.

There seems to be some doubt whether the track details on the sleeve are correct. Some inconsistencies suggest that the order is not as given, but either way the pieces identified as 'Ho Chi Minh' and 'KIAMIA' ('killed/missing in action') are among the best Billy has recorded for years.

The follow-up record might seem to be dwelling too much on an experience now long in the past. In fact, what Bang has created is a body of music that relates that experience to now, drawing in elements of Vietnamese music, including a fine vocal by Co Boi Nguyen, and getting his seasoned collaborators into harmonic and melodic areas they would not normally enter. Titles like 'Lock And Load' suggest the old anger is still there under the surface, but with 'Ru Con', 'Doi Moi' and the closing 'Reconciliation 2' the violinist has moved on a stage emotionally and expressively. This is a lovely record, challenging but less confrontationally so than of yore. Bang's playing still has fire and precision in equal measure.

 Above & Beyond: An Evening In Grand Rapids Justin Time 208 Bang; Frank Lowe (ts); Andy Bemkey (p); Todd Nicholson (b); Tatsuya Nakatani (d). 4/03.

Apparently, it was Lowe's dying wish that this extraordinary concert be released on CD. The saxophonist was ailing with lung cancer when this Michigan gig took place and it seems to have been his last recorded performance. As often with such things, it is not particularly revelatory, and nor does it sound like the work of a desperately sick man. While Lowe clearly doesn't have the breath control of yore, he's still a formidable player and his work on each of the four long tracks is exemplary. 'Silent Observation' has some tentative moments, but mostly from Bang, and 'Nothing But Love' seems over before anyone has said anything of real consequence. However, the remaining 35 minutes of the set contains some majestic music. 'Dark Silhouette' is stern and commanding, with some righteous interplay between the two front-line instruments, while 'At Play In The Fields Of The Lord' has a redemptive grace that really does draw a gentle line under Lowe's often overlooked talent, as well as offering a further reminder of what a stunningly good player Bang can be.

Also, in brief:

(*) Commandment (For The Sculpture Of Alain Kirili) No More Records NO 5. N.D.
The sheer physicality of this solo date, recorded without sweetening in sculptor Kirili's loft, is astonishing.

 Spirits Gathering CIMP 109. 2/96.
Beset with technical problems, but an interesting enough date which never quite transcends its circumstances.

 Forbidden Planet Masterplan 42007. 97.
Dud rap/hip-hop experiment. 'I'm Billy Bang'? We knew that already, every time you picked up your violin.

Cyro Baptista

PERCUSSION, MANY INSTRUMENTS

Born in Rio, and an eclectic performer, whose work includes interpretations of Villa-Lobos, film work with John Zorn and free improv with Derek Bailey.

 Beat The Donkey Tzadik 7608 Baptista; John Zorn (as); Anat Cohen (cl, v); Kevin Breit, Romero Lubambo, Marc Ribot (g); Jamie Saft, Peter Scherer (syn); Torinho Ferragutti (acc); Erik Friedlander (clo); Francisco Centeno, Nilson Matta (b); Sergio Bandao (b, g, v, etc); Kristina Kanders (kempur); Amir Ziv (metallophone); Tisza Coelho, Vanessa Saft, Luciana Souza (v). 10/02.
 Love The Donkey Tzadik 7614 Baptista; Chuck MacKinnon (t); Art Baron (tb); Peter Apfelbaum (sax, f, ky, melod); Jimmy Cruiz (f); Jamie Saft (ky); Viva De Concini (g, perc); Mark Feldman (vn); Nilson Matta (b); Amir Ziv (d, perc); Zé Mauricio (perc); Chikako Iwahori, Scott Kettner, Max Pollak (v, perc); 05.
These inevitably hover on the fringes of 'world music', though what is striking about Baptista's take on that overworn field is that he has attempted to use rock, including Led Zeppelin's 'The Immigrant Song' (on Love), and other urban vernaculars as a basis for folk-jazz explorations. Zorn's imagination in putting together the original project (Saft produces the second) and the participation of so many inventive improvisers result in work of astonishing richness. Baptista's ability to play free and strict time, melodically or abstractly, is consistently impressive and seamless; he plays some 30 different instruments on these records. The second of the pair is more obviously in a Latin jazz idiom, but miles from any clichéd interpretation of that form, and both albums are warmly recommended to the musically adventurous.

Denys Baptiste

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Turned on to jazz by his father's record collection, the Londoner studied at the Guildhall and joined Gary Crosby's Nu Troop.

 Be Where You Are Dune CD03 Baptiste; Andrew McCormack (p); Larry Bartley (b); Daniel Crosby, Tom Skinner (d); Juliet Roberts, Sian Lord, Kevin Leo (v). 99.
 Alternating Currents Dune CD05 Baptiste; Kevin Robinson (t, flhn); Winston Rollins, Harry Brown (tb); Andrew McCormack (p); Martin Taylor (g); Larry Bartley (b); Tom Skinner (d); Juliet Roberts, Cleveland Watkiss, Nedia Baptiste (v). 01.
(*) Let Freedom Ring! Dune CD010 Baptiste; Abram Wilson (t); Trevor Mires (tb); Nathaniel Facey (as); Andrew McCormack (p); Robin Bannerjee, Adam Goldsmith (g); Omar Puente (vn); Jenny Adejayan (clo); Gary Crosby (b); Rod Youngs (d); Satin Singh (perc); Ben Okri (v). 7/03.
A skilful player with a big sound, Baptiste seems much in thrall to the obvious tenor forebears and the original 'Rollinstone' and a blushing 'Naima' make that even more specific on the debut. His own writing is still green, but the first date entirely lacks pretension. Stevie Wonder's 'Have A Talk With God' is voiced by Roberts, but it's hard to see why it's there.

Alternating Currents is confident and often striking. The writing has taken a stride or two. 'The Kraken' toys with funk and ska rhythms while rooting itself in recurring changes, which Baptiste and Taylor eat up. 'Mind The Gap' updates the New Orleans march, while 'City Of Clouds' and 'Namesake' attempt the ECM ballad. The sound is muted, which robs Baptiste himself of much of his punch.

Let Freedom Ring! is a vivid piece of political art. Baptiste uses a festival commission to use Martin Luther King Jr's famous 1963 speech as a springboard for a four-part suite, with Ben Okri's poetry commenting on the King text. If the written materials seem derivative of Charles Mingus and Carla Bley, the music is played fiercely enough to convince by itself, and Jason Yarde's production is distinctly superior.

Paul Barbarin (1899–1969)

DRUMS

He played in the New Orleans Young Olympian Brass Band as a teenager and thereafter in NY and Chicago with Oliver, Keppard and Henry Allen. Returned to Louisiana in the '30s and died after leading his band in the hitherto segregated Proteus procession.

 Streets Of The City 504 Records CD 9 Barbarin; Ernest Cagnolatti, John Brunious (t); Eddie Pierson, Worthia Thomas (tb); Albert Burbank, Willie Humphrey (cl); Lester Santiago (p); Edmond Souchon (bj, v); Richard McLean, Ricard Alexis (b). 9/50–4/56.
 Paul Barbarin And His Band Storyville STCD 6008 As above, except omit Brunious, Thomas, Burbank, Souchon, Alexis; add Johnny St Cyr (bj). 51.
 In Concert 1951–1959 504 Records CD 48 Barbarin; Jack Willis (t); Ernie Cagnolatti (t, v); Waldren Joseph, Bob Thomas (tb); Albert Burbank, Louis Cottrell (cl); Lester Santiago (p); Emanuel Sayles (g, bjo); Gerald Adams, Richard McLean (b). 51–59.
 Paul Barbarin And His New Orleans Band Atlantic 90977 2 Barbarin; John Brunious (t); Bob Thomas (tb); Willie Humphrey (cl); Lester Santiago (p); Danny Barker (bj); Milt Hinton (b). 55.

 Oxford Series: Volumes 15 & 16 American Music AMCD 35 / 80 As above, except omit Hinton; add Ricard Alexis (b). 3/56.
 In Concert 1968 At Connecticut Traditional Jazz Club Jazz Crusade 3049 Barbarin; Alvin Alcorn, Ernie Cagnolatti (t); Wendell Eugene, Clement Tervalon (tb); Louis Cottrell (cl); Danny Barker (g); Jerry Green (b); Freddie Kohlman (d). 7/68.
Barbarin was most visibly active in the '30s, with Louis Armstrong and Luis Russell, but it was the revival of interest in New Orleans jazz which led him to record as a leader, He had a hard yet restless manner of playing the beat, and his bands, with a relentlessness that can be very exciting. The Storyville disc captures the group at a peak: the horns are all excellent soloists as well as vivid ensemble players, with Pierson a shouting trombonist and Cagnolatti making light work of sounding tough and imaginative at the same time. There's an uproarious version of 'Clarinet Marmalade', and though all the material is staple Dixieland, they play it with seasoned dedication, cliché-free. Streets Of The City collects three sessions by two bands: with Cagnolatti and Burbank the music is more deeply traditional, with Brunious and the versatile Humphrey a blend of looking back and glancing forward. Barbarin himself worked on some very modern material two decades earlier, but here he's a four-square traditionalist.

The live material on the 504 CD offers more of the same, but there is enough solid material to satisfy his admirers. 'Gettysburg March' and a long version of 'Tiger Rag' stand out, not least for the leader's proud, accurate and gracious playing.

The 1955 edition of the group is perhaps less exciting. The music is otherwise much as before, though Hinton's flexible bass gives the underlying rhythms a more varied sense of swing; good clear sound. The Oxford sessions – afternoon and evening sets – suffer from wobbly balance. Humphrey is a dominant, paradigmatic New Orleans clarinet.

There's an unmistakable whiff of nostalgia about the final item, recorded in Barbarin's last year. Something of a jazz personage by this stage, very much taken up by a generation of young jazz and blues fans anxious to make apostolic connections. The playing is fine, though it lacks the raw thump of earlier sets and drifts towards routine playing.

Chris Barber (born 1930)

TROMBONE, BASS TRUMPET, VOCALS

Born in Welwyn Garden City, he studied at the Guildhall and in the early '50s took over the Ken Colyer band. His music evolved to take account of the growing boom in blues but otherwise has remained rooted in traditional jazz.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Complete Decca Sessions 1954/55
Lake LACD 141/2 2CD Barber; Pat Halcox (c); Monty Sunshine (cl); Bertie King (as); Lonnie Donegan (bj); Jim Bray (b, bb); Ron Bowden (d); Beryl Bryden (wbd); Ottilie Patterson (v). 7/54, 1/55.
Barber had been leading bands in his teens, but his first serious attempt was a cooperative group pulled together in 1953 during Colyer's extended 'vacation' in New Orleans. Though they subsequently worked together, the band split over their ultimate direction, and while Colyer (who felt the Armstrong Hot Fives were too modern!) went back to elemental New Orleans playing, Barber assumed not only leadership but the mantle of the entire trad movement, with Humphrey Lyttelton already moving towards swing mainstream.

While the ensemble's the thing, Barber thinks more creatively about arrangements, the place of solos, counterpoint and rhythm, and it's surprising to hear how strongly this music survives the years. It sounds youthful and energetic, and it reminds us that it was still being played by men in their early 20s. The very first track, the highly improbable 'Bobby Shaftoe', works up a terrific head of steam, yet it's clearly all under control. Some of the shibboleths of the trad movement – such as the plink of the banjo – are there to be sure, but Barber's men were too good to let them seem like anything but a necessary part of the music. Halcox is still a bit green, but Sunshine is already masterful, and the leader's own playing has a terrific bark. Donegan contributed his 'Skiffle Group' session, which yielded the hit 'Rock Island Line' and paved the way for British beat music. The live tracks on disc two are just as impressive and are greeted with applause the like of which hasn't been heard again at a jazz concert in Britain (until the Jamie Cullum era). And with guest spots for Bertie King and material as diverse as 'Skokiaan' and 'Salutation March', Barber was serving notice that his musical remit was going to be as wide as he wanted.

 Vintage Chris Barber: Jazz Sacred And Secular Lake LACD 222 As above. 54.
 The Original Copenhagen Concert Storyville STCD 5527 As above, except omit Bryden and King. 10/54.
(*) Ottilie Patterson With Chris Barber's Jazzband, 1955–1958 Lake LACD 30 As above, except add Eddie Smith (bj); Dickie Bishop (b). 3/55–1/58.
 Chris Barber's Jazz Band 1957 Lake LACD 130 As above, except omit Donegan, Bishop, Bray, Bowden; add Dick Smith (b); Graham Burbidge (d); Sister Rosetta Tharpe (g, v). 12/57.
* The Chris Barber Concerts Lake LACD 55/56 As above, except omit Tharp. 12/56–3/58.
* Chris Barber International Lake LACD 210 2CD As above, except add Ian Wheeler (cl); Joe Harriott (as). 3/58–3/61.
 Chris Barber At The BBC / (*) ... Volume 2 Upbeat URCD 158 Barber; Pat Halcox (t); Ian Wheeler (cl, as); Joe Harriott (as on first vol. only); Tony Coe (as on Volume 2 only); Ian Armit (p on first vol. only); Fred Hunt (p on Volume 2 only); Eddie Smith (g, bj); Dick Smith (b); Graham Burbidge (d); Bobby Breen, Ottilie Patterson (v). 12/63; 61–63.
Barber's live recordings outnumber his studio dates. The two earliest Lakes document what was, 50 years ago, the biggest musical draw in Britain, filling the Royal Festival Hall ten days before Christmas and packing venues elsewhere around the country with that full-hearted sound. Patterson's occasional spots are uneven but tend to confirm her blues credentials. Barber's groups were at their peak in the late '50s. At the end of the decade they became the first British group to appear on Ed Sullivan and they built a huge following in Germany, where Barber's brand of jazz was taken with immense respect and seriousness. In the communist countries, traditional jazz was the spontaneous music of an oppressed proletariat, uncomplicated by formalism or individualism, created collectively. All of this spirit is handsomely caught on the later Lakes. The 1957 concert at Manchester Free Trade Hall has Rosetta Tharpe as a special guest, playing electric guitar (though inaudibly since there was no microphone on her amp) and contributing some riotous vocals.

Chris Barber International restores three vintage Denis Preston productions for Decca. It covers three concerts in Berlin (sensational, in front of 12,000 fans), Copenhagen (very good) and the London Palladium (outstanding again), plus two tracks from a 1958 Brighton show. Harriott turns up for two numbers in London.

The Upbeat records are drawn from BBC Jazz Club broadcasts and already there are shifts – some subtle, some not remotely – in Barber's approach. On the first, he lets Bobby Breen sing 'Route 66' and brings on Harriott for four tunes, including his own 'Revival'. Humph is the MC. The sound is rather dusty but volume two comes in better fidelity, and though there's a feature each for Coe and Hunt, this one feels more like 'traditional' Barber.

(*) Bandbox No. 1 Lake LACD 194 Barber; Pat Halcox (t); Monty Sunshine (cl); Eddie Smith (bj, g); Dick Smith (b); Graham Burbidge (d); Ottilie Patterson (v, p). 1/59–12/60.

(*) In Barber's Chair Lake LACD 185 As above, except add Ian Wheeler (cl, as). 4/60–7/62.

Barber in the studios for Preston's Lansdowne operation. Lake's reissue of a typically eclectic LP – which even includes a version of John Lewis's 'The Golden Striker' – is beefed up by some single sides and a Patterson EP. The second disc gathers four scarce EPs and tacks on four other pieces that didn't make it onto LPs of the period. The various features for Halcox, Wheeler and Sunshine are graciously handled and it's a measure of Barber's confidence in his sidemen that the leader doesn't even play on half these 20 tracks. There's a very fine 'Mood Indigo' and a notably swinging attack on 'Till We Meet Again' (which Bunk Johnson did at his last session).

 The Grand Reunion Concert Timeless CD TTD 553 Barber; Pat Halcox (t, flhn, v); Monty Sunshine (cl); John Crocker (cl, as, v); Lonnie Donegan (bj, g, v); Johnny McCallum (bj, g); John Slaughter (g); Jim Bray (b); Ron Bowden, Graham Burbidge (d). 6/75.

 Echoes Of Ellington: Volumes 1 & 2 Timeless CD TTD 555/556 As above, except omit Donegan, Bray, Bowden, Burbridge; add Russell Procope (cl, as); Wild Bill Davis (p); Jackie Flavelle (b); Pete York (d). 6/76.

Barber never forgot the origins of the music he loved. He has become an important practical historian of early 'hot' music in Britain and has constantly purified his own style, although not to the extent of shunning other musical contacts, as witness the 1976 Ducal session in St Ives, with Procope. Though he keeps a weather eye on public taste, his approach hasn't changed in its essentials for four decades; adaptability hasn't meant compromise. Reunion betrays some signs of rote playing, but Sunshine (who went off in 1959 on the back of 'Petite Fleur') is an elegant and often moving performer, and Halcox has grown in stature over the years.

 Panama! Timeless CD TTD 568 Barber; Wendell Brunious (t, v); Pat Halcox (t); Ian Wheeler (cl, as); John Crocker (cl, ts); Johnny McCallum (bj, g); John Slaughter (g); Vic Pitt (b); Russell Gilbrook (d). 1/91.

This is a showcase for the young New Orleanian trumpeter who supplants the long-serving Halcox on most of the solo slots. Brunious builds a lovely solo on the extended 'Georgia On My Mind' and sings in a mournful, wavery mid-tenor. 'Careless Love' features clarinet before the vocal and then continues with a soft, wah-wah chorus on trumpet (presumably Brunious again) that drops behind a delicate banjo and bass accompaniment; McCallum doubles the time on his own intriguingly jittery solo-line. Typically well-crafted and intelligent, Barber's arrangements of 'Oh! Lady Be Good' and William Tyers's title-tune reflect traditional jazz at its best.

 Forty Years Jubilee At The Opernhaus, Nürnberg Timeless CD TTD 590 Much as for Jazzband records above. 5/94.

The old gang's back in town. Two resurrected bands visit one of their old stamping grounds and a hotbed of Barber loyalism, sounding in pretty good form. The chops, inevitably, aren't quite what they were, but the inclusion of Sunshine and a fit-sounding Donegan (who'd had cardiac problems) pushes the energy level well up. Perhaps a bit old pals-ish for all but collectors.

Also, in brief:

 Just About As Good As It Gets Smith & Co 1140. 51–56.

The early years, nicely selected.

 Chris Barber 1955 /  Chris Barber 1956 Lake LACD 235 / 236. 55–56.

More from the great years.

* The Pye Jazz Anthology Castle CMDDD 139 2CD. 56–59.

Sits beside the Lake Decca reissues, and all the fanatical need to know about Barber in the '50s.

* Collaboration Jazzology BCD 40. 9/66.

With drummer Barry Martyn and taped by the legendary Doug Dobell.

 And His New Orleans Friends Timeless CD TTD 573. 8/91.

The August 1991 meeting with members of the legendary Preservation Hall Band is as much of a disappointment as most of their activities.

* That's It Then Timeless CD TTD619. 12/96.

Co-credited to Acker Bilk (cl), whose 'Stranger On The Shore' dominates the first half. Great musicianship, but with a strong nostalgic air.

 Jubilee Stomp Timeless CD TTD 654. 2/53–03.

Fifty years as a bandleader, with some recently discovered Colyer tracks from 1953 and a version of Miles's 'All Blues'. Typical Barber, then.

… plus many other live dates and compilations.

Leandro 'Gato' Barbieri (born 1934)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, PERCUSSION, VOICE

The intense, vocalized sound and upper-register screams can easily tip over into self-parody, but he remains a greatly underrated figure whose innovations have been eclipsed by pop and film projects. Born in Rosario, Argentina, Barbieri moved to Buenos Aires in his teens and began his professional career in Lalo Schifrin's orchestra. He then switched to tenor and began to create his own distinctive hybrid of jazz and South American folk forms.

 In Search Of The Mystery ESP Disk 1049 Barbieri; Calo Scott (clo); Sirone (b); Bobby Kapp (d). 68.

 Hamba Khale Fuel 2000 061187 Barbieri; Dollar Brand (p). 69.

Two decades before Last Tango In Paris, Barbieri was one of the most innovative young horn-players working in Europe, where he cut a classic set with Don Cherry, Complete Communion, and In Search Of The Mystery under his own name, before establishing himself in the Jazz Composers' Orchestra.

To anyone who only knows the Latin Barbieri, or even more jarringly the disco-friendly Barbieri of the later '70s, this early disc and the duets with Dollar Brand will come as a complete shock. In keeping with ESP's philosophy and reflecting Barbieri's often overlooked similarity to Albert Ayler, the group album is howlingly intense and unremitting. 'Obsession' (a name chosen for at least one reissue) is the key theme, insistent, nagging and delivered at full pitch. 'Cinematheque' is prescient in suggesting that this musican's work was always likely to find its way onto a film soundtrack.

The duets with Brand (later Abdullah Ibrahim) are in a similar vein, though here in place of the roiling string figures created by cellist Scott and bassist Sirone (aka Norris Jones) he has the South African's percussive ostinato figures pounding away below him. It's an unexpectedly successful encounter, though Barbieri sounds more constrained than usual.

 The Third World BMG International 25758 Barbieri; Roswell Rudd (tb); Lonnie Liston Smith (p); Charlie Haden (b); Beaver Harris (d); Richard Landrum (perc). 69.

This was the record that established Gato Barbieri as a mainstream talent and a figure beloved of the college crowd. It is, of course, an awesome band and with such a personnel he could hardly go wrong. The only limitation is, as usual, Gato's tendency to skate on top of the arrangements and accompaniments, paying little apparent attention to what is happening behind him. The Latin tinge already much more overt on cuts like 'Cancion De Llamera' and the arrangements of Villa-Lobos, but there are still touches of the old avant-garde screamer. Rudd is in cracking form and Charlie Haden lapped up this kind of session. A breakthrough record that perversely also showed Barbieri where the money lay and probably also led to his duller disco period of the '70s.

* El Pampero RCA Victor 6369 418 Barbieri; Lonnie Liston Smith (p); Chuck Rainey (b); Bernard Purdie (d); Sonny Morgan, Nana Vasconcelos (perc, berimbau). 6/71.

Over the past few years Barbieri's '70s work has been reissued on RCA, though it may be that some items are difficult to find outside continental Europe, where the Argentinian has always had a loyal following and a critically serious reputation.

El Pampero was recorded at the Montreux Jazz Festival, where Barbieri also guested with Oliver Nelson and Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson as sax battlers in front of a United Nations big band. The small-group set with his regular band of the time is no less incendiary, with that extraordinary upper-register shriek kicking in less than a chorus into the title-track. 'Brasil' and 'Buenos Aires Querido' are both equally strong-voiced and Smith's electric piano, which had yet to slide into its egregious disco wobble, provides a strong harmonic base.

 Fenix RCA Victor 37506 Barbieri; Lonnie Liston Smith (p); Joe Beck (g); Ron Carter (b); Lenny White (d); Nana Vasconcelos (berimbau, perc); Gene Golden (perc). 4/71.

(*) Under Fire RCA Victor 37507 Barbieri; Lonnie Liston Smith (p); John Abercrombie (g); Stanley Clarke (b); Roy Haynes (d); Airto Moreira, James Mtume Heath (perc); Moulay Ali Hafid (dumbeq). 71.

 Bolivia RCA Victor 22105 As above, except add Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b). 73.

(*) Bolivia / Under Fire Bluebird 8369 243 As above. 71, 73.

Fenix is one of the fieriest of the sessions Barbieri did for the Flying Dutchman label. It was one of a group of albums by the saxophonist which help deliver an audience previously largely uninterested even in the crossover style of Charles Lloyd and Miles Davis. The emphasis is laid pretty heavily on the saxophone throughout, and Barbieri's solos (still showing some of the influence of his avant-garde days) are raw and intense. His entry on 'Bahia' suggests an artist who is never going to surrender contentedly to mere prettiness.

Under Fire is, by contrast, the least incendiary of the Flying Dutchman albums. Abercrombie contributes significantly to a measured and lyrical approach, but the star player is Clarke. The material is heavily tinged with folk themes, and big Stanley's counter-melodies on 'Parana' and 'Maria Domingas' show how effortlessly he had assimilated similar material under Chick Corea's tutelage. Barbieri overdubs a second saxophone part on 'Antonico', a scaled-down version of the orchestrations he got from Nelson. A strong record from a vintage period.

The live Bolivia (like El Pampero before it) is a useful reminder of just how strong an improviser Barbieri was in a live context as well as in the studio. The traditional 'Eclypse' and 'Vidala Triste' stand out, with the saxophone ranging restlessly over single-chord vamps from Smith on the Rhodes.

* Latino America Impulse! 052236-2 2CD Barbieri; Hélio Delmiro , Ricardo Lew, Quelo Palacios, Lee Ritenour (g); Osvaldo Bellingieri (p); Dino Saluzzi (bandoneon); Isoca Fumero (charango); Daudeth De Azevado, Raul Mercado (quena); Amadeo Monges (hp); Adalberto Cevasco, Novelli (b); Pocho Lapuble, Paulinho Da Costa (d); Domingo Cura (Indian d); Antonio Pantoja (various instruments); Jorge Padin, El Zurdo Roizner (perc); percussion section of Escola do Samba do Niterói. 73–74.

 Chapter One: Latin America Impulse! 39124 From the above. 73–74.

 Chapter Three: Viva Emiliano Zapata Impulse! 9279 Barbieri; Howard Johnson (tba, bs); Eddie Martinez (ky); George Davis, Paul Metzke (g); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d); Ray Armando, Ray Mantilla, Luis Mangual, Portinho (perc). 74.

Having boosted his way to fame on the back of a film (albeit a controversial one) – and the quality of Barbieri's soundtrack was the one thing nobody disagreed about – it is no surprise that he, wife Michelle and producer Ed Michel should have been inclined to view the progress of his career cinematically. The two first albums for Impulse!, fulfilling the former Lalo Schifrin sideman's dream of recording for Coltrane's label, were called Chapter One and Chapter Two respectively, a practice that continued with their successors. This CD reissue puts them together, along with some previously unreleased material: a long version of 'Nunca Mas', a shorter 'single' version of the splendidly titled 'La China Leoncia Arreo La Correntinada Trajo Entre La Muchachada La Flor De La Juventud', and a single, 'Gato Gato', recorded with Lee Ritenour and an LA rhythm section. The pattern of almost all the music on both sets is a slow accretion of complex rhythm-lines and very slowly shifting major–minor chord-patterns derived from Andean folk music, over which Barbieri lifts steadily into the altissimo stratosphere. It is undeniably exciting stuff, even when it does lapse into histrionics. Chapter One ended, just to underline the filmic analogy, with 'To Be Continued', a two-minute curtain-call, in which Barbieri calls in the instruments one by one.

Chapter Two (not separately available on CD in some territories) also has additional tracks, the best of them being the alternative of 'Latino America' itself, and complete versions of 'Para Nostros' and 'Marissea', the latter minus the overdubbed flute part Gato added after the sessions, just one of several signs that these performances were both problematic and also an opportunity to experiment with collage effects. There is also an unreleased 'Mate', which is almost as stimulating as that beverage and which brings the set to a promising end. It seems clear that, between them, Michelle, Michel and engineer Baker Bigsby were Barbieri's Teo Macero, editing down sometimes cumbersomely long live performances to meet the exigencies of LP dimensions. Hearing these familiar tracks at full length isn't always as revelatory as one might have expected. There is, though, a trance-like quality to a Barbieri performance which comes across well and, for those who love his sound, more is very definitely better.

If the first two Chapters marked a shift from Andean folk to Brazilian jazz, the third in the series sees Gato take a more conventional angle on Afro-Cubop and big-band swing. It's a far less original and thus less compelling record than its predecessors, though as before the saxophone-playing is superb, if sometimes a little episodic. 'Milonga Triste' and 'What A Difference A Day Makes' are both classics, but there are better versions available.

♛ * Chapter 4: Alive in New York Impulse! 4274 Barbieri; Howard Johnson (flhn, tba, bcl); Eddie Martinez (ky); Paul Metzke (g); Ron Carter (b); Portinho (d). 2/75.

A classic, iconic album of the '70s with what turned out to be Barbieri's best group, recorded live at the Bottom Line Club in New York. The opening 'Milonga Triste' is magnificent, a slow-burning, erotic epic that recalls the Barbieri of Last Tango in Paris. Johnson brilliantly elaborates the line with a counter-melody of his own, while Metzke (the most underrated guitarist of his generation) throws the saxophonist vivid cues. 'China Leoncia' is also reprised and has a darker and more brooding quality in this context. 'Lluvia Azul' provides an intense climax, its sheer energy and bravura not enough to disguise the sophistication of harmonic invention, not least from the peerless Johnson. The rhythm section is no less wonderful; Martinez understands the modal approach and is happy to work apart from conventional changes, while Carter is his usual utterly dependable self. Any feeling that the percussion sections of earlier records were more cluttered than truly effective is dispelled by Portinho's tight but expansive playing.

 Ruby, Ruby Verve 000967502 Barbieri; Herb Alpert (t); Jon Faddis, Alan Rubin, Lew Soloff, Marvin Stamm (t, flhn); Wayne Andre, David Earl Taylor (tb); John Gale, Peter Gordon, Tom 'Bones' Malone (frhn); Eddie Martinez, Ian Underwood (ky); Wayne Andre, Lee Ritenour (g); Chuck Domanico, Eddie Guagua, Gary King (b); Steve Gadd, Steve Jordan, Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie, Lenny White, Paulinho Da Costa (d); Joe Clayton, Angel 'Cachete' Maldonado, Portinho (perc). 2/78.

Rescued from the A&M back catalogue and from the obliquity that descended on this part of the Barbieri discography. Heard afresh after nearly 30 years, it's lovely. 'Ruby' is undoubtedly a jazz track, and coming first in the set it recalibrates expectations. Some of the backings are lightweight even so, but the delicacy of the percussion, so cleverly interwoven into Herb Alpert's production, is a constant delight rather than a distraction. If this is ripe for rediscovery, like Caliente! before it (though it has now been and gone again), what of Tropico and Euphoria from the same stable?

 Qué Pasa Columbia CK 67855 Barbieri; Jim Hynes (t); Michael Davis (tb); Andy Snitzer (as); Philippe Saisse (ky, prog); Jeff Golub (g); Ron Jenkins, Mario Rodriguez (b); Dennis Chambers, Poogie Bell, Robbie Gonzalez (d); Cyro Baptista (perc); Vanessa Falabella (v). 97.

It means 'what's happening'. This is Barbieri's What's Going On?, a meditation on life, violence, prejudice and the environment which manages to remain commercially astute. The key moment in Barbieri's recent life was the death of his wife, partner and helpmeet, Michelle. She is the dedicatee of 'The Woman I Remember', the strongest track on an album that is somewhat overpowered with something called 'sound design'. Barbieri has always been interested in the studio as a musical instrument in its own right, and he has always been able to find the appropriate techniques to match his conception. Here, though, he seems overwhelmed by the technology.

Interesting to hear him working with other horns on a couple of tracks. Barbieri has usually preferred to be sole front man, albeit in front of a huge range of percussion, but on 'Mystica' (dedicated to Jacques Tati) and 'Granada' (a poem to the bullfight) he brings in some solo brass and woodwind. Otherwise, producer Saisse is the main component of the sound on keyboards, and the range of percussion has been cut back dramatically. Not a classic record, but an intriguing one at this juncture.

 Che Corazón Columbia 69690 Barbieri; Mike Ricchiuti (ky); Chuck Loeb (g); Will Lee (b); Lionel Cordew (d); David Charles, Sammy Figueroa (perc); Carmen Cuesta, Peter Valentino, Frank McComb (v). N.D.

A record that could be improved significantly by the simple excision of one track, a truly desperate vocal version of the Marvin Gaye-associated 'I Want You'. For the rest, it's actually pretty good, albeit a sentimental dedication to members of the Barbieri family. There's even a version of 'Auld Lang Syne'. Barbieri seems to rely less than before on a highly vocalized tone, preferring a straighter saxophone sound.

 The Shadow Of The Cat Peak PKD 8509 2 Barbieri; Herb Alpert, Barry Daniellian (t); Ozzie Melendez (tb); Oscar Hernandez (p); Jason Miles (ky, d, prog); Dean Brown, Russ Freeman, Dal Lowe, Romero Lubambo, Jeff Mironov, Peter White (g); Mark Egan, James Genus (b); Vinnie Colaiuta, Richie Morales (d); Steven Wolf (d prog); Cyro Baptista, Sheila E, Marc Quinones (perc); Lisa Fischer, Cassandra Reed (v). 02.

The Cat may be less lithe than before, but he still caterwauls impressively. This is the most open and emotionally naked record from Barbieri for some time and arranger/programmer Jason Miles has combined old and new beautifully. As a saxophonist, he is still hugely underrated. Only the perceptive Dave Liebman has attested to the influence of Barbieri's trademark vocalized tone. The opening cut here is a tribute to the late Chico O'Farrill and features the delightful trumpet-playing of Herb Alpert, the man sometimes damned for having led Barbieri away from free jazz and into disco. Herb also turns up on the title-tune and the magnificent 'Para Todos'. Barbieri's liking for guitar-players surfaces here as well with Jeff Mironov, Peter White and notably Russ Freeman engaging in some inventive exchanges. The leader is often seen and heard as a cat who prefers to walk by himself, but even a casual listen to 'Beautiful Walk' reveals how careful a listener he is as well. Barbieri's singing is more usually a recitation, but tracks like 'Ai Ai Ai Ai' suggest how close the horn and the voice sit in his imagination. He also finds space on 'Si Tu Me Quisieras' for Cassandra Reed, who has some of her namesake's jazz chops. The pay-off track is a latter-day reworking of the Last Tango theme, still broodingly erotic but these days much lighter and less fraught. Tonally brighter and more straightforward in articulation, the old gaucho can still cut it.

Also, in brief:

 Last Tango In Paris Rykodisc 10724. 11/72.
Not strictly a jazz record, but the one that made and hijacked Barbieri's reputation and still a remarkable experience, packed with nihilistic passion and sensual grace. Oliver Nelson's arrangements are impeccable. The reissue includes a suite assembled from the soundtrack proper.

* Gato Barbieri's Finest Hour Verve 490671. N.D.
'Finest hour' implies a key or epochal moment; what you get instead is a conventional career survey, questionable even on that premise.

Sam Bardfeld (born 1968)

VIOLIN

Working in a style that mixes jazz harmony, classical models and pure sound.

 Taxidermy CIMP 195 Bardfeld; Ken Wessel (g); Drew Gress (b); Mike Sarin (d). 2/99.
(*) Periodic Trespasses (The Saul Cycle) Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 239 Bardfeld; Ron Horton (t); Danny Blume (p, perc); Tom Beckham (vib, slide whistle); Sean Conly (b); Satoshi Takeishi (d, slide whistle); Curtis Hasselbring (v). 8 & 9/04.
He's perhaps closer to European models on the instrument – Seifert, Urbaniak, Ponty – than to the obvious Americans like Jenkins and Bang, but there's also something quite proper about his playing, which engages more than it puts off. The first line-up, identified as Cabal Fatale, was around for a time before recording and there is obvious rapport. This functions almost like a string quartet (with drummer for cello), but reconceived by Ornette Coleman. Bardfeld favours a middle register and quite elaborate lines, however staccato the phrasing seems. Gress is reminiscent of the great David Izenzon. 'El Judio Demonstro Calidad' – 'the less demonstrated quality' – was a line about Bardfeld in a Colombian newspaper. 'One For Bill' is a tribute to his teacher, Bill Barron, while 'Curve' is an abstract narrative, similar in conception to the second album, designed to feature the drummer over a small string ensemble. The title-piece protests against stuffed music, develops quite slowly, but reveals an interest in classical form.

That notwithstanding, he's had an interesting pop career as well and, as Periodic Trespasses underlines, isn't interested in scaring off his audience with too much raw sound. Here the influence seems to be Dolphy rather than Ornette, with the same stretched-out melody, delicate interweaving of instrumental lines, springy rhythms (sometimes suggestive of reggae or ska) and crisp, unshowy soloing. They even do 'Je T'Aime, Moi Non Plus'. 'Saul's Long Night' is the showpiece, though, with Bardfeld and Horton playing a beautiful line over vibes and rhythm, which is where the Dolphy connection lies. Strange stuff, but beautifully strange. This is what Zorn's vaunted 'radical Jewish culture' ought to sound like.

Guy Barker (born 1957)

TRUMPET

London-born, he worked in the NYJO before making a mark in local bands and as a session-man. In the '90s, he emerged as a powerful leader and composer.

 Holly J Miles Music 078 Barker; Nigel Hitchcock (ts); Jason Rebello (p); Frank Ricotti (vib); Chris Laurence (b); Clark Tracey (d). 89.
(*) Isn't It? Spotlite SPJ-CD 545 Barker; Jamie Talbot (ss); Nigel Hitchcock (as, ts); Peter King (as); Julian Joseph, Stan Tracey (p); Jim Mullen (g); Alec Dankworth (b); Clark Tracey (d). 7–8/91.
 Soundtrack Provocateur PVC 1030 Barker; Barnaby Dickinson (tb); Rosario Giuliani (as); Denys Baptiste (ts); Jim Watson (p, org); Bernardo Sassetti (b); Orlando Le Fleming, Geoff Gascoyne (b); Sebastiaan de Krom (d). 11/01.
Barker's standing as the doyen of Britain's younger trumpeters has scarcely resulted in a flood of recordings under his own name. Listen to Barker's endlessly sustained high A on 'It Never Entered My Mind' on the remastered Holly J and you wonder again why he isn't working a world stage rather than merely working with an international quintet, as on a Ronnie Scott's date from 1994. Frailty of lip may be part of the story. One suspects Barker has had to nurse himself through a tough sideman schedule and left precious little time for his own, more enterprising work.

The early album is a welcome return but the story really picks up with Isn't It? on Spotlite and with Barker's subsequent and shamefully deleted Verves, the first of which was produced by the late Richard Cook. Three originals on the Spotlite suggest a witty composer as well as a polished musical mind, with the title-track a particularly lucid and clever line, while the trumpet-and-rhythm setting of 'Amandanita' strikes a measured balance between poise and tenderness. Some of the solos err on the side of self-consciousness, such as that on 'Sheldon The Cat', where Barker and Hitchcock are outdone by Mullen's flowing improvisation, but there is trumpet-playing of awesome finesse elsewhere.

Soundtrack is remarkable, very clean-limbed and straightforward in conception but packed with unexpected strengths. Barker programmes in a couple of imaginary cinematic pieces (hence the title) that don't really require any programme; the abstract 'Sounds In Black And White' most obviously. The opening 'Underdogs' sounds unimpeachably authentic and very American. Barker plays big, ringing tones against an organ-fuelled background; Giuliani is raw and bluesy. On 'Waiting For The Delay', Barker sits out for most of the track and only really kicks in right before the end, like a deus ex machina. 'Queen Of The Night' has nothing to do with Mozart, except there is an almost Masonic simplicity and mystery to the backing from just bass and drums. 'Purr' is miscast here, but there is a beautiful version of 'Nature Boy' (prompted by Moulin Rouge, one suspects) that is more filmic than the supposed cinema pieces. Great stuff and what a pity there hasn't (yet) been a follow-up.

Alan Barnes (born 1959)

CLARINET, ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Born in Altrincham, he made waves in the Tommy Chase band of the early '80s. Besides hard bop, he has also worked with Humphrey Lyttelton and the Pizza Express Modern Jazz Sextet. Founder of Woodville Records.

 Like Minds Fret FJCD 105 Barnes; David Newton (p). 7/93.
 A Sleepin' Bee / (*) Yesterdays Zephyr ZECD7/11 Barnes; Brian Lemon (p); Dave Green (b on Yesterdays only). 12/95; 2/96.
(*) Here Comes Trouble Fret FJCD 110 Barnes; Steve Hamilton (p); Mick Hutton (b); Bryan Spring (d). 1/96.

 Young Minds – Old Hands Zephyr ZECD13 Barnes; Gerard Presencer (t); Iain Dixon (reeds); Andy Panayi (reeds, f); Brian Lemon (p); Anthony Kerr (vib); Dave Green, Alec Dankworth (b); Clark Tracey (d). 3/96.
 A Dotty Blues Zephyr ZECD26 As above, except omit Dankworth, Tracey; add Mark Nightingale (tb); Steve Brown (d). 1–6/97.
Barnes has been a stalwart saxophonist in all kinds of British jazz situations since the early '80s. His rush of recordings on independent labels is welcome and John Bune's Zephyr's patronage is enlightened. Barnes won't destroy any opposition. Phil Woods is a possible model, but Barnes is a bopper who often finds himself in mainstream situations.

The pick of the early discs is perhaps Yesterdays, with house pianist Lemon offering staunch support and bassist Green walking in here and there. It gets the nod over A Sleepin' Bee if only for the sublime treatment of 'The Folks Who Live On The Hill'. Barnes and Lemon take few liberties with tunes and structure, and on a difficult song like 'Last Night When We Were Young' the embellishments are at the service of the song. The earlier duets with Newton are elegant, but unmemorable, while the other disc on Fret brims with energy and chops. Barnes sticks to alto and baritone and handles what's almost an old Blue Note set-list (standards, Hank Mobley, a Charlie Parker line) with ferocious aplomb.

The one disappointment is the octet date, which brings a splendid group rather deliberately to heel on nine tunes. Barnes himself plays with notable finesse and there are plenty of good solos, but the music could use a jolt of something here and there; otherwise it's too benign to strike sparks.

On A Dotty Blues, Panayi, Presencer and Lemon all take a turn, but it's mainly Alan's own arrangements that power the nine-strong band, of everything from 'Birdland' to Kid Ory's 'Savoy Blues'. All done with a nice sleight-of-hand, but the even-tempered nature of it all bespeaks a British reserve that to some may suggest indifference. There are some warming solos: Presencer, beautifully athletic on 'All The Things You Are', and the inextinguishable Lemon on 'It Had To Be You'.

(*) Summertime Concord CCD 4905 Barnes; David Newton (p). 1/00.
(*) Manhattan Concord CCD 4847 As above, except add Conte Candoli (t); Matt Miles (b); Steve Brown (d). 4/00.
The duo record has some eccentricities – 'Tico Tico' for one – but mostly it's sublime duo playing, and better than their earlier encounter. The material is a connoisseur's cross-section of jazz history, from Ellington's 'Black And Tan Fantasy', superbly realized for soprano and piano, to a haunting alto treatment of 'Street Of Dreams' and an unexpected bass clarinet sortie on Don Weller's 'Di's Waltz'. The quintet isn't far behind. Candoli, in one of his last appearances on record, is right at home in Barnes's charts, fresh and alert in '2 Degrees East, 3 Degrees West' and briskly boppish on 'Jigsaw'. They skirt on repertory exercise here and there, but mostly it's a loving and gracefully tempered record.

 If You Could See Me Now Zephyr ZECD31 Barnes; Jim Watson (p); Andy Cleyndert (b); Steve Brown (d). 02.
Barnes never plays less than excitingly and in Cleyndert and Brown he has able supporters, but the usually excellent Watson doesn't seem quite for this gig. Fortunately, the leader's peppery solos carry the whole thing along nicely.

(*) Swingin' The Samba Woodville WVCD 102 Barnes; Art Themen (ss, ts); John Donaldson (p); Simon Thorpe (b); Dave Barry (d). 6/02.
Barnes on his own label. He addresses Latin-flavoured material with zesty aplomb, from his own 'La-Teen-O' inwards, taking in Ellington, Silver, Burrell and Rollins tunes along the way. Themen's wrangling tenor proves a great foil and the whole session feels poised between knockabout and high-street spicy – not remotely authentic and all the better for it.

 Songs For Unsung Heroes Woodville WVCD 106 Barnes; Bruce Adams (t, flhn); Mark Nightingale (tb); Stan Sulzmann (as, ts, f); Robert Fowler (ts, cl); Brian Dee (p); Simon Thorpe (g, b); Clark Tracey (d); Liz Fletcher (v). 1/04.
 Stablemates Woodville WVCD 107 Barnes; John Horler (p). 6/03–1/04.
 The Marbella Jazz Suite Big Bear CD 44 Barnes; Bruce Adams (t); Simon Gardner (t, flhn); Mark Nightingale (tb); Alex Garnett (ts); John Donaldson (p); Matt Miles (b); Ralph Salmins (d). 5/04.
Recent records suggest a weakness for suites, but it doesn't seem to be causing any embouchure problems – he sounds strong and fit on all these. Lyricist Alan Parker gets a co-credit on the first, a ten of tunes that pays homage to Pres, Slim Gaillard and Joe Harriott, the vocals capably handled. Some of the words induce an occasional wince, and it's not a record to return to often, but a courageous try.

Barnes fans will do better out of the other two. Maybe the duets with Horler aren't as appealing as those with Newton and Lemon, and surely we didn't need another 'Round Midnight', but some enterprising tune choices elsewhere and particularly agreeable clarinet make this one readily enjoyable. Frankly, Barnes is rather held back by the festival set in Marbella. The record hardly gets going until the final tracks, which fizz, and the other players sound like they're coasting through it, though Alan himself crackles.

(*) Blessing In Disguise Woodville WVCD 109 Barnes; John Donaldson (p); Andy Cleyndert (b); Spike Wells (d). 05.
He plays baritone on 'Little Rootie Tootie' and 'Pannonica', proving that Monk's punchy bop is very much Alan's meat, clarinet on 'A Child Is Born' and alto on the Rollins title-track. These records – and there are an astonishing number of them – almost always seem like a work-out for the leader, with not much for the rest to do except hang on and hope for a solo space, if only for the respite from chasing Alan through the changes. Great stuff, as ever.

(*) Barnestorming Woodville WVCD 111 Barnes; Harry Allen (ts); John Pearce (p); Dave Chamberlain (b); Bobby Worth (d). 06.
Allen seems to be absolutely everywhere and is almost as prolific on record as his co-leader here. Still, it's Alan's own label and it would be pointless not to use it. The two saxophones sometimes complement each other perfectly, at other times seem to get in one another's way. We're convinced that Alan is much better in the company of a brass-player, but on its own terms, this is excellent stuff.

Also, in brief:

 Thirsty Work Fret FJCD 108. 93.
A larger group situation, and as so often Barnes seems to knock the stuffing out of his fellow-players. This is why he likes duos.

 Better Late Than Never Woodville WVCD113. 93.
Out-takes from the 1993 sessions for Fret. Not much to cut out and keep, but able, entertaining jazz.

* Cannonball ASC CD 36. 5/00.
Live in Wakefield and well played, but pale in comparison to any Adderley date.

(*) The Pollwinners Playing Girl Talk Zephyr ZECD 28. 7/99.
With Warren Vaché (t) and Tony Coe (cl), a fine mix of masterclass, homage and new spirit. Beautifully sympathetic studio sound.

 The Sherlock Holmes Suite Woodville WVCD 103 2CD. 1/03.
On his own label and an ambitious project, but Alan Mitchell's narration wears a bit. Good writing and playing otherwise.

George Barnes (1921–77)

GUITAR

A pioneer of electric guitar (perhaps even before Charlie Christian), he turned professional in his teens, backed blues singers and then worked for NBC. Later teamed up with Carl Kress and Bucky Pizzarelli and co-led a group with Ruby Braff.

(*) Complete Standard Transcriptions Soundies SCD 4122 2CD Barnes; ABC Chicago Radio Octet. 46–51.
 Guitars Anyone Audiophile AP 87 Barnes; Carl Kress (g); Dick Hyman, Hank Jones (p); Milt Hinton (b); Jo Jones (d). 64.
 Don't Get Around Much Any More Acoustic Disc 52 Barnes; Duncan James (g); Dean Reilly (b); Benny Barth (d). 7/77.
With the Concord records deleted, these are valuable survivals. The Octet transcriptions (48 of them) are essential for anyone interested in the evolution of swing guitar. This material has not previously been available on commercial records, though copies have circulated for years. The instrumentation is interesting, with woodwinds and horns, but no piano, which gives the music a restless, timbrally sophisticated quality unique in jazz.

The association with Kress was the most important of Barnes's career and the Audiophile brings together two LPs of the period, the eponymous duo and a quartet set. As ever, the chemistry is very straightforward. Barnes clips out easy, flowing lines on 'Tea For Two', 'Blue Moon' and 'Don't Be Nervous', the last their most celebrated collaboration. The quartet tracks are much less exciting, though one senses there was a great Barnes–Hinton duo waiting to happen.

The final disc is a live concert recorded just months before Barnes's death, but unreleased for 25 years. He enjoys the accompaniment of a second guitar and solos to a solid chordal foundation. The Ellington material is slick, but the highlight is the Flintstones theme, done straight.

Charlie Barnet (1913–91)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born into a wealthy NY family and broke the colour bar playing in Harlem in the mid-'30s. He struggled until 1939, when a Bluebird contract broke the band in a big way. Carried on against the current until 1949, when he quit to run hotels and play when he pleased. Married more often than Dinah Washington.

 Charlie Barnet 1933–1936 Classics 1133 Barnet; Toots Camarata, Gordon Griffin, Eddie Myers; Eddie Sauter, Frank Amaral, Kermit Simmons, Joe Hostetter (t); Russ Jenner, Bill McVeigh, Buzz Smith, John Doyle (tb); George Bone, Les Cooper, Don Morres, Jack Henderson, George Vaughan (cl, as); Willard Brady, Bob Parks (ts); Billy Miller, Red Norvo, Horace Diaz (p); Buford Turner, Frank Klinger (g); Pete Peterson, Sid Weiss (b); Rudy de Julius, Bill Gussak, Julie Mendelson (d); Helen Heath, Harry Von Zell, Jackie Martin, Marion Nichols, Laura Deane (v). 10/33–6/36.
Though Barnet's 'Cherokee' and 'Skyliner' are staples of the big-band era, he's never been highly regarded by the critics. His own playing, influenced by Johnny Hodges, is usually restricted to a few telling bars, but he was an enthusiastic advocate of other, greater players and he was one of the few bandleaders of the time to have virtually ignored racial distinctions, which may have cost him dear, though he doesn't seem to have cared much.

The first four sessions, cut for Banner in 1933–4, are extremely routine Manhattan dance music, with jazz hardly getting a look in. The debut session for Bluebird, six titles from January 1935, fields an uncertain personnel but a much more lively outfit. They may not have the finesse of their contemporaries, but the Benny Carter charts for 'Nagasaki' and 'On A Holiday' are played with terrific gusto (interesting to hear how prescient he was in assigning a solo to his guitar-player, too). There are some mannered but oddly likeable vocals. Next come four pretty ordinary titles for ARC before a return to Bluebird for the final two tracks. 'I'm An Old Cowhand' is taken at a brisk clip and has some fine Beriganish trumpet (Amaral?) and 'But Definitely' is a forgotten but agreeable tune given a spirited delivery.

 Charlie Barnet 1937–1939 Classics 1194 Barnet; Irving Goodman, Frank Amaral, Al Stuart, Frankie Newton, Jack Koven, Jimmy Milazzo, Bob Burnet, Johnny Mendell, Charles Huffine (t); Bob Fishel, James Curry, John D'Agostino, Ben Hall, Don Ruppersberg, Bill Robertson (tb); Henry Galtman (cl, as); Joe Estren, Dave Gotwalls, Gene Kinsey, Harry Carrel, Ernie Diven (as); Kurt Bloom (ts, v); Don McCook, James Lamare (ts); John Nicolini, Ludwig Flato, Joe Myrow, Nat Jaffe (p); Tom Morgan, George Cuomo, Bus Etri (g); Bob Elden, John Kirby, Harry Sulkin, Phil Stevens (b); Buddy Schutz, Joe Dale, Weesley Dean (d); Kathleen Long, The Four Stars, Judy Ellington (v). 5/37–3/39.
A couple of 1937 dates for Variety feature guest trumpeter Frankie Newton and include a spirited cover of Ellington's 'Emperor Jones' (alias 'Jubilesta') which anticipates Barnet's regular borrowings from both Duke and Basie. 'Surrealism' and 'Overheard In A Cocktail Lounge' are unexpected, but with his return to Bluebird in 1939 and a new residency at the Famous Door Club (celebrated in 'Knockin' At The Famous Door') Barnet's music hits its stride. If he was already deliberately derivative of the black swing orchestras, as a consequence the music stands up all the better at this distance. Certainly, the likes of 'I'm Prayin' Humble', 'Jump Session' and 'Swing Street Strut' go over as well as anything Dorsey, say, was doing at the same time. Judy Ellington, his new singer, was an appealing addition..

 Charlie Barnet 1939–1940 Classics 1266 Barnet; Bob Burnet, John Owens, Lyman Vunk, Billy May (t); Ben Hall, Don Ruppersberg, Bill Robertson, Spud Murphy (tb); Kurt Bloom, Gene Kinsey, Skippy Martin, Noni Bernardi (as); Don McCook, James Lamare (ts); Bill Miller, Phil Moore (p); Bus Etri (g); Phil Stevens (b); Ray Michaels, Cliff Leeman (d); Judy Ellington, Del Casino, Mary Ann McCall (v). 9/39–3/40.
 Charlie Barnet 1940 /  ... 1940: Volume 2 Classics 1318 / 1439 As above, except omit Hall, Bernardi, McCook, Moore, Michaels, Ellington, Casino; add Larry Taylor (v). 2–5/40.
The 1939–1940 volume starts with the excellent 'The Duke's Idea' and its session-mate 'The Count's Idea', but thereafter the tracks are the usual assortment of dance band ballads and the occasional swinger. Mary Ann McCall arrives as a new regular vocalist, here sounding very young indeed. 'Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie' is a frantic instrumental. A mixed bag. McCall also sings on no fewer than 18 tracks in 1940, but the band do get their chances: 'Leapin' At The Lincoln' is a cracking showcase and the closing 'Flying Home', if hardly abandoned in the Hampton manner, is crisply done.

 The Transcription Performances 1941 Hep CD 53 Barnet; Bernie Privin, Bob Burnet, George Esposito, Lyman Vunk (t); Spud Murphy, Don Ruppersberg, Bill Robertson, Ford Leary (tb); Leo White, James Lamare, Conn Humphries (as); Kurt Bloom (ts); Bill Miller (p); Bus Etri (g); Phil Stevens (b); Cliff Leeman (d); Lena Horne, Bob Carroll (v). 1/41.
Even if it lacks a little in star soloists, this is a strong edition of the Barnet band: a Lang–Worth transcription date. It's the gutsy ensemble playing that endures, even when the programme is biased towards the sweeter end of Barnet's repertoire, as it often is here. Carroll is a lugubrious crooner, but the young Lena Horne makes an impact in her two songs, and there are some useful Billy May arrangements as well as several originals by 'Dale Bennett' (Barnet, trying to dodge alimony).

 Cherokee Evidence ECD 22065 Barnet; Mark Markowitz, Charlie Shavers, Al Stewart, Clark Terry (t); Billy Byers, Bobby Byrne, Ed Price, Frank Sarrocco (tb); Vinnie Dean (as); Dick Hafer (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Nat Pierce (p); Chubby Jackson (b); Terry Snyder (d). 8/58.
 Town Hall Concert Hep 81 Barnet; Jimmy Campbell, Joe Graves, Neal Hefti, Dave Nichols, Jimmy Nottingham, Doc Severinsen, Clark Terry (t); Red Benson, Porky Cohen, Freddie Zito (tb); Bud Shank, Kurt Bloom, Jack Henderson (ts); Claude Williamson (p); Bob Bain (g); Frank Sivaro, Don Tosti (b); Dick Shanahan (d); Bunny Briggs (v). 8/47.
Two good representations of the period before the band broke up, this featured a fine line-up and some excellent playing from the principals. Barnet himself doesn't register as strongly as his colleagues, but the overall impact is strong and the sound has been lovingly cleaned up for the Hep reissue. The climactic 'Barnetology' medleys favourites such as 'Cherokee' and 'Skyliner'.

(*) The Capitol Big Band Sessions Capitol 21258 Barnet; Jack Hansen, Irv Lewis, Dave Nichols, Lamar Wright Jr, Dave Burns, Tony DiNardi, John Howell, Doc Severinsen, Rolf Ericson, Ray Wetzel, Maynard Ferguson, John Coppola, Carlton McBeath, Al Del Simone, Marvin Rosen (t); Karle De Karske, Herbie Harper, Phil Washburne, Dick Kenney, Obie Massingill, Kenny Martlock, Bob Burgess, Harry Betts, Dave Wells (tb); Frank Pappalardo, Walt Weidler, Vinnie Dean, Art Raboy, Ruben Leon, Dick Meldonian (as); Al Curtis, Bud Shank, Kurt Bloom, Dave Matthews, Dick Hafer, Bill Holman, Jack Laird (ts); Bob Dawes, Danny Bank, Manny Albam (bs); Claude Williamson, Don Trenner (p); Iggy Shevak, Eddie Safranski, Ed Mihelich (b); Dick Shanahan, Cliff Leeman, Tiny Kahn, John Markham (d); Carlos Vidal (perc, v); Francisco Alvarez, Diego Ibarra, Ivar Jaminez (perc); Trudy Richards (v); strings. 8/48–12/50.
This was Barnet's 'bebop' band. He knew he couldn't play the new jazz but he was shrewd enough to hire players who were adept enough to handle a really tough score like 'Cu-Ba', the sort of thing that was coming out of Dizzy Gillespie's book. Arrangers such as Manny Albam and Pete Rugolo posed plenty of challenges for the band, and here and there are pieces which pointed the Barnet men in the direction of Stan Kenton, which was the last thing the leader wanted. After he famously broke up the band in 1949, there came a new version, which recorded the last four 1950 tracks with strings.

Also, in brief:

(*) Charlie Barnet 1936–1937 Classics 1159. 6/36–5/37.
No outstanding soloists, so the diet is mostly dance music.

 Lullaby In Rhythm Sounds of Yesteryear 634. 38–50.
The best of a number of good compilations on the nostalgia label.

 Showcase Sounds of Yesteryear 655. 41–47.
A collectors' selection of rare live performances.

(*) More Evidence ECD 22112. 9/58.
A lacklustre later date with dull arrangements by Bill Holman.

 Live At Basin St East Hep 2005. 12/66.
Barnet played when he wanted in later years. He has some good people working with him here, including Clark Terry (ts) and Richie Kamuca (t, flhn), but the pleasure of hearing him still at work in his 50s quickly palls.

Joey Baron (born 1955)

DRUMS, ELECTRONICS

One of the house drummers for the New York downtown scene in the '80s and '90s, Baron also leads his own bands and now moves in wider, post-bop repertory circles.

 Miniature /  I Can't Put My Finger On It Winter & Winter 9190 / 919064 Baron; Tim Berne (as); Hank Roberts (clo, v). 3/88; 91.
* Tongue In Groove /  RAIsedPleasureDot Winter & Winter 919056 / New World 80449 Baron; Steve Swell (tb); Ellery Eskelin (ts). 5/91.
 Down Home / (*) We'll Soon Find Out Intuition INT 3503 2 / 3515 2 Baron; Arthur Blythe (as); Bill Frisell (g); Ron Carter (b). 97; 00.
Though Baron's discography as a sideman is substantial, his output as leader is relatively small. The live Tongue In Groove, formerly on Polygram, features a bold instrumentation under the group name Barondown; Joey has enjoyed working without harmony or other rhythm instruments and this early venture is the best of them, a rollicking set that puts as broad a smile on the listener's face as the drummer habitually wears while playing. Apart from the traditional 'Terra Bina Kia Jeena', most of the tracks are very short, the majority under two minutes, but they deliver a solid impact every time. Miniature is by the eponymous, co-led trio, but Baron's drumming and occasional electronic flourishes provide its most lasting pleasures, though Berne and the tricksterish Roberts play their parts as well; the second record possibly just has the edge, and there is a very fine live representation of the group on a live Knitting Factory compilation, issued by the venue as KFWCD100. The association with Blythe, Frisell and Carter was a fruitful one for the drummer. Down Home is aptly titled, an earthy, blues-soaked journey back into the tradition in the company of four master musicians. Blythe's resurgent alto has rarely been heard in a more effective setting and Frisell thrives in contexts like these. The tempo is rarely faster than a mule on a hot day, and even when a 'Wide Load' has to be delivered, the urgency is kept pretty well damped down. Here and elsewhere, Frisell plays straight, unadorned accompaniment but still manages, as does Baron himself, to make a straightforward count of four sound much more complicated. Once or twice it sounds as though Carter may have gone back to Fender bass, though his articulation on the upright instrument is powerful and resonant enough to give that impression. His walking intro to 'The Crock Pot' gives little hint of what is to come from Frisell and Blythe, who take a simple idea and turn it into something much more expansive without once departing from the basic changes.

Reconvened a couple of years later, the personnel is much more coherent and intuitive. Frisell plays much as he might on one of his own records and Blythe gets into some intriguing territory. The blues feel is precisely that, an atmosphere rather than a strict appropriation. Baron is the sole composer, which is confident and brave. 'M' and 'Closer Than You Think' are outstanding ideas, pitched in the same rhythmic free-bop idiom that dominates another strong and entertaining session.

Mike Barone (born 1936)

TROMBONE

Grew up in Detroit, the son of Joe Barone who played with the Bob Crosby band. Formed first band while in uniform, but has worked with Louie Bellson, Pearl Bailey and Gerald Wilson. Wrote the music for the Academy Awards shows between 2001 and 2005. Still plays in Bud Shank's group.

 Live at Donte's 1968 VSOP 103 Barone; Larry McGuire, Buddy Childers, Gary Barone, Steve Huffsteter (t); Jim Trimble, Pete Myers, Vince Diaz, Ernie Tack, Charlie Loper (tb); Med Flory, Bill Perkins (as); Lou Ciotti, Bill Hood, Tom Scott (ts); Jack Nimitz (bs); Mike Wofford, Cliff Bryant (p); Jim Hugart (b); John Guerin (d). 68.

 Blues And Other Happy Moments Rhubarb 677357 0138 2 Barone; Gary Barone (t, flhn); Dick Spencer (as); Tom Scott (ts, lyricon); Theo Saunders (p); John Heard (b); Shelly Manne (d); Alex Acuna (perc). 79.

 Live 2005! Rhubarb R/R 101-2 Barone; Lee Thornburg, Pete DeSiena, Ron King, Steve Huffsteter (t); Charlie Loper, Bill Booth, Dick Hamilton, Bryant Byers (tb); Kim Richmond, Keith Bishop, Ernie Watts, Vince Trombetta Jr, Jennifer Hall (sax); John Proulx (p); Chris Conner (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 05.

 Metropole Rhubarb R/R 103-2 Barone; Pete DeSiena, Steve Huffsteter, Lee Thornburg (t); Bill Booth, Craig Gosnell, Dick Hamilton, Charles Loper (tb); Keith Bishop, Kim Richmond, Vince Trombetta, Ernie Watts, Brian Williams (sax); John Proulx (p); Joel Hamilton (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 3/06.

Barone is one of those guys who underpins the West Coast music business without often rising into public prominence. More's the pity, since there's more intelligent musicianship on these albums than you'll find in whole racks at the record store. Donte's was one of the few places where the big-band flame was kept alight during the rock ascendancy. The rehearsal band documented on the VSOP disc sounds like it has excellent pedigree and cuts like 'My Melancholy Baby' and 'The Non-Viennese Waltz Blues', both extended performances, are absolutely top drawer.

Just to prove what Mike's voice on the phone can pull off, he has Shelly Manne as well as brother Gary on Blues And Other Happy Moments and the sharp-eyed will spot other first-rank names – not least Ernie Watts's – among the personnels. The session was released as a Palo Alto LP in 1979 and like the earlier stuff has been missing, presumed dead, ever since. The emphasis throughout is on big, swinging arrangements. The impact isn't quite as great on the small-group session, though the musicianship is impeccable and the swing is faultless; all that's lacking is the solo substance which is essential when there isn't the weight of a full orchestra to carry the idea. Shelly Manne has some nice moments on the closing 'Almost Blues' and the little-known Theo Saunders plays well on 'Beef Stew', though he's interrupted by an unexpected fade. The 2005-vintage band sounds great, but the recording is a bit flat by comparison even with the '60s stuff and that dents its appeal a little. The later record packs more punch for some reason – better charts, maybe. Either way, it's mystifying why this stuff isn't better known.

Dan Barrett (born 1955)

TROMBONE, CORNET

Born in Pasadena, he played in revivalist groups before moving to NY in 1983 and working with Benny Goodman and Buck Clayton. A mainstream sideman par excellence.

 Jubilesta! Arbors ARCD 19107 Barrett; Ray Sherman (p); David Stone (b); Jake Hanna (d). 12/91–2/92.

 Reunion With Al Arbors ARCD 19124 As above, except add Al Jenkins (tb, v); Rick Fay (cl, ss, ts). 3/93.

He doesn't sound much like Teagarden, but his manner makes one think of the great man; he plays a melody with a singer's grace and vibrancy. The earlier session is beautifully done, horn and rhythm section in simple, effective empathy, but the drowsy material takes the edge off, and even when he picks up the plunger mute, Barrett doesn't really push himself. Reunion is primarily a comeback gig for the octogenarian trombonist. Jenkins sounds unsurprisingly slow and careful, but the music still goes off at an agreeable lilt and, with Barrett sticking to cornet this time, the front line has a pleasing balance.

(*) Moon Song Arbors ARCD 19158 Barrett; Bryan Shaw (t, c); Scott Robinson (cl, as, ts, bsx); Brian Ogilvie (cl, ts); Dave Frishberg (p, cel); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Joel Forbes (b); Jeff Hamilton (d); Rebecca Kilgore (v, g). 12/95.

This is lovingly crafted out of a fine and unhackneyed list of songs and lifted up an extra notch by the presence of Becky Kilgore, who takes six excellent vocals. She isn't on the old Billie Holiday chestnut 'Miss Brown To You', but the band makes a beautiful job of it. Nice detail from the horns, even Robinson's dyspeptic bass saxophone.

(*) Melody In Swing Arbors ARCD 19191 Barrett; Ray Sherman (p); Eddie Erickson (g, bj); Dave Stone (b); Jeff Hamilton (d); Ed Slauson (perc). 7–10/97.

A top-notch performance from a starting position that is hardly at the height of fashion: trombone with rhythm, and a set of mainstream obscurities. Not all that obscure, to be sure, but 'I'm Nobody's Baby' and 'My Mother's Eyes' are hardly hit-parade material today. Barrett uses plunger, mel-o-wah and old-felt-hat mutes on different tunes, plays 'What Is This Thing Called Love?' as a yawning lament, but gets almost boppishly freaky on 'Besame Mucho'. The band is attentive and admirable.

(*) Blue Swing Arbors ARCD 19232 Barrett; Jon-Erik Kelso (t); Brian Ogilvie (c, ts); John Smith (ss, as); Ray Sherman (p); Eddie Erickson (g, bj, v); Joel Forbes (b); Jeff Hamilton (d); Rebecca Kilgore (v). 9/99.

 International Swing Party Nagel Heyer 9067 As above, except omit Kelso, Ogilvie, Smith, Sherman, Kilgore; add Tom Baker (t, tb, as, ts), Scott Robinson (cl, as, ts, normaphone), Chris Hopkins (p). 10/00.

Another immaculate show of small-group swing, with just enough players to give it the feel of something bigger than average and with the chops and knowledge to transcend the most obvious clichés. There's a sense that Barrett and his colleagues may already have taken this kind of thing as far as it can go, but even as a repertory exercise this has enough class to avoid the pitfalls.

A new label (at last) at the turn of the decade/millennium, but no sign of a radical new direction. The Nagel Heyer is just another live show that dusts off material – 'Early Session Hop' and 'Hindustan' – which might just count as 'neglected', if the entire genre hadn't lain all but untouched for so long. The sound is a bit rough.

 Harlem Nagel Heyer Barrett; Engelbert Wrobel (cl, ts); John Smith (ss, as, v); Chris Hopkins (p); Christian Raymond (b); Oliver Mewes (d). 11/00.

The title and cover suggest that maybe Barrett's trying to give old material a contemporary 'relevance', whatever that is. In truth, the formula is pretty much as before, with a couple of mossy classics ('Haven't Named It Yet' was a Charlie Christian–Lionel Hampton collaboration), two Harlem-referencing Ellington tunes and a couple of nice originals from Hopkins and Wrobel. Barrett trumpets with confidence, but he needs a more convincing schtick.

Also, in brief:

 Two Sleepy People Arbors ARCD 19116. 2/94.

A good-natured stroll with John Sheridan (p) that could do with one or two peaks.

 In Australia Arbors ARCD 19143. 10/94.

With a local crew and some guest spots from cornetist Bob Barnard.

(*) Being A Bear Arbors ARCD 19228. 9/99.

An animated soundtrack, it outplays most cartoon music, but by itself is nothing special.

Bill Barron (1927–89)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Elder brother of pianist Kenny, he was already in his 30s when he made his debut on Cecil Taylor's* Love For Sale*. Made few recordings of his own as leader.

(*) Modern Windows Suite Savoy 92878 Barron; Ted Curson (t); Jay Cameron (bs); Kenny Barron (p); Eddie Khan, Jimmy Garrison (b); Pete LaRoca, Frankie Dunlop (d). 2–6/61.

 Now, Hear This! Fresh Sound FSRCD 323 Barron; Ted Curson (t); Kenny Barron (p); Ronnie Boykins (b); Dick Berk (d). 64.

The Savoy brings together the Suite with The Tenor Stylings Of Bill Barron, although only the title-piece of the former is included. Both sessions are a striking departure from hard-bop convention. Barron's writing, involving modal forms, blues and – in the 'Suite' especially – some queer Mingus-like tonalities, sounds like little else that was going on at the time. Both he and Curson register strongly as improvisers; listen to their contrasting approaches to the ostinato section of 'Ode To An Earth Girl'. Cameron, absent on the second session, is rather less impressive. Both were poorly recorded by Savoy and Kenny's piano is so far back in the mix as to be inaudible. But for Bill's playing alone, this is a vivid and valuable document.

Now, Hear This! drifted around on vinyl for years. The originals are a provocative lot: 'Big Bill' a strutting boogie march, 'The Leopard' wringing everything out of a central chord, 'Dwackdi Mun Fudalick' a Messengers-like shuffle. Some of the tracks feel a bit foreshortened, and 'In A Monastery Garden' is a queer choice for a cover, but for in-your-face intensity the horn solos are hard to beat, even if Curson sounds wayward at times.

Also, in brief:

(*) West Side Bossa Nova Dauntless DC 6004. 63.

Despite an amazing line-up – with Kenny Burrell (g), Henry Grimes (b) and Charli Persip (d) – this is faddish and dull.

(*) Compilation Cadence CJR 1119. 10/84–3/85.

Put together by Bill's widow from tapes made during his time at Wesleyan University. An interesting take on 'Giant Steps'.

Kenny Barron (born 1943)

PIANO, CLARINET

The younger brother of saxophonist Bill Barron, Kenny was a phenomenally talented youngster who developed into a graceful and gracious soloist, the perfect sideman, but also a leader of genuine presence and authority.

(*) At The Piano Prevue CD PR 3 Barron (p solo). 2/81.

This fulfilled producer Don Schlitten's long-standing desire to create an album of Barron playing solo; to realize it, he booked the same room, RCA Studio C, and the same nine-foot Steinway on which the likes of Artur Rubinstein and Van Cliburn had recorded. This is certainly classic jazz, if not classical music. The opening bars of 'Bud-Like' are already too warped and subversive to sustain that categorization. It's the first of four Barron originals on the set. 'Calypso' sketches in an enthusiasm which has come out ever stronger in later years, while 'Enchanted Flower' builds on an idea first encountered on Sunset To Dawn, and an extra track, 'Wazuri Blues', suggests how much Barron had been influenced at this stage by the African rhythmic investigations of Tootie Heath, whose creative presence can readily be discerned here.

Monk and Ellington are the other tutelary presences, with versions of 'Misterioso', 'Rhythm-A-Ning' and 'The Star-Crossed Lovers', but it's the lyrical style of Billy Strayhorn that most profoundly influences the melody lines and improvisations. The sound, as one might expect, is very full and lush, and perhaps a little too curtained and veneered for some of the funkier material. An ideal place to follow Barron's procedures and take a measure on his expressive character.

* Green Chimneys Criss Cross 1008 Barron; Buster Williams (b); Ben Riley (d). 7/83.

(*) Rhythm-A-Ning Candid CCD 79044 Barron; John Hicks (p); Walter Booker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 9/89.

Barron's group work is always characterized by a sensitive balance of resources, and these records range from the stretching and unconventional piano-trio format of Green Chimneys to outwardly more mainstream sets.

Hicks's presence on Rhythm-A-Ning is puzzling since he and Barron share so many strengths. Their collaboration doesn't quite strike sparks, largely because shared loyalties are less interesting than a degree of contention. Of the bunch, though, Green Chimneys is a neglected masterpiece with great character and a lovely balanced sound.

 The Only One Reservoir RSR CD 115 Barron; Ray Drummond (b); Ben Riley (d). 90.
(*) The Artistry Of Kenny Barron Wave CD 34. Barron; Peter Ind (b); Mark Taylor (d). 3/90.
 Invitation Criss Cross 1044 Barron; Ralph Moore (ts); David Williams (b); Lewis Nash (d). 12/90.
(*) Lemuria–Seascape Candid CCD 79508 Barron; Ray Drummond (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/91.
 The Moment Reservoir RSR 121 Barron; Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 8/91.
(*) Confirmation Candid 79819 As above. 9/91.
 Live At Bradley's Sunnyside 3002 As above. 4/96.
 Live At Bradley's II: The Perfect Set Sunnyside 3031 As above. 4/96.

Some of the '80s work is disappointing, but, like many musicians of his generation, Barron had a sudden boost at the start of the new decade. Invitation is well worth having. A highlight is Barron's own 'And Then Again' (that's the way he plays, setting out an idea, stating its converse, trying it out on the band if he has one, and then, as often as not, replacing it with the second subject or counter-melody rather than merely recapitulating). It's a brisk blues with the strong bebop overtones Barron brings to most of his work. There is much the same mix of inputs on the Wave CD, which was recorded on a memorable night at the Bass Clef club in London. Barron was in storming form and the long readings of 'Like Someone In Love', 'Body And Soul' and 'Lover Man' stand out in the work of recent years, suggesting that the only way to capture the quicksilver genius of this artist is to catch him in concert and unawares.

The trio on Lemuria–Seascape also features some good original material. The two title-tunes, at top and bottom of the programme, are more impressionistic than usual, though the rhythm section keeps the music driving forward. Riley's brushwork is prominently featured on 'Have You Met Miss Jones?'. The same 'and then again ...' effect transforms Monk's 'Ask Me Now' into an altogether less spiky number. Lemuria–Seascape is one of Barron's most attractively romantic sessions, a lighter and less-rooted conception. Though none of them scales the heights, there are of course good things on almost all of these records, and Barron, who has suffered the kind of critical invisibility that comes with ubiquity, shouldn't be overlooked.

The Moment is another excellent set, with a surprise place for Sting's 'Fragile', which Kenny also recorded later with Regina Carter. The trio can't be faulted on any count and there is some terrific interplay on Gigi Gryce's 'Minority', the hard-edged opener that precedes 'Fragile'. That's a pretty strong and eye-opening gambit and the rest of the album lives up to it.

Confirmation consolidated what was to be Barron's most effective small group. There are epic readings of 'East Of The Sun' (particularly fine work from Drummond on that) and 'Embraceable You', but the fast bopper 'Oleo' is equally good and there is a nice take of 'All God's Chillun Got Wings'. Slightly boxy live sound in comparison with the Bradley's set, but nothing that will mar enjoyment of a fine trio set.

The Greenwich Village club is a favourite with pianists and Barron's 1996 residency was well attended by fans and fellow-players alike. This is an object lesson in how to build an effective piano trio set. Opening with 'Everybody Loves My Baby' gives the trio a chance to bed in, establishing Drummond's big, rounded bass-lines and Riley's intricate accompaniment, before Barron takes them off on a searching read of Miles Davis's 'Solar'. The pace changes with 'Blue Moon', but the real tear-jerker is James Williams's 'Alter Ego', a challenging piece that none the less wears its heart on its sleeve. The sureness of Barron's touch is nowhere clearer than on the closing 'Canadian Sunset', which gives the old Gimbel and Heyward groaner a fresh and unhackneyed reading. The sound isn't perfect, but Sunnyside have preferred to extract a bit of live atmos, even at the expense of clarity here and there – some of Riley's heavier dynamics are slightly distorted – and that's exactly what you look for in a live club date.

The second selection isn't quite up to the same standard, despite the rather OTT title, but it's distinguished by a fantastic unaccompanied version of Monk's 'Shuffle Boil' and long versions of 'Twlight Song' (a lovely Latin tinge) and 'You Don't Know What Love Is'. So well worth having.

* But Beautiful Steeplechase SCCD 31295 Barron; Joe Locke (vib) N.D.

The Steeplechase website refers to one of the tracks as 'Single Pedal Of A Rose', which makes a perverse kind of sense, for Barron's use of dynamics, damped notes and sustains is never more evident than on this lovely duo with vibist Locke. A set of romantic standards, played with authority and relaxed conviction. 'You Don't Know What Love Is' and the title-piece are almost symphonic in conception, with Locke's arpeggiated chords sounding like a whole string section. We've always had some doubts about piano–vibes combinations, but this one is exquisite.

(*) Freefall Uptown/Universal 549706 Barron; Regina Carter (vn). 00.

Carter and Barron had gigged a couple of times in New York before this disc was cut, which explains the easy rapport between them, evident right from the opening 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise'. It also gets them through some tricky moments on Hodges's 'Squatty Roo', Shorter's 'Footprints' and Monk's 'Misterioso'. The title-piece is a free improvisation, quite boldly executed; but, perhaps with an eye to a more commercial audience, there is a cover of Sting's Green anthem, 'Fragile'. So far, so good; but why our relatively lowly rating? Simply because repeated listens to Freefall have left us largely unmoved and unstirred. It's effortlessly competent and thoroughly musical, but it lacks a certain saving passion.

 Canta Brasil Sunnyside 3005 Barron: Anne Drummond (f); Romero Lubambo (g); Nilson Matta (b); Duduka da Fonseca (d). 2/02.

The same charge might be levelled at this Latin swinger, but it does at least manage to swing. The members of Trio Da Paz give Barron a silky platform for some lovely melodic explorations. Nilson Matta's own 'Paraty' (a Brazilian town rather than a misprint) is a highlight and Lubambo and da Fonseca contribute effective tunes of their own. The guitarist's 'Bachaio' is a clever tribute to Bach, while the drummer's 'Dona Maria' sounds as if they've shortened the metre slightly, but the subliminal slippage just adds to its charm, and to the effectiveness of Barron's unusually spacious playing. Not for all tastes, but a very attractive record.

 Images Sunnyside 3021 Barron; Anne Drummond (as, f); Stefon Harris (vib); Kiyoshi Kitagawa (b); Kim Thompson (d). 10/03.

There are some treasures here. Barron's own 'Jasmine Flower', with its faintly oriental cast, becomes a fascinating dialogue with Harris, each player leaving space for the other, each exploring different aspects of the melody. Bud Powell's 'Hallucinations' receives an unexpectedly sanguine reading, with altered chords in the middle section, while Wayne Shorter's 'Footprints' is a Latin delight. We like Anne Drummond's playing more and more: elegant, unshowy and always musical. Harris is in fine form and the rhythm section mesh accurately and with feeling.

 Super Standard Venus 10632 Barron; Jay Leonhart (b), Al Foster (d). 7/04.
An elegant standards set, of a kind Barron has been turning in for years. One senses his growing impatience in recent years with standard bebop phrasing and 4/4 metres, and in Leonhart and Foster he has colleagues who are equally interested in breaking up those familiar forms and boundaries. Sample 'Willow, Weep For Me' here. Whether you think it was written by Ann Ronell or by George Gershwin as a gift for Ann, you've never heard it quite like this. A beautiful, subtle reinterpretation of a hoary old tune.

Dave Barry

DRUMS

A busy British sideman, coming into his own at last.

 Precious Time Trio Records TR575 Barry; Steve Waterman (t); Don Weller (ts); John Donaldson (p); Arnie Somogyi (b). 8/06.
Though he's no spring chicken, Barry doesn't entirely avoid the tyro's tendency to over-pack a debut disc with the very cleverest of his ideas. There might be another reason, though. A relatively dull straight-time player, Barry's always most interesting when the metres are more complex. 'Jiggery Pokery', one of seven originals, is in a quirky 5/4 that gives the leader no problem whatever. Former employer Weller contributes the other compositions, though he's rather diffident about soloing. The others play well, with Waterman in exceptionally good form, but it's Barry's date and he makes the most of it.

Bruce Barth (born 1958)

PIANO

Unassuming post-bop pianist.

 Don't Blame Me Double-Time DTRCD 129 Barth; Ed Howard (b); Billy Drummond (d). 6/97.
 Hope Springs Eternal Double-Time DTRCD 167 Barth; Steve Wilson (ss, as, f); Ed Howard (b); Adam Cruz (d). 98.
 Somehow It's Time Double-Time DTRCD 168 Barth; Terell Stafford (t); Adam Kolker (ts); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Billy Hart (d); Duduka Fonseca (perc). 2/00.
Barth balances an earnest pianism with a fine touch. He doesn't exactly caress the keys, but he dislikes banging the piano and each disc has a mellifluous quality as a result. When he plays Monk's 'Evidence' on the trio album, even though the composer is clearly an influence on his own writing, it comes out rather bland and forceless. The two ballads at the heart of the record, 'Song For Alex' and 'For Clara', are the best things here.

The live second record, taped at Visiones, showcases Barth the composer and some challenging modern charts that look back to the piano literature of the '60s, with Hancock more prominent than Monk in the mix. Ironically, it's Steve Wilson's 'The Epicurean' which steals the show, a delicious funky line.

Somehow It's Time returns to a horns and rhythm setting and feels crowded some of the way. 'Tom Tom Thing' is a Herculean group performance, reminiscent of a Coltrane ensemble, and makes the following 'Estate' seem like a drink of water. A couple of Monk tunes confirm his allegiance; three separate takes of 'Criss Cross', the first two no more than a chorus each, then a more detailed examination.

 Live At The Village Vanguard Max Jazz MXJ 205 Barth; Ugonna Okegwo (b); Al Foster (d). 8/02.
(*) East And West Max Jazz MXJ 201 As above, except add Terell Stafford (t, flhn); Steve Wilson (ss, as, cl); Adam Kolker (ts, bcl); Sam Newsome (ss). 12/00.
The ensemble set is more carefully thought out and considered than its predecessors but is not yet the breakthrough record Barth seems capable of delivering. The horns are used more sparingly than the personnel perhaps suggests, and the basic anchor of the group is the trio which is featured without winds on a couple of tracks. Barth seems anxious to show himself off in very different contexts and with a self-conscious change of pace. 'The Lexter' is a hard-driving original which strongly features both Stafford and Wilson. 'Sundown Time' is arranged for clarinets and has more of a midnight feel, with Kolker groaning away mournfully at the back.

The trio disc is much more consistent in tone and delivery, as might be expected of a live project. Foster is a model of attention, providing a structure to Barth's curiously unrhythmic approach and Okegwo delivers a strong but flexible harmonic basis. Monk again, with 'Evidence', a free-ish 'San Francisco Holiday' and 'Let's Call This'.

Also, in brief:

 Where Eagles Fly Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 090. 11/99.
Some fresh playing here, despite a dull piano. The familiar nod to Monk is 'San Francisco Holiday' this time.

 American Landscape Satchmo 40. 3/00.
A rare chance to hear him play solo. Starts on a high and stays there all the way to the Quaker hymn 'Simple Gifts'. His take on Powell's 'Parisian Thoroughfare' is filtered through Chick Corea.

Gary Bartz (born 1940)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, SOPRANINO SAXOPHONE, CLARINET, FLUTE, WOOD FLUTE, PERCUSSION

Born in Baltimore, he studied at Juilliard and Peabody and played with hard-bop bands in the '60s before a stint with Miles Davis in 1970. Tried an increasingly dissipated fusion, but moved back to acoustic hard bop in the '80s. Has lately taken to acting and production, and freelances as he pleases.

 Libra / Another Earth Milestone MCD 47077 2 Bartz; Jimmy Owens, Charles Tolliver (t, flhn); Pharoah Sanders (ts); Albert Dailey, Stanley Cowell (p); Richard Davis, Reggie Workman (b); Billy Higgins, Freddie Waits (d). 5/67–6/68.
A slightly lumpy pairing of Bartz recording for Milestone, mismatched not just because the two groups are so different but because the saxophonist's interest in mystical science-fiction never quite seems to blend with his raw blues phrasing. The second album, with its roster of avant-gardists, is a more satisfactory blend, and Tolliver turns in some wonderful throaty horn. The version of 'Lost In The Stars' is well worth having, but also worth comparing with 'Cabin In The Sky' on the earlier half of the disc, where Bartz really doesn't seem to know quite what he's trying to do with this new hybrid sound.

 Harlem Bush Music – Taifa / Uhuru BGP CD 108 Bartz; Juni Booth (b); Harold White (d); Nat Bettis (perc); Chief Bey (v). 11/70–1/71.

(*) JuJu Street Songs/ Follow The Medicine Man Prestige PRCD 24181 Bartz; Chief Bey (p, perc, v); Herbert Eaves (p); Herbert Centeno (g); Stafford James (b, perc, v); Howard King (d, perc, v). 10/72–6/73.

* I've Known Rivers And Other Bodies Prestige 66001 As above, except omit Bey, Centeno. 7/73.

Bartz reversed the usual tendency for instrumentalists to be influenced by the dominant saxophone sound of the day. He was more obviously affected by brass-players, mainly Lee Morgan and Grachan Moncur III, with whom he studied. His precocious talents won him a place in the Jazz Messengers, though by this time Bartz had already formed his NTU Troop, a group which changed rapidly in style over succeeding years.

At the start of the '70s he was recruited to Miles Davis's electric band, a prominent gig which did much to harden up what was already a strong interest in Afro-funk. Specializing, as he had from his early years, in soprano, he developed an affecting if unadorned delivery which on the earlier disc (pairing two albums, Taifa and Uhuru under the Harlem Bush Music title) sounds unaffectedly original. JuJu Street Songs is much less clearly defined, a disappointing follow-up; even paired with Follow The Medicine Man – minus one track – it's by no means an impressive showing and Bey's vocals will grate on all but the most spiritually inclined.

The live I've Known Rivers was recorded at Montreux and catches a working group in top form. Some of Bartz's own best playing is here, but it's the interaction of a little-known rhythm section that really impresses, with King in particularly fine form. A long version of 'JuJu Man' has him wailing fiercely over a tense metre. Eaves and James contribute a tune apiece, but this is emphatically Bartz's group and he stands out strongly from start to finish.

Bartz's reputation was somewhat eclipsed in the years that followed. He made a fairytale album for kids, called Singerella, and was active in politics and education. There was no sign that he had much appetite for jazz, and it was widely thought that his early promise (which had also included stints with Woody Shaw and Max Roach) would go no further.

 Music Is My Sanctuary Blue Note 80733 Bartz; Ray Brown, Eddie Henderson (t); George Cables (p); Larry Mizell (ky, v); Juewet Bostick, David T. Walker, John Rowin, Wah Wah Watson (g); Welton Gite, Curtis A. Robertson (b); James Gadson, Howard King, Nate Neblett (d); Mtume, Bill Summers (perc); Syreeta Wright (v). 77.

It would be churlish to waste too much invective on music of such charm and energy, and it's worth saying that Bartz was something of a pioneer in trying to make jazz work alongside disco. However, this isn't an album that has worn well, and despite its club cachet it's unlikely to spend a lot of time on your machine. Larry Mizell's arrangements are big, over the top and endlessly danceable, but even with some fine soloists in the roster there's little room for creative improvisation of any sort here. We're secretly fond but publicly have to be stern and dismissive.

(*) Monsoon Steeplechase SCCD 31234 Bartz; Butch Lacy (p); Clint Houston (b); Billy Hart (d). 4/88.

(*) Reflections Of Monk Steeplechase SCCD 31248 Bartz; Eddie Henderson (t); Bob Butta (p); Geoff Harper (b); Billy Hart (d); Jenelle Fisher, Mekea Keith (v). 11/88.

In the early '70s Bartz was collecting poll wins like beer mats. By the end of the decade he was playing drab pop, a shift of idiom legitimized to a degree by the sponsorship of Miles Davis, but lacking the boss's innate musicality.

Bartz had been picked out as a possible successor to Jackie McLean; while any such comparison went out of the window in the '70s, it was to return when, at nearly 50, Bartz began to record jazz again. Both of these albums are a good deal more tentative than the run of live gigs at the time. There is a fine 'Soul Eyes' on Monsoon, but the Monk covers are slightly robotic despite strong contributions from Henderson. The superadded vocals on 'Monk's Mood' and 'Reflections' were a mistake – Jenelle Fisher is certainly no Abbey Lincoln. However, enough of the Wunderkind survives to guarantee Bartz listenability, if not much more than that.

(*) West 42nd Street Candid CCD 79049 Bartz; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); John Hicks (p); Ray Drummond (b); Al Foster (d). 3/90.

Just occasionally, when a saxophone-player climbs the stand at Birdland, a portly ghost in a pale suit wobbles out from the shadows and whispers in his ear. Bartz learned to be like Bird through Jackie McLean, but on this record he seems inclined to dig back deeper into the source material, and he plays like a man inspired. 'It's Easy To Remember' becomes a huge romantic edifice, from which he soars into 'Cousins' and a surprisingly Coltrane-ish 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes'. Hicks is the best piano-player Bartz has come across in years, and Al Foster sends little whiplash figures along the line of the metre, coaxing the three main soloists on to even better things. Slightly exhausting, in the way a hot club set teeters between euphoria and growing weariness, but a more than welcome confirmation of Bartz's long-latent qualities. Strongly recommended.

* There Goes The Neighborhood! Candid CCD 79506 Bartz; Kenny Barron (p); Ray Drummond (b); Ben Riley (d). 11/90.

His finest hour. The opening 'Racism' is a boiling blues, an original played with an increasingly noticeable Coltrane inflexion. The first of two Tadd Dameron compositions, 'On A Misty Night' was originally recorded in the mid-'50s in a band that included Coltrane; the mid-point of the set is a severe interpretation of 'Impressions'. Bartz's homage isn't limited to a growing repertoire of anguished cries and dissonant transpositions. He has also paid attention to how the younger Coltrane framed a solo; working against the trajectory of Dameron's theme, but sitting comfortably inside the beat, he constructs an ascending line that culminates each time in a beautifully placed false note. The result is as lovely as it is unsettling.

Johnny Mercer's 'Laura' receives a serene and stately reading, with Drummond featured. Bartz's coda restatement is masterful. He tackles 'Impressions' in the most boiled-down way, with only minimal rhythmic support, concentrating on the basics. Barron returns to the foreground for 'I've Never Been In Love' and the closing 'Flight Path', his own composition. Throughout, his touch is light but definite, freeing his accompaniments of any excess baggage.

Though Charles McPherson and Bobby Watson have previously laid claim to Parker's alto crown, Bartz appears to have come into his kingdom at last. A superb album that will grace and enliven any collection; recorded live at Birdland, it's well balanced and free from extraneous noise.

 Children Of Harlem Challenge CHR 70001 Bartz; Larry Willis (p); Buster Williams (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/94.

There's nothing on Children Of Harlem in terms of emotional urgency or social polemic that Bartz hasn't already done on There Goes. The 1994 session is dedicated to Paul Laurence Dunbar, tagged with lines by Countee Cullen, another poet of the Harlem Renaissance, and kicked off with a version of the Amos'n'Andy theme. An unlikely parallel, maybe, but where Charlie Haden's Quartet West project works precisely because it is so determinedly unapologetic in its sentimentality, Bartz seems determined to throw in ironic nods and winks, quotes and antagonistic outbursts that don't really fit the mood of the thing. That said, the playing is generally good (if recorded a bit crudely by Rudy Van Gelder's usual standard), and the long 'If This Isn't Love' stands up with anything Bartz has done in recent years.

 Live @ The Jazz Standard: Volume 1 OYO 021 Bartz; Barney McAll (p); Kenny Davis (b); Greg Bandy (d). 99.

Given the vagaries of his recording career, it's not surprising to find Gary setting up his own label. This debut release keeps it basic (and inexpensive) with a club gig that's clearly intended to show off the leader's chops in an emphatic statement of intent. The material is harder and more boppish than has been the case in recent years. 'But Not For Me' has become a Bartz favourite and the reading here is again long and highly developed, while keeping the energy level high. Walter Davis Jr's 'Uranus' is a strong opener, and there are two originals, 'Soulstice' and 'Eastern Blues'. The former is an aggressive showstopper, the latter a more mysterious scalar conception that sees Gary execute curious shifts on his horn, almost as if he loses sight of the original line and has to do some intricate stepwork to get by.

Though Barney McAll isn't the most exciting of piano-players, the group is solid and palpably aware that its role is to keep the boss topped up with cues. Run your own label and you even get to do your own cover art. For the first issue on his own imprint, this one is modestly conceived. Nothing inside is quite as startling as Gary's liner-painting.

(*) The Montreal Concert DSM 3037 Bartz; Peter Leitch (g). 10/99.

An unusual duo but an extremely effective partnership in the event. Leitch is a superb harmonist with a profound affection for the great standards. He feeds Gary an endless flow of ideas on three long medleys, of which 'The Touch Of Your Lips' and 'But Not For Me' are the most impressive, a seemingly staunchless flow of ideas that will delight the casual listener but which will supply players with a pool of ideas. Neither of these men ever falls back on a conventional lick when he can attempt something a little more inventive, and whether on alto or soprano Gary always sounds as if he's looking for something more. Given the instrumentation, the record might sound rather mild at a distance. Heard attentively, though, it's as tough-minded as could be.

 African Lake Starling 475 Bartz; Jarek Śmietana (g); Cameron Brown (b); Jerzy Małek (d). 00.

Śmietana is one of the leading jazz musicians in Poland, a still burgeoning scene. This is a fine, funky session that doesn't make too many demands. 'Mr Soul' is the guitarist's dedication to his American guest (this strictly ought to be a Śmietana release, but Bartz is the real star) and it's very much in keeping with the rest of the album, which entertains consistently but starts to pall a little before the end. Bartz sounds in upbeat form, though, and seems to revel in Brown's rolling, sonorous bass.

Also, in brief:

* Anthology Soul Brother 23. 70–77.

An exceptionally good trawl through the NTU Troop material and beyond. Includes the live 'I've Known Rivers' and a fine closing 'My Funny Valentine'.

Count Basie (1904–84)

PIANO, ORGAN

Born in Red Bank, NJ, William Basie settled in Kansas City after experience in clubs and vaudeville. He joined the Bennie Moten band in 1929 and took over its leadership in 1935, moving to NY the following year. The orchestra became the most eminent of its day, with many important soloists and a uniquely swinging rhythm section characterized by Basie's own minimalist piano style. He also ran small groups within the band and cut back to an octet (1950–51) when the big band proved too expensive to run. European tours in the '50s and '60s restored his popularity, even after he had to lead the band from a wheelchair.

CORE COLLECTION

♛ * The Original American Decca Recordings MCA GRP 36112 Basie; Buck Clayton, Joe Keyes, Carl Smith, Ed Lewis, Bobby Moore, Karl George, Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Shad Collins (t); Eddie Durham (tb, g); George Hunt, Dan Minor, Benny Morton, Dicky Wells (tb); Jack Washington (as, bs); Caughey Roberts, Earl Warren (as); Lester Young, Herschel Evans (cl, ts); Chu Berry (ts); Claude Williams, Freddie Green (g); Walter Page (b); Jo Jones (d); Jimmy Rushing, Helen Humes (v). 1/37–2/39.

The arrival of the Basie band – on an East Coast scene dominated by Ellington, Lunceford and Henderson – set up a new force in the swing era and these records are still enthralling. Basie's Kansas City band was a rough-and-ready outfit compared with Lunceford's immaculate drive or Ellington's urbane mastery, but rhythmically it may have been the most swinging band of its time, based not only round the perfectly interlocking team of Basie, Green, Page and Jones, but also in the freedom of soloists such as Lester Young, Buck Clayton and Herschel Evans, in the intuitive momentum created within the sections (famously, Basie had relatively few arrangements written out) and in the best singing team of all the big bands. There are paradoxical elements – the minimalism of the leader's piano solos that is as invigorating as any chunk of fast stride piano, Green's invisible yet indispensable chording, the deceptive drift of the band – but all go to make up an orchestra unique in jazz.

This is a desert-island item for jazz collectors, but now deleted in Europe and consequently hard to find.

* Listen ... You Shall Hear Hep CD 1025 As above. 1–10/37.
* Do You Wanna Jump ...? Hep CD 1027 As above. 1–11/38.
* Basie Rhythm Hep CD 1032 As above, except add Harry James (t); Jess Stacy (p). 10/36–2/39.
 Jive At Five ASV AJA 5089 As above. 12/32–2/39.
* Count Basie 1936–1938 Classics 503 As MCA discs, except omit Collins, Edison, Wells, Berry, Humes. 10/36–1/38.
* Count Basie 1938–39 Classics 504 As MCA discs. 1/38–1/39.

There are too many individual records to cite here. Two significant early periods are covered by reissues, the Decca tracks (1937–9) and the subsequent recordings for Vocalion, Okeh and Columbia (1939–42). A contractual oddity is that Basie's first session – credited to Jones–Smith Inc and marking the astonishing debut on record of Lester Young – was made for Columbia. Two of them are on the hopscotch Jive At Five, but the first Classics CD has them all together. For a definitive study of the Decca sides, one must look to the Hep CDs, the last of which has an additional eight tracks under the nominal leadership of Harry James, who sounds better than on most of his own records. Otherwise, the outstanding figure is Herschel Evans, always at least as interesting as Young. There is little to choose between the transfers; the Hep remastering is sometimes a little more full-bodied, but the MCAs are smoother and brighter. Classics as usual go through the material chronologically and the transfers are unpredictable..

() Count Basie 1939 / () ... Volume 2 Classics 513 / 533 Basie; Buck Clayton, Ed Lewis, Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Shad Collins (t); Dicky Wells, Benny Morton, Dan Minor (tb); Earl Warren (as); Jack Washington (as, bs); Chu Berry (cl, ts on Volume 1 only); Buddy Tate, Lester Young (cl, ts); Freddie Green (g); Walter Page (b); Jo Jones (d); Jimmy Rushing, Helen Humes (v). 1–4/39; 5–11/39.

 Count Basie 1939–1940 Classics 563 As above, except omit Collins; add Al Killian (t); Tab Smith (ss, as). 11/39–10/40.

 Count Basie 1940–1941 Classics 623 As above, except add Ed Cuffee (tb); Paul Bascomb, Coleman Hawkins (ts). 11/40–4/41.

 Count Basie 1941 Classics 652 As above, except omit Hawkins; add Robert Scott, Eli Robinson (tb); Kenny Clarke (d); Paul Robeson, Lynne Sherman (v). 5–11/41.

 Count Basie 1942 Classics 684 As above, except omit Minor, Cuffee, Robeson; add Jerry Blake (cl, as); Caughey Roberts (as); Henry Nemo (v). 5/41–7/42.

Herschel Evans died in 1939, 'the greatest jazz musician I ever worked with', Jo Jones remembered. In many ways, the band was never the same again. Evans's partnership with Lester Young had given the reed section an idiosyncratic fluency, and his death marked the end of an era in which individual players combined to make the distinctive Basie sound. That said, Berry was a more than capable replacement and the orchestra was still approaching a technical peak. Other arrivals – including Tate, who replaced Berry in turn – also had an impact and new arrangers Andy Gibson and Buck Clayton had a beneficial effect. But Basie was already steeped in a routine of riffs, conventional harmonies and familiar patterns which even the soloists (including the disenfranchised Young) couldn't really transcend. Taken a few at a time, these tracks are fine, but they don't work so well in bulk.

Highlights to listen for are 'Evil Blues', a memorable band performance, Young's solo on 'Taxi War Dance' (both Classics 513), 'Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie' and the Kansas City Seven date of September 1939 (Classics 533), 'Blow Top' (563), Clayton's 'Love Jumped Out' and Helen Humes's delightful vocal on 'My Wanderin' Man' (623). Hawkins also makes a guest appearance. But the paucity of genuinely memorable compositions and Basie's own leaning towards ensemble punch and exactness over personal flair sow the seeds of decline.

Basie's 'solos' were actually made with the rhythm section, ten of them recorded over 1938 and 1939 and split over three volumes, his playing now shorn of its excitable stride elements and pared to the bone. It works best on the elegant 'How Long' and the almost playful feel accorded to 'Fare Thee Well, Honey, Fare Thee Well'. These also let the great rhythm section display its sophistication and accuracy away from the band, though the same context often exposes Basie's repetitiousness and false economy.

The next two Classics find the band playing with unimpaired vitality, but often grim material. Saving graces include 'Diggin' For Dex' and 'Platterbrains', and there is Robeson's one jazz appearance on 'King Joe'. The 1942 volume is considerably better: some excellent Rushing performances, eight blues titles by the Basie All-American Rhythm Section, and a final date that produced a minor classic in Clayton's 'It's Sand, Man'.

(*) The Jubilee Alternatives Hep CD 38 Basie; Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Al Killian, Ed Lewis, Snooky Young (t); Eli Robinson, Robert Scott, Louis Taylor, Dicky Wells (tb); Jimmy Powell, Earl Warren (as); Buddy Tate, Lester Young, Illinois Jacquet (ts); Rudy Rutherford (bs, cl); Freddie Green (g); Rodney Richardson (b); Jo Jones, Buddy Rich (d); Thelma Carpenter, Jimmy Rushing (v). 12/43–10/44.

 Count Basie 1943–1945 Classics 801 Similar to above, except add Buck Clayton, Al Stearns, Joe Newman (t); Lucky Thompson (ts); Jack Washington (bs); Shadow Wilson (d). 7/43–1/45.

Splendidly remastered, the studio 'alternatives' to AFRS Jubilee show broadcasts give a useful impression of a band in transition. Rich and Jacquet are in on some tracks and the brass section is largely different from previous recordings. Some good charts include Andy Gibson's 'Andy's Blues', Clayton's excellent 'Avenue C' and Smith's 'Harvard Blues', one of the best of the later Columbias. Classics picks up the story again with a group of V-Discs and one Columbia session.

 Count Basie And His Orchestra – 1944 Circle CCD 60 Similar to above. 1/44.

Cut in a single, three-hour session these are 16 transcriptions from the Lang–Worth service. Another solid Basie session with staples from his then current book, three rather gooey ballads sung by Earl Warren and only two features for Rushing. Hardly essential but the sound is crisp and fresh.

 Count Basie 1947 Classics 1018 Basie; Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Ed Lewis, Emmett Berry, Snooky Young (t); George Matthews, Dicky Wells, George Simon, George Washington, Eli Robinson (tb); Preston Love, Rudy Rutherford, C. Q. Price (as); Paul Gonsalves, Buddy Tate (ts); Jack Washington (bs); Freddie Green (g); Walter Page (b); Jo Jones (d); Jimmy Rushing, Bob Bailey (v). 5–12/47.

Basie signed a three-year contract with Victor in 1947, and the results have usually been regarded as a low-point in his discography. But this set of 21 tracks from that initial year presents some good Basie performances, even if they show little sign of any marked change from the formula that had been enveloping the orchestra over the previous seven years. Gonsalves, seldom remembered as a Basie-ite, turns in some strong solos, and a couple of tunes trim the band down to a small group without any loss of impact.

(*) America's #1 Band! Columbia 512892 4CD As various discs above. 11/36–11/50.

Hard to know whether to be enraged or elated by this. Columbia's Basie archive is superb, but instead of a comprehensive overview they've cherrypicked tracks from every era up to the 1950 Octet sessions, missing out many fine numbers in favour of an entire CD of airshots. These are interesting enough for Basie scholars, but most have been available before, over or under the counter, and most collectors will have them already. What is here is at least admirably remastered and packaged.

 Count Basie 1952 Classics 1281 Basie; Paul Campbell, Joe Newman, Wendell Culley, Charlie Shavers, Reunald Jones (t); Henry Coker, Benny Powell, Jimmy Wilkins (tb); Marshal Royal (cl, as); Ernie Wilkins (as, ts); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Paul Quinichette (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Jimmy Lewis (b); Gus Johnson (d); Bixie Crawford (v). 1–7/52.

 Count Basie 1952–1953 Classics 1387 Similar to above. 7/52–12/53.

 King Of Swing Verve 837433 As above, except omit Shavers, Wilkins, Davis, Quinichette, Lewis, Crawford; add Joe Wilder, Thad Jones (t); Henderson Chambers, Bill Hughes (tb); Johnny Mandel (btb); Frank Foster, Frank Wess (ts); Eddie Jones (b). 12/53–8/54.

Basie re-formed the big band and signed up to Norman Granz's Clef in 1952. The band sound happy, relaxed and confident, new charts by Neal Hefti help out and there's fresh blood in the solo ranks. The 1952 volume covers the first sessions for Granz and there are good moments for Newman and Quinichette. The sequel is split evenly between smallish group tracks (five, six or nine pieces) and the full orchestra, and includes some of the material featured on the Verve album. The sextet date of 15 December 1952 is mostly blues, with Basie comping at the organ. King Of Swing marks the arrival of the two Franks, the start of a vintage period which is still indifferently represented on CD.

 April In Paris Verve 521402 Basie; Reunald Jones, Thad Jones, Joe Newman, Wendell Culley (t); Benny Powell, Henry Coker, Matthew Gee (tb); Marshal Royal (cl, as); Bill Graham (as); Frank Foster (ts, f); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Eddie Jones (b); Sonny Payne (d); Joe Williams (v). 1/56.

The settling in of the 'modern' band. By taking arrangements from a new team – Neal Hefti the most important – Basie made the most of a formidable new reed section, trumpets that streamlined the old fire with absolute precision, and the first of a line of effusive drummers, Gus Johnson. Basie's belief in the primacy of the riff now led inexorably to arrangements that had screaming brass piled on top of crooning reeds on top of thunderous drums: it was a fearsome and, in its way, exciting effect. The beginning of this period is still not properly represented on CD. April In Paris is typical fare: bustling charts, leathery solos and pinpoint timing; and the Verve Master Edition has been handsomely restored in sonic terms, with seven alternative takes adding not much.

* The Complete Atomic Mr Basie

Roulette 793273 Basie; Joe Newman, Thad Jones, Wendell Culley, Snooky Young (t); Benny Powell, Henry Coker, Al Grey (tb); Marshal Royal, Frank Wess (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Frank Foster (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Eddie Jones (b); Sonny Payne (d). 10/57.

Basie opened his contract for Roulette with a showstopper. Complete with mushroom cloud on the cover, this was a Cold War classic. It was also the last great Basie record. He had Neal Hefti (who'd scored the hottest numbers in the band's recent book) do the whole record, and the arranger's zesty, machine-tooled scoring reached its apogee in 'The Kid From Red Bank', 'Flight Of The Foo Birds', 'Splanky' and the rest. But it also had a guest soloist in the great Lockjaw, whose splenetic outbursts gave just the right fillip to what might otherwise have been too cut-and-dried. Early pressings were flawed so this full, remastered version is doubly welcome.

 Basie Swings, Bennett Sings Roulette 93899 As above, except omit Jones; add Ralph Sharon (p), Tony Bennett (v). 1/59.

 The Best Of Basie – The Roulette Years Roulette 97969 Similar to above. 57–62.

 Atomic Swing Roulette 97871 Similar to above. 57–62.

These are as prosaic and sensible as the rest of the latter-day output. The meeting with Bennett will please his fans more than Basie admirers, but it's enjoyable enough. The rest of the catalogue seems to have disappeared for now, but these best-ofs are available, the latter more generous in scope, the former with better sound.

(*) Breakfast Dance And Barbecue Roulette 31791 Basie; Thad Jones, Joe Newman, Wendell Culley, Snooky Young, Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Al Grey, Henry Coker, Benny Powell (tb); Marshal Royal (as); Frank Wess (ts, as, f); Frank Foster, Billy Mitchell (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Eddie Jones (b); Sonny Payne (d); Joe Williams (v). 5/59.

A rare glimpse of a complete Basie show: flown in from a Birdland residency to play a one-night dance at a Miami record convention, the band sounds like it's having a good time. The original album has been extended to include a full 18 tracks, and there are expected highlights such as 'Splanky' and the Joe Williams features. Harry Edison gets up at the end to guest on 'One O'Clock Jump'. Lots of atmosphere.

 Basie At Birdland Roulette 97449 Basie; Sonny Cohn, Lennie Johnson, Thad Jones, Snooky Young (t); Henry Coker, Benny Powell, Quentin Jackson (tb); Marshal Royal (as, cl); Frank Wess (as, ts, f); Frank Foster, Budd Johnson (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Eddie Jones (b); Sonny Payne (d); Jon Hendricks (v). 6/61.

A good night at the 'Jazz Corner of the World'. The band had gone through some changes but this was a venue that got everyone's dander up (the legendary Pee Wee Marquette can even be heard leading the cheers) and the newer faces fit right in. Hendricks is no Jimmy Rushing, but his spot on 'Whirly Bird' is terrific and Foster and Johnson sound in good shape, too. There are repetitions of 'One O'Clock Jump', which was used to end individual sets, but no one will complain.

 Count Basie And The Kansas City Seven Impulse! 051202 Basie; Thad Jones (t); Eric Dixon (ts, cl, f); Frank Foster (ts, cl); Frank Wess (f); Eddie Jones (b); Sonny Payne (d). 3/62.

A small-group one-off for Impulse!, this had the ingredients for a classic: Basie returning to a combo setting, the material ('Shoe Shine Boy', 'Lady Be Good') recalling the earliest recordings with Lester Young, and a congenial gathering of eager Basie-ites. But Bob Thiele's overly cute production smothers all spontaneity, there's too much flute and much of the music sounds formulaic. A missed opportunity.

 Straight Ahead GRP Chessmates 05188 Basie; Al Aarons, Oscar Brashear, Gene Coe, Sonny Cohn (t); Dick Boone, Steve Galloway, Bill Hughes, Grover Mitchell (tb); Bobby Plater (as, f); Marshal Royal (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Eric Dixon (ts, f); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Norman Kennan (b); Harold Jones (d). 10/68.

Originally released on Dot, this is a stray entry from the late '60s entirely written and arranged by Sammy Nestico. 'Everything he does fits the band so well,' says Basie in the sleeve-notes, and it's too true; Nestico just sounds like another faceless Basie hack. That said, the band seems to like the situation and there is some spirited soloing to leaven the machine-like ensembles.

 The Board Of Directors & Annual Report MCA MCLD 19366 Basie; Al Aarons (t, flhn); Gene Coe, Nat Pavone, Ernie Royal, Oscar Brashear, Sonny Cohn (t); Richard Boone, Harlan Floyd, Grover Mitchell, Steve Galloway (tb); Bill Hughes (btb); Marshal Royal (cl, as); Bobby Player (as, f); Eric Dixon (ts, f); Frank Foster, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Norman Keenan (b); Sol Gubin, Harold Jones (d); Mills Brothers (v). 11/67–7/68.

Given the number of silly ideas that seemed to be flying across Basie's desk in the '60s, this collaboration is less absurd than many, except, that is, for 'I Did Rock And Roll Music', which really wasn't the Mills Brothers' kind of thing at all. Notably fine studio sound, ironically.

 Basie On The Beatles Ocium OCM 0022 Basie; Gene Goe, Sonny Cohn, Luis Gasca, Waymon Reed (t); Grover Mitchell, Mel Wanzo, Frank Hooks (tb); Bill Hughes (btb); Marshal Royal (cl, as); Bobby Plater (as, f); Eric Dixon, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); Norman Kennan (b); Harold Jones (d). 12/69.

Basie's second stab at a Beatles album is comparatively little known, but a lot better than the awful Basie's Beatles Bag. The arrangements by Bob Florence are surprisingly witty and inventive and the band sound in very good shape, even managing to make something palatable out of the dreary 'Something'.

 Basie Jam Pablo 2310-718 Basie; Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Zoot Sims (ts); Irving Ashby (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 12/73.

 The Bosses Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 821 As above, except add Joe Turner (v). 12/73.

 For The First Time /  For The Second Time Pablo 2310-712 / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 600 Basie; Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 5/74; 8/75.

 Satch And Josh /  ... Again Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 959 / 960 Basie; Oscar Peterson (p); Freddie Green (g); Ray Brown (b); Louie Bellson (d). 12/74.

(*) Basie & Zoot Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 822 Basie; Zoot Sims (ts); John Heard (b); Louie Bellson (d). 4/75.

 Jam Session At Montreux 1975 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 933 Basie; Roy Eldridge (t); Johnny Griffin (ts); Milt Jackson (vib); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Louie Bellson (d). 7/75.

 Fun Time Pablo 2310–945 Basie; Sonny Cohn, Frank Szabo, Pete Minger, Dave Stahl, Bob Mitchell (t); Al Grey, Curtis Fuller, Mel Wanzo, Bill Hughes (tb); Eric Dixon, Danny Turner, Bobby Plater, Jimmy Forrest, Charlie Fowlkes (reeds); Freddie Green (g); John Duke (b); Butch Miles (d); Bill Caffey (v). 7/75.

 Basie Big Band Pablo 2310-756 As above. 8/75.

(*) Basie And Friends Pablo 2310-925 Basie; Oscar Peterson (p); Freddie Green (g); Ray Brown, John Heard, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Louie Bellson (d). 12/74–11/81.

Norman Granz signed Basie to his new Pablo label and began taking down albums more prolifically than ever, some three dozen in the last ten years of Basie's life, with eight in the first 18 months. The old wizard was reborn. The Bosses was a fine beginning, setting Basie alongside Joe Turner, who is in mellow but not reticent mood. There are too many remakes of old hits, but the partnership was still strong and the horns aren't intrusive. Basie Jam was the first and best of a series of studio jams. The formula is predictable: fast blues, slow blues, fast blues, slow blues ... sort of fast blues. Basie plays minimally, as ever, but presides grandly from the rear, and there are entertaining cameos from the others. The Montreux jam is a bore, with Eldridge long past his best, but Fun Time, with the full band featured at the same event, is much better, the Basie machine firing on all cylinders. Basie Big Band was his first set for Pablo with the regular orchestra. Sam Nesticó offered no radical departures from the Basie method, but had had time to settle in since the Straight Ahead session and was starting to look for more interesting harmonies and section colours. There were some fine players in the band, with Butch Miles the least self-effacing of Basie's drummers, and Granz's dry studio sound suited the clean and direct lines very well.

As far as Basie the pianist went, he made his first trio album in For The First Time (repeating the formula the next year) and traded licks with Peterson, his stylistic opposite, in the amusing Satch And Josh; the sequel was good, too. Neither record was exactly a revelation, since Basie basically carried on in the style he'd played in for the last 40 years, but reinvigorated. Basie And Friends is a collection of out-takes from this period and slightly later.

One of the best of the Pablos is the meet with Zoot Sims. It's almost worth having just for the snorting blues choruses on 'Hardav'. Basie sounds over-ripe on organ for a wallow through 'I Surrender Dear', but Sims always has a swinging line to put down and the match was well made.

 Basie Jam No. 2 / (*) Basie Jam No. 3 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 631 / 687 Basie; Clark Terry (t); Al Grey (tb); Benny Carter (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Joe Pass (g); John Heard (b); Louie Bellson (d). 5/76.

 Kansas City Five Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 888 Basie; Milt Jackson (vib); Joe Pass (g); John Heard (b); Louie Bellson (d). 1/77.

The two jams are lesser editions of the previous formula though like most such records they have a moment or two when things start happening, mostly thanks to Carter and Davis. The small-band date from 1977 is better than most of the stuff taped that year, with the unpretentious pairing of Basie and Jackson on their inevitable programme of blues and jazz chestnuts so old they ought to be done to a crisp. The veteran campaigners still find a wrinkle or two. Especially warm: 'Frog's Blues'.

 Live In Japan 78 Pablo 2308-246 Basie; Pete Minger, Sonny Cohn, Nolan Smith, Waymon Reed (t); Mel Wanzo, Bill Hughes, Dennis Wilson, Alonzo Wesley (tb); Bobby Plater, Danny Turner (as); Eric Dixon (ts, f); Kenny Hing (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Freddie Green (g); John Clayton (b); Butch Miles (d). 2/78.

 Night Rider /  The Timekeepers /  Yessir, That's My Baby Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 688 / 790 / Pablo 2310-923 Basie; Oscar Peterson (p); John Heard (bb); Louie Bellson (d). 2/78.

 On The Road Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 854 Basie; Pete Minger, Sonny Cohn, Paul Cohen, Raymond Brown (t); Booty Wood, Bill Hughes, Mel Wanzo, Dennis Wilson (tb); Charlie Fowlkes, Eric Dixon, Bobby Plater, Danny Turner, Kenny Hing (reeds); Freddie Green (g); Keter Betts (b); Mickey Roker (d). 7/79.

 Get Together Pablo 2310-924 Basie; Clark Terry (t, flhn); Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Budd Johnson (ts, bs); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Freddie Green (g); John Clayton (b); Gus Johnson (d). 9/79.

The Japanese concert must have been a happy experience; the band sounds in excellent spirits and familiar charts take on a springier life. The sound is slightly constricted, so the crescendos aren't as wide-bodied as those on On The Road, another good live album of the period. The sheer wallop of 'Wind Machine' and 'Splanky' sums up the kind of unhindered and creaseless power that Basie's orchestra worked to secure. The three albums with Peterson are good enough on their own terms, but anyone who has either of the earlier discs won't find anything new here. Oscar carries much of the weight; Basie answers with patented right-hand fills and occasional brow-furrowing left-hand chords. It's Heard and Bellson who make the music happen. Yet another jam, Get Together, is redeemed by the great Budd Johnson, who adds a few felicitous moments.

 Kansas City Seven Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 690 Basie; Freddie Hubbard (t); J. J. Johnson (tb); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Joe Pass (g); John Heard (b); Jake Hanna (d). 4/80.
(*) Kansas City Shout Pablo 2310-859 Basie; Pete Minger, Sonny Cohn, Dale Carley, Dave Stahl (t); Booty Wood, Bill Hughes, Dennis Wilson, Grover Mitchell, Dennis Rowland (tb); Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson (as, v); Eric Dixon, Bobby Plater (as); Danny Turner, Kenny Hing (ts); John Williams (bs); Freddie Green (g); Cleveland Eaton (b); Duffy Jackson (d); Joe Turner (v). 4/80.
 Warm Breeze Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 994 As above, except omit Rowland, Stahl, Minger; add Bob Summers, Willie Cook, Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Frank Szabo (t); Harold Jones, Gregg Field (d). 9/81.
 Farmers Market Barbecue Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 732 As above, except omit Eaton, Jackson, Vinson, Jones, Turner; add Chris Albert (t); James Leary (b). 5/82.
 Me And You / (*) 88 Basie Street Original Jazz Classics OJC 906 As above, except omit Albert, Hing, Dixon, Plater, Field; add Steve Furtado, Frank Szabo (t); Eric Schneider (ts); Chris Woods (as); Dennis Mackrel (d). 2/83; 5/83.
(*) Fancy Pants Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1038 As above, except omit Furtado; add Jim Crawford (t). 12/83.
 Kansas City Six Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 449 Basie; Willie Cook (t); Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson (as, v); Joe Pass (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Louie Bellson (d). 11/81.
 Mostly Blues ... And Some Others Pablo 2310-919 Basie; Snooky Young (t); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Joe Pass, Freddie Green (g); John Heard (b); Roy McCurdy (d). 6/83.

Basie carried on, regardless of encroaching arthritis, eventually working the stage from an electric wheelchair. The big-band records from this patch are some of his best Pablos, for the simple reason that Granz was recording the band to more telling effect; studio mixes had improved, the weight and balance of the orchestra came through more smoothly and arrived with a bigger punch. The arrangements on the final albums are shared among various hands: Nestico on Warm Breeze and Fancy Pants, with other band members, Ernie Wilkins and Basie himself contributing elsewhere.

Warm Breeze is particularly shapely, with nicely melodic tunes from the arranger, a couple of Cook features and a guest spot for Edison on 'How Sweet It Is'. Me And You and Farmers Market Barbecue are split between full band and a smaller edition. The latter has a splendid 'Blues For The Barbecue' and fine tenor from Hing on 'St Louis Blues', while the former includes an over-ripe Wood solo on a dead slow 'She's Funny That Way'. The May and December 1983 dates are more routine, but any chance of mining a May/December joke is quashed by the sheer verve and professionalism of the playing. Vinson and Turner vie for attention on Shout and Six, with Basie refereeing calmly, but the two best records of the final period are probably the last pair. Seven features a cracking line-up, and though Hubbard sometimes goes too far and Hanna's cymbals are annoyingly busy, it makes for some steaming music. The latter is as slow, full-flavoured and hefty as Basie seemed to want his blues to be. Pass and the imperturbable Green make a memorable combination. The pianist does his stately usual.

Given that the big band as it stood under Basie in the final years was as sleek and hard as polished steel, the idea of a ghost band seems more plausible than an Ellington, Goodman or Herman survival group, and so it proved under the leadership first of Frank Foster, who by the beginning the following decade was himself an eminence in the music. The marque continued to produce fine, swinging ensemble jazz.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Count Basie Story Proper PROPERBOX 19 4CD. 11/36–11/50.
Basic coverage, some V-Discs and more idiosyncratic picks; 99 tracks in all.

 The Alternative Takes: Volumes 1–6 (1936–1940, 1940–1941, 1941, 1941–1945, 1945–1951, 1944–1952) Neatwork 2038 / 2045 / 2054 / 2058 / 2062 / 2066. 35–52.
Trainspotter stuff, in the main, but inevitably there are some fine variations and a few surprises, too.

(*) Basically Basie: Studio Dates 1937–1945 JSP 9022 4CD. 37–45.
Nice packaging of the early stuff, and decent sound.

(*) Count Basie And His Orchestra 1944 & 1945 Circle CCD 130. 1/44–2/45.
Another 17 transcriptions, but too many vocal tracks and unremarkable tunes.

(*) Count Basie 1945–1946 Classics 934. 2/45–2/46.
Undistinguished stuff for the most part: a V-Disc session (scratchy), a misguided date for strings and three others for Columbia. The studio version of 'Avenue C' is the main point of interest.

 Dance Sessions Jasmine 422 2CD. 1/52–8/54.
A typically professional job from the British label and nice sound, too.

 Verve Jazz Masters Verve 519819. 8/54–10/65.
Old favourites and obvious choices, but good.

 This Time By Basie / () Basie's Beatles Bag Reprise 45162 / Verve 557455. 4/63; 66.
Misguided attempts to make the Count go pop.

(*) Afrique RCA Victor Gold 74321 796182. 12/70.
Oliver Nelson's turn in the arranger's chair, and the strange spectacle of the Basie band tackling an Albert Ayler tune. Not great.

 I Told You So / (*) Prime Time Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 824 / Pablo 2310-797. 1/76; 1/77.
The second and third full-orchestra albums for Pablo: the first is solid, the second occasionally misfires.

 Montreux 77 / (*) Jam Montreux 77 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 77 / 379. 7/77.
Stale and routine.

* The Golden Years Pablo 4419 4CD. 73–83.
Not really golden, but not silver or gilded either, just a late assertion of powers, impressively sampled here.

... plus countless other live dates, airshots and compilations on labels such as Definitive, Sounds Of Yesteryear, Jasmine, Verve.

BassDrumBone

GROUP

Durable association that combines avant-garde sensibility with a more accessible approach.

* Wooferlo Soul Note 112187 Ray Anderson (tb); Mark Helias (b); Gerry Hemingway (d, perc). 11/87.
 Hence The Reason Enja ENJ 9322 As above. 3/96.
(*) The Line Up Clean Feed CF065 As above. 05.
What's not to like? Like the Clusone 3, this group seems less like an off-duty fun band than a natural alliance of highly eclectic players who bestride a whole range of contemporary styles. Anderson's blarting trombone, with its irresistibly funky subtexts; Helias's subtle swing; Hemingway's ability to ride abstraction while maintaining an implicit pulse: put them together and the results are always interesting. There is a hefty gap between the first of these, with its rich title-track and exuberant pay-off 'Struttin' With Some Mutton', and its sequel, but the formula on Hence The Reason is exactly the same, with an emphasis on tight group playing, not too much extended soloing, and a nice mix of abstract ideas and bluesy groovers. Again, there's a crowd-pleasing curtain-piece with Hemingway's 'When Zweeble Walked By'.

The most recent, a further decade on again, has a more thoughtful pitch, not so much chastened as richly experienced. The wah-wah intro to 'And Then Some' is the most obvious instance, though there is a similarly bluesy cast to much of the remainder. Hemingway in some moods resembles Barry Altschul (who worked with Anderson in earlier years), but more and more the group has its own language, and it's to be hoped they don't feel the need to wait another ten years before recording again.

Django Bates (born 1960)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS, TENOR HORN

After stints with London bands Borderline and Zila, Bates worked with his own Human Chain and was a central player in the big band Loose Tubes. Became an international property in the '90s.

 Summer Fruits (And Unrest) Winter & Winter 919065 Bates; Sid Gauld, Chris Batchelor (t); Roland Bates (tb); Richard Henry (btb); Eddie Parker (f, bf); Sarah Homer (cl, bcl); Iain Ballamy (ss, as); Steve Buckley (ss, as, bcl); Mark Lockheart (ts); Barak Schmool (ts, picc, bsx); Julian Argüelles (bs); Stuart Hall (g, vn, bjo); Steve Watts, Michael Mondesir (b); Martin France (d); Thebe Lipere (perc). 93.
 Autumn Fire (And Green Shoots) Winter & Winter 919069 Bates (p solo). 2/94.
(*) Winter Truce (And Homes Ablaze) Winter & Winter 919068 Similar to Summer Fruits. 2/95.
Summer Fruits alternates big-band arrangements with tracks from Bates's small group Human Chain. It's not an entirely successful combination and, for once, one feels a need for two discs to reflect what sound like rather different aspects of his musical personality. The vices of Loose Tubes are still in evidence: over-writing, a blokey exuberance and a callow suspicion of straightforward expression. Bates's dense scores and the pieces for Delightful Precipice (the big band) are thickly notated. They're undeniably lively, but the circus pieces, inspired by an earlier collaboration, are glibly ironic, and some of the most virtuosic scoring is lost in 'off-the-cuff' gestures. The Human Chain tracks, notably 'Food For Plankton (In Detail)' and 'Little Petherick' (which provides the best Bates solo of the disc) are much more coherent.

The solo piano record represents a significant extension. The textures are still too rich and busy, but still delightfully varied, and there are signs that he is achieving a better balance between full scoring and improvisational freedom. He does 'Giant Steps', as if to prove that he can and still make it sound like Django Bates, and of course a version of 'Autumn Leaves', just to make sense of the title.

Winter Truce contains some of the most nakedly emotional music Bates has released. There is still a touch of sophomoric joshing, and still some truth in the oft-repeated complaint that Bates hasn't advanced much since the precocious Loose Tubes debut, but this is at least a mature and poised record, divided as before between a big band and Human Chain.

(*) Like Life Storyville STCD 4221 Bates; Palle Bolvig, Jan Kohlin, Henrik Bolberg Pederssen, Benny Rosenfeld, Jens Winther (t, flhn); Vincent Nilsson (tb, bhn); Steen Hansen, Kjeld Ipsen (tb); Klaus Lohrer (btb); Axel Windfeld (btb, tba); Terje Aadne (frhn); Nikolaj Schultz (f, bf); Iain Ballamy, Christina Von Bülow , Tomas Franck, Michael Hove, Flemming Madsen, Uffe Markussen, Jan Zum Vorde (reeds); Nikolaj Bentzon (ky); Anders Chico Lindvall (g); Michael Mondesir, Thomas Ovesen (b); Martin France, Jonas Johansen (d); Ethan Weisgard (perc). 3/97.
Bates was the second Briton in three years to scoop the Jazzpar Prize. As always, the prize provides for a recording with the winner's own group and with the Danish Radio Jazz Orchestra. The longest single item is 'The Strange Voyage Of Donald Crowhurst', a haunting, haunted evocation of the lost round-the-world yachtsman. Bates turns the story into a bitter-sweet epic, a feature for his own peckhorn and for Markussen's tenor. Bracketing it are two shorter pieces, 'Misplaced Swans', which sounds like scaled-up Loose Tubes, and the anarchic 'The Importance Of Boiling Water', another horn feature around which he expatiates on the correct procedure for making tea.

The recording also featured a special Jazzpar version of Bates's band, Delightful Precipice, bringing in the estimable Ballamy, who solos beautifully on 'Tightrope' (alto), 'The Loneliness Of Being Right' and the more skittish 'Armchair March' (both on soprano). Other Britons who made the trip were bassist Mondesir and drummer France. One suspects the DRJO may have found Bates's charts a little wayward; some of the playing is stiff and 'correct', and there is an immediate loosening of tension on the Delightful Precipice tracks. The writing is as extraordinary as ever, though.

(*) Quiet Nights Screwgun screwu 70007 Bates; Iain Ballamy (sax, bass hca, lipo-sax); Michael Mondesir (b); Martin France (d, perc); Josefine Crønholm (v). 98.
A standards album seemed a good bet at some point in the near future, but it was a racing certainty that a Django Bates solo album wasn't going to be a run-of-the-mill affair. 'Hi Lilli Hi Lo' segues into an abstract 'Solitude', with Ellington's opening chords played on a 'prepared' piano, accompanied by Martin France's wooden percussion and what we take to be Ballamy's lipo-sax. Two originals, 'And The Mermaid Laughed' and 'Is There Anyone Up There?', are idiosyncratic Batesian soundscapes. The opening 'Speak Low' reveals Cronholm's skills as a standards singer. Later, on Jobim's 'Quiet Nights Of Quiet Stars' and 'Solitude', she is required to sing in a deadened monotone. 'Like Someone In Love' begins with electronic squawks, settles into a version Jimmy Van Heusen might just have recognized, before exploding into a punkish thrash and then vanishing in a sad repetition of the hook down a phone line. Django is even further off-mic on 'Over The Rainbow', a faraway, offstage vocal amid the birdsong and Sibelius chords.

Weighing in light at less than 45 minutes, Quiet Nights is nevertheless near perfectly pitched: a clever, wry album full of unexpected twists and turns and some full-on beauty as well.

Also, in brief:

 You Live And Learn (Apparently) Lost Marble Records 001. 10/03.
A lovely song-based collection, though Bates's perverse desire to turn every expectation, especially romantic ones, on its head continues to intrigue and annoy by turns. David Sanborn (as) guests.

Alvin Batiste (1932–2007)

CLARINET

A consistently overlooked figure in the avant-garde, perhaps because as a New Orleanian it was rather assumed that traditional jazz should be his turf. Worked in the mainstream as well, and with three other distinguished exponents in Clarinet Summit.

 Marsalis Music Honours Alvin Batiste Marsalis Music 0007
Batiste; Branford Marsalis (ts); Lawrence Fields (p); Russell Malone (g); Ricardo Rodriguez (b); Herlin Riley (d); Edward Perkins (d). 6/06.
Slim pickings for such an important musician. Batiste sounded very different to the few fellow-modernists who specialized in clarinet. He lacks the formality of John Carter (a Clarinet Summit colleague) and actually sounded rather more like Jimmy Hamilton (another). The fuss surrounding Don Byron's debutant recording was made all the more ironic by the recognition that Batiste was still alive and working but pretty much neglected by the mainstream.

This celebration, eight compositions by Batiste, a couple of others and a nice, spiky read of 'Skylark', was put together by former student Branford Marsalis, who guests on a few tracks. Of the original material, 'Bat Trad' is probably the most adventurous piece on show, though its line is so resolutely logical it almost denies its own venturesome spirit. 'Edith' is likeable, and shows off Fields well, while the ballad 'Everloving Star' gives Perkins an attractive vehicle. Batiste passed away less than a year after the recording, which gives it a nick-of-time feel and us a guilty sense of having overlooked someone rather special.

Milton Batiste (1934–2001)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VOCAL

Also from New Orleans, he played in R&B groups in the '50s and absorbed other styles, but remains primarily a traditional player.

 With The Rue Conti Band Lake LACD 31 Batiste; Mike Peters (t); Mick Burns (tb, v); George Berry (c, as, ts); Andy Young (bj, d); Terry Knight (b); Jim Young (tba); Ron Darby (d); Paul Adams (perc). 3/93.
The repertoire is right in the trad pocket, but with Clifford Brown as a major influence he is scarcely a conventional Louisianan brassman. Unpredictable rips and squashed notes mark his style, but he can also play severe, controlled trumpet. He's captured here, mid-tour and with a British group, and while the group stumble here and there, the playing is raffish and spirited. There are one or two overworked pieces, but surprises like Dudu Pukwana's 'Tula Sana' make up for them.

Stefano Battaglia (born 1966)

PIANO

Born in Milan and classically trained, he moves between free and post-bop structures.

 The Book Of Jazz: Volumes 1 & 2 Symphonia 707 / 708
Battaglia; Paolino Dalla Porta (b); Fabrizio Sferra (d). 5/00.
(*) Raccolto ECM 9870670 2CD Battaglia; Dominique Pifarély (vn); Giovanni Maier (b); Michele Rabbia (d). 9–12/03.
* Re: Pasolini ECM 1998-99 2CD Battaglia; Michael Gassman (t); Mirco Mariottini (cl); Dominique Pifarély (vn); Vincent Courtois, Aya Shimura (clo); Bruno Chevillon, Salvatore Maiore (b); Roberto Dani, Michele Rabbia (d). 4–7/05.
A good many recordings exist on Splasc(h) and have been covered in earlier editions, though some of these at least are difficult to track down now. The best of these are two discs' worth of Bill Evans interpretations and a fine trio (the well-named Sulphur) with Tony Oxley. There's a whiff of the pit around anything to do with Pier Paolo Pasolini and Battaglia's meditation on the great cinematic master is an indication of how much he draws inspiration from outside jazz, a very European approach that also suits the ECM aesthetic.

Battaglia's move to the label put a deeper focus on his music, after all the live and radio-tape releases he'd put out since 1987. The two-disc Raccolto features one trio with Maier and Rabbia and another where Pifarély replaces the bassist. These are unhurried episodes where every gesture seems suspended in still, cooling air, dissonance and rhythmical daring seamlessly integrated into abstract yet songful shapes. If anything, the pieces with violin are darker than the conventional trios: a recitative in memory of Luciano Berio reminds us forcefully of that master's vision.

Battaglia's own vision remains impressively of a piece. The repertory music on the two volumes of The Book Of Jazz – work by Monk, Shorter, Dolphy, Coleman, Haden, Swallow, Ellington, Gismonti, Silver, many others (book? encyclopaedia, more like) – is given exactly the same respectful treatment as the Evans oeuvre on the 1992 Splasc(h)es. These are not deconstructions, nor reinventions, but rather interpretations of such elegant understanding that they seem to reposition the originals. In fairness, the material on volume one stands up rather better than the other disc, which has a slightly rag-tag feel, and Battaglia's celebration of 'Something Sweet, Something Tender', 'Congeniality' and 'Nefertiti' (a tough line for a piano-player) is absolutely faithful to the original composers and played without undue 'personality'.

Which brings us back round to Pasolini, whose sense of personal identity always hovered on the edge of extinction. Pasolini's terrible murder remains an unanswered question in Italian culture, largely in that it snuffed out a writer, film-maker, political activist, poet and thinker who seemed to embody much of the Italianness of contemporary Italian culture in its most contradictory forms. Over two discs, Battaglia tries to give the life and work some kind of musical correlative. He opens with a wonderful song dedicated to Pasolini's muse, Laura Betti, continues with evocations of the Italian countryside as viewed through the prism of Pasolini's verse, and using a sextet with strongly canonical connotations establishes a dialogue between the formal and improvised, (neo-)classical and romantic elements of Pasolini's art.

The second disc, featuring players most closely associated with Louis Sclavis (Pifarély, again), has a more agitated and improvisational quality, culminating in the bleak sonics of 'Ostia', where Pasolini was gruesomely murdered on the beach. Following that, there is only a brief musical headstone and then silence. A demanding listen over two long discs, but absolutely essential modern music; whether all of it jazz or not hardly seems the issue.

Matt Bauder

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Chicago-based improviser, exploring remote sonic territory.

(*) Weary Already Of The Way 482 Music 1025 Bauder; Todd Margasak, Rob Mazurek (c); Jeb Bishop (tb); Aram Shelton (as); Fred Lonberg-Holm (clo); Jason Roebke (b). 01.
(*) Object 3 Locust 38 Bauder; Jason Ajemian (b). 03.

The second of these is an audio-vérité recording made on a back porch one night with noises-off contributing something – but nothing much – to an interesting but ultimately uninvolving dialogue, which was recorded on mini-discs, indexed and then randomly shuffled. It only lasts a little over half an hour, poor value for money, though possibly a relief for the uninvolved listener. The first is far more interesting. It's clear that Bauder listens to a lot of contemporary (or, more likely, '60s and '70s) radical composition and this seems to inform his aesthetic quite profoundly. Unfortunately (one would like to know how both these records sounded *un*shuffled), all of the material recorded by the sextet has been processed in the studio, though not so radically that some sense of the original does not survive. That being the case, the real interest of these four pieces lies less in Bauder's post-Cagean thinking than in the sheer excitement of his tenor sound, which is big, subtly inflected, physical and abstract by turns and always to the point. Mazurek and Lonberg-Holm are, of course, Chicago experimental stalwarts and they help bring real authority to this exciting record.

Conrad Bauer (born 1943)

TROMBONE, ELECTRONICS

Born in Halle, one of two trombonist brothers, Connie Bauer was a key player in the small group of East German improvisers at work from the end of the '60s. Although only infrequently sighted on record, he is one of those who helped form the improvising vocabulary for free-jazz trombonists.

 Toronto Tone Victo CD017 Bauer (tb, elec solo). 10/91.
* Three Wheels – Four Directions Victo CD023 Bauer; Peter Kowald (b); Günter Sommer (d, etc). 10/92.
(*) Bauer Bauer Intakt CD 040 Bauer; Johannes Bauer (tb). 9/93.
* Plie Intakt CD 037 Bauer; Ernst-Ludwig Petrowsky (as, cl, f); Ulrich Gumpert (p); Günter Sommer (d). 2/94.

Working out of the former East Germany for many years, Bauer is perhaps the least known of the great European trombone impressionists. Heard in successive years at Canada's Victoriaville Festival, he makes a good if less than outstanding account on these souvenirs of the occasions. The solo engagement finds him colouring his improvisations with a variety of electronics: chorus effects, loops, echo. Sometimes one feels that the FX are used for impressionistic rather than musical effect, although – as with similar projects by Bill Frisell or Eberhard Weber – the results can be entertaining enough to overcome doubts. As a plain soloist, Bauer can't match Paul Rutherford or Günter Christmann for sheer inventiveness, but his folksy blares and long, sung tones have their own impact.

With Kowald and Sommer he uses the unadorned slide trombone. There are four group improvs and a solo apiece: Sommer's soliloquy is merely silly, and his lumpy kind of momentum can hold the group back, but there is some excellent stuff on 'Trio Goes East' and 'Trio Goes North'. Kowald, as usual, is beyond reproach, and his arco solo is intense enough to blister paint.

Bauer Bauer is a duo concert with his brother Johannes, recorded in the room inside Leipzig's Monument to the Battle of Nations, where there's a natural 20-second echo. The results are almost predictably beautiful, given the sonorities involved, and it must have been a temptation to remain with the long-held notes and counterpoint of 'Dialog 1' and 'Dialog 4' for the whole set; but there is some taut, snickering interplay elsewhere, and the senior Bauer uses some electronics to spare and judicious effect on his solo (there are six duets and a solo apiece).

Like Careless Love below, Plie should properly be credited to the Zentralquartett, since this band of old cronies go under that name when working together. In the aftermath of free jazz (not to mention the DDR), the four players work through a bad-tempered kind of free bop that seems to blossom reluctantly into lyricism at the most unexpected moments. Fragments of blues piano, hard bop, hot solos and harsh ensemble-work permeate what turns out to be an absolutely engrossing record. Cantankerous and highly entertaining sleeve-notes by Christian Broecking fit the record perfectly.

() Reflections / () Aventure Québécoise FMP CD 74 / Victo 065 Bauer; Johannes Bauer (tb); Uwe Kropinski, Joe Sachse (g). 10/86; 5/98.

Strictly speaking, these are by the group Doppelmoppel. Although on the shelf for ten years before release, Reflections sounds fresh, and the interplay – at once skeletal and dense, with the spidery lines of the guitarists scuttling around the blurting, blaring horns – hasn't lost its wit and brightness. The tone sometimes comes down to the monochromatic, but these are imaginative players and they have a lot to say. Reconvening after a dozen years, the quartet seem invigorated by the occasion (a Victoriaville Festival set) and play with a matching intensity and cleverness.

(*) Careless Love Intakt CD050 Bauer; Ernst-Ludwig Petrowsky (as, f, cl); Ulrich Gumpert (p); Günter Sommer (d). 2/97.

Another fine set of wonky compositions from the Zentralquartett. Some have likened these to Carla Bley tunes, and the coincidence of 'Dinner Music' seems to point in that direction. However, the energies here are very different to Carla's. Bauer is terrific on the title-tune, really letting rip, but his own 'Zopf' is stolen by a truly magnificent clarinet solo from the still underrated Petrowsky. Great stuff and a more approachable style for those who've found some of the trombonist's freer excursions too hard to handle.

* Between Heaven And Earth Intakt CD 079 Bauer; Peter Kowald (b); Günter Sommer (d). 12/01.

Recorded just a few months before Peter Kowald's premature death, this captures the bassist with two of his most sympathetic collaborators, perhaps united by years spent on the 'wrong' side of the Iron Curtain. The 11 improvisations are so titled and organized as to suggest a progress through life from birth to rebirth. Bauer is the dominant voice, but both Kowald and Sommer are so attuned to this idiom that one hears a group rather than individuals. Right in the middle of the set, 'Travelling' and 'Loving' represent its emotional core, intense and quietly fiery improvisations that would be hard to improve upon. Another first-rate release from Intakt and a further poignant footnote to the magnificent career of Europe's most influential free-jazz bassist.

* Hummelsummen Intakt 085 Bauer (tb solo). 3/02.
Unlike Toronto Tone, this is pure slide trombone, much of it played surprisingly conventionally, though there is, of course, plenty of extended technique, with growls, smears, multiphonics and impressively extended breathing. All but three of the tracks are around or over the ten-minute mark, but the shorter cuts are also impressive: 'Kaskade' is sheer delight. Of the more substantial performances, 'Hokuspokus' and the closing title-cut are outstanding. Solo trombone is not to every taste, but along with Rutherford, Mangelsdorff and Lewis, Bauer stands his ground very well.

Johannes Bauer (born 1954)

TROMBONE

The younger of the Bauer brothers is mystifyingly thinly recorded under his own name.

(*) Organo Pleno FMP CD 56 Bauer; Fred Van Hove (p, acc); Annick Nozati (v). 7/92.
He's a blunter and less discursive player than his brother and the present trio was relatively long-standing by the usual measure of such things, so the music is quite direct and communicative. There are plenty of sub-two-minute miniatures and one mammoth work-out which approaches half an hour in length. Nozati tires and runs low on ideas here and it is left to Bauer's post-Mangelsdorff phrase-making and Van Hove's remarkable discipline to give the thing shape. Nice to have three consistently underrated performers given a moment in the spotlight like this.

Jamie Baum

FLUTE

Not so many flute specialists around, but she wins on quality rather than novelty.

 Sight Unheard GM 3031 Baum; Dave Douglas (t); Roberta Piket, Kenny Werner (p); Drew Gress (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 1 & 12/95.
(*) Moving Forward, Standing Still Omnitone 15206 Baum; Ralph Alessi (t, flhn); Tom Varner (frhn); Doug Yates (as, bcl); George Colligan, Drew Gress (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 04.
You can tell at once you aren't listening to Ali Ryerson or Elisha Wood. This is as tough-minded as the choice of side(wo)men suggests, and the inclusion of Ornette's 'Una Muy Bonita' alongside the edgy, offbeat originals is a further sign of her quality. What confirms it is that she's never outplayed even by Douglas. The sequel took some time to materialize but it was worth waiting for. Again, almost everything is her own (a few snippets of classical music 'sampled' here and there, but more often wittily referenced, as on 'Bar Talk') and she managed to persuade another strong line-up. Fair sign that she isn't a dabbler in her commitment to a similar instrumentation, though this time the recruitment of Varner was a masterstroke. Highly intelligent, beautifully crafted music.

Kris Bauman

ALTO SAXOPHONE

New Yorker with ambition.

 The Kris Bauman Quartet Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 121 Bauman; Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Alexis Cuadrado (b); Jochen Rueckert (d). 05/02.
They may look like slackers on the sleeve photos, but the plain title suggests this is a working shift as well. The substance reflects both: lazily unwound tunes, a lick of NY ska on 'Question To Self' and some deliberately laid-back titles. Bauman likes to sound as if he just got out of bed, but he's sharper than the rumpled first impression suggests. It's Rosenwinkel who wins the stars, though, often outplaying the leader and sometimes sounding like he's leading his own set.

Franziska Baumann

VOICE, ELECTRONICS

A boldly innovative performer, exploring new territory.

 Potage Du Jour Leo CDLR 443 Baumann; Jorg Solothurnmann (ss, as); Christoph Baumann (p). 3/03, 3/04.
* Voices & Tides Leo CDLR 495 Baumann; Matthias Ziegler (f, bf, cbf, loops). 07.
The track titles on the first Leo spell out 'We Are Only In It For Soup, Enjoy!', which is off-putting from the start. This isn't exactly bread-and-butter singing, though. Baumann explores a rich wordless territory that makes use of strange glottal clicks, microtonal attacks and other techniques that have more recently extended into SensorLab electronics. We'd question the role of Solothurnmann, who adds nothing of substance and often clouds the picture. A few more unaccompanied vocal pieces might also have usefully thinned out a rather thick sound-broth. The second disc is a small masterpiece. Baumann and Ziegler have a strong empathy, a shared sense of beauty. These pieces seem mysterious in origin but also as organic and continuous as a lunar cycle. The flute sounds are loops that are subtly inflected, always moving, but with a sculptural solidity. The electronics are integral to Baumann's imagination, rather than merely an embellishment. There are other records available on small labels, but these are the ones you're most likely to find, and Voices & Tides is essential contemporary listening.

Roger Beaujolais

VIBRAPHONE

Started late after a mis-spent youth as a rock drummer. Played jump-jive with the Chevalier Bros and briefly returned to popular beat music with Fairground Attraction, but has since established a strong reputation on the British jazz scene, having been identified with the acid-jazz movement for a time.

 For Old Times /  I'll See You Tonight StayTuned ST001 / ST005 Beaujolais; Mark Lockheart (ss, ts); Robin Aspland (p); Orlando Le Fleming (b); Winston Clifford (d). 12/98; 4/02.

 Sentimental StayTuned ST006 As above, except add Simon Thorpe (b). 4/02, 5/05.

With memories of Tubby Hayes's remarkable 'double' still green, but with Orphy Robinson temporarily off the scene, there was a vacancy in the vibes category in British jazz polls. Beaujolais staked a very strong claim; only Anthony Kerr and the renascent Robinson can challenge him. In approach, he sometimes resembles Frank Ricotti and may have learned something from listening to him, but Beaujolais has devised his own hip, swinging idiom, and consistently impresses as a soloist.

The first album, released on Beaujolais's own label, is impressive enough and only disappointing in that it doesn't feature the vibes and Roger's distinctive four-mallet approach prominently enough. That's redressed on the later discs, as witness the higher ballad quotient, which gives him an opportunity to stretch out and express himself. 'In A Sentimental Mood' and 'You Don't Know What Love Is' on the 2005 record both attest to his depth of understanding in the jazz literature, and 'Mr Non PC' has to win some sort of award for track titling.

There's no mistaking the quality of what we can hardly resist calling the Beaujolais nouveau but its virtues have been evident from the very beginning. For Old Times was a striking debut, with a brilliant approach to repertoire, putting Wayne Shorter's 'Tom Thumb' up against Mal Waldron's 'Soul Eyes', 'Old Devil Moon' alongside Grant Green's rarely covered 'Jean De Peur' and, more obviously, Bobby Hutcherson's 'Highway One'.

* Blue Reflections Stay Tuned ST007 Beaujolais; Mark Lockheart (ts); Robin Aspland (p); Orlando LeFleming, Simon Thorpe (b); Winston Clifford (d). N.D.

There's a retro feel to this from the start with a slouching version of Hank Mobley's 'Soul Station', followed by Stanley Turrentine's 'Sugar' and later on lines by Grant Green and Kenny Burrell. It's a pleasingly funky set in the main, but the sound's awkwardly brittle in places and it's a tiring listen as a result.

Sidney Bechet (1897–1959)

SOPRANO SAXOPHONE, CLARINET; ALSO TENOR AND BASS SAXOPHONES, PIANO, BASS, DRUM

Bechet is the first great soloist in jazz. Even before Louis Armstrong came along, he was playing vertical improvisations on the chords of a tune, rather than simple melodic breaks. Like Pops, Bechet grew up in New Orleans, transported his style north and then became the American star in Europe. A pioneer of the soprano saxophone, Sidney managed to combine its intense, sometimes treacherous tonality with the warm, woody sound of the clarinet.

 Sidney Bechet, 1923–1936 Classics 583 Bechet; Clarence Brereton, Wendell Culley, Demas Dean, Tommy Ladnier (t); Billy Burns, Chester Burrill, Teddy Nixon (tb); Chauncey Haughton (cl, as); Ralph Duquesne, Rudy Jackson (cl, as, ss); Ramon Usera (cl, ts); Jerome Pasquall, Gil White (ts); Harry Brooks, Henry Duncan, Lloyd Pinckney, Clarence Williams (p); Oscar Madera (vn); Buddy Christian, Frank Ethridge (bj); Jimmy Miller (g); Wilson Myers (b, v); Edward Coles (bb); Jimmy Jones (b); Jack Carter, Wilbert Kirk, Morris Morland (d); Billy Banks, Lena Horne, Billy Maxey, Noble Sissle (v). 10/23–3/36.

 Young Sidney Bechet Timeless CBC 1-028 Similar to above. 23–25.

(*) Sidney Bechet, 1937–1938 Classics 593 Bechet; Clarence Brereton, Wendell Culley, Demas Dean, Charlie Shavers (t); Chester Burrill (tb); Chauncey Haughton (cl, as); Jerome Pasquall, Gil White (ts); Ernie Caceres (bs); Oscar Madera (vn); Dave Bowman, Harry Brooks, Erskine Butterfield, Sam Price (p); Teddy Bunn, Jimmy Miller, Leonard Ware (g); Richard Fulbright, Jimmy Jones, Henry Turner (b); Wilbert Kirk, Zutty Singleton (d); O'Neil Spencer (d, v); Billy Banks, The Two Fishmongers, Trixie Smith (v). 4/37–11/38.

Bechet himself contributed to the heav'n-taught image confected in a notorious Ernest Ansermet essay. Sidney's autobiography, Treat It Gentle, is a masterpiece of contrived ingenuousness; John Chilton's superb biography gets closer to the truth. Bechet was an exceptionally gifted and formally aware musician whose compositional skills greatly outshine those of Louis Armstrong, his rival for canonization as the first great jazz improviser. Armstrong's enormous popularity – abetted by his sky-writing top Cs and vocal performance – tended to eclipse Bechet everywhere except in France. His melodic sense and ability to structure a solo round the harmonic sequence of the original theme (or with no theme whatsoever) have been of immense significance in the development of modern jazz. Bechet made a pioneering switch to the stronger-voiced soprano saxophone in the same year as Ansermet's essay, having found a secondhand horn in a London shop. Within a few years, his biting tone and dramatic tremolo were among the most distinctive sounds in jazz.

Bechet made a relatively slow start to his recording career. His first cuts as 'leader' are as accompanist on two tracks made in New York in October and credited to Rosetta Crawford & The King Bechet Trio. The early sessions with Clarence Williams and a variety of modestly talented singers include carefully annotated breaks and solos from Bechet, largely on soprano saxophone; but these sessions are of specialist interest in the main. His clarinet style (on tracks with Eva Taylor) is still strongly coloured by that of Alphonse Picou and Lorenzo Tio, who gave the precocious Bechet lessons, and is markedly less individual than his saxophone-playing. The Timeless compilation is very attractive, and John R. T. Davies's remastering is pitch perfect, an appropriately flattering context for these marvellous early performances.

The Classics compilation is less detailed, but it includes material with Noble Sissle's orchestra not included on either of the other available options; in fact, only the two Rosetta Crawford tracks are in common. The sound is rather abrasive and these early sessions are essential only for a brief, brilliant soprano solo on 'Loveless Love'. According to John Chilton, Bechet is also responsible, on this and two other tracks (he solos only on the initially rejected 'In A Café On The Road To Calais'), for the bass saxophone parts, which are not credited in the Classics notes. The session of 15 September 1932 is one of Bechet's best yet, with superb solos on 'I Want You Tonight' and 'Maple Leaf Rag'. The later disc is generally more professional and every bit as compelling musically. Bechet reached a new high with two quintet tracks credited to Noble Sissle's Swingsters, an offshoot of the main band. His solos on 'Okey-Doke' and 'Characteristic Blues' are classic performances, full of extravagantly bent notes, trills and time-changes. Using both clarinet and soprano saxophone, Bechet creates an atmosphere of considerable tension that is discharged only during a phenomenal solo on 'Characteristic Blues'. Later, in 1938, there was controversy over the exact authorship of 'Hold Me Tight', which Bechet claimed was based on his earlier 'I Want Some Seafood, Mama', but which was declared obscene and withdrawn from radio stations. The real controversy, however, was directed towards what seemed to be a new way of playing jazz, and in that context the session of April 1937 is absolutely critical, not just to Bechet's development but to that of jazz itself.

(*) Sidney Bechet, 1938–1940 Classics 608 Bechet; Tommy Ladnier, Frankie Newton, Kenneth Roane (t); J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Mezz Mezzrow (cl, ts); Meade Lux Lewis, Willie 'The Lion' Smith, Sonny White (p); Teddy Bunn, Charlie Howard (g); Elmer James, Olin Aderhold, Wilson Myers, John Williams (b); Big Sid Catlett, Kenny Clarke, Manzie Johnson, Leo Warney (d). 11/38–40.

 Sidney Bechet, 1940 Classics 619 Bechet; Sidney De Paris (t); Muggsy Spanier (c); Sandy Williams (tb); Cliff Jackson (p); Bernard Addison, Teddy Bunn, Carmen Mastren (g); Josh White (g, v); Wellman Braud, George 'Pops' Foster, Wilson Myers (b); Big Sid Catlett (d). 3–6/40.

(*) Sidney Bechet, 1940–1941 Classics 638 Bechet; Gus Aiken, Henry 'Red' Allen, Henry Goodwin, Henry Levine, Charlie Shavers (t); Rex Stewart (c); Jack Epstein, Vic Dickenson, J. C. Higginbotham, Sandy Williams (tb); Alfie Evans (cl); Rudolph Adler, Lem Johnson (ts); Don Donaldson, Earl Hines, Cliff Jackson, Mario Janarro, Willie 'The Lion' Smith, James Tolliver (p); Everett Barksdale, Tony Colucci (g); Wellman Braud, John Lindsay, Wilson Myers, Harry Patent, Ernest Williamson (b); Baby Dodds, J. C. Heard, Arthur Herbert, Manzie Johnson, Nat Levine (d); Herb Jeffries (v). 9/40–10/41.

In April 1941 Bechet fulfilled the logic of his increasingly self-reliant musical conception by recording two unprecedented 'one-man-band' tracks, overdubbing up to six instruments. 'Sheik Of Araby' is for the full 'band' of soprano and tenor saxophones, clarinet, piano, bass and drums; so time-consuming was the process that a second item, 'Blues For Bechet', had to be completed without bass or drums, leaving a fascinating fragment for RCA to release.

In September of the same year, Bechet made another classic trio recording, this time with Willie 'The Lion' Smith and Everett Barksdale, on electric guitar. Though the two sidemen provide no more than incidental distractions, the trio sessions were more compelling than the full band assembled on that day (Charlie Shavers plays monster lines on 'I'm Coming Virginia', as on the October 'Mood Indigo', but is otherwise ill-suited); 'Strange Fruit' is one of Bechet's most calmly magisterial performances, and the two takes of 'You're The Limit' seem too good to have been dumped in the 'unreleased' bin, though perhaps the absence on either of a commanding solo from Bechet put the label off. A month later, in the same session that realized 'Mood Indigo', Bechet cut the utterly awful 'Laughin' In Rhythm', a New Orleans version of 'The Laughing Policeman' that, despite a taut soprano solo, hardly merits revival. Dickenson also plays beautifully on 'Blue In The Air', one of the finest of Bechet's recorded solos.

A lot of this material is available elsewhere. However, it's always good to have the simply and exactly documented Classics discs, and there are some useful inclusions and corrections, like the correct attribution of 'Ti Ralph' and 'Meringue D'Amour' from the Willie 'The Lion' Smith date of November 1939; these have been inverted on most reissues in recent times. The 'Original Haitian Music' with Smith is an oddity from a decidedly odd band, and one has a strong sense that Bechet was finding it harder over this period, following his brief sabbatical in 1938, to set up completely sympathetic sessions. More and more often one finds him in bands where piano, not guitar, dominates the rhythm section, and he is paired with other saxophone-players.

Blues In Thirds is dominated by Sidney's somewhat hostile relationship with piano-players. Earl Hines has spoken of the saxophonist's 'evil' mood on the day of their September 1940 encounter, when he refused to nominate which Hines tune was next on the programme. It turned out to be 'Blues In Thirds', and the trio with the pianist and Baby Dodds is a classic. So confused is the Bechet discography that it is becoming virtually impossible to offer reasoned preferences. Technically, these are sub-standard transfers, flat and unresonant.

 Sidney Bechet, 1941–1944 Classics 860 Bechet; Sidney De Paris, Charlie Shavers (t); Henry Goodwin (t, v); Vic Dickenson, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Gene Cedric (ts, cl); Don Donaldson, Art Hodes, Cliff Jackson, Willie 'The Lion' Smith (p); Everett Barksdale (g); Wellman Braud, George 'Pops' Foster, Wilson Myers, Ernest Williamson (b); Big Sid Catlett, Eddie Dougherty, Wilbert Kirk, Manzie Johnson (d). 10/41–44.

This picks up where Classics 638 left off. Better things were to follow later in October, but two other tracks from that session, 'Blues In The Air' and 'The Mooche', test the quality of this fine band. Duke was obviously on his mind at this time, because he also includes 'Mood Indigo' on the 24 October session, and plays it quite beautifully. Willie The Lion is on top form and lets rip on 'Oh! Lady Be Good' and '12th Street Rag'. It was to be some time before Bechet recorded again; there were three V-Discs in December 1943, reworkings of jazz and blues classics, and then nothing for a further year, until the second of the saxophonist's contacts with Blue Note. This was the session that yielded 'Blue Horizon', a solo of structural perfection and exquisite grace, not very well transferred here but very welcome for all that. 'St Louis Blues' and 'Muskrat Ramble' aren't quite up to that quality, but the combination of Bechet, Sidney De Paris, Dickenson, Art Hodes, Pops Foster and Manzie Johnson was a potent one, and these sides are widely and rightly admired. The very next day, Bechet made a session as sideman with pianist Cliff Jackson's Village Cats, an artist whose work is shortly to be covered by Classics. Released on Black & White, these are agreeable enough sides, and Bechet is featured often enough to please his fans, but even 'Jeepers Creepers' and 'Quiet Please' don't do much more than fill out an otherwise thin disc.

 Runnin' Wild Blue Note 21259 Bechet; Wild Bill Davison (c); Jimmy Archey, Bob Diehl (tb); Art Hodes, Joe Sullivan (p); George 'Pops' Foster, Walter Page (b); Slick Jones, Freddie Moore (d). 49–50.

Bechet was Blue Note's token traditionalist in the '40s, a figure substantial enough to stand alongside the fierce hard-boppers. The partnership with Davison works well throughout the set, with Bill's punchy and ringing tone blending superbly with Bechet on 'Basin Street Blues' and 'Runnin' Wild' itself. There are alternative takes of it and of 'Ain't Gonna Give Nobody None Of My Jelly Roll', which is raunchy enough to merit a reprise.

(*) Jazz Classics: Volume 1 /  ... Volume 2 Blue Note 789384 / 789385 Bechet; Bunk Johnson, Max Kaminsky, Frankie Newton, Sidney De Paris (t); Jimmy Archey, Vic Dickenson, J. C. Higginbotham, George Lugg, Sandy Williams (tb); Albert Nicholas (cl); Art Hodes, Cliff Jackson, Meade Lux Lewis (p); Teddy Bunn (g); George 'Pops' Foster, John Williams (b); Big Sid Catlett, Manzie Johnson (d); Fred Moore (d, v). 6/39–11/51.

Bechet and Blue Note make an irresistible combination, but not an immediately obvious one. Though the label had its roots in earlier R&B and jazz, having recorded both Albert Ammons and Meade Lux Lewis, its stock-in-trade was to be hard bop and the more accommodating aspects of the avant-garde. Bechet had approached Alfred Lion, wanting to record a long version of 'Summertime' (Volume 1, also available on Classics, above), something he had not been able to do for another label. The session of June 1939, the earliest of the dates represented on these compilations, isn't vintage Bechet by any stretch of the imagination, but there are some striking moments. With Lewis all over the place, Bunn lays down a wonderfully simple accompaniment and, with no other horn to hand, Bechet plays a vivid solo that was to boost the original 78 into hit sales. The 1939 session came shortly after the death of Tommy Ladnier, and the full band recorded a less than morose 'Blues For Tommy' (Volume 2) on which only Bechet sounds as if he might honestly miss his old partner.

The association with Blue Note continued intermittently over the next few years. In March 1940, with the excellent Bunn again on hand, Bechet recorded 'Dear Old Southland' (Volume 1). The 1944 cuts with Sidney De Paris, Vic Dickenson and Art Hodes are less than wholly compelling; but the saxophonist's encounter with the enigmatic Bunk Johnson in March 1945 is a different matter. Bechet sounds cautiously respectful; Bunk sounds like a man whose mind is elsewhere. Nevertheless 'Milenberg Blues' and 'Days Beyond Recall' have a historic significance that goes well beyond their intrinsic value as performances.

The final Blue Note session was recorded a dozen years after the first, and it's a mellowing Bechet who plays the appropriately titled 'Changes Made' with De Paris again, and trombonist Jimmy Archey. Looked at objectively, these sides have taken on a certain sheen purely because of the label that recorded them. Technically, they're first class; historically, they're full of interest; but musically, they're second-order Bechet.

* King Jazz: Volume 1 GHB BCD 501/502 2CD Bechet; Hot Lips Page (t); Mezz Mezzrow (cl); Sammy Price, Fritz Weston (p); Danny Barker (g); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Big Sid Catlett, Kaiser Marshall (d); Douglas Daniels, Pleasant Joseph (v). 3–8/45.

(*) King Jazz: Volume 2 GHB BCD 503/504/505 3CD As above, except omit Page, Joseph, Daniels, Barker; add Sox Wilson (p); Coot Grant (v). 9/46, 12/47.

The Bechet centenary came and went in 1997 with little more than a mild flurry of interest. Perhaps because there is no 'problematic' about Bechet, no need to rescue him from obscurity or debunk his undentable popularity, there was no real leverage for a reassessment. The one big event of the year, record-wise, was the appearance of the legendary King Jazz catalogue on CD. By rights, the label was the brainchild of Mezz Mezzrow, an extraordinary booster and self-promoter who managed to raise enough cash from a man who had made his pile in the war selling radar equipment to get the label under way. But Mezzrow was no better as a businessman than he was as a clarinettist, and he quickly got distracted into writing his (fictionalized) autobiography, Really The Blues, with the help of journalist Bernard Wolfe. However, the label's policy of recording much more than could be issued pays dividends now. The first sessions on the disc are of pianist Sammy Price with and without vocalist Pleasant Joseph. There follow, though, sessions from July and August with the Bechet–Mezzrow group. Some of these tracks – 'Revolutionary Blues', 'Perdido Street Stomp', 'The Sheik Of Araby' and 'Minor Swoon' – are classics of postwar Dixieland and, though Mezzrow's technical insufficiencies are in no way glossed over in the transfer, the brightness and unselfconscious ease of these performances warm the heart. For once Pops Foster and Danny Barker can be heard clearly, and the balance of the sound is as good as it is likely to get. Sammy Price plays on all the Volume 1 sides except those from the August sessions. He's a decent player, slightly florid and overcooked as a soloist, but he comes into his own as a group accompanist, bettered only by Art Hodes. Fritz Weston comes in for the later dates and isn't remotely as idiomatic or as good.

Volume 2 doesn't reach the same heights but it does contain a generous amount of music and the chance to hear the basic band working at some length. 'Chicago Function' exists in alternative takes, as do several other tracks, and it's clear from these that, while Mezzrow has to plough pretty much the same furrow each time, Sidney throws off ideas like a meteor shower. The King Jazz story was a short one and, in the final analysis, no different from a thousand other small labels optimistically begun and naïvely mismanaged. Along the way, though, it threw up some wonderful music.

 Bunk & Bechet In Boston Jazz Crusade 3040 Bechet; Bunk Johnson (t); Hank Duncan, Ray Parker (p); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Freddie Moore, George Thompson (d). 4/45.

Like Louis Armstrong, Bunk Johnson did not like to share leadership with anyone. In 1945 he was something of a living legend, but he was also profoundly erratic and subject to drinking jags. On these radio sessions, Sidney backs him manfully and leaps in whenever the trumpeter loses the plot. Even allowing for such lapses and the rather shaky source material, the sessions are fascinating for the variation in personal styles. Johnson sounds like a man out on his back porch, while Bechet climbs all over the melody and, when things are not going disastrously wrong, merely proceeding at a pedestrian pace, he simply ignores what Bunk is doing and skyrockets off on his own. This material is also available on the Classics compilation below, but these transfers are very good indeed.

compilations

* Shake 'Em Up

Avid 694 2CD Bechet; Wild Bill Davison, Muggsy Spanier (c); Clarence Brereton, Johnny Glasel, Frankie Newton (t); Vic Dickenson, J. C. Higginbotham, Bob Mielke (tb); Bob Wilber (cl); Ernie Caceres (ts, bs); Gil White (ts, cl, v); Dave Bowman, Harry Brooks, Don Donaldson, Art Hodes, Meade Lux Lewis, Lloyd Phillips, Joe Sullivan, Dick Wellstood (p); Teddy Bunn, Jimmy Miller, Leonard Ware (g); Josh White (g, v); Wellman Braud, George 'Pops' Foster, Jimmy Jones, Wilson Myers, Henry Turner, John Williams (b); Big Sid Catlett, Arthur Herbert, Wilbert Kirk, Freddie Moore, Zutty Singleton, Danny Strong, George Wettling (d); O'Neill Spencer (v). 38–47.

This is a very good career survey, covering the decade from 1938 to 1947 and squeezing 45 tracks onto two CDs. Most of the material is available elsewhere and the one-man-band 'Sheikh Of Araby' is a near inevitable inclusion on a Bechet compilation; but one big bonus is the complete Big Four date with Muggsy Spanier. The sound transfers are pretty good, though once or twice there is a curious variance from one track to the next, which is momentarily distracting. A very attractive introduction to Bechet's classic period.

 Sidney Bechet, 1947–1949 Classics 1112 Bechet; Wild Bill Davison (t); Mezz Mezzrow, Bob Wilber (cl); Art Hodes, James P. Johnson, Lloyd Phillips (p); Pops Foster, Walter Page (b); and others, similar to above. 47–49.

An exceedingly busy period, during which Bechet (with Mezzrow and others) was regularly doing 'This Is Jazz' broadcasts. There's a certain sameness to the music, and as ever Classics' remastering leaves the sound as muddy and unlovely as might be. Even so, for anyone looking for a complete documentation, rather than an attractively refurbished sound, this is ideal.

 Sidney Bechet 1949 Classics 1141 Bechet; Buster Bailey, Wild Bill Davison (c); Albert Snaer (t); Wilbur De Paris, Benny Vasseur, Munn Ware (tb); Bill Reinhart (cl); Art Hodes, Don Ewell, James P. Johnson (p); Jean-Pierre Sasson (g); Guy Defatto, Walter Page, Sid Thall (b); Wally Gordon, Wilmore Slick Jones, Freddie Moore, George Wettling (d). 1–5/49.

 Sidney Bechet 1949, Volume 2 Classics 1186 Bechet; Bill Coleman, Pierre Dervaux, Henry Goodwin (t); Claude Philippe (t, bj); Jimmy Archey, Mowgli Jospin, Benny Vasseur (tb); Claude Luter, Bob Wilber (cl); Christian Azzi, Roland Bianchini, Charlie Lewis, Dick Wellstood (p); Duke Of Iron (vn); Jean-Pierre Sasson (g); George 'Pops' Foster, Pierre Michelot (b); Tommy Benford, Kenny Clarke, André Jourdan (d). 5–10/49.

 Sidney Bechet 1949, Volume 3 Classics 1223 Bechet; Pierre Dervaux, Humphrey Lyttelton (t); Keith Christie (tb); Ian Christie, Wally Fawkes, Claude Luter (cl); Christian Azzi, Eddie Bernard, George Webb (p); Claude Philippe, Buddy Vallis (bjo); Roland Biachini, Pierre Michelot, John Wright (b); Kenny Clarke, François Galépides , Bernard Saward (d). 10–11/49.

At the start of the final decade of his life, Bechet was already coasting. His tone sounds drier and more pungent than of yore, though the broad vibrato is still there and the solos are still constructed with the same arrogant authority. We cannot say that there are any classic sessions documented here, but Bechet fans will find their man playing with absolute reliability. As for much of his career, Bechet was flitting back and forth between France and the United States, hence the international line-ups.

There was a side-trip to London in November of that year, when he recorded with Humphrey Lyttelton and his band. This was a proud moment for British jazz players and the exuberance and obvious care in the playing are audible on 'When It's Sleepy Time Down South' and 'One Of These Days'. The tracks with Luter a couple of days later are a bit duller, with a lazy quality to some of the ensembles. The Feetwarmers tracks with Bernard, Michelot and Clarke are fine, but Sidney doesn't sound so compelling when there is no other horn to play off.

 Spreadin' Joy: 1940–1950 Naxos 8120531 Bechet; Henry 'Red' Allen, Humphrey Lyttelton (t); Muggsy Spanier (co); Keith Christie, J. C. Higginbotham, Bob Mielke (tb); Bob Wilber (cl); Art Hodes, Ralph Sutton, Jim Tolliver, Dick Wellstood (p); Everett Barksdale, Carmen Mastren (g); Wellman Braud, Jack Lesbert, Walter Page, Charles Traeger (b); J. C. Heard, Manzie Johnson, Wilmore 'Slick' Jones, Danny Strong, George Wettling (d). 40–50.

 From New York To Paris EPM Musique 159962 Bechet; Bill Coleman, Sidney De Paris, Pierre Dervaux, Henry Goodwin, Hot Lips Page (t); Claude Philippe (t, bj); Vic Dickenson, Mowgli Jospin, Sandy Williams, Bernard Zacharias (tb); Claude Luter, Mezz Mezzrow, Albert Nicholas (cl); Christian Azzi, Don Donaldson, Earl Hines, Art Hodes, Charlie Lewis, Sammy Price, Sox Wilson (p); Bernard Addison, Danny Barker (g); Roland Bianchini, George 'Pops' Foster, Pierre Michelot, Ernest Williamson (b); Danny Alvin, Big Sid Catlett, Baby Dodds, Manzie Johnson (d). 40–49.

Kicking off with the overdubbed 'Sheikh Of Araby', the Naxos set is bent on presenting Bechet as a virtually godlike soloist, capable of doing almost anything on his own. It's not a strictly representative collection, with more gaps than continuities, but the sound transfers are, we find, very good indeed and, given Naxos's budget profile, this is a very attractive introduction to Sidney's work during his last really creative period.

The other set covers similar ground, but includes cuts with Hot Lips Page and Mezz Mezzrow that are sure to be of interest. It is also well transferred, though there is a slight deadness of sound here and there.

 Genius Of / Circle Seven Jazzology 35 Bechet; Wild Bill Davison, Muggsy Spanier (co); Albert Snaer (t); Wilbur De Paris, George Brunis (tb); Buster Bailey, Edmond Hall, Albert Nicholas (cl); James P. Johnson, Joe Sullivan, Ralph Sutton, James Tolliver (p); Danny Barker (g); Walter Page (b); Baby Dodds, Freddie Moore, George Wettling (d). 47, 1/49.

The Circle Seven (sometimes wrongly given as Circle Of Seven; the name referred to Rudi Blesh's Circle label) was interesting for a rare-as-hen's-teeth appearance by trumpeter Snaer, who'd recorded with Claude Hopkins and Andy Kirk but is otherwise pretty much undocumented. There's also a stand-in role for James Tolliver, who's almost as obscure.

The earlier stuff comes from This Is Jazz broadcasts, with a variety of personnels. A cracking 'Ain't Misbehavin'' from 24 May 1947 and a fine 'Dear Old Southland', with Bill Davison, from later on that summer. This is a nice collection, decently remastered.

 Sidney Bechet, 1950 Classics 1280 Bechet; Wild Bill Davison (t); Jimmy Archey (tb); Joe Sullivan, Ralph Sutton (p); Pops Foster, Jack Lesberg (b); Wilmore Jones, George Wettling (d); others similar to Classics 1223. 4/50.

 Sidney Bechet, 1950–1951 Classics 1326 As for Classics above and Blue Notes below. 50–51.

 Sidney Bechet, 1952 Classics 1358 Similar to above. 1–3/52.

Classics continue their patient progress through the turn of the decade, when Sidney was a kind of superstar in France and largely a forgotten man at home. The first Blue Note sessions were to restore his Stateside reputation to some degree. As an ongoing documentation, these are adequate, but again there is no vibrancy to the sound and the accompaniments are often muffled. Given the availability again of the Blue Notes and the relatively routine nature of the material with Claude Luter's group, there's no pressing case for these.

(*) The Fabulous Sidney Bechet Blue Note 30607 Bechet; Jonah Jones, Sidney De Paris (t); Jimmy Archey, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Don Kirkpatrick, Buddy Weed (p); Pops Foster, Walter Page (b); Johnny Blowers, Manzie Johnson (d). 11/51, 8/53.

This music must have seemed almost antediluvian at the height of bebop, and Bechet was off the American scene. Even so, there was a special chemistry to these sessions for Alfred Lion, originally released on 10" LPs and later amalgamated when the larger format became established. The soprano sound is still the same, with a broad vibrato and a cutting force. The two dates have a somewhat different sound and more than one commentator has understandably attributed that to the contrast between Pops Foster's slapped bass and Walter Page's pioneering walking style. However, there is a contrast in Sidney's own playing as well. He may sound more relaxed and precise on the earlier date, but there is an urgency about the 1953 sessions which is immediately arresting. There are some alternate takes on the reissue ('Ballin' The Jack', 'Blues My Naughty Sweetie Gives To Me', and 'There'll Be Some Changes Made', and 'Rose Of The Rio Grande' and 'Black And Blue' from the later session) which make this a very happy monument to an artist whose 'decline' was largely a matter of fashion rather than fact.

Also, in brief:

 The Sidney Bechet Story Properbox 18 4CD. 23–50.
As with all the Propers, a very decent introduction to a quarter-century of magical music. Purists may quibble at the selections, but for what it offers, hard to beat.

 Sidney Bechet, 1945–1946 Classics 954. 45–46.
As inclusive and as muddy as ever, this further Classics volume takes the Bechet story on another step of the way.

 In New York, 1950–1951 Storyville STCD 6039. 50–51.
Some great moments, including a number of tracks, originally on Pumpkin, which modestly feature Russell Moore (tb). Bechet's in good form, with a harder than usual tone.

... plus a great many compilations, airshots and European live dates.

Gordon Beck (born 1938)

PIANO, ELECTRIC PIANO, ELECTRONICS

A veteran British modernist, Beck drew attention in the Tubby Hayes group of the '60s, as Ronnie Scott's house pianist and with Phil Woods, 1969–72. Since then has freelanced, worked as an educator and helmed occasional albums.

 Experiments With Pops / * Gyroscope Art Of Life 1001 / 1003 Beck; John McLaughlin (g on Experiments only); Jeff Clyne (b); Tony Oxley (d). 8/67; 68.
Beck's early work has been belatedly rediscovered. Experiments introduces the nascent talent of 'Johnny' McLaughlin, apparently a late inclusion on what otherwise was meant to be a trio date. Given the pop provenance of the material, it was a brilliant wheeze bringing him aboard. John transforms the set, adding a gear and providing the kind of forceful attack he would later demonstrate on Extrapolation and with the Mahavishnu Orchestra.

The songs themselves are standard fodder: 'Norwegian Wood' and 'Michelle' from the Fabs, 'These Boots Were Made For Walking', Jimmy Webb's 'Up, Up And Away' and a solo reading from Beck of 'Sunny'. It would be another 20 years before creative jazz players seriously explored the improvisational reaches of chart pop. With Clyne and Oxley also on the strength, this is a major find.

Gyroscope is a very different project, freer and more intense in scope. The title-piece, which also provided the name of a later Beck group, is one of his most enduring conceptions, a whirling, beautifully balanced trio performance that gives each player equal weight and significance. 'Suite No. 1' is collectively improvised and sounds very slightly dated now but the long closing medley of 'And Still She is With Me/Oxus' is as good a piece as any to emerge from the British free-jazz scene.

 Jazz Trio Art Of Life 1017 Beck; Ron Mathewson (b); Daniel Humair (d). 1/72.
Recorded while on a tour of Italy with Phil Woods's European Jazz Machine, this was apparently run down in a single morning and released by the unfortunately named Dire label later in the year. The set consists of two main compositions, 'Suite No 5', a romantic, fractious thing written by Beck and performed in three movements, and 'All In The Morning' (which is all they had in the studio), collectively composed and somewhat freer in idiom as a result.

 Not The Last Waltz Art Of Life 1008 Beck; Bruno Rousselet (b); Philippe Soirat (d). 1 & 7/03.

(*) Seven Steps To Heaven Art Of Life 1018 As above, except add Pierrick Pedron (as). 2/05, 5/05.
Here is Beck, live and working with a French trio, and playing some of the best music of his career. This is one of those records that appeals as soon as you pick it up. The cover has a delightful monochrome of (very) youthful waltzers at a ballroom dance competition or display, and there is an appropriate freshness to the playing and choice of material. Beck has always valued strong jazz composition and the two Ron Carter pieces he has included here, the opening 'Einbahnstrasse' – 'One Way Street' – and the closing 'First Trip', are among the best things on the record, the latter a long and thoughtful exploration of Carter's idea. 'Miss Day' is a Beck composition, couched in a sombre bebop idiom. 'Not The Last Waltz' is in three-quarter time, but taken at a furious pace that challenges the two rhythm men. They are generously featured throughout and amply repay Gordon's confidence. 'This Heart Of Mine' starts some way in, presumably because of tape problems, but for the most part this is a beautifully recorded set that should strike shame into the hearts of British concert promoters and warm the hearts of those who have yet to make Gordon Beck's acquaintance.

The later disc merely underlines the point. The addition of Pedron is attractive enough but doesn't add anything particular. As ever, a bold choice of material, including Billy Childs's 'Backwards Bop' and Wayne Shorter's 'JuJu'; also 'Solar', 'Gone With The Wind' and Gordon's own 'Isotope'. The real treat, though, is not the live material from Paris (the Franc Pinot Club) but a solo version of Denny Zeitlin's 'Quiet Now', recorded later in Gordon's home studio. Piano bliss.

 Appleby Blues Art Of Life AL 1025 Beck; Jeremy Brown (b); Tony Levin (d). 07/05.
This is very much a trio recording (which may revive misleading parallels with the classic Bill Evans group). These days, Beck has his own inimitable language, rich, often edgy and dangerous, but very far removed from the inward harmonic musings of Evans. Brown and Levin play the fullest part in proceedings and the drummer's brush-work on this Appleby date is exceptional. 'With A Heart In My Song' stands out, and there's a nice revival of 'California, Here I Come', a Beck favourite.

Also, in brief:

 Once Is Never Enough FMR CD 28. 2/96.
Stan Sulzmann (as) and Beck divide writing duties on this, ultimately disappointing, quartet record.

 Reflections Art Of Life AL 1005. 5/97.
A lively and characteristically thoughtful solo set recorded live in Bath: 'Night And Day', 'Come Rain Or Come Shine', 'I Love You' and a brilliant 'Re: Person I Knew'.

Harry Beckett (born 1935)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

A Barbadian, he came to London in 1954, began playing in clubs and eventually rose to be a major presence on the British contemporary scene, working with all its major protagonists over decades. More recently lionized by Europe, with recordings in Germany and association with the French National Jazz Orchestra.

(*) Flare Up Jazzprint JPVP 124 Beckett; John Surman (ss, bs); Mike Osborne (as); Alan Skidmore (ts); Frank Ricotti (vib, perc); John Taylor (ky); Chris Laurence (b); John Webb (d). 7/70.
(*) Warm Smiles / Themes For Fega Vocalion SML8430 2CD Beckett; Alan Skidmore (ss, ts); Mike Osborne (as); John Taylor (p, ky); Frank Ricotti (vib, perc); Chris Laurence (b); John Webb (d). 71, 72.
 All Four One Spotlite SPJ CD 547 Beckett; Chris Batchelor, Jon Corbett, Claude Deppa (flhn); Alistair Gavin (p); Fred Thelonious Baker (b); Tony Marsh (d); Jan Ponsford (v). 91.
(*) Images Of Clarity Evidence EVCD 315 Beckett; Didier Levallet (b); Tony Marsh (d). 12/92.
(*) Before And After Jazzprint 107 Beckett; Chris Biscoe (ss, as); Alistair Gavin (p); Fred Thelonious Baker (b); Tony Marsh (d). 2/99.

Like many of the African- and Caribbean-born musicians who fell within the circle of Chris McGregor's Brotherhood Of Breath, Beckett moves without strain between free and mainstream improvisation. His essential qualities are an untroubled romanticism and a brightly lyrical tone (to which he adds gruff asides and occasionally startling rhythmic punctuations). His 1970 session (originally for Philips) is one of a couple of valuable reissues. Beckett and Graham Collier wrote most of the tunes and they're a bustling, creative lot, with the horns obliged to push for their own space and a fondness for some clarion ensemble-voicings which (the limited sound-mix aside) makes for some exciting jazz. Osborne is superb on 'Flow Stream Flow' and Beckett himself referees with a fine sense of what will and won't work within the parameters of the tunes..

Warm Smiles appeared on RCA in 1971. It's a sextet, again with Osborne guesting and with Frank Ricotti adding some wonderfully sound colour and cross-rhythms to Beckett's Caribbean-tinged themes. 'Harambee' is as joyous an opening to an album as you'll ever hear and the rest is well up to scratch. Themes For Fega is a more muted record, also more complex musically. The addition of Skidmore as a third horn adds a significant dimension, a richness of harmony to 'Chandeliers And Mirrors' and 'Farewell To Fega', and a burning intensity in the solos on some of the other cuts. The sound is pretty typical of the era: Taylor uses mostly electric piano on the second session, and Laurence's bass seems oddly located in the mix.

Beckett's All Four One project is based on a four-flugelhorn front line, an instrumentation capable of great richness but also, one fears and quickly hears confirmed, too little variety. There are some excellent moments. Mingus's 'Better Git It In Your Soul' is just right for this group and 'The Outstanding Light', a very Beckettian original, sits perfectly for the group, but it might have been better to have made an album on which this personnel appeared once or twice; they don't, alas, sustain the full distance.

Though some of the best of Beckett's work is on sessions for other leaders, his later re-emergence as a recording artist found him consolidating his strengths as an improviser. A pity he hasn't recorded more frequently in the sparse but richly contoured setting of Images Of Clarity. Levallet has a gorgeous touch and Marsh is among the most musical of European drummers, embellishing softly without ever losing track of an already delicate pulse. Beckett sounds pensive and slightly wry, but keeps a thread of humour running through the set.

Before And After is a live set recorded at Manchester's Band On The Wall. As ever, Beckett seems incapable of making a dull or downbeat record, though the emotion he most typically conveys is a kind of chastened happiness. The six original themes all invite a certain angularity of approach, in which Biscoe is the ideal foil. The opening sequence of 'Conditions' and 'Tinseltown' and then the climactic title-track sum up a good deal of what this extraordinary musician has been doing for years.

Ronnie Bedford

DRUMS

Studied with Fred Albright but came into jazz as an admirer of Gene Krupa. A busy sideman, he turned educator in the '80s after transplanting to Wyoming.

 Just Friends Progressive PCD 7136 Bedford; Tommy Newsom (ss, ts); Bill Charlap (p); Peter Huffaker (d). 10/93.
(*) Triplicity Progressive PCD 7111 Bedford; Roger Kellaway (p); Bob Magnusson (b). 10/98.
* QuaDRUMvirate Progressive PCD 7123 Bedford; Steve Wiest (tb); Derek Smith (p); Eric Thorin (b). 10/99.

A first-call sideman for years, Bedford doesn't seem to have gone into the studio on his own account. These are all live dates, taped somewhat casually and not always with much regard for Ronnie's forceful but deceptively subtle percussion. The first, though perversely the last to be released, obviously benefits greatly from the presence of Charlap and the effervescent Newsom, but (like its successor) also from being a home town date in Cody, Wyoming. The leader swings strongly on a mixed bag of tunes from 'Now's The Time' to a fresh and contemporary 'Lester Leaps In' to the title-tune. No real surprises; just fine straight-ahead jazz.

The trio album is terrific not least for the hugely underrated Magnusson, whose work on 'All Blues', a most unusual version, and on 'Alone Together' is absolutely out of the top drawer. Kellaway's contribution to the Miles classic is no less original, turning the piece into a curiously dark meditation with an almost angry subtext. 'If I Were A Bell' is similarly shifted in emphasis, and again Bedford's use of various drum techniques, from very quiet cymbal shuffles to more emphatic attacks, is an important part of the mix. A fine record that deserves wider circulation.

The 1999 quartet gives 'All Blues' and 'Now's The Time' a further work-out, but some of the originality and freshness have gone out of the former at least. It's still an interesting line-up, with the ex-pat Smith sounding urbane and jolly by turns and Bedford doing his usual subtle voicing of ideas. Good to hear a trombone-led quartet, even if Wiest doesn't always have enough ideas to sustain his features. A pity Bedford isn't now more widely known outside the Equality State.

Allen Beechey

CORNET

His Bright Stars Of Jazz is a gang of youthful Londoners, tackling the Chicago idiom with aplomb.

(*) Bridging The Gap Lake LACD 169 Beechey; Graham Hughes (tb); Jason Downes (cl, as); George Fagg (p); Andrew Ruiz-Palma (g); Heather Birt (b); Dominic Coles (d); Tamsin West (v). 3/02.
* Bright Stars Of Jazz Jazzology JCD 346 As above, except omit Downes, Fagg, West; add Richie Howard (cl), Julie McKee (v). 04.

Even the idea of a band of twentysomethings playing jazz in this style rather than the ubiquitous post-bop idiom is enough to tickle jaded palates, and Beechey's group don't disappoint on their maiden outing. Excellent work by the horns, a nod to the tradition of taking on unlikely material ('Skater's Waltz'!) and a lively if sometimes too-polite rhythm section make this an enormously attractive disc. Tamsin West, irresistible on 'Jazz Me Blues', is missed on the second record. Basically the same group, but the rhythm guys seem attractively ruffled up on this occasion and 'Sensation Rag' and 'What A Friend We Have In Jesus' confirm the earlier impression.

Peter Beets (born 1971)

PIANO

Won awards in his native Holland as a teenager, working in a family trio before moving on to a more international stage.

 New York Trio Criss Cross 1214 Beets; Rodney Whitaker (b); Willie Jones III (d). 5/01.
 New York Trio – Page Two Criss Cross 1237 Beets; Larry Grenadier (b); Willie Jones III (d). 12/02.
(*) New York Trio – Page Three Criss Cross 1264 Beets; Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). 10/04.
Not too many Europeans have been accorded leadership status by Criss Cross, but Beets is a talented exception. He won extravagant praise for these and newcomers might wonder what the fuss is about. He works in a straightforward bop piano continuum, somewhat like Hampton Hawes and Wynton Kelly but with a more delicate touch, which he exploits best at slower tempos: a handsomely shaped treatment of 'Without A Song' on the second record shows him at his best. The debut is weighed towards originals, the second towards standards and the third has four of each, with Veal and Riley the most dependably grooving section and Beets himself reaching for a Petersonian extravagance.

Bix Beiderbecke (1903–31)

CORNET

The quintessence of jazz legend, Leon Beiderbecke was born in Davenport, Iowa, and was mostly self-taught on piano and cornet. He joined the Wolverine Orchestra and made his first record in 1923, but it was his periods with Jean Goldkette (St Louis, 1926–27) and Paul Whiteman (NY, 1928–30) which brought him to wider attention. Recorded under his own name with Frankie Trumbauer. Alcoholism ruined his health, but he was idolized after his death. A cool stylist with a bell-like tone.

 Bix Beiderbecke And The Wolverines Timeless CBC 1-013 Beiderbecke; Jimmy McPartland (c); Miff Mole, Tommy Dorsey, George Brunies, Al Gandee (tb); Don Murray (cl); Jimmy Hartwell (cl, as); Frankie Trumbauer (Cmel); George Johnson (ts); Dick Voynow, Rube Bloom, Paul Mertz (p); Bob Gillett, Howdy Quicksell (bj); Min Leibrook (tba); Vic Moore, Tom Gargano (d). 2–12/24.
 Bix Beiderbecke And The Chicago Cornets Milestone MCD-47019-2 As above, except add Muggsy Spanier (c), Guy Carey (tb), Volly DeFaut (cl), Mel Stitzel (p), Marvin Saxbe (bj, g), Vic Berton (d). 2–12/24.
Seventy-five years after his death, he remains the most lionized and romanticized of jazz figures. Beiderbecke's understated mastery, his cool eloquence and precise improvising were long cherished as the major alternative to Louis Armstrong's clarion leadership in the original jazz age, and his records have endured remarkably well, even though few of them were in an uncompromised jazz vein. These CDs collect virtually everything he made in his first year in the studios, with the Wolverine Orchestra, the Sioux City Six and Bix's Rhythm Jugglers. With no vocalists to hinder them, these young white bands were following in the footsteps of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, and although they sometimes seem rather stiff and unswinging, the ensembles are as daring as almost anything else being recorded at the time. Despite the presence of players like Mole, Dorsey and Murray, only Beiderbecke's solos have retained much independent life; the beautiful little contribution to 'Royal Garden Blues', for instance, shines through a dull recording and staid surroundings. The record also includes two tracks made after McPartland had replaced Bix in the Wolverines. Some of the original Gennett masters will never sound anything other than dusty and muffled, but John R. T. Davies has done his usual peerless job on the remastering for Timeless and there is a fine essay by authority Richard Sudhalter. The Milestone set adds five tracks by Chicago's Bucktown Five, fronted by a teenaged Muggsy Spanier, a not inconsiderable bonus, though the remastering isn't quite as good.

* Bix Beiderbecke Vol. 1 – Singin' The Blues Columbia CK 45450 Beiderbecke; Hymie Farberman (t); Bill Rank (tb); Don Murray (cl, bs); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Frankie Trumbauer (Cmel); Red Ingle, Bobby Davis (as); Adrian Rollini (bsx); Paul Mertz, Itzy Riskin, Frank Signorelli (p); Joe Venuti (vn); Eddie Lang (g); John Cali (bj); Joe Tarto (tba); Chauncey Morehouse, Vic Berton (d); Sam Lanin (perc); Irving Kaufman, Seger Ellis (v). 2–9/27.
This follows Bix chronologically through arguably his best year in the studios, and it also includes his curious piano solo, 'In A Mist'. Most of the tracks are under Trumbauer's leadership and his own slippery, imaginative solos are often the equal of Bix's, demonstrating why Lester Young named him as a primary influence. Most listeners, though, will be waiting for the shining, affecting cornet improvisations on 'Singin' The Blues', 'Clarinet Marmalade', 'For No Reason At All In C' and the rest. The Columbia sound is light and clear.

* Bix Beiderbecke Vol. 2 – At The Jazz Band Ball Columbia CK 46175 Beiderbecke; Charlie Margulis (t); Bill Rank (tb); Pee Wee Russell (cl); Jimmy Dorsey, Issy Friedman, Charles Strickfaden (cl, as); Don Murray (cl, bs); Frankie Trumbauer (Cmel); Adrian Rollini, Min Leibrook (bsx); Frank Signorelli, Arthur Schutt (p); Tom Satterfield (p, cel); Joe Venuti, Matty Malneck (vn); Carl Kress, Eddie Lang (g); Chauncey Morehouse, Harold McDonald (d); Bing Crosby, Jimmy Miller, Charlie Farrell (v). 10/27–4/28.
The survey of Bix's OKeh recordings has the advantage of eliminating the Whiteman material and concentrating on his most jazz-directed music; this disc includes some of the best of the Bix And His Gang sides, including the title-piece, 'Jazz Me Blues' and 'Sorry', plus further dates with Trumbauer. As a leader, Bix wasn't exactly a progressive – some of the material harks back to the arrangements used by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band – but his own playing is always remarkable: lean, bruised, a romantic's sound, but one that feels quite at home in what were still rough and elementary days for jazz. These Columbia editions are a bit long in the tooth now, but worth searching for.

 Bix Beiderbecke With Paul Whiteman 1927–1928 Classics 1208 Beiderbecke; Henry Busse, Charlie Margulis, Henry Busse, Eddie Pinder (t); Jack Fulton (tb, v); Tommy Dorsey, Boyce Cullen, Wilbur Hall, Bill Rank (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Chester Hazlett, Charlie Strickfaden, Hal Mclean, Frankie Trumbauer, Jack Mayhew, Nye Mayhew, Rube Crozier, Izzy Friedman, Red Mayer (reeds); Hoagy Carmichael (p, v); Harry Perrella, Tom Satterfield, Roy Bargy, Ferdie Grofe (p); Kurt Dieterle, Mischa Russell, Mario Perry, Matt Malneck, Charles Gaylord, John Bowman (strings); Wilbur Hall, Carl Kress (g); Mike Pingitore (bj); Min Leibrook (tba, bsx); Mike Trafficante, Steve Brown (b); Harold McDonald (d); Bing Crosby, Al Rinker, Harry Barris, Austin Young, Charles Gaylord, Olive Kline, Lambert Murphy (v); Paul Whiteman (cond). 11/27–4/28.

Bix's tenure with Whiteman is a mix of triumph and frustration. Though often buried in the massed ranks of the ensemble, he's still audible in the brass section-work, and when his solos come up, a light comes on. As usual with all dance music of this period, the soloists are mostly rationed to 8, 16 or (sometimes) 32 bars, yet even within this framework Bix shines in 'Lonely Melody' and 'Dardanella'. There are occasional sidebars such as the small-group treatment of 'San' as well as the bonus of the young Bing Crosby.

[illegible] COLLECTION

 Bix And Tram

JSP CD913 4CD As appropriate discs above. 26–29.

A fully comprehensive Bix collection, properly remastered and from a reputable source, is still not widely available. This JSP set at least covers all the Gang titles and every session with Trumbauer, and given the fine transfers and bargain price this is easily first choice among what is now a crowded field of compilations. Mosaic has issued one of its exceptional sets with some associated Jack Teagarden sessions in a seven-disc edition, superbly transferred by Doug Pomeroy. With Bix slipping farther back into history, one wonders how this young man's reputation is going to hold up over the next decade.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Bix Beiderbecke Story Proper PROPERBOX 66 4CD. 24–30.

Even these are disappearing fast. A reasonable job, but the sound is mostly muddy and the documentation no better than average. Rounds up some loose ends, though.

 Bix Beiderbecke With Jean Goldkette's Orchestra 1924–1927 Retrieval RTR 79040. 11/24–9/27.

Bix's records with the Goldkette group are more highly regarded than his Whiteman sessions, although he is actually featured less prominently here, and Murray (cl), Trumbauer (Cmel), Venuti (vn) and Lang (g) get at least as much space.

 Davenport Blues Saga Jazz 9829947. 24–30.

One of a continuing flow of respectable compilations.

 In A Mist Definitive DRCD 11373. 27.

All readily available elsewhere in superior sound, but a reasonable selection from the classic year.

Richie Beirach (born 1947)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Studied at Berklee and in Manhattan before making a mark with Dave Liebman in the '70s. A sporadic recorder on his own account, he's much admired as both sideman and harmonic theoretician.

(*) Elegy For Bill Evans Storyville 8065 Beirach; George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 5/81.

Throughout his career, Beirach has attempted to blend jazz harmony with elements of European classical music: Chopin, Debussy's impressionism most obviously, and also the densely chromatic language of the Second Viennese School. Bill Evans, who Beirach knew well, is an obvious source from within jazz and the programme of Miles Davis tunes (unless you accept Evans himself wrote 'Blue In Green') is well suited to his conception. 'Nardis' is quite substantially restructured, while remaining recognizable; 'Solar' is taken more straightforwardly. Beirach also programmes 'Spring Is Here' and Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way', which opens the disc. The sound is excellent and the trio nicely balanced.

 Too Grand /  Universal Mind Steeplechase SCCD 31333 / 31325 Beirach; Andy LaVerne (p). 11/92; 11/93.

Two fine duet albums, also, the second of which is unusual in jazz terms for being a four-hands project on one piano. The culminating part is 'The Town Hall Suite', four Bill Evans compositions, played with great freedom and inventiveness. For the rest, the dominating presence is Miles Davis again ('Solar', 'Blue In Green'). The earlier record also includes 'Milestones' and 'So What', as well as material by Monk, Brubeck, Tyner, Shorter and a lovely version of 'Nature Boy'. Andy and Richie swap treble and bass duties throughout the four-hands record, but they seem to do the same instinctively, even when there are two pianos. The performance of Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way' is particularly forceful in this regard, a huge spread of sound that might be from a much bigger ensemble were it not for the rich piano chording and the percussive off-accents.

 Trust Evidence 22143 Beirach; Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 2/93.

A mostly quite abstract set of originals, with one contribution from Holland, and a nice version of Wayne Shorter's 'Nefertiti', that makes for fairly demanding listening. Perversely, the very beauty of Beirach's playing makes this a harder record to absorb than if it had been more aggressively performed.

 The Snow Leopard Evidence ECD 22193 Beirach; Gregor Huebner (vn); George Mraz (b); Billy Hart (d). 6/96, 6/97.

(*) Round About Bartók ACT 9276 2 As above, except omit Hart. 12/99.

The Snow Leopard is a wonderfully varied trio set – Huebner appears on just three tracks – that covers material by Coltrane ('Expression' and 'Naima'), Bill Evans ('Peace Piece'), Billy Hart's wonderful 'Redemption' and classical themes by Mompou and Bartók. There is also a moving and profoundly effective 'In The Wee Small Hours Of The Morning', on which Mraz references Frank Sinatra's famous recording of the song. Beirach's own compositions are typically eclectic. 'The Snow Leopard' is as rarefied and elusive as the creature itself, and as beautiful. 'Citizen Code' and 'Elm' are more generic, but none the less effective.

The drummerless set is a further extension of Beirach's desire to synthesize jazz and the language of modern classical music. He draws on themes by Scriabin and Kodály as well as Bartók, and juxtaposes folk themes from Eastern Europe with his own 'Zal'. Working without percussion emphasizes the classical feel of the trio, and Mraz works much of the time up in cello range. The recording is flawless, warm and intimate, and impeccably balanced.

() Round About Federico Mompou /  Round About Monteverdi ACT 9296 2 / 9412 2 Beirach; Gregor Huebner (vn); George Mraz (b). 5/01 & 10/02.

The works of Catalan composer Mompou offer much to the jazz musician, not least a spare and unadorned adaptation of folk forms and, arguably, something of the defining 'Spanish tinge'. The only problem is that, compared to Bartók and Monteverdi, at least, he can be exceedingly dull. That's reflected here, though Beirach and his associates make something highly original out of the found sources.

All that is wrong with the second set is – perversely – that there is too much jazz in it. Monteverdi's music, like Bach's, is one of the wellsprings of the Western classical tradition, so primal and unmuddied that it seems almost vandalism to overwork it as Beirach does on occasion here. The material is drawn from all over the master's canon, with themes stated relatively straight before being subjected to variation and 'fantasy'. The key player is Mraz, who provides some wonderful tonalities and seems anxious not to over-egg. Listeners who've never encountered Monteverdi may well be captivated and find themselves hunting down more orthodox performances.

Also, in brief:

 Antarctica Evidence ECD 22086. 9/85.
A fine solo suite, evoking the southern continent but without any overt programmatic intent.

(*) Emerald City Evidence ECD 22079. 87.
An ostensibly like-minded duo with John Abercrombie (g) which fails to gel.

* Common Heart Owl 72943. 9/87.
Elegant solo set, mostly of compositions by favourite playing associates: Liebman, Holland, McClure, Abercrombie, etc.

Martin Bejerano

PIANO

The Miami native, now New York-based, made an impression with Roy Haynes's group and also worked with bassist Lonnie Plaxico and guitarist Russell Malone, before making an impressive debut as leader.

(*) Evolution/Revolution Reservoir RSRCD 189 Bejerano; Edward Pérez (b); Ludwig Alfonso (d). 10/06.
Bejerano's concert debut was as soloist in Rhapsody In Blue while still at high school. There is something of that classical sumptuousness in his work, though in jazz terms he is most obviously influenced by Chick Corea, who shares a similar background.

No Corea tunes in the set-list, unfortunately, so direct comparison is not possible. There are, however, sparkling renditions of 'Monk's Dream' (played solo) and 'Bouncing With Bud' and a fine, though oddly inward, reading of 'Solar'. Bejerano's originals are mostly workmanlike. 'Cubano Arrepentido' points strongly to his cultural origins but without being generically 'Latin' in style. 'Blues Evolution' is a straightforward blowing tune, a useful starting-point for the set and one that establishes a successful chemistry with Pérez and Alfonso.

Bob Belden (born 1956)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, KEYBOARDS

He grew up in South Carolina and studied in Texas before working with Woody Herman and Donald Byrd. His own large-scale ensemble led to work with high-profile names like Herbie Hancock and Sting.

 La Cigale Sunnyside SSC 1097D Belden; Jim Powell, Tim Hagans (t, flhn); Larry Farrell (tb); George Moran (btb); Peter Reit (frhn); Carl Kleinsteuber (tba); Tim Ries, Craig Handy (ss, ts); Chuck Wilson (cl, f); Mike Migliore (as, f, picc); Ron Kozak (bcl, f); Glenn Wilson (bs); Marc Copland (ky); Jay Anderson (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 10/90.
The debut (see below) was ambitious but unexciting with some surprisingly pedestrian writing, redeemed in places by strong improvisation. The follow-up, recorded at the Paris Jazz Festival, has a similar feel, but it's looser-knit and the soloists in the band get to show their paces. Even so, 'Psalm No 1 (For The Heavens)' isn't much more than attractive mood music. Belden has subsequently arranged songbook albums based around the work of Sting, Prince and Carole King. They have their moments, but they fall largely outside our remit. Belden's influence is considerable, though mainly as a consultant at Blue Note.

Also, in brief:

(*) Treasure Island Sunnyside SSC 1041D. 8/89.
A belated debut as leader, but the long title-suite really doesn't carry the day.

Marcus Belgrave (born 1936)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Born in Pennsylvania, he moved to Detroit aged 27 and established himself there as a bold follower of innovation, always busy, but all too rarely heralded.

 Gemini Soul Jazz 24 Belgrave; Phil Ranelin (tb); Wendell Harrison (ts); Harold McKinney (p); Darryl Dybka (syn); Ed Pickens (b); Lorenzo Brown (perc). 74.
An eclectic's eclectic, Belgrave worked within the Tribe collective who might well have received the acclaim that went to the Art Ensemble, worked with Sun Ra and even recorded with Was (Not Was). He's neither a hardcore avant-gardist nor an unapologetic populist but a trumpeter who has stuck with his own distinctive vision. This survivor of a patchy recording career is hopelessly time-stamped thanks to McKinney's Fender Rhodes, Dybka's MiniMoog patches and the relentless abstract-funk approach. What does come out of it, though, is Belgrave's utter conviction and bright, clear-toned playing. A shame he isn't more widely acknowledged and more effectively recorded.

Also, in brief:

 In The Tradition Jazzology 324. 12/87–3/00.
A curious set of encounters with Art Hodes (p) and Doc Cheatham (t), plus others, originally recorded for Parkwood but not released until later. Belgrave doesn't compromise his style for the seniors.

Aaron Bell (1922–2003)

DOUBLE BASS, TUBA

Raised in Muskogee, he began his career in New Orleans before becoming one of Duke Ellington's most distinctive bass-players.

 After The Party's Over Cloud 9 18082 Bell; Hank Jones (p); Ed Thigpen (d). 5/58.

Bell had a gorgeous, almost nutty sound and inevitably he's well featured in his own trio. It is, however, very much a band of equals and the group's relative longevity – remarkable, given the members' commitments elsewhere and apparent differences of style – gave it a real empathy and collective character. Thigpen is sometimes too abrupt and abrasive for his partners, but for the most part he plays with delicious restraint. Jones is all class and sophistication, but not above some grandstanding on 'Slaughter On Tenth Avenue', the Rodgers dance piece a delightful and unexpected choice in a cleverly chosen set, which works all the way from 'Satin Doll, Parts1 & 2' to the citrusy 'Kumquat'. Formerly on RCA, but now revived by this small label.

Charles Bell

PIANO

Raised in Pittsburgh, he never made a major splash but produced solidly interesting work.

 In Concert Fresh Sound FSRCD 1630 Bell; Thomas Sewell (b); William Harris Jr (d). 11/63.

There's not much work by Bell around any more. This was originally on Gateway and is probably the only thing of the pianist's you'll find outside the rarities bins. He played with considerable harmonic intensity. Even the familiar line of 'On Green Dolphin Street' takes on new hues and shadows. If November 1963 was a fateful month in America, this date – recorded early in the month at Carnegie Lecture Hall – seems to foreshadow something. Sewell and Harris are little-known but able players, oddly reminiscent in places of David Izenzon and Charles Moffett in the Ornette Coleman trio. Sewell's original blues is intriguing enough to want more and Bell's own 'Memories Of Home' suggests something of his gifts as a composer. A sidebar, but an interesting one.

Roberto Bellatalla

DOUBLE BASS

Brilliant freestyle player and an effective leader who previously worked with Elton Dean, Louis Moholo and others.

 Borrowed Time Slam CD 239 Bellatalla; Claude Deppa (t, flhn); Jason Yarde (ss, as); Brian Abrahams (d). 12/98.

(*) Bows' Wind CamJazz 7781 Bellatalla; Giovanni Maier (b); Michele Rabbia (perc). 5/05.

His involvement with the South African diaspora in London gives his work a comfortable foothold in melodic, almost folkish playing as well as free improvisation. Some of the tracks on Borrowed Time recall the great days of Mongezi Feza and Dudu Pukwana, starting simply and then erupting. 'On The Eastern Side Of The Lake Of Flowers' sounds as if it might be a picture postcard but is a tour de force for bowed bass and soprano saxophone. Abrahams isn't Louis Moholo, but he knows how to command.

The free trio with Maier and Rabbia is a fascinating project, musically quite demanding over the length of a CD but best listened to as a continuous performance, whereby some of the underlying logic becomes evident. Easily overlooked, but highly recommended.

Louie Bellson (born 1924)

DRUMS

Born Luigi Paolino Balassoni, he worked with Goodman, Dorsey and James in the '40s, but his most famous early association was with Duke Ellington, whom he joined in 1951. He continued to work in big bands until the '60s, when the emphasis shifted to smaller groups.

 Live At Flamingo Hotel 1959 Jazz Hour JH 1026 Bellson; Guido Basso, Johnny Frock, Ralph Clark, Wally Buttogello, Fred Thompson (t); Juan Tizol, Earl Swope, Nick DiMaio (tb); Joe DiAngelo (frhn); Frank Albright, Herb Geller (as); Aaron Sachs, Nick Nicholas (ts); George Perry (bs); Ed Diamond (p); Lawrence Lucy (g); Truck Parham (b); Jack Arnold (vib, perc). 6/59.

Bellson is among the last survivors of a breed of tough and tirelessly energetic drummers who powered big bands and small groups alike with showmanship and sheer muscle. His work with the big-band elite gave him a nearly unrivalled experience, and his own groups are marked out by an authority which is often masked by Bellson's comparatively restrained style: virtuoso that he is, he always plays for the band.

This resurrects a typical hotel engagement. Location sound is excellent and the authentic whomp of Bellson's kit fires up the band, though soloists are left little space to shine: Basso and Geller get some time on 'Blast Off', but that's about it.

(*) Inferno! Concord CCD2 2158 Bellson; Bobby Shew, Stuart Blumberg, Frank Szabo, Conte Candoli, Blue Mitchell, Harry Edison, Nelson Hatt, Walt Johnson, Ron King, John Thomas (t, flhn); Charlie Loper, Frank Rosolino, Gil Falco, Dana Hughes, Nick DiMaio, Mayo Tiana, Bob Payne, Alan Kaplan (tb); Dick Spencer, Pete Christlieb, Larry Covelli, Don Menza, Bill Byrne, Matt Catingub, Andy MacKintosh, Gordon Goodwin (sax); Nat Pierce, Ross Tompkins, Frank Collett (p); Mundell Lowe, John Chiodini, Timothy May (g); John Williams (b); Jack Arnold, Joe Porcaro (perc). 5/74–8/79.

Bellson recorded extensively for Concord, though most of the work is now deleted. This repackage of 150 MPH and Dynamite! makes an attractive buy. There are a few nice cameos from Edison, Candoli and Rosolino on the former, and a fine Bill Holman chart for 'Hello, Young Lovers'. Lacking the modish fluff which spoiled the Pablo albums (see below 'in brief'), this is one of Louie's best. The later set was recorded at the 1979 Concord Festival and for sheer big-band exuberance the likes of 'Sambandrea Swing' hit the bullseye.

 Matterhorn Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1096 Bellson; Conte Candoli, Walter Johnson, Ron King, Bobby Shew, Snooky Young (t); William C. Booth, Gil Falco, Dana Hughes, Alan Kaplan, Bob Payne (tb); Pete Christlieb, Andy MacKintosh, Don Menza, Joe Romano, Richard Spencer (sax); Ross Tompkins (p); Grant Geissman (g); Joel Di Bartolo (b); Jack Arnold, Robert Zimmitti (perc). 12/78.

Many of Bellson's records from the '70s and '80s are blemished by a shallow attempt at crossover. Matterhorn actually stands up remarkably well. Conceived as a whopping 'Suite For Drums', there's a whiff of excess which Bellson manages to transmute through sheer skill and bravado, but without the bombast of Buddy Rich. It's a crack team of studio pros and there is the odd solo to liven things up further.

 Don't Stop Now Capri 71001 Bellson; John Audino, Conte Candoli, Steve Huffsteter, Walt Johnson, Ron King (t); Carl

Fontana, Andy Martin, Michael Wimberly (tb); John Bambridge, Pete Christlieb, Joe Roccisano (sax); Mike Melvoin (ky); Frank Strazzeri (p); Dave Stone (b). 84.

Originally released on Christlieb's Bosco label this half-and-half big-band and small-group disc makes a welcome return. There is a wonderful spot for Louie on Thad Jones's 'With Bells On', which must rank as one of the best of his career, but the best of the material generally comes on the combo tracks, largely because the sound is better there. There's still an unhappy tendency to throw in contemporary elements (Melvoin's DX-7 adds nothing), but there is enough good straight-ahead playing to satisfy most fans.

(*) Live From New York Telarc 83334 Bellson; Danny Cahn, Glenn Drewes, Darryl Shaw, Marvin Stamm (t); Clark Terry (flhn); Michael Davis, Larry Farrell, Keith O'Quinn (tb); Herb Besson (tb, btb); Joe Roccisano, Steve Wilson (as); Ted Nash, Scott Robinson (ts); Jack Stuckey (bs); Derek Smith (p); Harvie Swartz (b). 12/93.

Clark Terry is cited as a special guest and his flugelhorn solo on 'Blow Your Horn' is the album's highlight. Nevertheless, the 70-year-old drummer is in great form and spirits, playing a set of charts prepared by Tommy Newsom, Matt Catingub and others, and including a long 'L.A. Suite', which gives him a chance to stretch out and enjoy a nostalgic ride

 Salute Chiaroscuro 329 2CD Bellson; Bobby Shew (t); George Young (ts); Willie Pickens (p); Keter Betts (b). 4/94.

The 'salute' is a half-hour medley on the second disc that pays homage to half a dozen of the great jazz drummers, followed by an interview with Louie in which he talks over much of the same ground. To be honest, the speech is more interesting than the playing, but there are some nice things on the first disc. The quintet play a lovely version of Horace Silver's 'Blowin' The Blues Away' and a fine 'When You Wish Upon A Star'. As ever, Louie plays for the guys, with affecting modesty.

Also, in brief:

() The Best Of Louie Bellson /  The Louie Bellson Explosion Pablo 2405-407 / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 728. 5/75–9/78; 5/75.

No great shakes, but it distils some of the best moments from otherwise rather dispensable records; Explosion is still available separately.

 Concord Jazz Heritage Series: Louie Bellson Concord CCD 4817. 11/77–10/97.

With so much of his two-decade association in the deleted bin, this is a useful salvaging of the stronger cuts.

() Jam With Blue Mitchell Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 802. 9/78.

A decent date, but Blue isn't his old self and it's Pete Christlieb (ts) who supplies the most reliable solos.

* Cool Cool Blue Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 802. 11/82.

Very low key indeed.

Gregg Bendian (born 1963)

PERCUSSION

He first played in art-rock situations but moved into free music. Has recently been much involved with the Mahavishnu Project.

 Definite Pitch Aggregate CD 001 Bendian (perc solo). 94.

(*) Counterparts CIMP 105 Bendian; Paul Smoker (t, flhn); Vinny Golia (sno, cl, bcl); Mark Dresser (b). 1/96.

(*) Interzone Eremite MTE 03 Bendian; Nels Cline (g); Mark Dresser (b); Alex Cline (d, perc). 8/96.

Like Gerry Hemingway, Bendian was originally excited by rock music, before discovering the richness of percussion-aware composers like Edgard Varèse. He has pointed out that the main influences on his development of a solo improvisational approach were not other percussionists but free players like Cecil Taylor (who has recorded some Bendian compositions) and Derek Bailey (with whom he has since recorded). With one exception, the pieces on Definite Pitch are all written for tuned instruments, hence the title; Bendian uses chimes, timps, chromatic boobams, electronic keyboard percussion, vibes, but only on one track does he attempt to create an ensemble effect by moving among different instruments. This is a work-in-progress recording with an emphasis on repaying debts: tributes to percussionist Jamie Muir, to Captain Beefheart/Don Van Vliet, film-maker Stan Brakhage, physicist Richard Feynman and others.

Brakhage and Beefheart are interesting figures to acknowledge because much of Bendian's work is surreal and associative, and this is very much the mood of his first group recording, in which he takes a more conventional drummer's part but reinterprets it in that same maverick way. Smoker, Golia and Dresser are kindred spirits in this. The pieces (rather dimly recorded) are mostly long and open-formed, and they integrate arranged themes with what sound like totally free passages. Precisely where one begins and the other ends remains unclear, and there is a constant sense, as in Braxton's works, of multiple subjects being engaged, as in a palimpsest.

Interzone sounds like a settled performing unit. Bendian concentrates on vibes and glockenspiel, leaving more conventional time-keeping to Alex Cline, and relying on the two string-players for much of the texture and colour in the set: plenty of both. Most of the tracks are long and detailed and are structured round quite complex rhythmic ideas. 'I-Zones' is abstract and lateral. 'Sunblade Strafe The Continent' is more obviously evocative and the enigmatic 'Blood: Sassoon Zi Tavit' might almost be an off-cut from some unreleased project of John Zorn's. This is a strong set, faithfully recorded and well engineered.

 Interstellar Space: The Music Of John Coltrane Atavistic ALP 102 Bendian; Nels Cline (g). 2–4/98.

The most interesting of a whole shelfload of Coltrane anniversary records, this thoughtful retread of Trane's and Rashied Ali's experimental duets arrived late and was largely overlooked. Interestingly, Nels Cline, brother of Interzone's Alex, does not push his powerfully amped guitar up into the multiphonic and harmonically complex atmospheres which the great saxophonist claimed for jazz in the '60s, relying instead on much simpler lines and delicate phrasing.

Bendian is so wholly besotted by free-jazz drumming that he adopts the mannerisms with absolute authenticity. As pastiche, this would be wonderful. As a tribute to the permanent revolution in modern music, it is nearly grand, a superbly modulated performance from both players. The bonus live performance of 'Lonnie's Lament' is atmospheric and moving.

 Myriad Atavistic 119 Bendian; Nels Cline (g); Steuart Liebig (b); Alex Cline (d, perc). 99.

 Requiem For Jack Kirby Atavistic 125 As above, except omit Liebig; add Joel Hamilton (d). 00.

Unlike Alex Cline, who appears again on the first of this pair, Bendian has evolved towards an edgy surrealism that remains rhythmically based. The second of the pair is a tribute to the great era of comic book art. Gregg concentrates largely on vibraphone and glockenspiel on these dates, leaving Cline to fill in his trademark textures. Nels Cline brings in a touch of art-rock, and though some of his hotter solos veer towards pastiche, they're executed with enough strength and intelligence to avoid parody. Hard to single out tracks on either album, except to say that 'Diaspora' (Myriad) and 'Teaneck In The Marvel Age' (Requiem) outstay their welcome somewhat. Bendian now seems more convincing when he restricts himself to a shorter duration. Even so, these are fine, intelligent records which point to a new kind of jazz fusion and may seem of growing significance as the years go by.

 Bone Structure Cryptogramophone 114 Bendian; G. E. Stinson (g); Jeff Gauthier (vn); Steuart Leibig (b). 2–4/00.

 Change Aggregate 4 Bendian; Steve Hunt (p); John Lockwood (b). 11/05.

Bone Structure is a fascinating unit, which functions almost like a classical piano quartet with Bendian in the piano-player's role. The range of options is much wider even than the instrumentation suggests; Bendian has a huge palette and Leibig's treatments widen the spectrum considerably. There's not a dull moment in the entire set, its spirit vividly and thoughtfully improvisatory.

Bendian's affection for violin has long been obvious. The kind of glissando sound he looks for from his own tuned percussion has clear similarities. Trio Pianissimo has been going for some time now and if the Truemedia disc below is now quite difficult to find, the new one fills the gap nicely. The closing sequence is intriguing: a dedication to Monk's drummer Ben Riley, the great pianist's 'Gallop's Gallop' and then the extended 'Torrents', which is one of the best things Bendian has done.

Also, in brief:

(*) Espiritu Truemedia D 98715. 2/97.

These duets with Alex Cline (d) are heart-liftingly good, percussion-playing of the highest order and unfailingly musical. Might be hard to find, though.

(*) Trio Pianissimo Truemedia D 99205. 98.

A maverick 'piano trio' delivers a strong, beautifully executed album that might have been improved only by the inclusion of more varied material.

Roni Ben-Hur

GUITAR

Born in Israel, he arrived in the US in 1985 and studied improvisation with Barry Harris. He plays in a brisk bop style.

 Backyard / (*) Sofia's Butterfly TCB 95902 / 98802 Ben-Hur; Barry Harris (p on Backyard only); Lisle Atkinson (b); Leroy Williams (d); Amy London (v). 94; 97.

(*) Anna's Dance Reservoir RSR 127 Ben-Hur; Charles Davis (ts); Barry Harris (p); Walter Booker (b); Leroy Williams (d). 11/00.

* Signature Reservoir 181 Ben-Hur; John Hicks (p); Rufus Reid (b); Leroy Williams (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 9/04.

(*) Keepin' It Open Motema 0010 Ben-Hur; Jeremy Pelt (t); Ronnie Mathews (p); Santi Debriano (b); Lewis Nash (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 9/05.

For his debut, Ben-Hur shrewdly recruited one of the original bop giants. The still-effervescent Barry Harris coasts through these relatively unfamiliar tunes with a smile you can almost hear. 'The Thrill Is Gone' opens the album on what is possibly its high-point, but the following 'Dance Of The Infidels', which the man from the Holy Land invests with scope and drama and with a certain pre-modern quality that suggests the theme might have originated on a Crusader march. Sonny Rollins's 'Audubon' is rarely covered but reveals another brightly plumaged bopper. 'Backyard' is Harris's clever contrafact on 'Embraceable You'. Singer Amy London – Mrs Ben-Hur – turns in a solitary vocal on 'Something To Live For'.

Ben-Hur has been likened to Kenny Burrell and Jimmy Raney. If anything, he sounds more like Jimmy's son Doug, with the same quiet urgency and willingness to hang back on the beat before pressing down on the gas. The second album is a better showcase for his guitar-playing than the debut, which inevitably relied heavily on Harris. Roni keeps Atkinson and Williams on board, and gives Amy a vocal spot, but in the trio format he's pushed out into the spotlight. Two Harris tunes, 'Like This' and 'Choices', sound as if they might have formed the basis for past lessons, so briskly does the guitarist despatch them. The Bud Powell tune this time is 'The Fruit' and there is a fresh Latin tinge to 'Tin Tin Deo'.

On the third record, Ben-Hur closes with another bop master whose work he has studied closely. As a member of Bertha Hope's Elmolennium Project, Roni came across Elmo Hope's 'So Nice'. Sadly, there are no other Hope themes on Anna's Dance, a pity given the return of Harris, who understands this material like no one else now living. The other ambitious reading is of Charlie Parker's seldom-played blues 'Visa', which puts guitar and piano into an interesting new relation. Booker is another Ben-Hur employer [or employee?] and his firm, chunky bass is a great asset, spurring on some of the quieter and less emphatic numbers.

The ability to sign up major names is again reflected on the fourth and probably best record. Hicks can be a dull soloist, but he enjoys this setting and plays some of his best recent solos, not least on his own 'Slowly But Surely'. The guitarist has clearly learned much from Villa-Lobos's 'Bachianas Brasileiras' and 'Choros' and programmes one of each here. His own 'Eretz' is the best thing on the album, though, and further testimony to his developing skill and musicality.

There's another Elmo Hope tune on Keepin' It Open. 'One Second Please' is one of the guitarist's best bop covers yet, though the Monk tune included, 'Think One', runs it a close second. He again diversifies by including a traditional Hebrew melody, 'Eshkolit', and a slice of Granados in 'Andaluza'. It pretty much works as a passage, though there are some slightly jarring moments as he switches from bop to a kind of swinging world music.

Sathima Bea Benjamin

VOICES

As a South African exile in Europe with then-partner Dollar Brand (Abdullah Ibrahim), Beattie Benjamin met Duke Ellington and was recorded by him. The name 'Sathima' was given to her by Johnny Dyani.

(*) A Morning In Paris Ekapa S.A. 004 Benjamin; Duke Ellington, Abdullah Ibrahim, Billy Strayhorn (p); Svend Asmussen (vn); Johnny Gertze (b); Makaya Ntoshko (d). 2/63.

Bea Benjamin buttonholed Duke after a Paris concert and persuaded him to come to the Club Africana and hear her boyfriend's trio. Ever courtly, Duke insisted on hearing Bea sing as well, and was captivated. The resulting recording, Duke Ellington Presents The Dollar Brand Trio, established the South African's career, even though Frank Sinatra of Reprise Records decided the couple weren't commercial enough for further release. That A Morning In Paris survives at all is due to the habit of recording engineer Gerard Lehner of keeping a private listening copy of every session he taped.

After an impromptu rehearsal – Strayhorn had never heard 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square', Benjamin did not know his 'Your Love Has Faded' – the session was recorded, with Duke accompanying on 'I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good' and 'Solitude', Strayhorn on the two rehearsed songs, the solidly Duke-influenced Brand/Ibrahim on the remainder. All are standards, but Benjamin's warm, slightly innocent delivery and sensuous (but not morbidly sensual) vibrato give familiar material like 'Love Man', 'The Man I Love' and 'Spring Will Be A Little Late This Year' a quality that suggests, as we've noted elsewhere, that she'd never heard these songs before, or certainly never heard iconic performances of them. The trio plays well and even the curious inclusion of Asmussen on pizzicato violin adds to the record's charm. Later work had more of an African inflection, but here Benjamin emerges as a remarkable interpreter of standards.

A tiny puzzle. This Ekapa release somewhat implies that this is the first appearance of these 'lost' tapes. Owners of our fifth (2000) edition will find it reviewed there as an Enja record. Sadly, none of Benjamin's other discs for the German label are currently available. Probably nothing since has matched that studio debut: Duke as accompanist and producer, and Billy Strayhorn.

Don Bennett (born 1941)

PIANO

A picaresque career, but a swinging hard-bopper of distinction.

(*) Chicago Calling Candid CACD 79713 Bennett; Arthur Hoyle, Steve Smyth (t); Art Porter (ss, as); Eddie Peterson (ts); Erich Hochberg (b); Paul Wertico, Darryl Ervin (d). 5/90.

 Solar Candid CACD 79723 Bennett; James Long (b); Douglas Sides (d). 8/94.

(*) Simplexity Candid CACD 79742 Bennett; Aleksandar Milosevic (b); Douglas Sides (d). 97.

Bennett gave up music for a decade to work as a private eye. His comeback album, Chicago Calling, was originally released on the small Southport label and was subsequently picked up by Alan Bates for Candid. One wonders what a big label might have done with him: throw him into the studio with a couple of celebrity horns, perhaps. Bennett has preferred to work with local Chicagoans, including Peterson, who headed the music department at the University of Illinois; he's a persuasive soloist. So's Hoyle, but he didn't last the set, having to bow out with busted chops and give place to young Smyth, but not before he recorded the lovely bridge solo on Bennett's 'Sleeping Child'. Bennett's strength is melody. 'Love Found Me' sounds as if it has been around for generations. Porter's avowed Lucky Thompson influence is evident in his soprano solo.

The first trio date relies more on other composers, but with an untypical route through Miles's title-piece and 'Tune Up' and with vividly renewed versions of 'Blue Moon' and 'A Night In Tunisia'. All the same, it's Bennett's own writing that intrigues and the impact of the later record is further diminished by a boxy sound. That's corrected on the final disc of the bunch – and what a great description of Bennett's approach Simplexity is – though it's hard to pin down musically why it feels a more successful set. A one-off, Bennett is worth checking out.

Max Bennett

DOUBLE BASS

Enterprising player from the Kenton stable.

* Max Is The Factor Fresh Sound Jazz City FSRCD 2218 Bennett; Nick Travis (t); Carl Fontana (tb); Charlie Mariano (as); Jack Nimitz (bs); Dave McKenna (p); Mel Lewis (d). 12/55.

Bennett was still with Kenton when he recorded these bright sessions over the course of a day. The trio cuts with McKenna and Lewis are probably the best. Certainly Bennett's own work is much more anonymous on the four sextet tracks, though there are some excellent passages and solos on the quartet cuts with Fontana. Nice as ever to hear a trombone-led group, though Bennett's well to the fore as well.

Han Bennink (born 1942)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, TROMBONE, TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, HARMONICA, ANYTHING/EVERYTHING

Born in Zaandam, Bennink went the classic route of working on liners, and he played drums for US visitors to Amsterdam all through the '60s, when he also began working with Misha Mengelberg as a duo. An eminence in European free music, though he still enjoys more boppish situations too.

 Nerve Beats Atavistic Unheard Music UMS/ALP 206 Bennink (d etc solo). 9/73.

There's no substitute for seeing Bennink in performance, and the 1973 survival Nerve Beats is a tour de force which seems entirely one-dimensional, given that we can only experience the aural element. Starting with a drum fusillade which sounds like the work of ten men at least, then proceeding through a further 40 minutes of percussion, trombone, clarinet, primitive drum machines, tabla-playing, noise and music off radios and more, it transcends the clichés about period charm and feels vividly alive, although one can only guess what this extraordinary man is doing some of the way.

(*) Jazz Bunker Leo Golden Years GY 7/8 2CD Bennink; Toshinori Kondo (t, euph, perc, v); Eugene Chadbourne (g, p, v). 2/80.

The 1980 session with Kondo and Chadbourne is a meeting of three masters of cracked extravagance and features everything from trombone/euphonium dialogues to a war of attrition over respective volume levels. In a curious way, it is much more traditional in flavour than most European improvised music; importing bluegrass, brass-band music and pre-bop swing into its delivery, for much of the way it hardly feels avant-garde at all, for all the chaos. The quality of the recording isn't outstanding, but as a constantly surprising, intense and funny piece of documentation it ranks highly in this area.

 Home Safely Favorite 1 Bennink; Curtis Clark (p); Ernst Glerum (b). 1/94.

 Serpentine Songlines SGL 1510 Bennink; Dave Douglas (t). 1/96.

(*) Post Improvisation, Volume 1: When We're Smilin' Incus CD 34 Bennink; Derek Bailey (g). 99.

 In Edamo ICP 037 Bennink; Steve Beresford (p, elec). 2/00.

It's questionable whether the 1994 trio really belongs to Han or to the superb Clark. The pianist is in cracking form on a set of mostly inside compositions which gives Han a chance to show off his formidable timekeeping skills. Precisely because it stands somewhat apart from his more improvisatory work, this one is worth having.

The duo with Douglas offers 13 mostly short tracks, interspersing extemporized originals, a couple of tunes that sound as if they've had some preparatory work done on them and a couple of standards, most startlingly 'Cherokee', which is a vividly comic but also deeply felt performance. 'Too Close For Comfort' is prefaced by 'Two Clogs For Comfort', but mostly the tone is quite sober. Both 'Serpentine' and 'Delft', the two most substantial pieces, are written by Douglas, but he seems to defer to the drummer in performance.

Bennink and Bailey is another partnership that goes back a long way. According to its brief sleeve-note, each man posted the other some music, and each played along with the received result, creating a set of virtual duets. Bennink swings even when he's not playing a countable time, and lifts Bailey's abstractions into something which at least approaches jazz (perhaps to the guitarist's exasperation). A brief and delightful record.

The English pianist Beresford is no match for Misha Mengelberg in duet with the ferocious Dutchman, and his resorting to toy electronics soon becomes a bit tiresome, but the drummer's unstinting enthusiasms bridge any weak spots and a modern recording highlights Han's superb stickwork.

 Train Kept A Rollin' (21 Years Later) Leo 324 Bennink; Eugene Chadbourne (g, bj, p). 01.

Han and the good Doctor in a series of hilariously unexpected duets. Most of the tracks are freely improvised and bear a version of the subtitle ('One Year Later', 'Five Years Later' and so on), but there is also a version of Jobim's 'Corcovado' and, in honour of Han's association with Eric Dolphy, a lovely and completely unexpected take on the saxophonist's best-known composition, 'Miss Ann'. As ever, Chadbourne has his selection of stringed tricks at the ready and somewhat dominates the set.

 The Laughing Owl / * Zeng! Improv-Terp IS 03 / Improv-Terp 13 Bennink; Terrie Ex (g). 1/00; 07.

Just as Derek Bailey had been experimenting with drum'n'bass groups and with DJs, so Bennink chipped in with these sets with the guitarist of Dutch punk group The Ex. The songs are mostly short, intense and fairly haphazard in tone, but the whole project is saved by Bennink's manic humour and Ex's delightful hard-scrabble approach.

 Grass Is Greener Psi 02.02 Bennink; Evan Parker (ts). 01.

Released on Parker's own label, this is a strangely disappointing set in the sense that the two long opening tracks, 'Traps Of Appetite', 'Traps Of Instinct', have no obvious logic, no real shape and only a rather obscure registration on the recording, which was made under professional circumstances. The shorter pieces are much more effective and 'The Empty Hook' is a small masterpiece. Parker is a wonderful tenor-player, a detail often eclipsed by his virtuosic soprano performances, and his strong, gritty tone is heard to maximum effect here. Bennink has a wealth of musical ideas and the intricacy of his playing is breathtaking in places. A shame about those opening pieces, though.

 Amplified Trio Treader TR008 Bennink; John Coxon (g); Ashley Wales (elec, samples). 1/06.

A fine, sometimes boisterous and always good-natured encounter with the Spring Heeled Jack boys. Coxon's guitar has acquired a distinctiveness already and he leads most of these seven numbered improvs in some respect or other. Han has definitely settled into a style or manner by this stage and one sometimes suspects him of 'being Han Bennink' rather than responding to musical cues. A very decent set, though.

Also, in brief:

(*) Tempo Comodo Data 823. 82.

A glorious technician, Bennink has by now learned enough technical tricks to keep the most avid percussion junkie going for months; for most listeners, though, a fairly tough listen.

Sammy Benskin (1922–92)

PIANO

The New Yorker was famed as a great vocal tutor and accompanist. He did little recording on his own account, but he can be found on discs by Buck Clayton, Billie Holiday, Lucky Thompson and others.

 These Foolish Songs Black & Blue 951 Benskin (p solo). 3/82.

Benskin prefers to treat these familiar compositions as songs, rather than as structures for improvisation. Mostly he sticks pretty close to the original conception, sometimes illuminatingly so – as on 'Lullaby Of The Leaves' – at other times ('Lush Life', 'What Are You Doing The Rest Of Your Life') more drably. It makes for a very pleasant hour of jazz, and there is no mistaking the authority of Sammy's touch.

George Benson (born 1943)

GUITAR, VOCAL

Sang from an early age and recorded R&B as a teenager. Then focused on guitar, touring with Jack McDuff from 1962, his own albums from 1965 and sideman appearances with Miles Davis and others. Had major crossover success in the '70s, first as a guitarist, then with a return to singing. Tried to return to jazz as his pop audience faded.

 The New Boss Guitar Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 460 Benson; Red Holloway (ts); Jack McDuff (org); Ronnie Boykins (b); Montego Joe (d). 5/64.

Benson's pop success tended to camouflage the fact that he is a brilliant musician. His first records were made when Wes Montgomery was alive and the acknowledged master of the style which Benson developed for his own ends: a rich, liquid tone, chunky octave chording and a careful sense of construction that makes every chorus tell its own story. At his best, Benson can fire off beautiful lines and ride on a 4/4 rhythm with almost insolent ease. Almost any record featuring his guitar has special moments, though this early date with then-boss McDuff is comparatively routine, with short tracks and a meagre playing-time.

 It's Uptown Columbia/Legacy 66052 Benson; Blue Mitchell (t); Ronnie Cuber (bs); Lonnie Smith (org); Jimmy Lovelace, Ray Lucas, Charlie Persip (d). 66, 67.

(*) The George Benson Cookbook Columbia Legacy 5024702 Benson; Blue Mitchell (t); Bennie Green (tb); King Curtis (ts); Ronnie Cuber (bs); Lonnie Smith (org); Albert Winston (b); Marion Booker, Jimmy Lovelace, Ray Lucas (d). 66.

Uptown is still a very credible and successful jazz album, elements of bebop, Wes, R&B and soul moulded together by Benson's fluid playing and (on three tracks) singing. The reissue includes some material from a Lonnie Smith recording of the same period as well as out-takes from the original Uptown session. Apart from 'Willow Weep For Me', there's no chance for Benson to stretch out and play at any length. There's more rock on Cookbook, but with John Hammond in the booth (he can be heard speaking on some of the bonus tracks) there's a certain guarantee of quality. The Little Willie John song 'Let Them Talk' hadn't been released before and it indicates how much Benson was being steered in a pop direction even here, but the guitar-playing is terrific, still aggressive and thoughtful, but with that ease of delivery that a few years on came to seem a curse. One instinctively wants to freeze him at this point in his career, indulge him in a few vocals and a touch of soul-jazz, but spare him (or us) the breakthrough/decline that followed.

 Giblet Gravy Verve 543754 Benson; Ernie Royal, Snooky Young (t); Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Alan Raph (btb); Pepper Adams (bs); Herbie Hancock (p); Eric Gale, Carl Lynch (g); Ron Carter, Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Cobham (d); Johnny Pacheco (perc); Eileen Gilbert, Albertine Robinson, Lois Winter (v). 68.

 The Silver Collection Verve 823450 Benson; Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Clark Terry, Ernie Royal, Snooky Young (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Alan Raph (btb); Arthur Clarke, George Marge (ts, f); Pepper Adams (bs); Buddy Lucas (hca); Herbie Hancock, Paul Griffin (p); Jimmy Smith (org); Eric Gale (g); Jack Jennings (vib, perc); Bob Cranshaw, Ron Carter, Chuck Rainey (b); Billy Cobham, Jimmy Johnson Jr, Idris Muhammad, Donald Bailey (d); Johnny Pacheco (perc); strings. 1/67–11/68.

 Talkin' Verve Verve 553780 Similar to above. 2–11/68.

 George Benson: Verve Jazz Masters 21 Verve 521861 Similar to above. 2/68–11/69.

After leaving McDuff, Benson cast around for success without really breaking through. His clean, funky but restrained style was hardly the thing in Hendrix's era, and the easy-listening option had yet to envelop him. The Silver Collection and Jazz Masters are very similar, each an intelligent cross-section of Benson's small number of recordings from the period. A hot quintet with Hancock, Carter and Cobham glides through 'Billie's Bounce' and 'Thunder Walk', while 'I Remember Wes' pays apostolic tribute to the recently departed. The tracks with a larger band are ordinary but hint at Benson's growing versatility. Talkin' Verve concentrates on tracks from Giblet Gravy and Goodies and to that extent is more restricted in range. The original of Giblet Gravy is available as a Verve Master Edition, and though George wouldn't be seen dead these days eating in the kind of place on the cover photo, the album makes a case for itself.

(*) Shape Of Things To Come Verve 0967402 Benson; Burt Collins (t); Joe Shepley (t, flhn); Marvin Stamm (t, flhn, picc); Wayne Andre (tb, bs); Alan Raph (tb, vtb, tba); Romeo Penque (f, clo); Stanley Webb (f); Herbie Hancock, Hank Jones (p); Charles Covington (org); Buddy Lucas (hca); Ron Carter, Richard Davis (b); Leo Morris (d); Johnny Pacheco; strings. 10/68.

Originally on A&M, this reappeared in 2007, and delivered a sharp surprise. Even if Benson was being groomed as Wes's successor and a potential crossover star, he takes hold of this and gives it a very solid shake. The opening 'Footin' It' is generic soul-jazz, a collaboration with producer Don Sebesky. It isn't half bad, though, and better is to come. 'Chattanooga Choo Choo' is substantially reinvented and Benson's ability not just to play pop but to give a pop-soul song like Aretha Franklin's 'Don't Let Me Lose This Dream' is consistently impressive. He has some great players on board, of course, though that didn't always make a clinching difference for Benson, who always went his own way. Even his use of effects like Varitone is original. This is a consistent delight and saves its best moment for last with a cracking read of 'Last Train To Clarksville'. Superb.

 Beyond The Blue Horizon CTI ZK 65130 Benson; Clarence Palmer (org); Ron Carter (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Michael Cameron, Albert Nicholson (perc). 2/71.

Creed Taylor's CTI set the standard for easy-listening jazz in its early-'70s heyday, and some of the best has worn reasonably well. The latest edition of this is one of Benson's best records, with 'So What' and 'The Gentle Rain' a cut above the stupefying charts and tick-tock rhythms Taylor favoured: they're lyrical but quite hard-bitten, and with an excellent rhythm section behind him Benson finds room to stretch out. 'Somewhere In The World' is a curious bit of early world-jazz. This is also available on a Columbia triple set with Body Talk and Bad Benson.

 Breezin' /  In Flight /  Weekend In LA Warner Archive / Rhino 76713 / Warners 256327 Benson; Ronnie Foster, Jorge Dalto (ky); Phil Upchurch (g); Stanley Banks (b); Harvey Mason (d); Ralph McDonald (perc); strings (on Breezin' and In Flight only). 1/76; 8–11/76; 2/77.

Breezin' was the first jazz album to go platinum and sell a million copies, but more important was its reconciliation of Taylor's pop-jazz approach with a small-group backing in which Benson could feel genuinely at home. Claus Ogerman's arrangements are still fluffy, and the tunes are thin if not quite anodyne, but Benson and his tightly effective band get the most out of them. The new edition adds two extra tracks, one of which, 'Shark Bite', is tougher and less polite than the rest of the record. In Flight reintroduces Benson the vocalist and sketches in the course he would take next, but the record is too patently a retread of the previous one. Weekend In LA is a live set that shows how the band can hit a groove outside the studio. Benson's treatment of 'On Broadway' is infectious because he lives out the song. As a whole, the session is a bit deodorized, but smoothness is his trademark and his solos are full of singing melodies, tied to their own imperturbable groove.

 Tenderly Warner Bros 25907 Benson; McCoy Tyner (p); Ron Carter (b); Al Foster, Louis Hayes (d). 89.

 Big Boss Band Warners 26295 Benson; Count Basie Orchestra; Robert Farnon Orchestra. 90.

(*) Best Of George Benson: The Instrumentals Warners 946660 As for the above. 76–93.

Most of Benson's records after Weekend In LA fall outside the scope of this book, though many rate as high-calibre light soul. He has investigated a return to more jazz-orientated material but without risking what's left of his easy-listening audience. These occupy an awkward mid-point. Despite the blue-chip group, Tenderly is far too relaxed; the singing is tired and the playing uneventful. Weaker still is Big Boss Band, a collaboration with Frank Foster's Count Basie outfit that runs aground on weak material and arrangements. There's a 'Portrait Of Jennie' with the Farnon orchestra as well, suggesting Nat Cole's repertoire might have been next on Benson's agenda; it wasn't. The instrumental Best Of makes a game effort at distilling the jazz ingredients in Benson's pop albums, but also has the perverse effect of showing up a master musician reduced to making sappy records.

Also, in brief:

() Body Talk CTI/Epic 5051692. 7/73.
Formula takes over and even DeJohnette (d) falls victim to the rock-funk pulse.

* Bad Benson CTI/Epic 505285. 5–6/74.
Steve Gadd takes over at the kit, and it's just boring, even with a long Don Sebesky tune that allows Benson to play the blues at length.

Bob Berg (1951–2002)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

The New Yorker's career began as a teenager with Brother Jack McDuff. Technically less astute than Michael Brecker, he always overcame technical limitations by sheer power and conviction. He caught the eye of both Miles Davis and Chick Corea. A complex man who had his share of problems, he always had a story to tell. His own was cut short by a motor accident.

(*) Steppin' Red RR123178 Berg; Danilo Rea (p); Enzo Pietropaoli (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 82.
The stint with Miles probably set Berg's recording career back a ways. Here, with a good but uninspiring Italian group, his Coltrane influence seems to have been sidelined in favour of something simpler and more idiomatic, tinged with the blues. Even so, Tom Harrell's 'Terrestris' was an interesting inclusion. It isn't a tune that sits easily on the saxophone, but Bob turns it into a taut harmonic essay. His own 'Arja' is lovely but marred by the rather distant recording. Another original, 'Luce di Fulvia', and an imaginative version of Stevie Wonder's 'Secret Life of Plants' round out the record.

(*) Remembering Bob Berg Savoy 17518 Berg; David Sanborn (as); Jim Beard, Don Grolnick, David Kikoski, Robbie Kilgore (ky); Jon Herington, Mike Stern (g); Jeff Andrews, James Genus, Lincoln Goines, Ed Howard, Will Lee (b); Dennis Chambers, Peter Erskine, Gary Novak, Ben Perowsky (d); Manolo Badrena, Arto Tunçboyaciyan (perc). 87-92.
() Games Jazz Door 1275 Berg; Mike Stern (g); Lincoln Goines (b); Dennis Chambers (d). 90.
Berg's career as a leader didn't really take off until Short Stories for Denon in 1987. This compilation brings together some of the best of that record and the ones that followed for the label, along with a couple of things made for Chick Corea's Stretch. Berg's intriguing touch with a blues comes across on 'Snakes', his funk mode on 'In The Shadows', and a touch of his early-Coltrane influence on 'Silverado'. Sanborn's contribution to the world-music-tinged 'Kalimba' makes you wish there were more of the two saxophonists together. Other familiar selections include 'Back Roads' and 'Travellin' Man' with Stern, Beard and Chambers. The more mainstream Stretch material sits ok with the funkier things but one is left with a doubly bittersweet sensation: a sense of loss, obviously, but also the feeling that Berg never quite realized his potential. That's somehow reflected in the recollections of colleagues in the liner-book.

The posthumously released live date on Jazz Door is pretty lumpy and probably wouldn't have appeared if Berg had been alive. A couple more things are available in Japan-only editions and there's a nice appearance on Concord with the Jazz Times Superband, but otherwise Bob's legacy is rather slim.

Anders Bergcrantz (born 1961)

TRUMPET, CORNET, FLUGELHORN

Swedish post-bop star with a growing international standing.

 Live At Sweet Basil / (*) In This Together / * C Dragon DRCD 225 / 261 / 293 Bergcrantz; Rick Margitza (ts on Live only); Richie Beirach (p); Ron McClure (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 2/92; 8/94; 10/96.
A complex mix of Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw and Miles Davis, Bergcrantz these days sounds like no one but himself. Some of the early intensity (evident on some fire-breathing Dragons that haven't made it onto CD yet) has cooled into a more considered but still attacking manner. A pity we don't have those studio dates, because the New York date is a potboiler. The trumpeter takes a firm lead with two interesting originals and a striking interpretation of 'Body And Soul'. Though he's working with peers, the sound lacks the clear weave of his Swedish groups and the music isn't as tautly sustained. Margitza has a nice touch of European bleakness about his tone, but the others are dependable and classy rather than inspired.

In This Together is very, very good. In the studio, the quartet comes together perfectly, Beirach in his most concentrated style, while Nussbaum and McClure swing mightily. Bergcrantz takes an unfamiliarly measured course, pacing himself on solos and finding a nice, woodsmoked tone on flugelhorn. He comes up with tones and phrasings no American trumpeter would play, yielding a rare kind of post-bop.

The 'C' is for Coltrane and the four men give a pretty amazing impression of the great quartet on the title-track without reverting to copy-cat tricks. Caught live on tour, Beirach sounds bigger and stronger than ever, McClure is the epitome of the invisible, soulful bassman, while Nussbaum shamelessly ransacks his kit for every bit of Elvin he can find. They do similar things on 'Footprints' and the mysterious 'Renfield'. Bergcrantz plays cornet as often as not and it seems to put a bit of extra jab into his quicker phrases; 'I Won Her Heart' is a flugelhorn ballad. His solos have fire, ingenuity and elegance in equal measure.

 Twenty-Four Hours Dragon DRCD 312 Bergcrantz; Anders Gustafsson, Roy Wall (t); Vincent Nilsson (tb); Cennet Jönsson (ss, ts, bcl); Helge Albin (as); Jacob Christoffersen (ky); Hans-Peter Andersson (b); Lennart Gruvstedt (d). 99.
The only disappointment in Bergcrantz's entire discography, this attempt to evoke the diurnal/nocturnal cycle has some lovely episodes in it – 'Sen Eftermiddag' in particular – but singularly fails to gel as a project. Interesting to hear Bergcrantz in the company of other horn-players. He just stands head and shoulders ahead of anyone in his immediate circle, which is why the American group has been so important.

(*) About Time Stunt STUCD 07122 Bergcrantz; Vincent Nilsson (tb, btb); Jacob Karlzon (p); Lasse Lundstrom (b); Lennart Gruvstedt (d). 3/07.
The title has an obvious double meaning. For a start, it's been more than six years since Bergcrantz made a record. One suspects that Grustvedt's hand in composing the tiny title-track has a lot to do with 'time' in the other sense. It begins with a swinging hard-bop line on 'Dedication', touches on a quasi-bossa feel on 'While My Horn Gently Weeps' (with the superb Nilsson playing rich, low tones), the relaxed common time of 'That's Nice, Don't Stop' (where the horns are intriguingly voiced relative to one another), to the 'tribal' cadences of 'Chief Sitting Bull' and 'Cochise'. It's a set that recalls the heyday of Blue Note, except that again there are sound-colours which are obviously not American and obviously not from the '50s or '60s. And there's the unaccompanied 'Solo/Duo Ad Libitum', an exercise in pure abstraction that somehow repositions everything that went before. Karlzon often uses altered or inverted chords and Lundstrom frequently moves away from strict time-keeping and orthodox changes to touch in ambiguous harmonics that change the nature of a track. Great stuff, but still in evolution, one suspects. This is a group to see live and to catch up with on the recorded sequel.

Karl Berger (born 1935)

VIBRAPHONE, PIANO

Born in Heidelberg, he learned piano in the company of visiting Americans. Moved to Paris (with Don Cherry) and then the US, where he and Ornette Coleman founded the Creative Music Studio at Woodstock.

 Just Play Emanem 4037 Berger; Ed Blackwell (d, perc). 3/76.

Berger and Blackwell had worked together in Don Cherry's group and enjoyed genuine empathy. This was recorded in Albany, New York, by the estimable Martin Davidson. Five of the tracks are for vibes (without fans) and drumkit, but the longest and most adventurous compositions are for African balafon and osi – or slit – drum. The two pieces 'Balafon Samba' and 'Wood And Skin Works' occupy almost half the record between them. The shorter tracks are more dynamic but don't recapture the same almost hypnotic quality.

 All Kinds Of Time Sackville SKCD2-3010 Berger; Dave Holland (b). 76.

This – in an apparently limited edition – has not stood the test of time particularly well. The duets are mostly rather desiccated and an opportunity was lost to hear Holland playing cello as well as bass, surely a good call in such a spare setting. Berger plays vibes and balafon in the main, with some piano as well, and he's always engaging and alert, even if the record scarcely merits the 'classic' tag the label has placed on it.

(*) Transit Black Saint 120092 Berger; Dave Holland (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 8/86.

The same trio made Crystal Fire for Enja a few years further on, but this is a better session. 'Dakar Dance' and 'Ornette' are both open-hearted and expressive and the record as a whole avoids the inconsistency and occasional pretentiousness of its successor.

 Around Black Saint 120112 Berger; Paul Shigihara (g); Santi Debriano (b); Leroy Williams (d). 5/90.

A surprisingly little-known set that is still in circulation a decade and a half on. It's a comparatively conventional line-up, with Berger and Shigihara sharing the front line (they duet on one track), but always relying on the resourceful Debriano to support the harmonic argument and to take his share of solo space. 'It's Me' and the title-track are the two solidest performances, but 'Funky Emperor' has engaging moments, too. The sound isn't pristine and sometimes there's insufficient definition on the two lead voices, but generally a worthwhile album.

 Conversations In + Out IOR77027 Berger; Ray Anderson (tb); Carlos Ward (as, f); Mark Feldman (vn); James Blood Ulmer (g); Dave Holland (b); Ingrid Sertso (v). 94.

The title is less misleading than the personnel, for this is a set of duets with like-minded improvisers. Because of its relative lightness of sound, the vibraphone makes a good duo instrument and these partnerships, some long-standing, some new, show Berger off at his best. Ulmer's contribution is (to say the least) unilluminating, but the rest holds up well.

Chuck Bergeron

DOUBLE BASS

Experienced session-man, transplanted from NY to Seattle.

* Coast To Coast A Records AL 73107 Bergeron; Randy Brecker (t); Rick Mandyk, Rick Margitza (ts); Charles Pillow (ts, bcl); John Hansen, Mike Holober (p); John Hart (g); John Bishop, Jeff Hirshfield, John Riley (d); Pat Ankrom (perc). 1 & 7/97.
(*) Cause And Effect Double-Time DTRCD 179 Bergeron; Charles Pillow (ts, bcl); Rick Margitza (ts); John Abercrombie (g); Peter Erskine, Bob Moses (d). 4/01.

The first of these was recorded on opposite sides of the country, with Bishop and Riley varying the section on the Seattle date and a nice permutation of horns. Brecker brings his usual pugnacious lyricism to 'The Spoiler', which sounds like some lost Blue Note session, while the long 'Last Call' is distinguished by Pillow's elegant and moody bass clarinet. It tails off after that, but still an impressive showing. The other disc is very good and more coherent, and Abercrombie as ever keeps things open and flowing. Great work as well from the two percussion guys, who seem to inspire Chuck to some of his own best playing on disc.

Totti Bergh (born 1935)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

The Norwegian began on clarinet, worked cruise ships in the '60s and then played mainstream on a semi-pro basis.

(*) I Hear A Rhapsody Gemini GMCD 48 Bergh; Per Husby, Egil Kapstad (p); Terje Venaas (b); Egil Johansen, Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 8/85.
 Major Blues Gemini GMCD 68 Bergh; George Masso (tb); Egil Kapstad (p); Major Holley (b); Pelle Hultén (d). 8/90.
 Tenor Gladness /  On The Trail! Gemini GMCD 53 / 78 As Rhapsody, except omit Husby, Johansen; add Al Cohn (ts on Gladness); Plas Johnson (ts on Trail). 8/91.
(*) Remember Gemini GMCD 88 Bergh; Joe Cohn (g); Erik Amundsen (b); Tom Olstad (d); Laila Dalseth (v). 3/95.
 Warm Valley Gemini GMCD 91 Bergh; Einar Iversen (p); Kåre Garnes (b); Eyvind Olsen (d). 10/96.

Bergh plays with a timeless authority and there's scarcely a step out of place on any of these sessions. The first is a luscious set of ballads, the tenor curling round the melodies and huffing through solos that barely bother to move; the rhythm sections are good enough never to let the music bog down. The meeting with Cohn calls to mind many Zoot-and-Al dates, and Cohn (near the end of his life) was taking things easy that day, so there's no imbalance in approach. Johnson makes things livelier and there's enjoyable banter on 'Smooth Sailing' and 'Tickle Toe'.

Major Blues captures Holley towards the end of his life, too, but playing with strength and that familiar singing tone. Masso makes an interesting foil to Bergh and the mostly familiar material affords them lots of common ground.

Bergh has never sounded better in the studio than on Remember: Joe Cohn is a deft and encouraging partner who persuades the leader into his most beguiling form on 'Two Funky People' and 'Foolin' Myself'; Laila Dalseth (Mrs Bergh) sings five Merrillesque vocals. A long record never outstays its welcome. Warm Valley is another ballad date, but this time just too quiescent to sustain interest throughout, though Bergh's grand tone and patient phrasing remain a steadfast pleasure.

Sean Bergin

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A fiery South African who's based in Europe.

* Live At The BIMhuis BvHaast 9202 Bergin; Eric Boeren (t); Joost Buis (tb, cna); Tobias Delius (ts, cl); Paul Stocker (ss, as, bcl); Jan Cees Tans (ts); Alex Maguire (p, cl); Franky Douglas (g); Ernst Glerum, Jacko Schoonderwoerd (b); Michael Vatcher (perc); vocals. 4/91.
 Copy Cat BvHaast 9917 Bergin; Eric Boeren (t); Wolter Wierbos (tb); Tobias Delius (ts, cl); Alex Maguire (p); Franky Douglas (g); Mary Oliver (vn, vla); Tristan Honsinger (clo); Ernst Glerum (b); Han Bennink (d). 5/99.

This is the outfit the pugnacious Bergin calls M.O.B., or My Own Band, and always retains firm control of his players, even when the music seems ready to lurch into the verge, as it does frequently on Copy Cat. The playful indiscipline is largely appearance, though; this is formidably organized music by a greatly underrated musician. The earlier live date is rawer, inevitably, but the playing is exhilarating from start to finish (as is the singing), again a curious blend of South African bittersweet and a more European hybrid of abstraction and circus-y nonsense. 'Old Devil Moon' is an unlikely starting-point, but listen to what they do with it. 'Dudu' and 'Park Station' are the other highlights.

Borah Bergman (born 1933)

PIANO

For a time, Borah Bergman concentrated exclusively on playing with his left hand in order to build up strength, suppleness and right-brain co-ordination. His astonishing solo performances recall the 'two pianists' illusion associated with Art Tatum, though in a more fragmentary and disorderly sound-world. Stride, ragtime, bebop and Tristano's cool/free approach are also part of Bergman's background.

* A New Frontier Soul Note 121030 Bergman (p solo). 1/83.
 The Fire Tale Soul Note 121252 Bergman; Evan Parker (ss). 3/90.
(*) The Human Factor Soul Note 121212 Bergman; Andrew Cyrille (d). 6/92.
* First Meeting Knitting Factory Works KFW 175 Bergman; Roscoe Mitchell (as, ss); Thomas Buckner (v). 12/94.

Over the years Bergman has broken down any residual distinction between left- and right-hand functions in piano-playing. On the two large-scale pieces which make up A New Frontier he sets up huge whirling shapes with each hand, which then engage in confrontational dialogue. There is something slightly mechanistic about the playing on 'Night Circus' that makes one think of the player-piano pieces of Conlon Nancarrow, but this is eliminated on the remarkable 'Time For Intensity', a more richly coloured pair of contrasting pieces, the second of which, 'Webs And Whirlpools', is quite astonishing.

In contrast to these, the duos with Evan Parker are almost conventional, conforming to the basic idiomatic conventions of improvised music. Nevertheless there is a scope to 'The Fire Tale', a piece about the survival and extinction of creativity, and to 'Red Desert', which Bergman has recorded before, for which only classical parallels effectively apply. If some of the solo pieces are symphonic, the duos stand as bizarre concertos in which the element of contention has once again taken over from simple concord.

The disc with Cyrille is both exhilarating and exhausting. Framed by two approaches to the title-theme and, more surprisingly, two takes of 'Chasin' The Trane', it is both visceral and intellectually challenging. 'Red Shadows' reappears from the earlier record, and Bergman enthusiasts must already be aware how doggedly and self-critically he pursues certain ideas.

Even given the variety of the foregoing, what a complete surprise First Meeting is. Coming to it with expectations based on the earlier records, on some knowledge of Mitchell's fierce saxophone poetry, or simply on reputation, one is astonished by the delicacy and precision, the sheer quietness of these pieces. 'Clear Blue' particularly has a limpid quality, as if every note had been gently diluted in water before being exposed to the air. Mitchell's breath-sounds are often louder than the actual reed-notes. Thomas Buckner was there as producer only, but it was decided that he should take part, and he did so, unrehearsed, on the suite, 'One Mind', bringing a further dimension to a riveting, gentle and perfectly centred hour of creative music.

* Eight By Three Mixtery M00001 Bergman; Anthony Braxton, Peter Brötzmann (reeds). 4/96.

 Exhilaration Soul Note 121330 Bergman; Peter Brötzmann (as); Andrew Cyrille (d). 9/96, 1/97.

 Ride Into The Blue / * Blue Zoo Konnex 5069 / 5074 Bergman; Peter Brötzmann (as, tarogato); Thomas Borgmann (ts). 96.

Exhilaration consists of four stunning trio tracks and a further duo session with Bergman and Brötzmann, all recorded at the Knitting Factory. If the prevailing mood is exhilaration, then it's of a particularly hectic and troubled sort. Bergman goes off like an express train, leaving nothing but sparks and cinders in his wake, and more or less abandoning Cyrille and even the normally sanguine Brötzmann standing in their tracks. Later tracks are quieter and more reserved, and with much more attention to structure.

The set with Braxton is measured, cool and almost alien in the absence of expressionist dramas. The balance of two horns and piano is a hard one to sustain at length, but Bergman is a caustic enough player not to be troubled by it. They try the same formula, one that obviously appeals to Bergman, on Ride Into The Blue and Blue Zoo. What's increasingly evident about the pianist is that he is not just a powerhouse with a radically expanded technique but also a delicate player who uses silence effectively and knows when to drop either hand from the mix. Brötzmann has a similar PR problem, which is why critics still register surprise whenever he plays something softly or with warmth. Borgmann is probably the weak link, but only because one constantly strains to hear what is going on between Brötzmann and Bergman.

 Toronto 1997 Boxholder BXH 033 Bergman; Thomas Chapin (sax, f). 97.
There was something in the air at this remarkable meeting of two very different musicians whose careers have gone radically different ways. Bergman has only become a star later in life; Chapin's star was snuffed out less than a year after this recording, a victim of leukaemia. Borah almost acts as accompanist here, leaving the louder and edgier playing to Chapin, who was rarely heard in this free context with his own groups. Chapin's multiphonics anticipate the extreme chromaticism of Bergman's playing, where almost any note seems the basis for some new vertical alignment. This isn't the most comfortable listen, but one of lasting value.

 A New Organization Soul Note 121322 2 Bergman; Oliver Lake (as). 99.
Recorded live at the Knitting Factory, this is a fascinating encounter between two very different avant-gardists who have drawn on different and opposite aspects of 20th-century music. Whether their work does represent a further step towards a new organization of musical language is more questionable, because much of this sounds like basic improv, stripped of its more schematic and abstract qualities. The intensity of 'I Kiss Your Eyes' and 'Forever Fervent' is not just a function of their titles but something genuinely residing in the music, which toys with major–minor oppositions and slithers in and out of polytonality but which ultimately depends on melody, and melody alone, for its impact.

* The River Of Sounds Boxholder 024 Bergman; Conrad Bauer (tb); Mat Maneri (vn). 5/00.
There is a strange, poetic programme behind this astonishing record. The main characters, 'Spindell Kresge', 'Jim' and 'The Blond Woman', are presented in long passages dominated by microtones, free-form passages and sudden incursions of what sound like composed material. 'The Blond Woman' is more or less a duet for fiddle and piano: cracked and romantic.

The instrumentation is fabulously rich, with Maneri's six-string electric violin providing a range of tone-colours and harmonic variations. While the piano is firmly locked into the Western scale, the presence of two inherently microtonal instruments allows Bergman to develop his musical language in the most sympathetic of surroundings.

(*) Meditations For Piano Tzadik TZ7180 Bergman (p solo). 01.
 Double Idea Boxholder 024 As above. 02.
Bergman's solo work remains the key to his art. He is such a massively dominant player that he threatens to overwhelm playing partners and sometimes his own ideas with sheer volume of sound. That is why the Tzadik set, consisting of quieter and more reflective pieces, is such a revelation. Bergman still gets the same richness and intensity of sound, a mixture of solid attack and clever use of pedals, but he also brings in a keening, almost cantorial quality that is immensely attractive. Indeed, as the album progresses towards the tiny final 'Meditation', his approach to the keyboard becomes ever sparer, with no gratuitous embellishment.

(*) The Mahout Slam CD 318 Bergman; George Haslam (bs, tarogato); Paul Hession (d). 6/03.
 Acts Of Love Mutable 17519 Bergman; Lol Coxhill (ss); Paul Hession (d). 6/03.
Rich fruits of a very fertile trip to the UK in the summer of 2003. The two saxophonists obviously contrast sharply in terms of sound and approach. Coxhill is the wily master of the comeback, spinning jazz ideas out of thin air and revealing more and more of Bergman's own jazz roots as the record advances. Hession is in both cases the fulcrum, brokering a pulse and a dynamic mid-ground for the two older men. The Slam disc has a fine solo spot from him, but also two important solos by Bergman, who has continued to refine his two-handed approach and shows absolutely no sign of slowing down or compromising on his fiercely demanding approach. Both sets nicely recorded, though the Mutable album has a fuller and more resonant piano sound.

Also, in brief:

 Reflections On Ornette Coleman And The Stone House Soul Note 121280. 95.
Ornette largely bid farewell to the piano, so Bergman's appropriation of these themes is both challenging and quirky. Hamid Drake (d) emerges as the natural successor to Ed Blackwell.

 The Italian Concert Soul Note 121342. 12/94, 6/95.
Another fine encounter with Roscoe Mitchell (as, ss), who this time seems overwhelmed by the sheer volume of Bergman's playing.

Jerry Bergonzi (born 1947)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

A Bostonian, he studied at Berklee and moved to NY in the '70s, spending a period with Dave Brubeck before returning home to teach and play.

 On Red Red RR 123224 Bergonzi; Salvatore Bonafede (p); Dodo Goya (b); Salvatore Tranchini (d). 5/88.
 ETC Plus One Red RR 123249 Bergonzi; Fred Hersch (p); Steve LaSpina (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 3/91.
 Tilt! Red RR 123245 Bergonzi; Salvatore Bonafede, Andy LaVerne (p); Bruce Gertz (b); Salvatore Tranchini (d). 5/90.
Bergonzi made a number of records for Red. The earliest of them is still influenced by his time with Brubeck but includes a fearsomely reworked 'In Your Own Sweet Way' alongside a couple of fine originals which seem to be constructed on familiar changes. The encounter with Hersch's trio is better, with the pianist's elegance of line a nice counter to Bergonzi's spilling energy and hard sound. The result is a record that drifts between sensibilities and with some slack moments that might have merited a further take. The same doesn't really apply to Tilt! where a couple of alternates are tacked on for good measure; LaVerne brings a touch of class to his contribution and Gertz drives things along nicely.

 Peek A Boo Evidence ECD 22119 Bergonzi; Tiger Okoshi (t, flhn); Joachim Kühn (p); David Santoro (b); Daniel Humair (d). 10/92.
This is a fairly conventional hard-bop date which despite the quality of the band never really delivers anything exceptional. Kühn's a curious fellow, but one can see why, after Brubeck, Bergonzi might be drawn to him. Humair is often the most interesting player in the studio.

(*) Fast Company Blue Jackel 5022 Bergonzi; Joey Calderazzo (p); Lars Danielsson (b); Jukkis Uotila (d). 2/96.
An obscure label, but it seems to be still available and it's worth finding to share in Bergonzi's coming-out as a strong, expressive leader. He powers through his solos and gets strong support from Calderazzo and Uotila, both of whom contribute pieces. It's perhaps over-generous by a track or two and loses impact as a result, but this is a strong performance.

 Just Within Double-Time DTRCD 127 Bergonzi; Dan Wall (org); Adam Nussbaum (d). 12/96.

(*) Lost In The Shuffle Double-Time DTRCD 142 As above. 1/98.

() Wiggy / () A Different Look Double-Time DTRCD 173 / 184 As above. 8/99.

Wall has played second banana so often one forgets how good he is, playing with no shortage of guts but with harmonic shades and soft melodic fills that are a necessary counterweight to Bergonzi's hard edge and bustle. Nussbaum is big and brawny and the music has an inexorable forward motion. The second date sees things really coming together, but it's on Wiggy, which starts with a curious paraphrase of the 'Just In Time' melody that one hears Bergonzi really express himself. He's not a soundalike (though Rollins is an obvious point of reference) and this isn't a typical tenor/organ date. 'Channeling' is a superb workout, though it ends on an unexpected fade, while the ballad 'Committed' manages to be both hushed and intense. A Different Look is basically leftovers from the same session and of the same high quality; 'Con Brio' is a fine cooker, but it's on the more restrained pieces, like the three-quarter time 'You Can Tell', that the group's musicality really impresses.

 Live Gonz! /  Live Gonz II Double-Time DTRCD 190 / 1002 Bergonzi; Renato Chicco (p); Dave Santoro (b); Andrea Michelutti (d). N.D.

Recorded in a French club and with Gonz in spirited form; he blazes through a scarcely recognizable 'Have You Met Miss Jones?' and plays a thoughtfully intricate solo on his own 'Different Places Together'. Next to the studio dates, however, this is pretty routine and the recording short-changes Bergonzi's sound. The second volume is almost as good, with a lovely return to 'Si Senora', one of Gonz's best tunes.

* Tenor Of The Times Savant 2074 As above. 5/06.

Sounding much better in the studio than on the club date, the new quartet sound played-in and mutually supporting. The opening 'Acookarache' has a pleasingly inauthentic Latin bounce. 'You're My Everything' is the solitary standard, while 'Bob Berg' pays tribute to a lost contemporary. A strong and well-inflected set.

* The Tenorist Savant 2085 Bergonzi; John Abercrombie (g); Dave Santoro (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 07.

Another absolutely cracking set, transformed by the replacement of piano with guitar. Abercrombie leaves things more open and Bergonzi's solo on the opening 'Gecko Plex' transforms another favourite tune. He likes to place a standard second in the running order, but this time it's 'Pannonica'. Bergonzi is blowing very freely, and toying with Latin rhythms. 'Czarology' might have been played out longer, but it feels just perfect at this length. 'Creature Feature' and the closing 'On Again Off Again' bring a great record to a terrific climax. Kenny Dorham's 'La Mesha' is the only other repertory piece, but Gonz is doing such strongly original work now that it might almost be his own conception.

Also, in brief:

 Lineage Red RR 123237. 10/89.

An interesting quartet date with Mulgrew Miller (p).

(*) Dreaming Out Loud Whaling City Sound WCS 020. N.D.

A stripped-down trio with no harmony instrument but with Bruce Gertz (b) in strong support. Might be hard to find, but an excellent disc.

(*) Intuition Steeplechase SCCD 31563. 11/03.

Gonz likes elegant piano foils and Andy LaVerne's compositions (plus a few standards) grace this excellent duo date.

Bunny Berigan (1908–42)

TRUMPET

He had college band experience behind him when he joined Fred Rich in 1931, then Paul Whiteman, though he disliked the music and took every chance to play a hot solo. He was a hit with Benny Goodman and Tommy Dorsey, but his own groups were commercial disasters. His huge sound, often pitched in the lowest register, was among the greatest of his day, but chronic alcoholism and depression destroyed him.

(*) Bunny Berigan 1935–1936 Classics 734 Berigan; Jack Lacey (tb); Joe Marsala, Slats Long, Artie Shaw, Paul Ricci (cl); Edgar Sampson (cl, as); Eddie Miller (cl, ts); Forrest Crawford, Art Drelinger, Bud Freeman, Herbie Haymer (ts); Joe Bushkin, Frank Froeba, Cliff Jackson (p); Dave Barbour, Bobby Bennett, Eddie Condon, Clayton Duerr (g); Artie Bernstein, Artie Shapiro, Mort Stuhlmaker, Grachan Moncur (b); Ray Bauduc, Maurice Purtill, Cozy Cole, Dave Tough (d); Chick Bullock, Tempo King, Midge Williams (v). 12/35–8/36.

(*) Bunny Berigan 1936–1937 Classics 749 Berigan; Irving Goodman, Harry Greenwald, L. Brown, Cliff Natalie, Steve Lipkins (t); Morey Samuel, Sonny Lee, Frank D'Annolfo, Ford Leary, Red Jessup (tb); Matty Matlock (cl); Sid Pearlmutter, Joe Dixon, Slats Long, Henry Freling (cl, as); Toots Mondello, Hymie Schertzer (as); Artie Drelinger, Babe Russin, Clyde Rounds, Georgie Auld (ts); Joe Bushkin, Les Burness, Joe Lippman (p); Eddie Condon, Tom Morgan (g); Arnold Fishkind, Mort Stuhlmaker (b); Manny Berger, George Wettling (d); Art Gentry, Ruth Bradley, Johnny Hauser, Carol McKay, Sue Mitchell (v). 11/36–6/37.

* Bunny Berigan 1937 Classics 766 Berigan; Irving Goodman, Steve Lipkins (t); Morey Samuel, Sonny Lee, Al George (tb); Mike Doty, Sid Pearlmutter, Joe Dixon (cl, as); Clyde Rounds, Georgie Auld (ts); Joe Lippman (p); Tom Morgan (g); Arnold Fishkind, Hank Wayland (b); George Wettling (d); Ruth Bradley, Gail Reese (v). 6–12/37.

* Bunny Berigan 1937–1938 Classics 785 As above, except add Ray Conniff, Nat Lobovsky (tb); Graham Forbes, Fulton McGrath (p); Dick Wharton (g); Dave Tough (d); Ruth Gaylor (v). 12/37–5/38.

(*) Bunny Berigan 1938 Classics 815 As above, except add John Napton (t); George Bohn, Gus Bivona, Milton Schatz, Murray Williams (cl, as); Buddy Rich (d); Jayne Dover, Kitty Lane, Bernie Mackey (v). 6–11/38.

 Bunny Berigan 1938–1942 Classics 844 Berigan; Joe Aguanno, John Fallstitch, Irving Goodman, Bobby Mansell, Arthur Mellor, Johnny Napton, Freddy Norton, Jack Koven, George Johnston, Carl Warwick (t); Ray Conniff, Max Smith, Charlie Stewart, Mark Pasco, Al Jennings, Bob Jenny (tb); Gus Bivona, Charlie DiMaggio, Jack Goldie, Henry Saltman, Walt Mellor, George Quinty, Murray Williams (cl, as); Georgie Auld, Stewart Anderson, Don Lodice, Neil Smith, Red Lang, Larry Walsh (ts);

Joe Bushkin, Eugene Kutch, Edwin Ross (p); Tommy Moore, Allan Reuss (g); Mort Stuhlmaker, Tony Estren, Hank Wayland (b); Paul Collins, Eddie Jenkins, Buddy Rich, Jack Sperling (d); Kathleen Long, Danny Richards, Nita Sharon (v). 1/38–1/42.

(*) Gangbusters Hep CD 1036 Broadly as above. 9/38–3/39.

Bunny Berigan's only flaw, in Louis Armstrong's opinion, was that he didn't live long enough. At the height of his career as an independent bandleader, he was making impossible demands on an uncertain constitution. As a soloist, he could be wildly exciting or meltingly lyrical, cutting solos like those on the concerto-like 'I Can't Get Started' (two versions but the 1937 one is the classic). He was always one of the boys in the band, utterly inept as an organizer, and even stints with disciplinarians like Goodman and Dorsey didn't mend his ways.

Though he died prematurely burnt out, Berigan left a legacy of wonderful music. His tone was huge and 'fat', a far cry from the tinny squawk with which he started out. Typical devices are his use of 'ghost' notes and rapid chromatic runs that inject tension into music that without him sounds ready to fall asleep. The small groups documented on the first Classics volume are sparky, tight and inventive. Bullock's vocals are no great asset, except when they give Berigan the chance to mimic his singer's phrasing. The disc also includes six obscure tracks under Frank Froeba's leadership and featuring Midge Williams, who went on to make her own records; some buoyant fills from Berigan.

Bunny's time-sense and ability to play instant countermelodies were God-given but it's also clear that he studied Armstrong closely. That's evident on the solos on 'Sing! Sing! Sing!' and 'On Your Toes'. The fifth volume continues with the June 1938 sessions and kicks off with the best track yet, a rousing 'Shanghai Shuffle' with Auld and Dixon bracketing Berigan; Dixon returns for a couple of alto choruses at the end. Conniff is featured on 'I Never Knew (I Could Love Anybody)' but it's the ensemble playing that stands out, almost big band in scope and texture but marvellously detailed.

There is a substantial mythology attached to Berigan's drinking. His schedule for 1938 suggests he may have been a workaholic as much as an alcoholic. The falling away, evident on the final Classics volume, came after a period of sustained excellence (evident on the Hep as well), a body of work attained by few who lived twice as long. 'I Can't Get Started' is exemplary jazz playing, extended for the period at four minutes and twenty seconds. 'The Wearing Of The Green' is a nod to Irish ancestry. Berigan sustains power throughout his impressive range and was able to say more in fewer notes than any of his rivals. He tackles 'Russian Lullaby' without sentiment and his deep-toned solo on 'A Serenade To The Stars' is as moving as jazz trumpet gets before Miles Davis came along. He was, quite simply, one of the great hornmen.

Also, in brief:

 The Key Sessions JSP 917 5CD. 31–37.

There are lots of good compilations around, and unusually they don't simply reduplicate the same material. This gives a very full picture of the rising star turning into the polished and exciting soloist; five discs and 124 tracks, so good value by any standard.

 Swingin' High Topaz 1013. 35–39.

A good selection of the earlier material and the greatest years.

(*) Bunny / Bunny Berigan & His Boys Collectables 7847 4/35–3/39.

This brings together two LP-era compilations released on Camden and Epic respectively. Respectable transfers.

 I Can't Get Started Collectables 6291. 36–42.

An excellent survey, though perhaps too much of the poorer late material.

* The Radio Years Storyville STCD 201277. 6/37–10/40.

Dominated by theme-statements of 'I Can't Get Started' but also by an inevitable sense of decline, these airshots underline how fanatically hard he worked.

Dick Berk (born 1939)

DRUMS

Born in San Francisco, he worked with Billie Holiday and Anita O'Day while in his teens. Moved East, studied at Berklee, then returned to California in 1968.

(*) Bouncin' With Berk Nine Winds NWCD 0142 Berk; Andy Martin (tb); Mike Fahn (vtb); Tad Weed (p); Ken Filiano (b). 6/90.

(*) Let's Cool One Reservoir RSR 122 Berk; Andy Martin (tb); Jay Collins (ts); Tad Weed (p); Jeff Littlejohn (b). 9/91.

* East Coast Stroll Reservoir RSR 128 Berk; Jay Collins (ts); John Hicks (p); Dan Faehnle (g); Ray Drummond (b). 2/93.

(*) One By One Reservoir RSR 143 Berk; Andy Martin (tb); Mike Fahn (vtb); Tad Weed (p); Dan Faehnle (g); Phil Baker (b). 10/95.

A strong drummer in the hard-bop manner, Berk sometimes calls his bands The Jazz Adoption Agency. Bouncin' was an impressive start to a strong sequence. The two trombones are a telling match, two quiet virtuosos with a needling edge, and on thoughtfully revised bop set-pieces such as 'Lament' and 'Jive Samba' the quintet secures a real identity, with much credit going to Weed, who acts as MD. On Let's Cool One, he fashions a stop-go treatment of 'My Favorite Things', cools off the customary heat of 'A Night In Tunisia' and puts in a couple of smart originals. Collins is youthful but plays with grouchy maturity and Martin repeats his fine turn. East Coast Stroll suffers a bit from Weed's absence: Hicks and Drummond are fine, but play like sessioneers; worthwhile, but a pressure drop. One By One gets the personnel just right, with the Shorter title-tune beautifully voiced for the 'bones. Berk himself, always a reluctant soloist, plays handsomely for the band.

Berlin Contemporary Jazz Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

The name tells the story; all too rarely convened.

* Berlin Contemporary Jazz Orchestra ECM 1409 Benny Bailey, Thomas Heberer, Henry Lowther (t); Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Henning Berg, Hermann Breuer, Hubert Katzenbeier (tb); Ute Zimmermann (btb); Paul van Kemenade, Felix Wahnschaffe (as); Gerd Dudek (ts, ss, cl, f); Walter Gauchel (ts); Ernst Ludwig Petrowsky (bs); Willem Breuker (bs, bcl); Misha Mengelberg, Aki Takase (p); Günter Lenz (b); Ed Thigpen (d); Alexander von Schlippenbach (cond). 5/89.

Like Barry Guy's London Jazz Composers' Orchestra, the BCJO presents its organizer/conductor with a resource for presentation of large-scale scored pieces with marked tempi for improvising orchestra. Thigpen is a surprise inclusion, but helps suggest the nature of the music. This superb set includes one long piece by Wheeler and two rather less melancholy ideas by Mengelberg. The Canadian's 'Ana' is almost hymnic but its mournful aspect doesn't soften some tough soloing from Heberer, Takase and Dudek. Mengelberg's 'Reef Und Kneebus' and 'Salz' are very much in the line of postwar Dutch composition in which jazz is as dominant as serial procedures and the mood both satirical and elegiac. Outstanding music. Schlippenbach's The Morlocks features a somewhat different BCJO line-up, but this FMP release more properly belongs in the composer's entry.

Tim Berne (born 1954)

ALTO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES, VOICE

Not one of the great instrumentalists of modern jazz, but his dogged self-determination and application to a starkly challenging idiom commend him as an experimenter. He is devoted to the music of Julius Hemphill, a challenging guru for any musician.

 Empire Box Screwgun no number 5 CD Berne; Olu Dara (c); Glenn Ferris, James Harvey, John Rapson (tb); John Carter (cl); Vinny Golia (bs, picc, f, afl, bsn, khene); Mark Goldsbury (ss, ts); Nels Cline (g); John Lindberg, Roberto Miranda, Ed Schuller (b); Alex Cline (d). 79–82.

This brings together the records Berne released as an unsigned independent between 1979 and 1982. This was a raw and in some respects unfocused period, and listening to these records after a gap of some years suggests a stash of rehearsal and workshop tapes that mightn't otherwise have seen the light of day. They're full of enterprise and adventure, though, rare in 1979. Berne's first release begins with a piece dedicated to Hemphill, and that intense, squalling alto wasn't to change significantly. The Cline brothers were responsive partners, and Golia, a deft and clever instrumentalist, fills in a lot of ground that Berne doesn't cover technically. The material on 7X was smoother and more harmonically centred, with trombone and guitar combining to give Berne's sour-toned forays a more settled foundation. The last of the bunch, Songs And Rituals In Real Time, was for just two saxophones, bass and drums – but our favourite remains the 1981 Spectres, with its three-horn front line and stunningly inventive rhythm section of Alex Cline and either Schuller or Lindberg on bass.

 The Ancestors Soul Note 121061 Berne; Herb Robertson (t, pkt-t, c, flhn); Ray Anderson (tb, tba); Mack Goldsbury (ts, ss); Ed Schuller (b); Paul Motian (d, perc). 2/83.
 Mutant Variations Soul Note 121091 As above, except omit Anderson, Goldsbury. 3/83.
 Fulton Street Maul Koch Jazz 7826 Berne; Bill Frisell (g); Hank Roberts (clo, v); Alex Cline (perc, v). 86.
 Sanctified Dreams Koch 7825 Berne; Herb Robertson (t, pkt-t, flhn, c); Hank Roberts (clo, v); Mark Dresser (b); Joey Baron (d). 10/87.

The Ancestors was a first sign that Berne was willing to slow down and take stock. Recorded live, it's a measured, authoritative set. There are passages of almost Asiatic beauty from Berne and some classic trombone from Anderson. The charts are increasingly adventurous; ensemble passages are well played and registered in a typically professional Soul Note production. The set's coherence might be credited to the veteran Motian; he takes a fine solo on one piece and also holds together the leaner, punchier Mutant Variations.

Bizarrely, Berne was signed to Columbia in the mid-'80s. He refused to bow to major-label commercialism, and delivered tough, antagonistic sets that even after 15 years have a sandbagging power and thuggish authority. Like the leader, Frisell doesn't know his own strength. Bold reissues these, even for Koch.

Sanctified Dreams was originally released on Columbia in 1988, but Berne regained control of the material. After two decades it still sounds fresh, if crude and over-eager. The key players here are the forthright Robertson and Baron, turning in career-best performances which make up for an occasionally lacklustre showing by the leader, who is maddeningly inconsistent.

 Fractured Fairy Tales Winter & Winter 919030 Berne; Herb Robertson (t, laryngeal crowbar); Hank Roberts (clo, elec); Mark Dresser (b, diffus, bungy); Joey Baron (d, elec). 6/89.
 Pace Yourself Winter & Winter 919040 Berne; Herb Robertson (t); Steve Swell (tb); Marc Ducret (g); Mark Dresser (b); Bobby Previte (d). 11/90.

Originally released on JMT, the first of these reads like a spoof on the 'little instruments' aesthetic of AACM. It's an impression cemented by Berne's fleeting resemblance on alto to Anthony Braxton: the same sourish tone and fractured bop. Robertson's trumpet is the other key element, but it's his 'laryngeal crowbar' which leads off an impressive armoury of unusual 'instruments'. Others are Baron's low-budget 'Shacktronics' and Dresser's 'diffus' (actually a pick-up system on the scroll of the bass) and 'bungy'. Berne segues together compositions into longer and longer forms and again the obvious parallel is Braxton's palimpsests, though they tend to be simultaneous. 'Hong Kong Sad Song' and 'More Coffee' are yoked together, dominating an album that starts relatively quietly and steadily becomes more anarchic and surreal.

The Caos Totale group of Pace Yourself was one of many named Berne outfits. The trumpeter is a joy again, sounding like some big-band player of the '40s just out of Bellevue. Robertson's use of mute is as far from Miles's soft rasp as you'll hear; instead, big, blaring figures that are almost comic in effect until you unpack their virtuosic components. Dresser is also fundamental to the group, but this time round it's Ducret who takes over Roberts's role and ties together the different elements, leaving the bass to go its own way. The opening 'Bass Voodoo', one of six relatively short pieces on the set, is a sign that the lower registers are important here. Berne's later use of baritone is anticipated throughout these tracks.

 Lowlife – The Paris Concerts 1 Winter & Winter 919074-2 Berne; Chris Speed (ts, cl); Marc Ducret (g); Michael Formanek (b); Jim Black (d). 9/94.
(*) Poisoned Minds – The Paris Concerts 2 Winter & Winter 919075-2 As above. 9/94.
 Bloodcount – Memory Select – The Paris Concerts 3 Winter & Winter 919081-2 As above. 9/94.

These are interesting as a potted history of Berne's progress. He begins in medias res with a version of the well-travelled 'Bloodcount', a thoughtful and slightly introverted performance with Tim and Marc locked in some private space. The rest of volume one, though, is devoted to Julius Hemphill pieces, most notably 'The Brown Dog Meets The Spaceman', an idea that gradually builds from an easy-going opening into a snarling scuffle.

The second volume is the best of the three, not so much because it's devoted to Berne's own music as because it gives an even better demonstration of his interest in breaking groups down into constituent parts and examining material in forensic detail. A huge medley dominates. Most won't want to go back for more, but there is a third volume. If you can take consecutive nights at this intensity, no problem; otherwise, stick to Lowlife and Poisoned Minds.

 Unwound Screwgun SCREW U 70001 3CD Berne; Chris Speed (ts, cl); Michael Formanek (b); Jim Black (d). 3–4/96.

After the demise of JMT, Berne formed Screwgun and kicked off with this unvarnished live recording. The performances, from Berlin and Ann Arbor, are raw, immediate and proudly unproduced, long versions of things like 'Blood Count' and 'What Are The Odds?'. Berne seems determined to go for the jugular with every tune, blazing away with an indiscriminate ferocity that alienates and attracts in equal proportion. Black is astonishingly good. Speed keeps his end up ... just, but really isn't either passionate or charismatic enough for the material. Most of the attention is focused on the leader; never a man who can move with a beautiful tone or a graceful phrase, never a virtuosic player he relies on a hectoring, abrasive sound that is less lovely than it is forceful.

(*) The Shell Game Thirsty Ear 57099 Berne; Craig Taborn (ky); Tom Rainey (d). 01.

* Science Friction Screwgun 013 As above, except add Marc Ducret (g). 12/01.

All the familiar signatures: dense, jagged themes, dizzy humour, and a weird tightrope between structure and anarchy. Berne and Rainey have a considerable understanding. The trio disc depends heavily on Taborn's electronic soundscapes, but alto and drums carry the bulk of the action. 'Twisted/Straight Jacket' has so much drama that its 20-minutes-plus duration passes like five. 'Heavy Metal' is dedicated to Wayne Krantz, and 'Thin Ice', well, it skates on that treacherous surface for half an hour.

The earlier addition of Ducret was a masterstroke and he's vital to this set as well. This is one of the most effective groups that Berne has ever convened. The guitarist gives Berne an enormous range of options, as he demonstrates on the co-composed 'Sigh Fry'. Though the partnership with Rainey is still the defining energy, Taborn's electronic keyboards define the textural landscape of most of the pieces. They range in length from a dozen minutes – 'Manatee Woman' and 'Clown Finger' – down to just 64 seconds on the enigmatic 'The Mallomar Manoeuvre'. David Torn produces and gives the set a big, boisterous sound that puts the saxophone right in there with the other instruments.

(*) Open, Coma Screwgun 012 2CD Berne; Herb Robertson; Lars Vissing (t); Kasper Tranberg (c); Mads Hyhne (tb); Lotte Anker (ss); Peter Fuglsang (cl); Thomas Agergaard (ts, f); Thomas Clausen (p); Marc Ducret (g); Nils Davidsen (b); Anders Mogensen (d); Copenhagen Arts Ensemble. 9/00.

This is reminiscent, in spirit if not in sonority, of Miles Davis's Aura, an attempt to give a great improviser a genuinely monumental context for his music. The material is drawn from Bloodcount and Caos Totale days, but the title-track is new and more obviously fitted to the 'sinfonietta' format. Three are concert recordings, but the title-piece was taped in the studio. The Danish soloists are more than adequate, and Clausen's far from old-fashioned-sounding Fender Rhodes brings an idiosyncratic richness to the ensembles. However, it's the breezy trumpet of Herb Robertson and Berne's own distinctively pitched alto which cut through. Compelling enough as a listening experience, it also more importantly asserts Berne's emergence as a major composer.

* The Sublime And Thirsty Ear 57139 Berne; Craig Taborn (p, ky, elec); Marc Ducret (g); Tom Rainey (d). 4/03.

The Sublime And finds the band doing the business onstage in Switzerland. There is probably more straight (i.e. unprocessed) playing, but Taborn's laptop electronics make a huge difference and Ducret's guitar is critical. He lays down big gestural washes on the opening 'Van Gundy's Retreat', building on the melody and the underlying rhythmic code until the music sounds distantly abstracted from the original theme. At the beginning of the second set, 'Smallfry' is almost ambient. 'Jalapeno Diplomacy' rocks like nobody's business, hotter than chilli. Taborn's laptop effects and 'virtual organ' haven't completely overtaken his piano-playing but increasingly diffuse it; it has less to do with line now and more with texture. Rainey has a hard job picking his way through it, but on tracks like 'Mrs Subliminal/Clownfinger' and the closing 'Stuckon U', he is absolutely central. Through it all, Berne cuts a solitary furrow, a proud outsider with a wonky understanding of harmonic basics who, like Ornette before him, refuses to surrender to orthodoxy.

* Souls Saved Hear Thirsty Ear 57151 Berne; Marc Ducret (g); Tom Rainey (d). 6/03.

* Hard Cell Live Screwgun 70014 Berne; Craig Taborn (p, ky); Tom Rainey (d). 10/03, 3/04.

Berne's best records to date? They're certainly among the most approachable, with the concentration of involved melody one hears on the duo records and without much of the sonic terrorism that sometimes passes for improvisational energy on the saxophonist's live appearances. The busy, detailed argument of Ducret's 'Ce Sont Les Noms Des Mots', which opens Souls Saved Hear, is stated by saxophone and guitar in approximate unison before Rainey takes a solo feature and then brings in the other two again for a hard, funky workout that has the guitarist implying a bass-line on his low strings before taking off on a crunch-chord solo. Berne sticks to alto throughout, and sounds closer than ever to his idol, Julius Hemphill, blending sophisticated ideas with r'n'b grooves. Nothing else is quite as substantial as that opening track and one or two cuts are teasingly brief, but 'Deadpan' (a dedication to Mat Maneri) is very strong and there are interesting production effects on the closing 'Plantain Surgery', courtesy of producer David Torn.

The other disc consists of live acoustic tracks and concert material from the Edgefest in Ann Arbor, a famous centre for new music and Craig Taborn's alma mater. Interestingly, 'Van Gundy's Retreat', heard in full-band, no-choke version on The Sublime And, is done here without electronics and sounds all the stronger for it. The plugged-in stuff, though, is remarkable. Taborn has reinvented Fender Rhodes-playing and provides an astonishingly varied palette. Berne plays with ever greater authority and, though he'll never be mistaken for Johnny Hodges, even flirts with prettiness on occasion.

(*) Feign Screwgun 700105 Berne; Craig Taborn (p, ky); Tom Rainer (d). 5/05.

Some stunning music here from the Hard Cell Trio, who have worked out some pretty devastating moves together. Berne and Taborn seem to have a strong understanding and time and again the pianist picks up on ideas from Berne and reworks them in real time. There are lots of rhythmic ideas at work here, from fractured funk to completely free time. Taborn is a young master just rising to the heights of his powers. Berne and Rainey have been at this longer, and for all the saxophonist's unapologetic rawness, he's a master too.

* Pre-Emptive Denial Screwgun 70016 Berne; Drew Gress (b); Tom Rainey (d). 5/05.

Again, two great slabs of ugly, exhilarating sound from the Paraphrase band. 'Trading On All Fours' and 'We Bow To Royalties' are the kinds of title one expects from Berne and the playing is reliably tough and thoughtful, with Gress and Rainey being handed plenty of work to do. The sound is actually quite good and there is more detail to this music than a first impression might suggest.

Also, in brief:

 Big Satan Winter & Winter 910 005. 5/96.
Power-trio stuff from Instants Chavires with Marc Ducret (g) and Tom Rainey (d). The closing 'Description Du Tunnel' is utterly unrelieved, though there are subtler moments elsewhere, particularly when the guitarist is featured.

 Please Advise / (*) Visitation Rites Screwgun SCREW U 70001 / 70002. 96.
Sample five large, raw slabs of music, one composition each from Berne, Drew Gress (b) and the redoubtable Tom Rainey (d), packaged with ugly artwork and unreadable texts.

 Saturation Point Screwgun SCREW U 70004. 96–98.
All the familiar elements: hectic improvisation over deceptively crude ostinati and rhythms, a strong resemblance to the frenetic ensembles of early jazz and a notional foundation in the blues.

 Cause & Reflect /  Ornery People Level 22004 / Little Brother 013. 98.
Duo improvisations with cellist Hank Roberts and bassist Michael Formanek respectively. The former is completely bonkers: 'Invasion Of The Freudian Shrimp' might be Mingus, arranged by Raymond Scott. The other strips everything down to melody.

 The Sevens New World 80586. 01.
The Arte Quartet tries not to come on like a conservatory saxophone ensemble and generates a tense, funky sound. Guitarists Ducret and Torn are the other components.

Marc Bernstein

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Excellent mainstream-modernist with a distinctive touch.

 Blue Walls Storyville STCD 4223 Bernstein; Olivier Antunes (p); Mads Vinding (b); Billy Hart (d). 5/98.
(*) Dear Tom Harrell Storyville STCD 1014251 Bernstein; Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Chris Rogers (t); Henrik Gunde (p); Anders Rose (org); Jesper Bodilsen, Thomas Bramerie (b); Morten Lund, Karsten Bagge (d); other personnel. 99–01.
If 'Giant Steps' is the latter-day rite of passage for saxophonists, rather than 'Body And Soul', Bernstein passes with distinction on the quartet record. There are better things in the programme, including an intelligent reading of Corea's 'Mirror Mirror' and the Charlie Mariano title-tune (neither of these exactly overworked in the studios), as well as a couple of folkish lines which give Bernstein a chance to shine. Oddly, there are as many compositions by Bodilsen as by Harrell on the tribute record to the great trumpeter, but Harrell seems to have liked the new themes written for him. He's in fine, passionate voice and Bernstein himself rises to the occasion, but one would have thought an all-Harrell programme might have raised the quality the extra notch, as well as clinching the fulsome title. A couple of additional tracks were recorded later, without Harrell's involvement.

Peter Bernstein (born 1967)

GUITAR

A New Yorker who learned from several teachers in the city, and a ubiquitous presence there.

(*) Somethin's Burnin' Criss Cross 1079 Bernstein; Brad Mehldau (p); John Webber (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 12/92.
 Signs Of Life Criss Cross 1095 Bernstein; Brad Mehldau (p); Christian McBride (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 12/94.
Bernstein's anonymous tone and easy fluency send the blameless Somethin's Burnin' sliding towards mediocrity. Precious little here really burns: Mehldau's jabbing solos are a good deal more interesting than the leader's, who comes off the Grant Green axis without much to call his own. The follow-up is an improvement, though the guitarist has to lean on Mehldau again, and McBride, to keep up interest.

 Brain Dance Criss Cross 1130 Bernstein; Steve Davis (tb); Eric Alexander (ts); Larry Goldings (org); Billy Drummond (d). 12/96.
 Earth Tones Criss Cross 1151 Bernstein; Larry Goldings (org); Bill Stewart (d). 12/97.
Bernstein continued to rack up impressive sideman appearances and there is no doubting the quality of his work by this stage. As leader, he tends to make agreeable records that lose out in the struggle for priority play. Nothing wrong with either of these, the latter featuring a regular grouping. The sustained elegance of Bernstein's playing on 'The Acrobat' will delight guitar followers, but the blowing format leaves both sets quite anonymous.

* Heart's Content / (*) Stranger In Paradise Criss Cross 1233 / Venus 35324 Bernstein; Brad Mehldau (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Bill Stewart (d). 02; 6/04.
Ten years on and back with Mehldau, Bernstein turns in his strongest dates yet. The first of these is almost sublime – unfussy, skilful, complex in tone. Perhaps so much has been essayed in this form that it's hard to spot even a great record, but both of these work at every level and the quirky imaginative takes on 'Stranger In Paradise' and Babs Gonzales's rarely covered 'Soul Stirrin'' are wonderful.

Also, in brief:

 April In New York Jardis 09. 7/05.
Strictly, a co-led date with fellow guitarist Helmut Kagerer, but well worth the hunt.

Chu Berry (1910–41)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Leon Berry played with several NY bands before a spell with Fletcher Henderson (1935) and Cab Calloway (1937). A Hawkins follower, but with a character of his own, he died prematurely in an car crash.

(*) Chu Berry 1937–1941 Classics 784 Berry; Roy Eldridge, Hot Lips Page, Irving Randolph (t); Keg Johnson, George Mathews (tb); Buster Bailey (cl); Charlie Ventura (ts); Clyde Hart, Horace Henderson, Benny Payne (p); Danny Barker, Al Casey (g); Israel

Crosby, Milt Hinton, Al Morgan, Artie Shapiro (b); Big Sid Catlett, Cozy Cole, Leroy Maxey, Harry Yeager (d). 3/37–9/41.
Berry's reputation is still in eclipse. He died a little too soon for the extraordinary revolution in saxophone-playing that followed the end of the war. He had a big sound, not unlike Coleman Hawkins, who considered him an equal, with a curiously fey inflexion that was entirely his own.

For someone who recorded a good deal, the catalogue has always been sparse. A self-effacing character, Berry found himself in the shadow of more celebrated figures such as Basie's ill-fated right-hand man, Herschel Evans. Berry was only ever a dep in the Basie orchestra, but he turned in one classic, 'Lady Be Good'. He had more prominence in the Calloway outfit, with whom he was employed at the time of his death. Too often under other leaders he was restricted to brief excursions from the woodwind bench, and Chu was a player who needed time and space to have his say.

The partnership with Eldridge was a happy, matey affair, and the 'Little Jazz' ensembles of November 1938 are among his best small-group performances. The version of 'Body And Soul' sits well alongside the great ones. 'Sittin' In' is introduced conversationally by the two principals. Talking or playing, they're both in rumbustious form and the warmth of the partnership was equalled only in the late sessions with Hot Lips Page, made within weeks of the road accident that ended Berry's life. When he died, they left his chair in the Calloway band sitting empty.

Emmett Berry

TRUMPET

A busy sideman who never seemed to record under his own name.

 The New York Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10131 Berry; Rex Stewart (c); Vic Dickenson (tb); Buster Bailey (cl); Red Richards (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (bj); Al Lucas (b); Bobby Donaldson (d). 5/58.
The very existence of this seems to contradict the statement above, until you realize that the original dates were made for World Wide by drummer Donaldson and have simply been re-attributed in Lone Hill's inimitable way. Berry very much merits his moment in the spotlight, but he's outplayed here by Stewart and Bailey, with the clarinettist in absolutely cracking form. Great to have this stuff, whoever ought to be on the cover.

Eddie Bert (born 1922)

TROMBONE

A seasoned band player, with stints for Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, Miles Davis/Gil Evans, Mingus and others.

* Kaleidoscope Fresh Sound FSRCD 404 Bert; Vinnie Dean (as); Sal Salvador (g); Duke Jordan, Sal Mosca (p); Clyde Lombardi (b); Osie Johnson, Art Mardigan, Joe Morello, Ed Shaughnessy, Mel Zelnick (d). 5/53–8/59.

 Crosstown Fresh Sound FSRCD 427 2CD Bert; J. R. Monterose (ts); Hank Jones (p); Joe Puma (g); Wendell Marshall, Clyde Lombardi (d). 5 & 9/55.

 I Hear Music – Modern Music Fresh Sound FSRCD 1611 Bert; Jerome Richardson (ts, fl); Vinnie Dean (as); Hank Jones (p); Oscar Pettiford (b); Osie Johnson (d). 11/55.
Bert had a big, warm sound, secure right through his range, and he was an underrated soloist. The material on Kaleidoscope underlines his liking for a trombone/guitar unison in the front line, though Dean completes a more conventional two-horn format on the 1954 and 1959 dates. The best thing is a long, long version, one of a number previously unreleased, of 'Kaleidoscope' itself, recorded live in 1955 with Jordan, Lombardi and Johnson. I Hear Music is full of delights as well. Formerly on Jazztone, this is a little-known set that captures his favourite sound – horns, guitar, piano – very well indeed. No single track stands out; just a very satisfying CD.

Bert enjoyed a long association with Monterose. A Birdland date with the saxophonist is occasionally available on Fresh Sound, but the double CD quartets and quintets on Crosstown offer a nice flavour of their urbane, quirky approach; quite unlike anything else around and even Jones seems slightly mystified in places. The boppish pieces are despatched with insouciance, and the better cuts are when the two horns swap quiddities at a more philosophical pace.

(*) The Human Factor Fresh Sound FSRCD 5005 Bert; Jerry Dodgion, Carmen Leggio (sax); Duke Jordan (p); Ray Drummond (b); Mel Lewis (d). 11/87.
Another sleek and sophisticated set. Bert's trombone-playing is at its peak here, and though Dodgion turns in some interesting things, one almost wishes to hear Eddie on his own with the rhythm section. Every track feels exactly the right length and weight and the more enterprising ideas, mostly Bonoff compositions, have an urbane, witty quality that leaves you feeling more has been kept in reserve than actually delivered.

* Live At Capozzoli's Woofy 104 Bert; Gabe Baltazar (as); Ross Tompkins (p); Richard Simon (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 2/99.
Bert was in his late 70s when this was recorded. The technique wobbles here and there, but there's no mistaking the urgent musicality of his playing, and on slower tunes he creates some gorgeous solos, full of craft and emotion.

Ben Besiakov

PIANO

Fine Danish pianist who won the 1990 Ben Webster Prize and hasn't looked back.

 You Stepped Out Of A Dream Steeplechase STCD 31265 Besiakov; Ron McClure (b); Keith Copeland (d). 3/90.

 Hey, Why Don't We Play Mack the Knife Real Slow And In B minor Stunt STUCD 02132 Besiakov; George Garzone (ts); Anders Christensen (b); Billy Hart (d). 1/91.

 Choo Choo Stunt STUCD 19806 Besiakov; Lennart Ginman (b); Mike Clark (d). 11/97, 2/98.

 Aviation Stunt STUCD 192 Besiakov; Jens Winther (t); George Garzone (ts); Ray Drummond (b); Billy Hart (d). 01.
It was Billy Hart who apparently came up with that extraordinary album title and there it is, the Weill song played pretty much as described. There's also a version of Ferde Grofe's 'On The Trail', a fantastic 'The Mingus I Knew' and a couple of originals from the pianist, who is a formidable writer as well as a strong solo player and accompanist. The Steeplechase set is a lovely standards situation with unexpected versions of Miles's 'Tune Up' and Powell's 'Bud's Bubble'. The trio is of comparable quality, though without a horn-player of Garzone's exuberant presence in the front line one hears a good deal more from Besiakov himself.

Unmistakably Powell-influenced, he none the less seems to reference other, very different styles, including Oscar Peterson and even Ran Blake. The long versions of 'On Green Dolphin Street' and Monk's 'Well You Needn't' on Choo Choo bespeak a formidable pianism. The quintet set offers a further chance to hear Ben in company with Garzone ('The Night Has A Thousand Eyes' plays games with Coltrane's version, just as Besiakov's own 'Blues On The Square' is a whip-smart reference to Tyner's 'Blues On The Corner'), but it's Winther, composer of the opening 'That's The Way', who steals the show. The trumpet is also unusually featured on 'Body And Soul'. It may not be Besiakov's best showing as a pianist, but it's certainly the best record bearing his name.

Tony Bevan (born 1956)

TENOR, SOPRANO AND BASS SAXOPHONES

This British saxophonist has carved his own quiet – and sometimes not so quiet – course.

 Original Gravity Incus CD 03 Bevan; Greg Kingston (g, rec, tapes, toys); Matt Lewis (perc, bird calls). 9/88.
* Bigshots Incus CD 08 Bevan; Paul Rogers (b); Steve Noble (perc). 7/91.
* Twisters Scatter 06CD Bevan; Alexander Frangenheim (b); Steve Noble (perc). 4 & 5/95.
 Three Oranges Foghorn FOGCD001 Bevan (bsx). 7/98.
Bevan is a gritty British improviser who's managed to spell out an idiom sufficiently different from the Evan Parker 'school'. The earliest of these sessions is engagingly spiny and good-humoured, with a few nods in the direction of John Zorn's freestyle. The beery track-titles – '1044°–1050°', 'Original Gravity', 'Best Before End' – are a bit of a giveaway, for there's a boys'-night-out feel to the proceedings.

That certainly isn't true of Bigshots, which is wonderfully controlled and dramatic, three absolutely compatible players working at full stretch, listening carefully to one another without surrendering a shred of autonomy. Rogers is the dominant voice, and it's sometimes difficult not to home in exclusively on his rumbling lines. Bevan himself has started to play more smoothly, even lyrically in passages, and it suits him. Only on the long closing 'The Last Shot' does he appear to run out of ideas. The title-track is much more compelling. Noble comes into his own with a vengeance and Bevan truffles up ideas of real originality.

Noble is excellent again on Twisters: alternating long and short tracks, dense outbursts of sound with quieter and more spacious ideas. Closer to orthodox than on previous records, Bevan's own contribution is more linear and orderly, and 'Belly Of The Whale' recalls classic British improv of the '60s/'70s.

Solo bass saxophone is a fairly recherché area of musical practice, and Bevan hasn't the depth of understanding which Roscoe Mitchell and Anthony Braxton have brought to such projects. The comfort is that the album is very short, more of an EP than an LP, and is played very expressively, with a nice modulation of mood.

 The Sale Of Tickets For Money Was Abolished Balance Point Acoustics 002 Bevan; Scott R. Looney (p, elec); Damon Smith (b). 4/00.
(*) Nothing Is Permanent But Woe Foghorn FOGCD002 Bevan; John Edwards (b); Mark Sanders (d). 9–10/00.
Bevan at work in Oakland and London. The American disc offers a lot of dark, scuffling, mysterious sound, heavy on the lower frequencies (Bevan uses only bass sax on both these sets). Moments such as the piano/sax duet of 'To Accept Errors Is Not To Contradict Fate' bring a welcome ray or two of light. Smith's job is, apparently, queuing for rock concert tickets – this set was set down after he'd been waiting in line for a Lou Reed show.

The British trio follows much the same course, though it has a better studio sound and Sanders makes an important difference: Bevan likes to stay almost obsessively earthbound on the big horn, digging the heftiest sonorities he can out of it, and the percussionist's momentum raises what might otherwise be overly sluggish playing. Edwards seems incapable of playing at less than the highest level.

(*) Nham Foghorn FOGCD003 Bevan; Jeb Bishop (tb); John Edwards (b); Michael Zerang (d). 5/01.
Bevan sounds fantastic alongside Bishop, but the sonority leaves Edwards and Zerang with some intriguing challenges, which both rise to manfully. Terrific stuff from the saxophonist again, though this is a collaborative date and honours are evenly shared.

* Bruised Fog FOGCD005 Bevan; Orphy Robinson (vib, steel d, elec); John Edwards (b, elec); Mark Sanders (d, perc); Ashley Wales (sound processing). 04.
Superb in every respect. Impressive as is Bevan's continuing progress with the bass saxophone – doubled here with tenor – it is Orphy Robinson's embrace of free music that provides Bruised with its most startling aspect. He sounds completely at home in the idiom and when he turns to steel pans to create a metallic clangour the music has genuinely visceral excitement. Edwards and Sanders have rapidly become veterans, both of them with a huge range of idioms on their CVs, so nothing here fazes them in the slightest, even when Wales's swirling soundscapes seem to encroach on the foreground. It's Bevan's lonesome horn that clinches the date. Bruise subsequently became a group name, famously featured with Derek Bailey on one record, but track this one down.

Also, in brief:

 Under Tracey's Bed Foghorn FOGCD-R02
A rough-and-ready gig souvenir, in duo with Derek Bailey (g), and recorded in Oxford.

Ed Bickert (born 1932)

GUITAR

Born in Manitoba and based in Toronto.

 Out Of The Past / (*) At The Garden Party Sackville 2065 / 4005 Bickert; Don Thompson (b); Terry Clarke (d). 1/76; 2/76, 1/78.
 Mutual Street Jazz Alliance TJA 10003 Bickert; Rob McConnell (tb). 3/82–5/84.
Ed's Concords are out of circulation now, which is a shame. The second of the Sackvilles brings together a mostly easy-going 1978 duo set with Thompson, with a handful of tracks recorded a month after the Out Of The Past material, but apparently abandoned without release. The duos are fine, and 'What Is This Thing Called Love?' breezes along, but the trios don't say much. This is an unusual combination, but one that works so well you wonder why it isn't tried more often. Since neither man is a grandstander, a touch of reticence, even diffidence, creeps in, but the dialogues are always interesting and the studio sound is just right.

Barney Bigard (1906–80)

CLARINET, TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born Albany Leon Bigard in New Orleans, he worked with Oliver in Chicago but joined Ellington in 1927 and stayed till 1942. After that, five years with Louis Armstrong in the All-Stars, then general work as a freelance and festival favourite.

 Barney Bigard 1944 Classics 896 Bigard; Shorty Sherock, Norman Bowden, Joe Thomas (t); Shorty Haughton (tb); Les Robinson (as); Eddie Miller, Georgie Auld (ts); Stan Wrightsmann (p, cel); Pete Johnson, Leonard Feather, Fred Washington (p); Nappy Lamare, Bud Scott, Remo Palmieri, Chuck Wayne (g); Hank Wayland, Al Hall, Billy Taylor (b); Nick Fatool, Shelly Manne, Zutty Singleton, Stan Levey (d); Peggy Lee, Etta Jones (v); strings. 1–12/44.

() Barney Bigard 1944–1945 Classics 930 Bigard; Joe Thomas, Ray Linn (t); Vic Dickenson (tb); Willie Smith (as); Joe Thomas (ts, v); Georgie Auld (ts); Cyril Haynes, Leonard Feather, Calvin Jackson, Eddie Beal, Art Tatum, Johnny Guarnieri (p); Allan Reuss, Chuck Wayne (g); Billy Taylor, Red Callender (b); Zutty Singleton, Stan Levey, Cozy Cole (d); Wini Beatty, Claude Trenier, Monette Moore (v). 12/44–12/45.

The consensus is that Bigard did his best work with Ellington and the rest is dispensable. While some of the work here is less than immortal, his own playing is seldom less than fine. The earlier volume begins with four excellent titles by The Capitol International Jazzmen, with two charming vocals from Peggy Lee. A trio session for Signature is fluent and swinging. There are dips, but the final four titles with Etta Jones and Joe Thomas include some remarkable blues playing by Barney. The second volume brings together some less than classic dates, and some real obscurities, but there is an excellent session for Keynote which offers Bigard at his best on 'Rose Room' and 'Bojangles'.

 Bucket's Got A Hole In It Delmark DE 211 Bigard; Nap Trottier (t); George Brunis (tb); Art Hodes (p); Rail Wilson (b); Barrett Deems (d). 1/68.

* Barney Bigard And The Pelican Trio Jazzology JCD-228 Bigard; Duke Burrell (p); Barry Martyn (d). 76.

The first is a delightful reunion of oldtimers, with the sextet ambling through this alternately rousing and bluesy date with evident enjoyment. The timing is off here and there, despite the reliable Deems, and Trotter and the venerable Brunis aren't players of the stature of Bigard and Hodes. Somehow, though, the frailties don't seem to matter. Sadly, the other set is dud, with Bigard well past his best and overpowered by his colleagues.

Also, in brief:

(*) Barney's Bounce ASV 5507. 1/29–11/47.

Unlike Classics, ASV include the best material Bigard recorded with Ellington and others, so this is perhaps the best available introduction.

Acker Bilk (born 1929)

CLARINET, VOCAL

Still best known for 'Stranger On The Shore', but his credentials go all the way back to the Colyer band and are impeccable.

(*) Mr Acker Bilk And His Paramount Jazzband Lake LACD 48 Bilk; Ken Sims (t); John Mortimer (tb); Jay Hawkins, Roy James (bj); Ernest Price (b); Ron McKay (d). 3/58–1/59.

 Acker Lake LACD 186 As above, except add Colin Smith (t), Stan Greig, Dave Collett (p). 10/59–8/60.

 Mr Acker Bilk's Lansdowne Folio Lake LACD 195 As above, except omit Sims, Collett. 10/60–11/61.

(*) Stranger On The Shore / A Taste Of Honey Redial 546458 Bilk; strings, choir, Leon Young (dir). 61–65.

 The Frankfurt Concert Hitchcock Media CD 0404 Bilk; Colin Smith (t); John Mortimer (tb); Stan Greig (p); Tony Pitt (g); Tucker Finlayson (b); Ron McKay (d, v). 66.

(*) Blue Acker Lake LACD 231 Bilk; Ian Hamer, Derek Watkins, Eddie Blair, Les Condon (t); Ian Carr (flhn); Keith Christie, Don Lusher, Chris Pyne, Bobby Lamb, Chris Smith (tb); Don Rendell (as, ts); Joe Harriott (as); Tony Coe (ts); Stan Tracey (p); Dave Green, Lennie Bush (b); Barry Morgan (d). 8/68.

The Three B's, Barber, Ball and Bilk, were the heirs to Ken Colyer's trad revolution. If Barber 'prettified' the Colyer style, Bilk brought an element of showmanship and humour, parading his Paramount band in Edwardian waistcoats and bowlers and scoring hits with 'Summer Set' (which also referred to his unreconstructed West Country accent) and 'Stranger On The Shore', which provided him with a pension. Denis Preston wanted Bilk to record with strings; the clarinettist reworked a theme originally written for his daughter, recorded it with the Leon Young String Chorale and saw it picked up as theme music to a television drama. It sold two million copies, a success that led to envious disdain of a musician whose early work under Colyer had been a raw-edged George Lewis style very different from the silky, evocative murmur he cultivated in later years.

The dates from 1958 and 1959 capture the Paramount Jazzband at its best, doing unembellished blues and rags. 'Willie The Weeper' is pretty authentic, and things like 'Blaze Away' and 'Higher Ground' give the band plenty of scope for raucous to-and-froing. Acker also features the band in its most unprettified form; there are nods to variety in things like 'White Cliffs Of Dover', but at this point the choice had more to do with the New Orleans tradition of covering pop material of every sort and period, rather than pandering to the chicken-in-a-basket crowd. The front line tends to go for punch rather than finesse and Sims wouldn't be anyone's first choice for a firm lead trumpet, but the tracks don't half go off at an argumentative lick. Paul Adams has cleaned off some of the reverb on the original LP, which makes it all sound leaner. Lansdowne Folio rounds up 21 tracks from six sessions, with the band settled down, and there's a convincing mix of hardcore and more idiosyncratic Bilkisms like 'Buona Sera' and 'In A Persian Market'. It's hard to think of a British trad CD that offers more sheer fun.

The Redial reissue of Stranger On The Shore and A Taste Of Honey will be welcomed by admirers of the 'popular' Bilk. Whatever reservations one has about the setting, his own clarinet remains markedly individual and there are a few delightful surprises along the way, such as his own original 'Evening Shadows'.

The Frankfurt Concert is a welcome souvenir. Purists will be dismayed by Pitt's rock'n'roll guitar and he does go on a bit, but there is some great clarinet on 'Train Number One Done Gone' and a lovely 'A Taste Of Honey'. Very good sound.

Blue Acker is obviously the one to convert modern jazz snobs who think of Bilk as an old-hat variety act. You might also catch them out on the unexpected association of Acker and the sanctified Joe Harriott. The Lake compilation brings together Tracey's arrangements of Bilk material (including 'Stranger On The Shore') for his Big Brass ensemble, together with some other material from the same sessions, featuring Bilk but released under Tracey's name as We Love You Madly.

 In Holland /  Blaze Away Timeless 506 / 543 Bilk; Mike Cotton (t); Campbell Burnap (tb); Colin Wood (p); Tucker Finlayson (b); Richie Bryant (d). 83; 87.
The playing was pretty smoothed out and predictable by this period, but Burnap is always good for some good natured exchange of ideas and the band holds things together pretty well. The Dutch concert reappeared on CD with extra tracks, all worth having, and the overall effect is gentle and lovely.

 Azure Lake LACD 167 Bilk; Wally Fawkes (cl, ss); Stan Grieg (p); Tony Pitt (g, bj); Clive Morton (b); Ritchie Bryant (d). 2/02.
 Acker & Cuff MacJazz CD006 Bilk; Cuff Billett (t, v); Dave Collett (p); Cass Caswell (b); Ray Ball (d). 6/04.
 Acker & Danny Avid 813 Bilk; Danny Moss (ts); John Critchinson (p); Cass Caswell (b); Eddie Taylor (d). 10/05.
Good to see him recording again after a spell of indifferent health. The meeting with fellow liquorice stick Fawkes is a good-natured ramble round some favourite old tunes, but they're a little let down by the rhythm section, which sometimes has trouble staying together and is positively laggardly on several numbers. Acker & Cuff isn't a great deal more lively, but it's a smiling date, with much to enjoy. Same goes for the meeting with Moss, who's been heard in interestingly varied company of late. Again, it's not exactly taken at a gallop and the section aren't talking to one another, but greatly enjoyable as ever.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Noble Art Of Acker Bilk / Seven Ages Of Man Lake LACD 213. 59.
Not the best of sets from this period, but quite well paired.

 Clarinet Jamboree Lake LACD 230. 59.
With Sandy Brown, Archie Semple and Terry Lightfoot. More liquorice than you could shake a stick at.

 Beau Jazz Lake LACD 231. 62.
A good, if slightly routine, Paramount Jazzband date.

Rolf Billberg (1930–66)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

The Swedish bopper worked at home and in Denmark, moving steadily towards the style of his role-model, Lee Konitz. He died suddenly, aged only 35.

(*) Darn That Dream Dragon DRCD 369 Billberg; Jan Allan (t); Allan Botschinsky (flhn); Ole Molin, Knud Jørgensen (p); Rune Gustafsson (g); Roman Dylag, Sture Åkerberg , Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Rune Carlsson, Leif Wennerstrøn (d). 11/64–4/66.

 Rare Danish Recordings By A Swedish Jazz Legend Storyville 101 8369 Billberg; Jørgen Ryg (t); Kurt Järnberg (vtb); Max Bruel (ss); Lasse Guillen (bs); Bent Axen, Atli Bjørn , Lars Bagge (p); Poul Godske (vib, p); Jørn Grauengaard (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen , Mogens Landsvig, Erik Mølbach , Urban Moberg (b); William Schiøpffe , Finn Fredriksen (d). 56–66.
Billberg died too young to have established any kind of reputation outside Scandinavia, or to have left much of a recorded legacy. However, these few gatherings give ample proof of his talent. The Dragon set finds him on home turf, playing broadcasts with three small groups, one co-led with Allan. All three come from late in his life, when his debt to Lee Konitz is most obvious (there are six Konitz tunes in the set-list), and the easy but subtle facility he displays on every track is compelling; he never quite takes the obvious route and the improvisations suggest a man thinking chancily ahead. A lengthy 'Darn That Dream' has him wearing his heart on his sleeve with surprising intensity.

Storyville's compilation covers a longer period and finds Billberg in lesser company, but he plays with the same inventiveness, and the later pieces, including a stark 'Yesterdays', match the Swedish music.

David Binney (born 1961)

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES

Firm-toned saxophonist with strong improvising ideas. Member of The Lost Tribe and founder of Mythology Records.

 Point Game Owl 79233 Binney; Edward Simon (p); Adam Rogers (g); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 4/89.
(*) Luxury Of Guessing Audioquest 1030 Binney; Donny McCaslin (ts); Uri Caine (p); Ben Monder (g); Scott Colley (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc). 2/95.
(*) Free To Dream Mythology 1124 As above, except omit Caine, Monder; add Alex Sipiagin (t); Clark Gayton (tb); Doug Yates (bcl); Jamie Baum (f); Ed Simon (p); Adam Rogers (g); Kenny Wollesen (perc). 9/96.
 Afinidad Red RR 12134 Binney; Edward Simon (p); Adam Rogers (g); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade, Adam Cruz (d); Lucia Pulida (v). 4/00.
(*) South ACT 9279 Binney; Uri Caine (p); Chris Potter (ts); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade (d). 6/00.
 Balance ACT 9411 Binney; Donny McCaslin (sax); Uri Caine (p); Wayne Krantz (g); Tim Lefebvre (b); Jim Black (d). 7–8/01.
Binney's brand of vigorous post-bop is touched here and there with free-form playing and occasional fusion-ish grooves, as on the debut Point Game, which is still available on CD and as a download from Binney's website. On all these records, he sounds adventurous but also self-possessed. The writing, especially on the recommended Free To Dream, is clear, authoritative and always seems to lead from A to B. It's actually very difficult to make discriminatory judgements between the discs, so consistently good are they, but we very much like his interplay with Potter on South and the whole rhythmic conception of the middle albums, where some strong recruitments have yielded highly creative results. The one question mark hangs over the Red disc – it's actually co-led by pianist Simon, who has ideas of his own; the main objection, though, is that the sound is flat and uninviting.

 A Small Madness Auand 104 Binney; Jeff Hirshfield (d); Tanya Henri (v). 02.

(*) Welcome To Life Mythology 1130 Binney; Chris Potter (ts); Craig Taborn (p); Adam Rogers (g); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade (d). 03.

* Bastion Of Sanity Criss Cross 1261 Binney; Chris Potter (ts); Jacob Sacks (p); Thomas Morgan (b); David Weiss (d). 4/04.

On all his earlier recordings Binney seemed on the brink of genuinely remarkable things. His ability to sustain a regular band is laudable, but what he needed was to push off into deeper water and follow through on the promise of these fine discs, and particularly the writing on Free To Dream. On the Criss Cross record, he certainly does that, even if the instrumentation is more modest than on that earlier project. Potter has proved to be a loyal and sympathetic interpreter, but here he seems more like a secret sharer, gently reshaping and sometimes codifying Binney's more extravagant ideas, somewhat as Dewey Redman once did for Ornette Coleman. The rest of the group is much less well known, but promises to deliver from the very start; a tight, well-marshalled rhythm section that has the confidence to let things roll free when called on. Check out the interpretation of Ellington's 'Heaven', the only non-original.

The duos with Hirshfield (Tanya Henri only appears on 'Mallari') are nice but wear slightly. At least the session avoids all imitation of the now clichéd Interstellar Space approach. The other disc has some fine players, all of them clearly eager to play a part. Unfortunately, it fails to cohere and is rarely more than the sum of its (very impressive) parts.

(*) Oceanos Criss Cross 1289 Binney; Shane Endsley, Jesse Newman (t); Alan Ferber (tb); Edward Simon (p); Adam Rogers (g); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade (d); Pernell Saturnino (perc); Luciana Souza (v). 10/04.

It's not clear why this one sat in the vault for nearly three years before release. Co-led by two solidly bankable Criss Cross regulars – Simon is listed on the top line, though Binney seems to get top billing – it may be a little different from the run of recent records, though it's hardly a left-field initiative given the creative success of Afinidad. Compositional credits are evenly distributed, with Colley chipping in on 'Amnesia'. Binney's 'We Dream Oceans' carries on the bold idiom of its predecessors, but it's Simon's 'Impossible Question', with its almost Ives-like layering of harmony (the theme is reprised towards the end of the record), that asks to be heard again. 'El Parrandero', again by the saxophonist, is a nice mix of flavours – shot of tequila, lime and salt, you might say. Still not clear after several listens what might have put a stay on this one, but it's out there now and worth sampling.

(*) Cities And Desire Criss Cross 1285 Binney; Mark Turner (ts); Craig Taborn (p); Thomas Morgan (b); Dan Weiss (d). 3/06.

The precise inspiration for these city poems really doesn't matter much, except to David Binney, of course. The album follows a loosely weaving itinerary from Lisbon (though it would be hard to detect any obvious Portuguese influence on the opening track) to home in New York City. There are visits to Montreal, Toronto, London, Miami, Carpenteria and other places along the way. It seems that the mournful cast of the Miami track is occasioned by his father's death and that some of the curious ethnic flourishes that emerge in 'Montreal' and 'London' are inspired by those cities' thriving sub-cultures.

Binney's playing is as vivid as ever, and the programme slightly distracts attention from what is a highly accomplished album, never merely technically astute but also profoundly expressive. Taborn is in stunning form, as so often when he sticks to piano, and the axis of Morgan and Weiss (regrettably mis-handled as 'David' in our last edition) are as strong and responsive as ever.

* Out Of Airplanes BK 40057 Binney; Craig Taborn (p); Bill Frisell, Adam Rogers (g); Eivind Opsvik (b); Kenny Wollesen (d). 06.

Increasingly prolific and somewhat ahead of the (jazz) game in making his work available as downloads, Binney turns in another smart set, though this time the main attraction is Frisell, who plays on most of the tracks. There's a wholly unusual, indeed unique, sound-world developing round Binney; hard to verbalize or categorize, but increasingly evident on this record, where Frisell is let loose with his full armoury of unusual effects. Seems odd in that regard that the saxophonist remains so wedded to the old jazz quintet format, but he is still basically a swinger who has managed to graft new textures onto a relatively conventional post-bop language with touches of freedom and an injection of rock energy.

Walter Bishop Jr (1927–98)

PIANO

Swing-to-bop stylist who followed his father's footsteps.

* Trio, 1965 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1896 Bishop; Butch Warren (b); Jimmy Cobb, G. T. Hogan (d). 62, 10/63.

The date on the cover is misleading and can only refer to year of release. Some of this material was also once available on Fresh Sound. Only two out of sixteen tracks break the three-minute barrier, so the emphasis is on brisk, economical delivery of themes, with a minimum of improvisatory freedom.

* Midnight Blue Red RR 123251 Bishop; Reggie Johnson (b); Doug Sides (d). 12/91.

Huge gaps in the available discography, and nobody has yet managed to get the good Xanadu Bish Bash back out. This is fine, though, even if some of the material (including originals like 'Lady Barbara', 'Farmer's Delight' and 'Midnight Blue' sound like deutero-Bud Powell. Uncomplicated and unfussy playing and a pleasing sound.

 Speak Low Again Venus 79017 Bishop; Paul Brown (b); Al Harewood (d). 6/93.

A late statement, but without the autumnal chill that sometimes descends over belated returns to the studio, and they even finish on a lovely 'Spring Is Here'. Bishop was probably never individual enough to decline significantly as he aged. His virtues were modest and reliable and that's the best – and worst – you could say about this.

Michael Bisio (born 1955)

DOUBLE BASS

North-West coaster now based on the other seaboard and working in free bop and improvisation.

 In Seattle Silkheart SHCD 107 Bisio; Ron Soderstrom (t); Rick Mandyck (as); Teo Sutton (d). 4/87.

This stands somewhat apart from the bassist's later work. It's in a vigorous post-bop vein, with some emphasis on composition rather than extended improvising. Two tracks (including the lovely 'For Harry Carney') approach ten minutes, but three come in at just a shade over two minutes. Two takes of 'Greenpeace Suite' seems like one too many. Otherwise a nicely balanced set and the mostly unknown North West musicians do themselves proud.

 Finger Wigglers /  Zebulon CIMP 127 / 179 Bisio; Joe McPhee (ts). 9/96; 7/98.
These duets are almost gruelling, certainly harsh. Two takes of 'Lonely Woman' leave the tune almost unrecognizable, as is 'Blue Monk', though 'Here's That Rainy Day' does struggle into view after a lengthy bass introduction. It's good to hear McPhee at length on tenor, which allows his peculiarly cruel lyricism to develop. The return match goes much the same way as the first, though this time McPhee has an alto to hand and the grudging lyricism of 'Kind Of A Ballad' is some kind of concession. Should suit severe tastes.

(*) Undulations Omnitone 15001 Bisio; Rob Blakeslee (c, t, flhn); Bob Nell (p); Jim Nolet (vla); Ed Pias (d). 6/96.
Belatedly released, this is Bisio's most effective record, featuring a very similar line-up – Blakeslee, Nell, Pias and a string instrument – to the unsuccessful Covert Choreography. 'Injury Or Malpractice?' is basic free bop, and the helter-skelter finale of 'Legends' is much the same. A dedication to Henry Grimes particularizes the bassist's dedication to his instrument in its traditional-modern role, and in using players like Blakeslee and Nell he's opting for two worlds in one.

 Composance Cadence CJR 1173 Bisio; Rob Blakeslee (t); Greg Campbell (d, frhn). 12/03.
This offers some notably melodious improvising, while the free playing on the title-piece is as attractive as the music working from preconceived structures. Blakeslee's handsome trumpet sound and Campbell's sensitive, careful percussion offer something that contrasts nicely with Bisio's gloomier settings.

 Pulling Strings CIMP 349 Bisio; Tomas Ulrich (clo). 05.
A hard combination to pull off in improvised music, but Ulrich is a consummate partner on this, and on 'Epilogue For Frank Z' helps create music of real, pulse-driven excitement; it occurs in a second version with roles reversed. They each play solo, which helps to leaven the sound, but it's when the two voices come together richly, as on 'Up To Tomas', that the real quality of the music shines through.

 Circle This CIMP 360 Bisio; Avram Fefer (ss, ts); Stephen Gauci (ts); Jay Rosen (d). 06.
Since the unsatisfactory last CIMP date with this group (see below), Bisio had moved to the East Coast and had suffered a heart murmur, Otherwise, the circumstances of recording were the same, the date coming at the end of a tour. Where on the last they sounded tired and even fractious, this time they really play for each other and the group identity asserts itself right from the off.

Also, in brief:

(*) Covert Choreography Cadence CJR 1063. 96.
An interesting group, but the impression is of a messily recorded free jam.

(*) Concerted Cadence CJR 1121. 4/00.
The further 'out' duo partner Dan Blunck (ss, ts) gets, the less convincing he sounds. Definitely inferior to the McPhee records.

(*) Connections CIMP 323. 1/05.
Disconnected and uncommunicative.

* Panting Breath, Stoking Fire CIMP. 1/05.
Bass/saxophone duets with Avram Fefer, recorded in the depth of winter but generating enough heat of their own.

Lou Blackburn (1922–90)

TROMBONE

Neglected figure of the '60s LA scene who doesn't seem to have worked much elsewhere. Left for Germany at the beginning of the following decade; after that, obscurity.

* The Complete Imperial Sessions Blue Note 58293 Blackburn; Freddie Hill (t); Horace Tapscott (p); John Duke (b); Leroy Henderson (d). 1 & 3/63.
* Perception Fresh Sound FSRCD307 As above. 1 & 3/63.
Always fascinating to encounter a figure like this, occasionally mentioned in surveys of Los Angeles, but little more than a name to any but serious California collectors. It clearly isn't J.J. playing, though there's an obvious stylistic link, with a similar saxophonic approach to trombone-playing. Blackburn made just two jazz records for Imperial in early 1963 and Jazz Frontier and Two-Note Samba are usefully and intriguingly compiled on this single well-packaged CD.

Blackburn is revealed as a decent if not particularly striking composer, with things like the waltz-time 'Blues For Eurydice' and the two title-tracks (the first is actually 'New Frontier'). There are also nice covers of standards like 'Dear Old Stockholm', 'Stella By Starlight' 'Manha De Carnival' and 'I Cover The Waterfront', as well as one piece by fellow trombonist Curtis Fuller, which are useful points of comparison for those who think you can only judge a player by reference to repertory material. Lou's soloing is brisk and uncomplicated, the kind of musicianship you'd expect from a seasoned session guy. Much of the interest comes from the rest of the band, though if anyone expects a revelation from the revered Tapscott's first commercial recording, they're in for a disappointment. He's pretty clunky and actually holds things back. Hill, though, is always worth listening to.

The Fresh Sound option is out there, too, but it's a track light, has inferior sound and packaging, and doesn't have Michael Cuscuna's valuable liner-note.

Cindy Blackman (born 1959)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Her jazz recording has been interrupted by forays into rock.

 In The Now High Note 7024 Blackman; Ravi Coltrane (ss, ts); Jacky Terrasson (p); Ron Carter (b). 98.
(*) Works On Canvas /  Someday High Note 7038 / 7063 Blackman; J. D. Allen III (ts); Carlton Holmes (p, ky); George Mitchell (b). 4/99; 4/00.
 Music For The New Millennium Sacred Sound 99963 2CD As above. 00.
A (jazz) career break as Lenny Kravitz's drummer is acknowledged at the end of In The Now with a version of the singer's 'Let Love Rule'. For the rest, it's very much back to normal business. An interpretation of Ornette's 'Happy House' sticks out a little uncomfortably. The second record, with what was to be the established band, is very impressive, opening with an unusual 'On Green Dolphin Street' and exploring a rich, dark tonality throughout. The third and fourth discs fall away somewhat and the Sacred Sound set certainly has too much packed in.

Ed Blackwell (1929–92)

DRUMS

A founding figure in post-bop jazz, anchoring some of Ornette Coleman's most innovative recordings.

 Walls-Bridges Black Saint 120153 Blackwell; Dewey Redman (ts); Cameron Brown (b). 2/92.

Like many of his fellow radicals, Blackwell relied heavily on European labels for his occasional forays as leader. This is a curious attribution since most of the featured playing is by Redman – as are four of the seven compositions – who's in strong voice; the three stars are his. They open with Miles's 'Half Nelson' and the standard 'Everything Happens To Me'. It gets more resourceful from there, but it's mostly a bop set and the closing 'Take The "A" Train' confirms its essential conservatism. A pity the better Enjas are no longer around

Eubie Blake (1883–1983)

PIANO

Born in Baltimore, he wrote 'The Charleston Rag' in his teens, but teamed up with Noble Sissle to create the first all-black revue. The swing era left him behind, but he enjoyed an Indian summer as a living historian of the music.

 Memories Of You Shout! Factory 30146 Blake (p rolls); Steve Williams (p); Gertrude Baum (p rolls); Noble Sissle (v). 15–73.

If he'd known he was going to live so long, he famously said, he'd have taken better care of himself. As it was, Blake was a part of American music from the very birth of jazz till his death just days after his 100th birthday. For all his longevity, little remains in print, but this is probably the only Blake disc anyone needs. Using original piano rolls, but also a 1973 performance of 'I'm Just Wild About Harry', it takes the story from 'The Charleston Rag' onwards; wonderfully fleet performances and good guest spots. Untarnishable.

Michael Blake (born 1964)

REEDS

A charter member of the Lounge Lizards, the gifted Canadian has managed to combine world music influences with avant-garde freedoms to create some powerfully original music.

 Kingdom Of Champa Intuition 3189 Blake; Steven Bernstein (t); Marcus Rojas (tba); Thomas Chapin (picc, f, bf, bs); Bryan Carrott (vib); David Tronzo (slide g); Tony Scherr (b, lute); Scott Neumann (d); Billy Martin (d). 97.

 Drift Intuition 3213 Blake; Steven Bernstein (t); Ron Horton (t, flhn); Peck Allmond (t, ts, peck horn); Marcus Roja (tba); Briggan Krauss (as, bs); Frank Kimbrough (p); Tony Scherr (g); Ben Allison (b); Matt Wilson (d); Mauro Refosco (perc). 9/98–1/99.

 Right Before Your Very Ears Clean Feed CF044 Blake; Ben Allison (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 11/04?.

Blake's debut record as a solo artist was produced by none other than Teo Macero and is every bit as elegantly eclectic as you'd expect from that, mixing jazz, rock and Vietnamese influences with impressive surety. There is a folksong arrangement among the originals, of which 'Purple City' is the most substantial and impressive.

There is a workshopped feel to the second album, which is reminiscent in many ways of bassist Ben Allison's own projects. The writing is tinged with Mingus devices, not least a preference for a mid-to-low register for the main voicings, but no one will confuse Blake with any other writer. He is a genuine original, capable of delivering strong, feeling solos while negotiating a demanding chord structure. 'Duty Free Suite' and 'The Creep' are both outstanding.

Right Before Your Ears reached us in August 2005 with a November 2005 recording date on the sleeve. Blake isn't quite that far ahead of himself, but this raw trio-improv situation (sometimes led by Allison) suits him very well and there is some thoughtful and stretching work from all concerned. Allison is a bit buried at times, which is a pity given his consistently high musicianship, but when the whole group is in and burning, as on 'Funhouse', it's irresistible stuff. The same workshop feel creeps in now and again later, especially on the long 'Flip', but mostly it's a strong, coherent record and a worthy addition to Blake's output as leader.

 Blake Tartare / (*) More Like Us Stunt 05082 / 05102 Blake; Steve Bernstein (t on More Like Us only); Søren Kjaergaard (ky); Jane Scarpantoni (clo); Jonas Westergaard (b); Kresten Osgood (d); Marie Lorette Friis (v on Tartare only). 1/06; 6/07.

This is the new group, named after the first of these albums and manned by three capable, committed Danes (plus Scarpantoni as 'fifth Beatle'). The idiom is bright, fast, sardonic, pitched in some debatable terrain between jazz, rock and any number of other genres. 'Meditation (On A Pair Of Wirecutters)' is included on the first disc to establish some connection to jazz repertory, though Blake trumps himself with a brilliant version of Coleman Hawkins's 'Maria' on the second. The highlights of the later, better set are the opening 'Hush', not the Joe South classic but a misterioso waltz with cello and vocal accompaniment, then John Lurie's 'Happy Old Boy', which gives Bernstein a prominent part, and finally 'Africa Used To Be Home', where Blake's clarinet sings mournfully. The pop material 'Something In The Water' and 'Johnny Too Bad' are by no means as successful.

Ran Blake (born 1935)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Born in Springfield, Massachusetts, he studied at Bard and Lenox and was accompanist / partner to Jeanne Lee from the late '50s. Renowned as an academic at the New England Conservatory, he continues to 'storyboard' fascinating music, much influenced by film noir.

 The Newest Sound Around RCA 2500 Blake; Jeanne Lee (v). 12/61.

Blake is a passionate admirer of singers, Sarah Vaughan and Chris Connor particularly. This, though, was pretty much where it got started, at Bard College with the irrepressible Lee. Much of the material is repertory or traditional stuff – 'Summertime', 'Lover Man', 'Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child' – but there is a thoughtful reading of 'Blue Monk' and a number of written/improvised originals like 'Church On Russell Street', but the highlight has to be 'He's Got The Whole World In His Hands', transformed into something wryly joyous. Lee's articulation derives more from speech rhythms than from bel canto or traditional jazz singing; Blake swings even when he sounds most abstract. And there's plenty of humour from both of them.

 Painted Rhythms: Volumes 1 & 2 GM 3007 / 3008 Blake (p solo). 12/85.

Blake takes a highly personal stance on the jazz tradition, reinterpreting classic material with a curious mixture of respectful precision and free-floating innovation. The most striking instances of that are the four versions of 'Maple Leaf Rag' that straddle these two remarkable discs. The third of them, bringing Volume 1 to a close, is dislocated, rediscovering Joplin's tune from a whirlpool of atonality and fractured rhythms. The second, by contrast, is played with a kind of sweet abandon that's the other side to Blake's sometimes severe approach. Volume 1 is largely concerned with jazz repertoire, originals like Duke's 'Azure' and 'Skrontch', Mary Lou Williams's 'What's Your Story, Morning Glory?', more recent things like George Russell's 'Ezzthetic' and the Stan Kenton tune that gives the set its name. Volume 2 casts the net a lot wider, searching for a 'Spanish tinge'. Blake has long been interested in Sephardic music, and its distinctive harmonies provide this volume with new colours. Volume 2 also features Blake the composer. 'Shoah!' and 'Storm Warning' both seem to hint at historical urgency, with quotes from Shostakovich in the second. 'Vilna' adapts Olshanetsky and Wolfson's klezmer-based mourning tune memorializing the victims of a Nazi massacre. 'Babbitt' is a more abstract exploration of sound and silence, each pushed to the limit.

[illegible]

 The Short Life Of Barbara Monk

Soul Note 121127 Blake; Ricky Ford (ts); Ed Felson (b); Jon Hazilla (d). 8/86.

This is a truly marvellous album, and it makes Blake's apparent unwillingness to work in ensemble settings all the more galling. The first part ends with the title-piece, dedicated to Thelonious Monk's daughter, Barbara, who died of cancer in 1984. It's a complex and moving composition that shifts effortlessly between a bright lyricism and an edgy premonition; Blake plays beautifully, and his interplay with the young but supremely confident rhythm section is a revelation. A death also lies behind the closing track on part two. 'Pourquoi Laurent?' expresses both a hurt need to understand and a calm desire to heal, written in the face of French jazz critic Laurent Goddet's suicide. 'Impresario Of Death' is equally disturbing but so intelligently constructed as to resolve its inner contradiction perfectly. 'Vradiazi', by the Greek composer Theodorakis, is a favourite of Blake's, as is the Sephardic melody 'Una Matica De Ruda' (two eye-blink takes), which also features on Painted Rhythms 2 (above). To lighten the mix a little, there are astonishing versions of Stan Kenton's theme, 'Artistry In Rhythm', and, as an unexpected opener, 'I've Got You Under My Skin'. Blake's Falcone Concert Grand sounds in perfect shape and the session is superbly recorded and pressed.

(*) You Stepped Out Of A Cloud Owl 982472 Blake; George Duvivier (b); Jeanne Lee (v). 8/89.

A quarter-century on from their debut together, Blake and Lee work in the same vein and with the same understated empathy. The originals are good (especially the pianist's haunting 'Kristallnacht'), but the standards really push them towards greatness. Duvivier only appears on a couple of tracks, isn't really needed, but adds variety to the sound. Another valuable restoration from Owl.

(*) Masters From Different Worlds Mapleshade 1732 Blake; Julian Priester (tb); Clifford Jordan (ts); Steve Williams (d); Alfred Mojica (perc); Windmill Saxophone Quartet; Claudia Polley (v). 12/89.

Misleadingly billed as a co-led project with Jordan, the saxophonist only appears on four of the ten selections. They do obviously come from different musical worlds, but as so often Blake makes light of the difference. His own abstraction is always tempered by swing and a strong blues feeling. Their versions of Strayhorn's 'Something To Live For' and Ellington's 'Mood Indigo' could hardly be bettered, and though Blake moves off into more unusual territory on other cuts, it's the cuts with the saxophonist that fascinate.

(*) Epistrophy Soul Note 121177 Blake (p solo). 4/91.

Blake touches base with the title-tune no fewer than three times and adopts characteristically acute angles on the others. Where he departs from Monk is in the regularity and precision of the pulse, with few anarchic time-shifts and slippages. In their place an admirable exactness and consistency.

(*) Unmarked Van Soul Note 121227 Blake; Tiziano Tononi (d). 12/94.

Blake's passion for singers is well known, but no one was quite prepared for this astonishing tribute to the genius of Sarah Vaughan. Sassie's huge range and ability to texture and retexture a single tone made her one of the great instrumentalists of the music, and Blake has settled on that aspect of her singing, rather than its emotional components. The opening piece is an original composition which conjures up some of her most characteristic phrasing devices, including that famous deep roll up off the bottom of a chord. Sassie recorded Debussy's 'Reverie' more than once and Blake has attempted to capture the less obviously classical interpretation. There are four separate takes of 'Tenderly', the last of which closes the disc on a moment of romantic uncertainty, less definitive than the title-tune, a Blake original which quotes Vaughan's version of the Lord's Prayer. Thoroughly remarkable.

(*) Something To Live For hatOLOGY 527 Blake; Guillermo Gregorio (cl); David Fabris (g). 3/98.

Unpredictable as ever in his choice of material and settings, Blake nevertheless delivers a characteristic record in this filigree recital. Nineteen tracks are dispatched in a little over 50 minutes, ten of them duets with either Gregorio or Fabris: many pieces are so pared back that they're little more than epigrams, and even when he indulges himself over five or six minutes, as in 'Memphis', each chord seems meticulously selected. Not that this is effete or even introspective as a programme: Blake may be sparing, but he doesn't spare the keyboard, and every piece is defined and crisply delineated, however oblique the structures. Gregorio and Fabris do their best to enter into the spirit. If you're not a Blake believer, this set won't do anything to convert you, but its astringency will delight any of the already-hooked.

 Sonic Temples GM 3046 2CD Blake; Nicole Kämpgen Schuller (as); Ed Schuller (b); George Schuller (d, perc). 01.

Unusual to hear Blake in a relatively conventional piano-trio setting, but the Schullers are so well versed in the pianist's brand of classically aware jazz that they fit in with the concept seamlessly. Hearing 'The Short Life Of Barbara Monk' in this context is absolutely fascinating, but the real delight of this two-CD set is the extraordinary 'Stormy Weather' which opens the second half of the set with heart-stopping grace.

We take the title to suggest the extent to which Blake has paid his respects, made his obeisances and sung his praises within these mainly familiar themes. The material is mostly standards-based – 'Nature Boy', 'Tangerine', 'Skylark', 'How High The Moon' – but leavened with some typically elegant Blake originals. Ed Schuller is represented by a couple of tracks – including 'Dra-Kumba', which features his wife Nicole on alto – and a couple of numbers sound as if they have been collectively improvised. Good as the rhythm section and guest are, it's Ran's record. He increasingly resembles his namesake, William: immense experience tempered by a gentle innocence of purpose, apocalyptic vividness matched by delicacy of touch, radical and traditional in equal measure.

♛ * All That Is Tied Tompkins Square TSO1965 Blake (p solo). 05.

Blake is 70. He has released some 35 albums, but this is his first solo disc since 1985 and Painted Rhythms. It is a quiet masterpiece, marked by the same almost mystical approach to harmony and melody that has marked recent projects. It is wrong to call Blake an eclectic. He assimilates his influences and passions too thoroughly for that. The opening track here, actually written by producer Jonah Kraut, opens quietly, almost musingly, before breaking off a huge, complex discord. Like the remainder of the album, the track remains quiet, contemplative and patient, gradually working through the ramifications of Blake's astonishing grasp of harmony. 'Thursday' seems to quote 'Lover Man' towards the end, leaving the listener with the thought that perhaps the whole thing had been a meditation on those changes from the start; probably not, but Blake's mind works in widening circles of association. 'Impresario Of Death' is magnificently moody and intense, but with a Messiaen-like delicacy. The only moment where the pace picks up significantly is on 'Church Of Latter Rain Christian Fellowship', whose gospelly roll is deeply infectious. A magnificent record from an American master.

Also, in brief:

 Third Stream Recompositions Owl 9847560. 6/77.

Third Stream is by no means a time-locked or redundant genre in Blake's perception. These fine essays have returned to circulation with much of the Owl list.

 Duke Dreams Soul Note 121027. 5 & 6/81.

A set of intelligently reimagined Ellington compositions, plus Brubeck's 'Duke' by way of overture. Fine solo piano.

 Improvisations Soul Note 121022. 6/81.

Blake and Jaki Byard are not as unalike as you might think, both fine pianistic intellects who also know how to swing. The formalism of 'Sonata For Two Pianos' is mostly in the title, but there's a taut, academic undercurrent to 'Tea For Two' and 'On Green Dolphin Street'.

 Suffield Gothic Soul Note 121077. 9/83.

With Houston Person (ts), an unlikely pairing on the surface. Basically a tribute to Mahalia Jackson, it touches on Blake's abiding obsession with song.

 Memory Of Vienna hatOLOGY CD 6134. 88.

Another unlikely pairing: Professors Blake and Braxton (as). Ran's moments of wildness are tempered by AB's coolness and precision. Slightly mandarin and stuffy.

 Horace Is Blue: A Silver Noir hatOLOGY 570. 00.

Blake's ability to personalize almost any style again evidenced on this fascinating set of Horace Silver tunes. Two versions each of 'Ecaroh' and the peerless 'Song For My Father', reinvented each time.

Ron Blake

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in the American Virgin Islands, he cut his teeth in bassist Christian McBride's group.

 Lest We Forget Mack Avenue MAC 1012 Blake; Rashwan Ross (t); Joey DeFrancesco (org); David Gilmore (g); Christian McBride (b); Greg Hutchinson (d). 03.

(*) Sonic Tonic Mack Avenue MAC 1020 + bonus disc Blake; Sean Jones (flhn); Vincent Chancey (frhn); Josh Roseman (tb); Marcus Rojas (ts); Michael Cain (ky); David Gilmore (g); Christian McBride, Reuben Rogers (b); Chris Dave, Terreon Gully (d); Gilmar Gomes, Pedro Martinez (perc). 8/04.

Blake's debut Up, Front & Personal doesn't seem to be widely available any more, but the newer stuff is just as good. Lest We Forget is unapologetically old-fashioned in cast, a homage to the soul-jazz of the '50s and '60s. With Joey DeFrancesco aboard, the Hammond sound of Charles Earland and Groove Holmes is very much to the fore, but Blake has the ability and the confidence to steer the project his way. 'Mister Magic' is a heartfelt tribute to Grover Washington Jr; played as a standard, not pastiche. 'Minor Chant' is a cool but vaguely threatening groove that makes the most of the fine rhythm section. Top marks to McBride, as always, but all praise to drummer Greg Hutchinson, a veteran of another great bassist's band, and here showing all the supple time-feel he learned from Ray Brown.

Blake's tough, sardonic delivery is evident from the opening 'Sara's Dance' but really comes into its own on the second track 'More Today Than Yesterday', which might have been better placed later on. 'You Must Believe In Spring' gives Ron a chance to pace himself against the masters with a typically well-crafted and intelligent solo.

The next record is a bit of a puzzle. The bonus disc of remixes suggests that Blake is looking for a new and hip audience, but the blandness of his take on Johnny Griffin's 'Dance of Passion' (Griff guested on Up, Front & Personal) will have put off many even before the supplementary material is broached. Which is a shame, because there are good things here. The weird 'Chasing The Sun' has tinges of Bennie Maupin or even Wayne Shorter about it. The opening 'Invocation' seems to answer a dark compulsion that isn't evident anywhere later on the record. The only cut-out-and-keep moment is 'Pure Imagination', a duo with Cain that sets Blake's tenor in the most flattering context.

Seamus Blake (born 1969)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Canadian-born, Blake made a mark as one of the crop of young saxophonists to enter the New York scene in the '90s.

 The Call Criss Cross 1088 Blake; Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Kevin Hays (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Bill Stewart (d). 12/93.

(*) Four Track Mind Criss Cross 1126 Blake; Tim Hagans (t); Mark Turner (ts); Kevin Hays (p, ky); Larry Grenadier (b); Billy Drummond (d). 12/94.

 The Bloomdaddies Criss Cross 1110 Blake; Chris Cheek (ts); Jesse Murphy (b); Jorge Rossy, Dan Reiser (d). 12/95.

Blake has paid due respect to his masters – fellow saxophonist Joe Lovano, fellow Canadian Kenny Wheeler – without in any way standing in thrall to them. He has very quickly mapped out his own path, and the appearance of subsequent Criss Cross releases amply justifies label boss Gerry Teekens's confidence in giving the then 24-year-old a date as leader. For some reason, Blake's sessions for the label have been issued out of chronological sequence, as the issue numbers suggest. Perhaps Teekens wanted to highlight the 'other' side of his young signing, in the company of his electric band, The Bloomdaddies. Perhaps he had some doubts about the quality of Four Track Mind. If the latter, it's a surprising conclusion. The 1994 album is self-consciously a showcase, intended to demonstrate Blake's range and diversity. If there is a criticism, it is that the set has very little consistency. It opens with the funky title-track, and an off-the-peg blues, 'Dittee', before Blake shows any real originality either of conception or of execution. That comes with 'Jali', a tribute to former boss Victor Lewis, featuring Blake on soprano and Tim Hagans coming to the fore. The most striking piece on the album is 'In A Warring Absence', a jagged, almost serial piece written by Blake's violinist girlfriend, Farran, the same 'Miss James' who inspires the set's one romantic ballad and who probably bought young Seamus the Debussy discs he'd obviously been listening to.

Though there is an inevitable overlap of styles, The Bloomdaddies is a very different animal: loud, sometimes over-emphatic and heavily processed, it's marked by rock and hip-hop sensibilities. Bass guitar, twinned drummers and, again, closely interwoven saxophone parts contribute to a dense, slightly programmed sound. Blake cedes some of the writing duties to partner Chris Cheek, specifically the last two tunes and the ballad feature, but by the time they come along the album has started to lose its way a little. A clangorous medley restores a forceful, upbeat feel after Cheek's 'Shelter', which is a lovely conception, and it might have been preferable to close proceedings at that point. Signs that Berklee-trained Blake hasn't yet got a comfortable range of material under his belt. He dabbles briefly with harmolodics on 'To Be Ornette To Be' and seems to decide he's a traditionalist – albeit a noisy one – after all, following up with Louis Prima's 'Sing, Sing, Sing'. Throughout, the emphasis is on tight ensemble playing, unlike the more open, blowing feel of The Call. It's often difficult to say which of the two saxophonists is to the fore, and how much is played as live and how much is a studio artefact.

 Sunsol Fresh Sound New Talent 087 Blake; Avishai Cohen (b); Marc Miralta (d). 00.
(*) Echonomics Criss Cross 1197 Blake; David Kikoski (p); Ed Howard (b); Victor Lewis (d). 00.
Blake and Miralta are old roomies and they sound good together on this free-flowing and pretty open-ended set. By this stage in his career, Cohen is able to take on just about any challenge, and he contributes some of the strongest material, notably the opening 'Go', which works interesting variations on a blues pattern. 'Boston In 3/4' is also strong and the title-piece rounds out a cracking set.

Echonomics is in a 'new standards' vein, taking tunes like Brian Wilson's 'God Only Knows' and Stevie Wonder's 'Rain Your Love Down' and using them as a basis for relatively orthodox, though by no means formulaic, jazz improvisation. Blake's daring is still in evidence but he's also trying to consolidate a style, and this is the album that does it for us. Lewis and Howard anchor the sound effectively.

 Live Au Cabaret Effendi FND017 Blake; Daniel Thouin (p, ky); Norman Lachapelle (b); Karl Jannuska (d). 7/03.
A very decent club set that highlights Blake's writing – 'The Call' prominently – and allows him to blow with some freedom. Thouin is an interesting Canadian performer but hardly an original voice. His Rhodes work is ironically more interesting than his touch on acoustic piano. The rhythm section is tight and well-marshalled, but perhaps lacks a bit of zip.

* Way Out Willy Criss Cross 1288 Blake; David Kikoski (p); Lage Lund (g); Orlando LeFleming (b); Bill Stewart (d). 3/06.
Remarkably, Blake is now more than a dozen years into his association with Gerry Teekens's label. This one pays off the investment handsomely: seven strong original tunes in mostly vigorous tempos and with an impressive level of understanding through the band which suggests ample rehearsal time before the gig. Lund won the 2005 Thelonious Monk Competition and he brings a crisp and nicely open tonality to the session. Stewart, who's been around since The Call in 1993, is rock solid and Kikoski, another Criss Cross regular, gets to work with a will. The stand-out tracks are the opening and closing 'Fear Of Roaming' and 'The Jupiter Line'. At 52 minutes, it's a perfectly proportioned CD.

Also, in brief:

 Stranger Things Have Happened Fresh Sound FSNT 063. 3/99.
An interesting continuation, but the music feels rather shapeless, even melancholy.

 Mosh For Lovers Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 178. 01.
A fairly routine return for The Bloomdaddies band. Blake's soloing sounds perfunctory in places, but the group as a whole now coheres like the working unit it is.

Art Blakey (1919–90)

DRUMS

Pittsburgh-born and self-taught as a pianist, he led his own band at 15 and switched to drums when Erroll Garner came in. In NY joined the Eckstine band and stayed till 1947, then freelanced until the Blue Note sessions that led to the formation of the Jazz Messengers. A master percussionist who investigated African and other styles, he was peerless in support of soloists and kept up standards unswervingly till the end.

CORE COLLECTION

* A Night At Birdland Volumes 1 & 2
Blue Note 32146 / 32147 Blakey; Clifford Brown (t); Lou Donaldson (as); Horace Silver (p); Curley Russell (b). 2/54.
It was still called the Art Blakey Quintet, but this was the founding nexus of the Messengers, even if the name was first used on a Horace Silver cover. Blakey wasn't as widely acknowledged as Max Roach or Kenny Clarke as one of the leaders in bop drumming and in the end he was credited with working out the rhythms for what came after original bebop, first heard to significant effect on these records. Much of it is based on sheer muscle. Blakey played very loud and very hard, accenting the off-beat with a hi-hat snap that had a thunderous abruptness and developing a highly dramatic snare roll. As much as he dominates the music, though, he always plays for the band and inspirational leadership is as evident on these early records as it is on his final ones. Both horn-players benefit: Donaldson makes his Parkerisms sound pointed and vivacious, while Brown is marvellously mercurial, as well as sensitive on his ballad feature 'Once In A While' from Volume 1 (Donaldson's comes on 'If I Had You' on the second record).

Silver lays down some of the tenets of hard bop with his poundingly funky solos and hints of gospel melody. The latest RVG editions restore the original 10-inch cover art and for once a new mastering really does bounce the sound up an extra level.

(*) At The Café Bohemia Volumes 1 & 2 Blue Note 32148 / 32149 Blakey; Kenny Dorham (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Horace Silver (p); Doug Watkins (b). 11/55.

Hank Mobley is a somewhat unfocused stylist and nothing quite matches the intensity which the quintet secured at Birdland, yet the playing is finally just as absorbing. Dorham's elusive brilliance was seldom so extensively captured, his ballad feature on 'Yesterdays' displaying a rare tenderness that faces off against the contentious dynamism of his fast solos, which seem to forge a link between Dizzy and Miles. Long, mid-tempo pieces such as 'Soft Winds' and 'Like Someone In Love' find Silver and Blakey in reflective competition, but the drummer never slackens his grip: listen to what he does behind Dorham on 'Minor's Holiday'. There's some added charm in the announcements by Mobley and Dorham before their features. Once again, the RVG remastering means these are worth going back to, even if you know them well.

(*) The Jazz Messengers Columbia CK 65265 Blakey; Donald Byrd (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Horace Silver (p); Doug Watkins (b). 4–5/56.

A handsomely expanded and revised version of the original Columbia date, with five extra tracks. Byrd and Mobley weren't the greatest front line Blakey had and when Jackie McLean arrived shortly afterwards the group had more fire; but these are still elegant and powerful tracks and about as unfussy as hard bop could be.

 Hard Bop / Paris Concert Collectables COL 5675 Blakey; Bill Hardman, Lee Morgan (t); Jackie McLean (as); Benny Golson (ts); Sam Dockery (p), Bobby Timmons; Spanky DeBrest, Jymie Merritt (b). 12/56, 12/58.

Combining sessions two years apart by two different line-ups, this offers the Hardman–McLean front line on a studio date, followed by Morgan–Golson live in Paris. The latter tend to take the honours, since the studio date seems unsympathetically produced and lacks much in the way of real fire (one ballad feature is dropped to accommodate both albums on one CD). That said, the concert set, with marathon treatments of 'Moanin'' and 'Justice', does suffer from some long-windedness. Morgan's handsome 'I Remember Clifford' and the steaming finale of 'Just By Myself' are worth waiting for. More material from the 1958 European trip is reviewed below.

♛ * Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers With Thelonious Monk Atlantic 8122-73607 Blakey; Bill Hardman (t); Johnny Griffin (ts); Thelonious Monk (p); Spanky DeBrest (b). 3/57.

Blakey appeared on several of Monk's seminal Blue Note sessions, and had an intuitive understanding of what the pianist wanted from a drummer. Griffin, volatile but serene in his mastery of the horn, was an almost ideal yet very different interpreter of Monk's music. There are five Monk tunes and one by Griffin on this masterpiece. If Hardman wasn't on the same exalted level, he does nothing to disgrace himself and DeBrest keeps calm, unobtrusive time. The continuous dialogue between piano and drums comes out most clearly in passages such as Monk's solo on 'In Walked Bud', but almost any moment on the session illustrates their unique empathy. Both use simple materials, yet the inner complexities are astonishing and the music retains an uncanny freshness after fifty years; no passage is like any other and some of the tempos – for 'Evidence' and 'I Mean You' – are almost unique in the annals of Monk interpretation. (Also available on Collectables 6279, paired with the Modern Jazz Quartet at Carnegie Hall!)

(*) Moanin' Blue Note 95324 Blakey; Lee Morgan (t); Benny Golson (ts); Bobby Timmons (p); Jymie Merritt (b). 10/58.
 1958 Paris Olympia Emarcy 832659 As above. 11–12/58.
 Complete Concert At St Germain Gambit 69237 2CD As above. 12/58.

Golson wasn't a Messenger for long – Moanin' was his only American album with the band – but he contributed three of the most enduring themes to its book: the title-tune, 'Blues March' and 'Along Came Betty'. These versions might seem almost prosaic next to some of the grandstand readings which other Blakey bands would later create, but Golson's own playing shows great toughness and the ebullient Morgan, making his debut is a splendid foil. The European trip threw up some fine music, though the St Germain stuff, taped four days before Christmas, shows signs of fatigue, though not from the boss.

 Meet You At The Jazz Corner Of The World Blue Note 28888 2CD Blakey; Lee Morgan (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Bobby Timmons (p); Jymie Merritt (b). 4/59.

A brief interlude with Mobley returning to the tenor chair. He sounds comfortable enough – and gets to contribute three tunes of his own, even if they're hardly in the class of the next tenorman to step in. Any live event from this period was worth saving, and this one sounds terrifically loud, up-front and spirited, with the master of the traps in imperious form.

 Live In Stockholm 1959 Dragon DRCD 182 Blakey; Lee Morgan (t); Wayne Shorter (ts); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Jymie Merritt (b). 11/59.

After Golson and Mobley came Wayne Shorter, who joined the Messengers on a European tour in autumn 1959. This live record is a useful complement to the studio material that followed. With the tapes presumably taken from radio broadcasts, the sound is estimably clear, if not as full-bodied as Rudy Van Gelder would have delivered, and the youthful, idiosyncratic front line puts most of today's faceless technicians to shame.

 The Big Beat Blue Note 63801 As above, except omit Bishop Jr; add Bobby Timmons (p). 3/60.
* A Night In Tunisia / (*) Like Someone In Love Blue Note 75261 / 75337 As above. 8/60.

For some reason, The Big Beat, Shorter's studio debut with the Messengers, is very patchy. A Night In Tunisia is a favourite, though, Besides the wildly over-the-top version of the title-tune, there's the new saxophonist's lovely 'Sincerely Diana' and two charming Morgan themes. Shorter's playing had a dark, corrosive edge that turned softly beseeching when he played ballads, but some of his solos don't come off. Like Someone In Love was cut at the same sessions. There's nothing quite as overwhelming as 'Tunisia' itself, but Shorter's 'Sleeping Dancer Sleep On' (two versions) is hard bop of a very high order.

* Roots And Herbs / (*) The Freedom Rider Blue Note 21956 / 21287 As above, except add Walter Davis Jr (p on Roots only). 2–5/61.
(*) The Witch Doctor Blue Note 21957 As above. 3/61.

Roots And Herbs is the great forgotten Blakey album. All six themes are by Shorter (and there are now alternate takes as well) and, from the ferocious 'Ping Pong' on, the music hits a rare intensity, allied with the composer's enigmatic elegance. Davis sits in for two titles. The Freedom Rider is beefed up with three extra tracks, including the Morgan themes 'Pisces' and 'Uptight'. This is a less well-known Blakey album, but it still has the title-piece (in support of the anti-segregationists) and the usual share of intensities. The Witch Doctor continued the good run: Morgan's 'Afrique' and the title-tune are more New York than dark continent, but Shorter's mysterious 'Those Who Sit And Wait' was worth waiting for.

(*) Jazz Messengers Impulse! 051175 Blakey; Freddie Hubbard (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Wayne Shorter (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Jymie Merritt (b). 6/61.
* Mosaic Blue Note 355497 As above. 10/61.
* Buhaina's Delight Blue Note 78725 As above. 11–12/61.
 Caravan Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 038 As above, except omit Merritt; add Reggie Workman (b). 10/62.
(*) Ugetsu Original Jazz Classics OJC 090 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 090
Exit Morgan, enter Hubbard and Fuller. By now it was clear that the Messengers were becoming a dynasty unto themselves. As musical director, Shorter was providing some startling material, which the new members, outstanding players, but under-characterized personalities, could use to fashion directions of their own. Cedar Walton was another significant new man after the lightweight work of Bobby Timmons.

In some ways, this was the most adventurous of all Messengers line-ups. Mosaic's complex title-piece (by Walton) shows how the band's expanded voicings added orchestral sonority to rhythmic power. Buhaina's Delight opens on the swaggering 'Backstage Sally' and leads to Shorter's stone-faced 'Contemplation' and a vivid arrangement of 'Moon River'. The live-at-Birdland Ugetsu is fine, but it doesn't catch fire in quite the way one would expect; Shorter's feature on 'I Didn't Know What Time It Was' is ponderously impressive. Caravan is another solid but unimposing set. The earlier set for Impulse! seems to have been organized by the producer rather than the band, since it consists entirely of standards; capably done, but not what the band were about.

(*) A Jazz Message Impulse! 547964 Blakey; Sonny Stitt (ts, as); McCoy Tyner (p); Art Davis (b). 9/63.
A paradox: Blakey-led, but not a Messengers date; taped at Van Gelder's, but not for Blue Note. Loose-limbed, flying, four great musicians having a high old time in the studio, just some blues and three standards; no immortal statement, but Blakey sounds like he's enjoying himself and plays some of his best licks.

* Free For All /  Kyoto Blue Note 71067 / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 145 As for Jazz Messengers, etc, above. 2/64.
 Indestructible Blue Note 46429 As above. 4–5/64.
There's a huge amount of Blakey from this period still unaccounted for on CD, perhaps because the music is of such mixed quality. Free For All restores Blakey's polyrhythmic firepower as never before and finds Shorter at his most ferocious on the title-piece and 'Hammer-Head'. The others are rather disappointing by comparison. Kyoto isn't a live-in-Japan date as sometimes suggested but a disconcertingly average studio session headed off by that track and marked by a certain interest in exotic tonalities. Indestructible recently reappeared in an RVG edition. It comes out of the same period as the still-deleted Pisces. One senses Blakey and his MD not so much trying to reshape the group sound as sustain the energy it seemed to be deploying in inconsistent bursts at this time. Remember: this line-up had been in place for three years.

 'S Make It Verve/Limelight 986175 Blakey; Lee Morgan (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); John Gilmore (ts); John Hicks (p); Victor Sproles (b). 11/64.
One of a trio made for Limelight (Hold On, I'm Coming, Soulfinger and Buttercorn Lady) might show up in second-hand vinyl bins, this marks the brief return of Morgan and the surprise inclusion of Gilmore, though the latter does nothing remarkable. As with most of the records made for this source, the tracks have a foreshortened feel, as if the label was looking for jukebox- and radio-play, and the music is rather well-behaved as a result. Morgan gets three credits, the best coming at the end with his pretty ballad 'Lament For Stacy'.

 Blakey's Beat Concord CCD2-2234 Blakey; Valery Ponomarev, Wynton Marsalis (t); Bobby Watson (as); David Schnitter, Bill Pierce (ts); James Wiliams (p); Dennis Irwin, Charles Fambrough (b). 5/78–8/81.
Apart from a flurry for Prestige early in the next decade, the Messengers' studio history ground to a halt in 1964, though of course the band continued as a touring outfit, lionized wherever they appeared. The quiet time continued through the '70s, which says something about how Blakey's kind of jazz had slipped out of fashion. The albums for Concord consign the great standard-bearer to a mere repertory role. The first disc in this twofer reissue, originally In This Korner, suggests that the Messengers had become so much hot air, solos padded out to the point of obesity and the newer items in the book lacking the instant-classic qualities of yore. On disc two (originally Straight Ahead) Wynton Marsalis takes up the cudgels and everything starts to change. Read on.

(*) Keystone 3 Concord CCD 4196 Blakey; Wynton Marsalis (t); Branford Marsalis (as); Billy Pierce (ts); Donald Brown (p); Charles Fambrough (b). 1/82.
Wynton's coming-out with Blakey at Bubba's, Fort Lauderdale, in 1980 was a turning-point for the music. Not for the first time, a young front-line player (Morgan, Shorter had done it previously) seemed set to hijack the Messengers. Marsalis's peculiar assurance and whipcrack precision, at the age of 19, heralded a new school of Messengers graduates. Once the trumpeter took over as MD, the ensembles took on a fresh bite and the soloists sound leaner and more pointed. This was recorded live in San Francisco and finds a renewed involvement from Blakey himself. Watson's departure was disappointing, given the tickle of creative confrontation between him and Marsalis, but brother Branford's arrival, though he sounds as yet unformed, lends another edge of anxiety-to-please.

(*) Coast To Coast Concord CCD2-4926 2CD Blakey; Terence Blanchard (t); Donald Harrison (as); Jean Toussaint (ts); Mulgrew Miller (p); Lonnie Plaxico (b). 4/84.
Anyone too young to have seen a classic Messengers got a glimpse of what it might have been like from this band. Even after Wynton departed, they continued a winning streak. Blanchard, the first post-Marsalis trumpet stylist, was another inspiring MD and his partnership with Harrison made the front line sizzle. Two trumpet solos, 'Oh, By The Way' and 'Tenderly', show off intelligence, fire and perfectly calculated risk. Miller and Plaxico renewed the rhythm section with superlative technique and the old man sounds as aggressive as ever. Toussaint's brawny solos are in the Messengers tradition. This doubles up a couple of single albums, New York Scene and Live at Kimball's.

 The Art Of Jazz In + Out 77028 Blakey; Freddie Hubbard, Brian Lynch (t); Curtis Fuller, Frank Lacy (tb); Donald Harrison, Jackie McLean (as); Benny Golson, Javon Jackson, Wayne Shorter (ts); Walter Davis Jr, Geoff Keezer (p); Essiet Okon Essiet, Buster Williams (b); Roy Haynes (d); Michele Hendricks (v). 10/89.

There was to be a tiny last hurrah for A&M in 1990, the year of his death, but this really marks the end, a with-guests special recorded at the Leverkusen Jazz Festival. The material is mostly familiar, 'Moanin'', 'Along Came Betty' and the like, and there's a crowd-pleasing duo with Haynes, but for the most part this was a way of just seeing the old man at work; it doesn't make for a great listening experience. The music may have ossified, but Blakey himself still bashed away with evident enjoyment.

Also, in brief:

* Orgy In Rhythm Blue Note 56586. 3/57.

A good bash, with massed percussion. Compiled from two LPs.

 A Night In Tunisia /  A Night In Tunisia / Play Lerner & Loewe Bluebird 09026-63896 / Collectables COL 2811 2CD. 3–4/57.

More routine than the session of the same name on Blue Note, but still pretty good. Collectables double it up with the relatively little-known songbook date from March.

 Holiday For Skins Blue Note 58290. 11/58.

Headed 'A Message From Blakey', this was another percussion-fest with an interesting slant on the Afro- and Afro-Cuban approach.

 Les Liaisons Dangereuses Fontana 812017. 7/59.

A soundtrack featuring Barney Wilen (ss, ts) with the band and courageously featured.

* Unforgettable Lee! /  More Birdland Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 1020 / 1029. 4–6/60; 6–11/60.

The label credits the first of these to Morgan, but these were JM dates at Birdland, with Shorter in place and a revolving door for the pianists.

 Lausanne 1960: First Set / ... Second Set TCB 02022 / 02062. 12/60.

Familiar pattern: winter in Europe, appreciative audiences, lots of fine playing, but signs of fatigue as well. Made for Swiss Radio.

 The African Beat Blue Note 22666. 1/62.

A little more serious than Orgy In Rhythm, though the end result isn't all that different.

(*) Child's Dance /  Mission Eternal Prestige 24130 / 24159. 5/72–3/73.

Woody Shaw (t) stars, but these Prestige sessions are mostly ramshackle stuff, marred by modish production and electric instruments.

() Not Yet / () I Get A Kick Out Of Bu Soul Note 121105 / 121550. 3/88; 11/88.

Some redeeming features, but the trajectory from Blue Note to Soul Note, from fierce, classic jazz to these sorry curtain-calls says everything about what happened to Blakey and to the music he served so long. Perhaps too long, on this showing.

(*) Hard Bop Proper PROPERBOX 23 4CD. 54–56.

Worthwhile early career survey, but given the sound quality of the remastered originals, who'd want this?

Terence Blanchard (born 1962)

TRUMPET, PIANO

Came to prominence as a late-period Jazz Messenger and has since recorded as a leader and become heavily involved in film music.

(*) Eric Dolphy and Booker Little Remembered, Volumes 1 & 2 Evidence ECD 22073 / 22074 Blanchard; Donald Harrison (as, bcl); Mal Waldron (p); Richard Davis (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 10/86.

This came along before the vogue for tribute/reconstruction albums took off. As a reminder of Dolphy and Little's much-loved Five Spot dates, it obviously benefits from modern recording, though that helps the rhythm section – the original guys – more than the two horns. Donald Harrison probably has Dolphy off better than Blanchard has the peerless but enigmatic Little, but that shouldn't be the main criterion. This was undertaken in full awareness of all that has happened in jazz since 1960. There is no shock value, very little cutting-edge improvisation in these smooth performances and most listeners will prefer to go back to the original 'Prophet' and 'Aggression'. Harrison switches to bass clarinet for 'Booker's Waltz' and here the latter-day blandness does dull interest in an over-long performance.

* Wandering Moon Sony Classics SK 89111 Blanchard; Aaron Fletcher (as); Branford Marsalis, Brice Winston (ts); Edward Simon (p); Dave Holland (b); Eric Harland (d). 6/99.

Sadly, most of Blanchard's fine run for Columbia, including the wonderful Romantic Defiance, is now not consistently available. Under benign exile to Sony Classics, Blanchard goes for a long (over 75 minutes), ballad-orientated record which seems full of near-darkness. Originals such as 'Luna Viajera' and 'If I Could, I Would' distil a sense of melancholy which is mitigated by the serenity of the playing. Even though there are one or two tear-ups, from Marsalis in particular, what one remembers about the record is its poise, its cool dedication to instrumental mastery. None is more masterful than the leader himself. The closing version of 'I Thought About You', taken at the slowest of tempos, is a definitive treatment which silences criticism and in its final moments leaves the listener dumbfounded.

(*) Let's Get Lost Sony Classics SK 89607 Blanchard; Brice Winston (ts); Edward Simon (p); Derek Nievergelt (b); Eric Harland (d); Diana Krall, Jane Monheit, Dianne Reeves, Cassandra Wilson (v). 00.

One of the few small-group instrumentalists who's working on a big budget at present, Blanchard must be spending handsomely to get such a quartet of singers involved in this homage to songwriter Jimmy McHugh. The singers handle seven of 11 tracks, with appropriate concentration, but the voice to hear remains Blanchard's trumpet – dignified, sonorous, implacably balanced. Once again, he settles on a tempo so slow ('Lost In A Fog') that it seems the group is barely moving – and still makes it work.

(*) Bounce Blue Note 90953-2 Blanchard; Brice Winston (ss, ts); Aaron Parks (p); Robert Glasper (ky); Lionel Loueke (g, v); Brandon Owens (b); Eric Harland (d). 2/03.

Blanchard moved over to Blue Note at about the same time as another trumpet-playing son of New Orleans, and although the electric keyboards and guitar made this debut look ominously like a fusion sidestep, the hip-hop elements are used sparingly enough to keep what is a very strong run of records on the right track. Wayne Shorter's 'Footprints' unexpectedly benefits from this treatment, rather than another plain old hard-bop reading. Terence himself sounds completely in command of both horn and setting and he continues to make a case for considering him jazz's leading ballad player on the slower pieces.

(*) Flow Blue Note 78274 Blanchard; Brice Winston (ss, ts, ky); Lionel Loueke (g, v); Herbie Hancock, Aaron Parks (p); Derrick Hodge (b); Kendrick Scott (d). 12/04.

Once again, greatness eludes him; instead, a roiling stew of ideas, apparently interconnected and influenced (as is the title) by a book by Mihály Csíkszentmihályi – which is easy for us to say – that provides Blanchard with a platform for some beautiful, lyrical playing but remains frustratingly enigmatic. Produced by Herbie Hancock, who also contributes two fine piano spots, the sound is as richly eclectic as the keyboard man's own recent projects. Winston has established himself as an effective foil and Loueke (vocals apart) is an integral part of the mix, but the group doesn't so much cohere as suspend individuality in the service of Blanchard's now well-attested cinematic approach, which establishes strong moods without much in the way of musical argument. A simpler context might afford more opportunity for strong trumpet-playing, but the results are impressive none the less.

(*) A Tale Of God's Will (A Requiem For Katrina) Blue Note/Angel 915322 As above, except omit Loueke, Hancock; add Zach Harmon (tabla). 06.

This came out of a documentary film commission from Spike Lee but Blanchard turns in a musical statement of real authority and powerful emotion. He attempts to give a certain historical perspective in the opening 'Ghosts Of Congo Square', but ends on the most personal note with 'Dear Mom' (his mother lost her house in the hurricane). There is some astonishing writing on 'Levees' and 'The Water', which are more obviously impressionistic. Here and there, the music's original function as underscoring becomes evident, but Blanchard's wailing, angry trumpet cuts through even the most pedestrian of transitions. A remarkable record.

Walter Blanding

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Came to notice as one of the Tough Young Tenors, but mostly devoted to big-band work at the Lincoln Center since.

 The Olive Tree Criss Cross 1186 Blanding; Ryan Kisor (t); Farid Barron (p); Rodney Whitaker (b); Rodney Green (d). 12/99.

As far as playing goes, there isn't much to distinguish this from half a dozen other tenor/trumpet/rhythm sessions in the marketplace. Blanding's writing is notably good, though, and while he was wise to leaven this debut with some ambitious repertory material ('Jitterbug Waltz', Shorter's 'Charcoal Blues', Monk's 'Worry Later' and a couple of standards), his own title-tune, 'Never Too Late', 'Little Sunflower' and 'One Day Before Tomorrow' all bespeak an interesting compositional talent. A shame he hasn't managed to make a follow-up.

Carla Bley (born 1938)

PIANO, ORGAN, SYNTHESIZERS, COMPOSER

Noted first as a composer and co-led Jazz Composers Orchestra in New York from 1964. She was briefly married to Paul Bley, but later with Michael Mantler with whom she transformed her JCOA label into Watt, which releases most of their music. Performs in small-group, big- and very-big-band situations, mostly with current partner Steve Swallow.

(*) Escalator Over The Hill JCOA/ECM 839 310 2 2CD Bley; Michael Mantler (t, vtb, p); Enrico Rava, Michael Snow (t); Don Cherry (t, f, perc, v); Sam Burtis, Jimmy Knepper, Roswell Rudd (tb); Jack Jeffers (btb); Bob Carlisle, Sharon Freeman (frhn); John Buckingham, Howard Johnson (tba); Peggy Imig, Perry Robinson (cl); Souren Baronian (cl, dumbec); Jimmy Lyons, Dewey Redman (as); Gato Barbieri (ts); Chris Woods (bs); Sam Brown, John McLaughlin (g); Karl Berger (vib); Don Preston (syn, v); Jack Bruce (b, v solo); Charlie Haden, Ron McClure, Richard Youngstein (b); Leroy Jenkins (vn); Nancy Newton (vla); Calo Scott (clo); Bill Morimando (bells); Paul Motian (d); Roger Dawson (perc); Jane Blackstone, Paul Jones, Sheila Jordan, Jeanne Lee, Timothy Marquand, Tod Papageorge, Linda Ronstadt, Bob Stewart, Viva (v solo); Jonathan Cott, Steve Gebhardt, Tyrus Gerlach, Eileen Hale, Rosalind Hupp (v). 11/68–6/71.

No jazz composition is as large and ungainly as this massive 'chronotransduction'. We fall in and out of love with its uneasy hybrid of genius and unbelievable tosh. Written to an impenetrable libretto by Paul Haines, it is more closely related to the non-linear, associative cinema of avant-garde film-makers Kenneth Anger, Stan Brakhage, Maya Deren and Jonas Mekas (at whose Cinémathèque some sessions were recorded) than to any musical parallel. The repetitious dialogue is largely derived from Gertrude Stein and it's perhaps best to take Stein's Alice-in-Wonderland advice and treat everything as meaning precisely what one chooses it to mean. Musically, it's a patchwork of raucous big-band themes like the opening 'Hotel Overture', which has fine solos from Barbieri, Robinson, Haden and Rudd, heavy rock numbers like the apocalyptic 'Rawalpindi Blues' (McLaughlin, Bruce, Motian), ethnic themes from Don Cherry's Desert Band, and mysterious, ring-modulated 'dream sequences'. There is an element of recitative that, as with most opera recordings, most listeners will prefer to skip, since it doesn't advance understanding of the 'plot', and it's probably best to treat Escalator as a compilation of individual pieces with dispensable continuity. The slightly earlier A Genuine Tong Funeral for Gary Burton is a genuine masterpiece on a slightly less ambitious scale and it, rather than Escalator, established her musical idiom of the '70s.

(*) Tropic Appetites Watt/1 Bley; Michael Mantler (t, vtb); Gato Barbieri (ts, perc); Howard Johnson (ss, bs, bsx, cl, bcl, tba, v); Dave Holland (b, clo) Toni Marcus (vn, vla); Paul Motian (d, perc); Julie Tippetts (v). 9/73–2/74.

Tropic Appetites is the work that Escalator might have been with a little judicious editing. Its sheer strangeness is endlessly beguiling. Haines's words are much more effective when not squeezed into a larger, quasi-narrative template and Julie Tippetts's voice is completely compelling.

The instrumentation is also gloriously cadenced. Howard Johnson is a complete horn section in himself, Barbieri was at his most freakishly expressionistic and Bley herself ranges over a whole spectrum of keyboards, doing her 'composer's piano' thing with wry unselfconsciousness. The backgrounds she creates for 'What Will Be Left Between Us And The Moon Tonight?' and 'Song Of The Jungle Stream' are definitive of the Bley approach, correct but wacky, linear and perverse in the same breath. The latter track, dedicated to Tadd Dameron, reveals how much Bley owes to her predecessors and to the jazz tradition.

Motian's drumming and Dave Holland's bass-lines cement the astonishing architecture, while the horns create an illusion of scale that still surprises 30 years on.

 Dinner Music Watt/6 Bley; Michael Mantler (t); Roswell Rudd (tb); Bob Stewart (tba); Carlos Ward (as, ts); Richard Tee (p); Eric Gale, Cornell Dupree (g); Gordon Edwards (b); Steve Gadd (d). 7–9/76.

 European Tour 1977 Watt/8 Bley; Michael Mantler (t); Roswell Rudd (tb); John Clark (frhn); Elton Dean (as); Gary Windo (bs); Terry Adams (p); Hugh Hopper (b); Andrew Cyrille (d, perc). 77.
 Musique Mécanique Watt/9 Bley; Michael Mantler (t); Roswell Rudd (tb); John Clark (frhn); Bob Stewart (tba); Alan Braufman (f, cl, as); Gary Windo (bcl, ts); Terry Adams (p, org); Eugene Chadbourne (g, radio); Steve Swallow (b); D. Sharpe (d); Karen Mantler (glock). 8–11/78.
This is an awkward period in Bley's and Watt's development, largely because there is no development. There was an understandable retreat from ambitious experimentation; they deliver a music that is harmonically quirky and sometimes plain eccentric. The Brits on the European tour seemed to get the point straight away, paving a course for Carla's European bands of the '80s. In quality, they're much of a muchness.

 Social Studies Watt/11 Bley; Michael Mantler (t); Gary Valente (tb); Joe Daley (euph); Earl McIntyre (tba); Carlos Ward (as, ss); Tony Dagradi (cl, ts); Steve Swallow (b); D. Sharpe (d). 12/80.
(*) Live! Watt/12 Bley; Michael Mantler (t); Gary Valente (tb); Vincent Chancey (frhn); Earl McIntyre (tba, btb); Steve Slagle (as); Tony Dagradi (ts); Arturo O'Farrill (p, org); Steve Swallow (b); D. Sharpe (d). 8/81.
It's at this point that Bley's imagination makes a sharp left away from European art-music models. Henceforward, she's much more obviously a jazz player. Live! is a treat, representing one of the finest performances by her and Mantler on record. Social Studies shouldn't be missed; a bookish cover masks some wonderfully wry music.

 Duets Watt/20 Bley; Steve Swallow (b). 7–8/88.
Towards the end of the '80s, Bley's emphasis shifted towards smaller and more intimate units. Though never a virtuosic soloist, she grew in stature as a performer. By this time there is an almost telepathic understanding between Bley and Swallow; the duets make an ironic but uncynical commentary on the cocktail-lounge conventions of piano-and-bass duos. It's an entertaining album and an ideal primer on Bley's compositional and improvising techniques.

(*) Fleur Carnivore Watt/21 839 662 Bley; Lew Soloff, Jens Winther (t); Frank Lacy (frhn, flhn); Gary Valente (tb); Bob Stewart (tba); Daniel Beaussier (ob, f); Wolfgang Puschnig (as, f); Andy Sheppard (ts, cl); Christof Lauer (ts, ss); Roberto Ottini (bs, ss); Karen Mantler (hca, org, vib, chimes); Steve Swallow (b); Buddy Williams (d); Don Alias (perc). 11/88.
This is something like a masterpiece. Bley returned wholeheartedly to large-scale scoring and arranging, touring with a Big Band and a Very Big Band. The relation of parts to whole is far more confident than in times gone by and the solos are uniformly imaginative, with Lauer, Soloff and Mantler, K., deserving special commendation. The writing is acute and the concert recording manages to balance 'live' energy with studio precision and fullness of sound.

 The Very Big Carla Bley Band Watt/23 Bley; Guy Barker, Steven Bernstein, Claude Deppa, Lew Soloff (t); Richard Edwards, Gary Valente, Fayyaz Virji (tb); Ashley Slater (btb); Roger Jannotta (ob, f, cl, ss); Wolfgang Puschnig (as, f); Andy Sheppard (ts, ss); Pete Hurt (ts, cl); Pablo Calogero (bs); Karen Mantler (org); Steve Swallow (b); Victor Lewis (d); Don Alias (perc). 10/90.
A stirring live outfit, the Very Big Band translates well to record, with plenty of emphasis on straightforward blowing from featured soloists Soloff, Valente, Puschnig and Sheppard. 'United States' opens with splashy percussion, low, threatening brass figures, with the theme only really hinted at in Lew Soloff's sensuous growl solo. The riff and horn voicings that follow are unmistakably Bley's, as is the sudden, swinging interpolation of an entirely new theme. 'Strange Arrangement' opens with an almost childish piano figure, which gives way to huge, shimmering harmonics that instantly explain its logic. 'Who Will Rescue You?' grows out of an almost gospelly vamp, but by this time the album has lost at least some of its initial impetus, and 'Lo Ultimo' is a rather limping curtain-piece.

 Go Together Watt/24 Bley; Steve Swallow (b). 92.
An intriguingly relaxed and unhurried survey of (mostly) older material, this includes beautifully judged performances of 'Sing Me Softly Of The Blues', 'Mother Of The Dead Man' and 'Fleur Carnivore'. Students of Bley will find much of interest in these slender, relatively unadorned arrangements. Everyone else can simply enjoy them.

(*) The Carla Bley Big Band Goes To Church Watt/27 Bley; Lew Soloff, Guy Barker, Claude Deppa, Steve Waterman (t); Gary Valente, Pete Beachill, Chris Dean (tb); Richard Henry (btb); Roger Jannotta (ss, as, f); Wolfgang Puschnig (as); Andy Sheppard, Jerry Underwood (ts); Julian Argüelles (bs); Karen Mantler (org, hca); Steve Swallow (b); Dennis Mackrel (d). 7/96.
Another episode from the road, so titled not just because of the gospelly, preaching tone that predominates but more immediately because these six cracking tracks were recorded in concert at the beautiful Chiesa San Francesco Al Prato, as part of the Umbria Jazz Festival. The acoustic is surprisingly dry and, but for occasional ripples of applause, Goes To Church might almost be a live studio recording.

The long (almost 25 minutes) opening piece, 'Setting Calvin's Waltz', was written on commission for the Berlin Jazz Festival. Opening on a soft, confessional dialogue between Bley and Swallow, it opens up into an episodic curtain-raiser featuring most of the major soloists: Sheppard, Soloff, Valente, Karen Mantler and Puschnig, who emerges as the favoured pupil this time with no fewer than five feature spots on the disc. The best of them come on the two closing tracks, 'Permanent Wave' and 'Who Will Rescue You?', on which his slightly dry tone and plangent delivery work to perfection.

Swallow's cleanly picked bass guitar-lines are well to the fore, but Bley herself seems increasingly content on Big Band dates to disappear into the background, reserving herself for the occasional intro and, perhaps, for the small groups. Here and there, though, she provides some instinctive colours, and her quirky scales and chords are the thread on which Sheppard, Soloff and the highly accomplished Mackrel string their 'Beads'.

(*) 4 × 4 Watt 159457 Bley; Lew Soloff (t); Gary Valente (tb); Wolfgang Puschnig (as); Andy Sheppard (ts); Larry Goldings (org); Steve Swallow (b); Victor Lewis (d). 7/99.
Strictly speaking, it ought to be 4 + 4 to reflect the neatly paired double-quartet formation of the new band. The album gets off to a rollicking start with 'Blues In 12 Bars/Blues In 12 Other Bars', a long, rolling piece with plenty of solo space and a lot of substance under the jolly surface. The most effective pairings aren't the obvious ones: Carla and Steve have, of course, their own special interaction and telepathy, but Soloff and Goldings seem twinned, especially on that first track, and Andy Sheppard has excellent rhythmic rapport with the formidable Lewis, leaving Puschnig and Valente to conduct an oddly effective dialogue of the deaf – and deaf is how you end up, working too close to Gary, one of the loudest players on the scene.

'Sidewinders In Paradise' is intriguing. Is it really an attempt to cast Lee Morgan in Kismet? Sounds that way. Bley has rarely been as open-hearted and puckish as this; for all the brooding quality of the closing 'Utviklingssang', it's a very happy record. Like the players, the tracks seem to come in twos. Just before that closing piece, 'Baseball' is a danceable Latin theme. However, the most important piece comes in three parts. 'Les Trois Lagons' is inspired by a Matisse work and falls into a conventional jazz opening, a song-like second section and then a very unexpected finale that combines rag and stride effects with what sounds like a complex tone-row.

(*) Looking For America Watt/31 Bley; Giampaolo Casati, Earl Gardner, Lew Soloff, Byron Stripling (t); Dave Bargeron, Jim Pugh, David Taylor, Gary Valente (tb); Robert Routch (frhn); Lawrence Feldman (ss, as, f); Wolfgang Puschnig (as, f); Craig Handy, Andy Sheppard (ts); Gary Smulyan (bs); Karen Mantler (org, glock); Steve Swallow (b); Billy Drummond (b); Don Alias (perc). 10/02.

There's a curious disclaimer on the back of the liner-booklet to the effect that 'the views expressed do not necessarily reflect those of the musicians in the band or the record company'. The question is: expressed where? Carla's loving deconstruction of 'The Star Spangled Banner' (and parts of 'O Canada') is as ironically loving or lovingly ironic as Jimi Hendrix's and surely couldn't cause any possible offence. So presumably it's ironic. We're a long way from Skies Of America on 'OG Can UC' and Patrick Hinely's photographic juxtaposition of Carla with John Wayne and a haulage truck shouldn't be read as a profound political comment.

As an exploration of Americana, this is a fine and fun set. Any jazz album that ends with a big-band version of 'Old MacDonald Had A Farm' is all right with us; with Gary Smulyan's outrageous intro and Lew Soloff well to the fore, it swings like a monkey. In probably the most mixed set she's produced for a while Carla builds in a group of tracks dedicated to Miss Liberty or to the eternal feminine: 'Grand Mother', 'Step Mother', 'God Mother'. 'Tijuana Traffic' is a south of the border knees-up with just a reminder of Charles Mingus. 'Fast Lane' is a hard, outside-lane bopper.

* The Lost Chords ECM/Watt 000261902 Bley; Andy Sheppard (ss, ts); Steve Swallow (b); Billy Drummond (d). 10/03.

(*) The Lost Chords Find Paolo Fresu Watt 173750 As above, except add Paolo Fresu (t, flhn). 10/07.

The first Lost Chords outing is a marvellous record. Swallow is the heart of the band, as so often, but Carla's writing is formidable, especially on the title-suite, which seems to touch on just about every form you might encourage in modern jazz. It closes a set begun with the 'Three Blind Mice' suite, a fun idea that isn't quite as abecedarian as the title suggests and which coaxes some great piano-playing from Carla. 'Hip Hop' is another great idea, a spoof in some respects, but a damned clever one. Drummond is a huge asset to this repertoire and gives the group a stronger jazz feel than some of his predecessors.

Fresu adds a delightful dimension to the music, but he also disrupts the intimacy of the smaller group and we have some doubts about how well he interacts with Sheppard here.

Also, in brief:

 I Hate To Sing /  Heavy Heart / (*) Night-Glo Watt/12, /14, /16. 8/81–1/83, 9–10/83, 6–8/85.

A disappointing vintage in Bley's music. IHTS is one of her least imaginative small-group albums. HH is similarly disappointing, but with some nice voicings. N-G is by far the best; nice stuff from Oregon's Paul McCandless.

(*) Sextet Watt/17. 12/86–1/87.

Unusual in having no horns, but Bley's chords are so voiced as to suggest whole areas of harmonic interest. Hiram Bullock (g) is perhaps too insistent a spokesman, though he takes his more promising cues from Swallow.

 Big Band Theory Watt/25. 7/93.

This never quite fulfils the promise of some exciting arrangements and a reworked 'Birds Of Paradise' (a Glasgow commission that disappointed on first performance).

 Songs With Legs Watt/26. 5/94.

A matey trawl round Europe with Steve Swallow (b) and Andy Sheppard (ss, ts). Good to hear 'Real Life Hits' and 'Wrong Key Donkey' given this stripped-down treatment. She doesn't put a foot wrong throughout.

 Fancy Chamber Music Watt/28. 12/97.

The material here dates from 1985 and a call from the Lincoln Center Chamber Music Society. Other commissions followed. The key work, though, is 'End Of Vienna', composed for the 300th jazz workshop conducted by North German Radio. Very little to separate the fancy from the funky. Vintage Bley.

 Are We There Yet? Watt/29. 10/98.

The worst that can be said is that it represents 80 minutes of duo self-indulgence, recorded live in Europe. The best is that Carla and Steve's public pillow-talk is infinitely more interesting than anyone else's.

Paul Bley (born 1932)

PIANO

The Montreal-born pianist played hard bop in New York (where he married Karla Borg, who became Carla Bley) and worked with Ornette Coleman in California. Though he was a pioneer of synthesizer, Bley's distinctive piano style is a slow and spacious form of free jazz.

(*) Introducing Paul Bley Original Jazz Classics OJC 201 Bley; Charles Mingus (b); Art Blakey (p). 11/53.
 Paul Bley Emarcy 9107 Bley; Percy Heath, Peter Ind (b); Al Levitt (d). 2 & 8/54.
 Early Trios Fresh Sound FSRCD 386 As for Introducing & Paul Bley. 11/53, 2 & 8/54.
(*) The Fabulous Paul Bley Quintet Musidisc MU 500542 Bley; Don Cherry (t); Ornette Coleman (as); Charlie Haden (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/58.

No other pianist currently active has a stylistic signature as distinctively inscribed as Paul Bley's – which is ironic, for he is a restless experimenter with an inbuilt resistance to stopping long in any one place. He favours curiously ambiguous diminuendo effects, tightly pedalled chords and sparse right-hand figures, often in challengingly different metre; working solo, he creates variety and dramatic interest by gradually changing note-lengths within a steady pulse and generates considerable dramatic tension by unexpectedly augmenting chords, shifting the harmonic centre constantly.

The early Emarcy date offers some useful insights. At this stage, he's an orthodox bopper, aware of the blues but certainly not restricted to them, possibly exploring aspects of Tristano's evolution as well, and certainly listening to classical pianists for technique and harmonic ideas. Though he has played in a number of classic groups – notably with Jimmy Giuffre and Steve Swallow, that astonishing debut with Mingus and Blakey, on which he sounds edgy and a little cautious on the standards but absolutely secure in his technique, and, more recently, with John Surman and Bill Frisell – Bley is still perhaps best heard as a solo performer. The 1958 Hillcrest Club session has an almost legendary status, by no means hindered by the shaky recording. Though it is often discussed as if it were an Ornette Coleman record (and indeed the saxophonist dominates it), it was Bley's date. Having sacked vibraphonist Dave Pike to recruit Ornette and Cherry, Bley then had to absorb their radical new music at high speed; Something Else had been released a short time before and, though he was winning a critical following, Ornette was still considered a radical outsider. The first track was a version of 'Klactoveesedstene', which proceeds in a predictable bebop manner until the saxophone solo, at which point it is immediately obvious that something revolutionary is taking place. Bley audibly does his best to stick with it, but even at this stage Ornette had very little use for an orthodox accompanist. The piano solo is a little spindly, but CD transfer has put a certain amount of meat on it. Bley's contributions to the two Ornette compositions, 'The Blessing' and 'Free', are much less assured. An important modern record.

 Paul Bley With Gary Peacock ECM 843162-2 Bley; Gary Peacock (b); Paul Motian, Billy Elgart (d). 4/63, 68.

In November 1953, Bley had recorded a disc for Charles Mingus's Debut label, now available on a 12-CD compilation of all the Debut performances. A trio consisting of Charles Mingus and Art Blakey was a pretty decent coming-of-age present for a 21-year-old from Montreal, and it gave Bley a taste he was never to lose for strongly individual, not just blandly supportive sidemen.

The ECM label's third release features Bley's regular trio (Elgart is on just three tracks) and a programme dominated by Ornette Coleman ('Blues', 'When Will The Blues Leave?') and Annette Peacock material. Bley's two originals, 'Getting Started' and 'Big Foot', point the way forward for his writing career, floating, fugitive ideas with ambiguous tonal centres. There's also a solitary standard, 'Long Ago And Far Away'. The trio would record for the label again many years later, on Not Two, Not One.

(*) Barrage ESP/Calibre 1008 Bley; Dewey Johnson (t); Marshall Allen (as); Eddie Gomez (b); Milford Graves (d). 10/64.
* Closer ESP/Calibre 1021 Bley; Steve Swallow (b); Barry Altschul (d). 12/65.

Bley's brief association with the forward-thinking ESP yielded one classic trio and one now largely forgotten quintet date. The earlier date saw Bley recruiting two hornmen from the Sun Ra Arkestra and much of the interest of the album, which like its successor consists entirely of Carla Bley tunes, is in hearing Johnson and Allen in a small-group context. The music is fairly hard-edged and the presence of two such confrontational players (Johnson is on Coltrane's Ascension) gives the set an uncomfortably fiery complexion that tends to singe away its more subtle moments. The interplay with Gomez is really the key to the set, and on 'Ictus' and 'Walking Woman' – the two best tracks – a trio performance would have been preferred.

Closer is still a delight nearly 40 years after first release. The key track here is Carla's classic 'Ida Lupino', which her former husband turns into a rolling, almost filmic narrative with layers of detail that belie the simple materials. Some have noted a continuing cross-fertilization of ideas with Ornette Coleman on these tracks. That's harder to hear if you aren't aware of the association, but the staccato rhythms and bitten-off melodic ideas do point in that direction.

* Touching / (*) Paul Bley In Haarlem Black Lion BLCD 760195 / TJC TKCB 71620 Bley; Kent Carter (b, on Touching only); Mark Levinson (b); Barry Altschul (d). 11/65, 11/66.
 Ramblin' Red 123117 As above, except omit Carter. 7/66.

That's Haarlem in the Netherlands rather than Harlem in New Amsterdam. This is a legendary Bley session, issued many times in different formats, including an Arista Freedom double LP with a flagrantly ugly cover. The playing was superb, though, and it's a great shame that the whole disc isn't reproduced on Touching. Long tracks like 'Mister Joy' are missing, though other Annette Peacock and Carla Bley tracks are strongly in evidence, and Paul Bley's own 'Mazatalan' suggests that he's no slouch as a writer when he so chooses. Carter and Altschul offer solid support, but the focus is all on the piano (and sometimes inside the piano).

On the second set, the long, shambolic 'Blood' and 'Mister Joy', both of which are wrongly attributed to Carla Bley instead of Annette Peacock. They're not particularly well recorded either, but that doesn't detract from some fine music. Altschul is fiery and uncompromising, though he loses paces during 'Mr Joy', but Levinson is a very average player, and certainly not in the creative league of Gary Peacock, Steve Swallow and Kent Carter.

Ramblin' was formerly on BYG and has been reissued a couple of times. Levinson seems more securely integrated here on relatively familiar material: 'Mazatalan', 'Touching', 'Ida Lupino' and the Peacock composition 'Albert's Love Theme'.

 Improvisie America 980691 Bley; Annette Peacock (p, syn, b, v); Han Bennink (d). 70.
 Circles Milestone MCD 47102 Bley; Frank Tusa, Dick Youngstein, Glenn Moore, Dave Holland (b); Steve Haas, Barry Altschul (d). 12/70, 11/72.

It was Peacock and Robert Moog who got Bley interested in synthesizers and even at this early stage their mutual exploration of electronic sounds is extremely impressive. The set consists of two long pieces, the collectively improvised title-track, and Peacock's 'Touching', which exists in other versions from around this time and later. Peacock's singing is both admired and derided. Here it seems attractively approximate and a leaven to the harsher electronic sounds. Bley plays with admirable concentration, given that using synthesizers and electric pianos of the time must have been enormously frustrating to a player of his skills. Bennink is his typical self.

Circles brings together two records, Synthesizer Show and Paul Bley And Scorpio. Again, the writing is heavily dominated by Peacock tunes, but Bley stamps his authority much more forcibly on them here. It's unfortunate that 'Mr Joy', one of the very best of his performances from this period, should be omitted from the compilation.

* Open, To Love ECM 827751-2 Bley (p solo). 9/72.

This is where Bley first suggested a convincing alternative to the Cecil Taylor 'school' of free-jazz piano. Here he makes use of space and silence, phrases that seem to hang like catenaries within the beat or arch across it. It remains one of Bley's finest-ever performances and the beginning of a productive relationship with ECM that flowered some thirty years on. Stand-out track is a fresh reading of 'Ida Lupino'.

 Paul Bley/NHØP Steeplechase SCCD 31005 Bley; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b). 6–7/73.
NHØP complements Bley's haunting chords perfectly, and on the inaugural 'Meeting' constructs an arco solo of great beauty over huge, ringing piano pedals (played on the electric instrument, which reappears to good effect on the closing 'Gesture Without Plot'). 'Later' is perhaps the best-balanced duo performance; followed by the lively and intriguingly oblique 'Summer', it underlines once again Bley's sensitivity to his fellow players and the emotional range of his playing. He is, nevertheless, absolutely distinctive. The opening notes of 'Meeting' could not be by anyone else, and a random sampling of any track uncovers his signature within half a dozen bars. The piano is appropriately well recorded and the bass is well forward with no flattening of the bottom notes.

 Quiet Song Improvising Artists 123839 Bley; Jimmy Giuffre (cl); Bill Connors (g). 12/74.
This in many respects anticipates the trio with Giuffre and bass guitarist Steve Swallow a decade and a half later. Most of the pieces are improvised and most are thoughtful and introspective rather than dramatic. Giuffre's slightly dry chalumeau is very nicely captured, though there are touches of distortion here and there when the full trio is playing, suggesting that microphone positions were too close or not sufficiently baffled. It's a minor point, but it mars some lovely group playing where subtle interactions of harmony are vital to the success of a piece.

 Japan Suite Improvising Artists 123849 2 Bley; Gary Peacock (b); Barry Altschul (d). 7/76.
Technical problems delayed the start of this concert and annoyed the crowd, who were about to turn nasty when the trio came on and proceeded to blow them away with a set of remarkable intensity, even by the standards of these fiery players. Altschul is a particular revelation here, hammering his kit as if to outdo Bley's own percussive attack, but still managing to sound tuneful and focused. Peacock isn't well served in the mix, though it does seem to improve as the rather short set progresses.

 Axis Improvising Artists 123853 Bley (p solo). 7/77.
Axis stands somewhat apart in Bley's output. It's a meditative and in some ways rather melancholy set that draws on both familiar material, Carla's 'El Cordobes', and the much less familiar 'Music Matador', a theme by saxophonist Prince Lasha, a schoolfriend of Ornette Coleman and associate of Eric Dolphy. It's an intriguing blend of styles and ideas and the album would have been better still if the piano had been better tuned; a bass buzz spoils some of Bley's romantic chorales.

 Hot Soul Note 121140 Bley; John Scofield (g); Steve Swallow (b); Barry Altschul (d). 3/85.
A relatively unknown Bley album, and a rare chance to hear him working with Sco, whose bluesy sound brings out fresh overtones in Bley's work. 'When Will The Blues Leave?' was long a staple of the pianist's; a nice version here, and of 'Mazatlan', which highlights the different overtone range the guitar introduces to that well-trodden theme.

 Fragments /  The Paul Bley Quartet ECM 829280-2 / 835250-2 Bley; John Surman (ss, bcl, bs); Bill Frisell (g); Paul Motian (d). 1/86.
Fragments is denied a further star only by the width of the band-book. The writing and arranging are surprisingly below par and the recording isn't quite as clean as it might be. The ECM band seems all texture, and much less structure; Frisell's almost apologetically discordant lines and reverberations blend unexpectedly well with Surman's almost equally introspective lines, and Motian varies his emphases almost by the bar to accommodate whoever is in the forefront. The long 'Interplay' on the later, eponymous set, is disappointing.

 Montmartre Live & Live Again Steeplechase SCCD 31243 2CD Bley; Jesper Lundgaard (b); Billy Hart (d). 3/86.
* Indian Summer Steeplechase SCCD 31286 Bley; Ron McClure (b); Barry Altschul (d). 5/87.
The mid-'80s trios for Steeplechase are consistently good, but this is excellent. Hart tends to drive things hard, perhaps a touch too hard and it's only on Indian Summer that one feels the chemistry is just right. This is one of the pianist's periodic blues-based programmes. Kazunori Sigiyama's engineering registers the music brightly, essential given how softly pitched some if it is. The high-points are Bley's own 'Blue Waltz' and an ironic 'The More I See You', in which he works through variations in much the same way as he had on Caravan Suite for the same label, reconstructing the melodies rather than simply going through the changes.

(*) Solo Justin Time Just 28 Bley (p solo). 87.
Like the later Changing Hands, Solo was recorded back home in Montreal on a beautifully tempered instrument. Any suspicion that Bley may have become one-dimensionally meditative is allayed by the vigorous 'Boogie'. Don't be seduced by the pretty cover. This isn't a soft record in any way.

 Notes Soul Note 121190 Bley; Paul Motian (d). 7/87.
Motian is always wonderful, seeming to work in a time-scale all his own, conjuring tissues of sound from the kit that seem to have nothing to do with metal or skin. Their interplay in the most demanding of all improvisational settings is intuitive and perfectly weighted.

 Solo Piano /  Blues For Red Steeplechase SCCD 31236 / Red Records RR 123238 Bley (p solo). 4/88; 5/89.
Much of Bley's recorded output has been on small-scale European labels, many of them in Italy, like the set on Red, which is typical in all but content. Bley doesn't normally play as much in a blues mode as this, and it's pretty effective, though by no means orthodox. The 1988 Steeplechase has excellent sound and features the pianist in meditative mood; his reading of 'You Go To My Head' is so oblique as to suggest another tune entirely.

 Live At Sweet Basil Soul Note 121235 Bley; John Abercrombie (g); Red Mitchell (b); Barry Altschul (d). 5/88.
A mostly standards set, with a fresh approach to 'When Will The Blues Leave?' and some beautiful reworking on 'Lover Man'. Bley was interested in working with guitarists at this period, an extension of his own experiments with synthesizers. Abercrombie brings a different palette to John Scofield (or Bill Frisell, later) and Mitchell plays his idiosyncratically tuned bass like a singing master.

(*) Rejoicing Steeplechase SCCD 31274 Bley; Michal Urbaniak (vn); Ron McClure (b); Barry Altschul (d). 5/89.
The vibrant amplified sound of the Polish-born violinist works very effectively in the context of Bley's music. Add a rhythm section as sympathetic as this, and you have a formula for something rather different and unpredictable. The Monk opening is unexpected and leaves Urbaniak standing, but he recovers well enough to steal a couple of well-trodden standards – 'I Can't Get Started' and 'All The Things You Are' – and to make a dramatic contribution to 'Ictus'. A slightly unusual item in Bley's list, this Sweet Basil date is well worth sampling.

* BeBopBeBopBeBopBeBop Steeplechase SCCD 31259 Bley; Bob Cranshaw (b); Keith Copeland (d). 12/89.

There's a certain irony in the fact that the man who headed the palace coup that overthrew bebop at the Hillcrest Club in 1958 should be the one to produce such an exacting and forward-looking variation on bop language in the '80s. Far from a nostalgia album, or an easy ride for soloist and sidemen, BeBop is a taxingly inventive and constantly surprising run through a dozen kenspeckle bop tunes, including 'Steeplechase'. Bley's chording and lower-keyboard runs on 'My Little Suede Shoes' pull that rather banal theme apart; Cranshaw's solo is superb. 'Ornithology' and 'The Theme' receive equally extended attention; the closing '52nd Street Theme' is a suitably elliptical commentary on the whole era.

* The Life Of A Trio: Saturday / (*) ... Sunday Owl 014.731 2 / 014.735 2 Bley; Jimmy Giuffre (ss, cl); Steve Swallow (b). 12/89.

 Partners Owl 014 730 As above, except omit Giuffre. 12/89.

Bley has always enjoyed contexts where individual members play solos and duos as well as ensemble tracks. Here, all three members contribute substantially to the success of the album, not just as trio players, but very largely as soloists. Bley's own performances include 'Foreplay' and 'Even Steven' (Saturday) and the wonderful 'Mephisto' (Sunday), but this time out he is substantially outclassed by Jimmy Giuffre. The clarinettist's opening piece on the first disc is a reminder of what a wonderful, controlled voice he has. His soprano-playing, heard later, is wilder and more frenetic, in some respects untypical of what we expect from Giuffre, whose 'Sensing', done as a trio piece, opens the second disc. Swallow is solid and harmonically imaginative, maintaining a clear pulse through every track he's involved with, even keeping the occasionally uncertain Giuffre on line on the duo 'We Agree'. Anyone who heard this group live will recognize that these brief pieces are only tasters for what the trio could do in a live setting and with no restriction on time.

Bley's harmonic resource is astonishing and all the more remarkable when you consider that these three records were recorded over just three days. It isn't clear whether the duo set was always planned or whether Giuffre dropped out of the 18 December session (he did suffer some ill-health around this time). Whatever the reason, the alternation of bass and piano solos with duo pieces works wonderfully and one has a strong impression of both players listening to each other's ideas and incorporating them into their own solos, often on completely different tracks. Consider for instance the trade-off between Bley's solo 'Majestique' and Peacock's 'Gently Gently', or between the opening duo 'Again Anew' and the stunning, brief version of Ornette Coleman's 'Latin Genetics'.

* Memoirs Soul Note 121240 Bley; Charlie Haden (b); Paul Motian (d). 7/90.

If anything pricks the bubble of the concurrent trio featuring Geri Allen, it is this fine set. Bley's finely spun chromatic developments are now so well judged as to give an impression of being quite conventionally resolved. Given the title and the strategically placed 'Monk's Dream' and Ornette's 'Latin Genetics', it's tempting to read the set as an attempt to summarize Bley's career over the past three decades. Haden's 'Dark Victory' and 'New Flame' and Bley's own 'Insanity' suggest how far Bley, Haden and Motian have pushed the conventional piano trio. Tremendous stuff.

(*) Paul Plays Carla Steeplechase SCCD 31303 Bley; Marc Johnson (b); Jeff Williams (d). 12/91.

These tunes by ex-wife Carla still fall comfortably under Paul's fingers. It's possible to trace through some of them – 'Vashkar' and 'Ictus' particularly – how and where Bley's playing has changed over the years. His left-hand accents are now stronger and more insistently rhythmic, and he has largely stripped away the grace notes and embellishments that once would have surrounded the solo line. It's all much cleaner and more exact, without in any way losing its romantic lilt.

(*) Annette hatOLOGY 564 Bley; Franz Koglmann (t, flhn); Gary Peacock (b). 4/92.

* Homage To Carla Owl 013 427 2 Bley (p solo). 4/92.

'Touching', 'Blood' and 'Mr Joy' receive fresh and freshly delightful readings on the reissue of Annette. The only non-Peacock item on the set is the improvised title-track, which somehow manages to capture her essence. On take one of 'Touching' (a second closes the album), Bley can be heard singing along to his solo reading, which is as spare and unembellished as any he has done of the piece. 'El Cordobes' and the peerless 'Cartoon' follow, bringing in Peacock and Koglmann, and on the latter track the level of abstraction and timbral complexity increases a good deal.

Annette's intention was to provide Bley with challenging environments for improvisation. As such, they are more open-ended and ambiguous than the wry, pungent themes he received from Carla Bley. The albums were recorded a fortnight apart, Annette in Switzerland, Homage To Carla in New York City, solo and on a magnificently responsive Bosendorfer. Though Bley's music uses the same dark, minor tonalities and untroubled dissonance, the two composers are very different and on the Carla album it is not so much melody and harmonic development one notices as the overall structure and colour of pieces like 'Ictus', 'Closer' and 'Vashkar', which have admittedly gained a certain familiarity from long use. Bley's use of special techniques, like the softly dampened open strings on 'Closer', is sparing but stunningly good.

Two rather different sets, then, but devoted to the two most important musical associations of Bley's life.

(*) Caravan Suite /  At Copenhagen Jazz House Steeplechase SCCD 31316 / 31348 Bley (p solo). 4/92; 11/92.

Caravan Suite is an extended examination on Ellington. There's a long version of 'In My Solitude', notably sombre accounts of 'I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good' and 'I'm Beginning To See The Light', and an extended, four-part meditation on 'Caravan'. The Steeplechase piano is very crisp and exact, suiting the material admirably. It's certainly a better instrument than the one at the Jazz House, which has a couple of unpleasant idiosyncrasies, not helped by the close-up recording.

* Mindset Soul Note 121213 Bley; Gary Peacock (b). 10/92.

Bley and Peacock have worked together often and have always demonstrated a closeness of understanding that goes beyond basic stylistic similarities. The pattern is very straightforward: a solo from each and then a duet, repeated four times, with just a tiny coda of Ornette's 'Circle With The Hole In The Middle' to complete the engagement. As often as not, Bley is accompanying the bassist, as on 'Duality' and on parts of the long 'Mindset', and here he drifts easily into a flat-handed chording style that rolls back the years and demonstrates again how much he remains in touch with his own younger selves. On 'Duality' the pair compellingly explore aspects of their stylistic changes from the '50s to now, swing, bebop, cool, abstraction and resolute freedom.

(*) If We May Steeplechase SCCD 31344 Bley; Jay Anderson (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 4/93.

Not perhaps as successful as the slightly earlier Steeplechase trios but a sterling performance all the same, and further testimony to Bley's willingness to reinvent himself and his repertoire. Nussbaum gives him a spacious rhythm, allowing him to stretch out on 'All The Things You Are' and 'Confirmation', two of his best-crafted solos of recent years. Once again the Steeplechase studio delivers the goods with marked sensitivity and warmth.

 Know Time Justin Time JUST 57 Bley; Herbie Spanier (t, flhn); Geordie McDonald (d, perc). 8/93.

A free session by three Canadians whose paths have crossed in different permutations over the years. McDonald is the wild card, a composer–improviser with a huge range of sounds at his disposal. Though the stated aim is the old one of finding a basis for improvisation that goes far beyond conventional song form, there is a persistent sense that this is exactly what lies behind these 13 shortish pieces. However, items like 'Seascape', 'Cave Painting' and 'Matrix' do suggest that the prevailing analogy is not musical at all but the visual arts, and that these are not so much songs as images. They are less static than this suggests, and it is possible to hear Bley in particular hesitate between linear logic and a more impressionistic, flat-plane sound that generates very different patterns of sound. One of Bley's most important later recordings.

[illegible]

* Time Will Tell

ECM 523819-2 Bley; Evan Parker (ts, ss); Barre Phillips (b). 1/94.

Superb. The material is divided into seven trios, two duets pairing Bley with Phillips or Parker, and two excellent Parker–Phillips encounters. These are not apprentice players in a hurry but mature artists who can afford the time to let their music unfold organically. Every piece gives off a sense of having evolved spontaneously. The original intention was to create a setting very similar to the then recently reconvened Giuffre–Bley–Swallow trio (whose first two records had been reissued on ECM), but the strong personalities of three players who had not worked as a trio before very quickly asserted themselves. 'Poetic Justice' has a more restless quality than the rest, but the title-track is a near-perfect illustration of the way three senior players with yard-long CVs and utterly distinctive voices are still able to touch base with their own musical upbringing. Parker's Coltrane inflexions are only the most obvious example; Bley and Phillips dig deep into their own memories as well.

 Outside In Justin Time JUST 69 Bley; Sonny Greenwich (g). 7/94.

A spontaneous and apparently unrehearsed studio session following one of the guitarist's relatively rare concert appearances at the Festival International de Jazz de Montréal in 1994. The aim was to explore a batch of songs from without and within, working in both directions simultaneously. The process is easier to follow on the standard and repertoire material, a very oblique interpretation of 'These Foolish Things' and versions of Eldridge's 'I Remember Harlem', Rollins's 'Pent Up House' and Charlie Parker's 'Steeplechase', a nod in the direction of Bley's other sponsoring label. Some of the material is clearly improvised on the spot or is based on material run down at the concert earlier. The playing is calm, detailed and resolutely un-intense. If improvising players now try to resist the 'conversational' analogy for what they do, this record seems to restore it. It's full of the elisions, repetitions, non-sequiturs and sheer playfulness found in any dialogue between friends, old or new.

 Reality Check Steeplechase SCCD 31379 Bley; Jay Anderson (b); Victor Lewis (d). 10/94.

Bley still jokes that he only listens to his own records these days. Such is the flow of material, it's all too possible, but the joke also contains a serious pointer, because he sounds like a man who inhabits his own musical world. It is now a very long time since it has been possible to say of him that he sounds like Monk, or Taylorish, or in the spirit of Bud Powell. Oddly, then, this is an album that seems to want to re-establish precisely some of those connections. Perhaps that is what he means by 'Reality Check', a stark, spare, stripped-down piece that builds up into a glorious abstract improvisation with a strictly limited palette and an unlimited range of ideas. Mark Gardner suggests that 'For George', exquisitely introduced on brushes by Victor Lewis, is dedicated to George Wallington, one of the lesser-known figures on the New York scene in the '50s. Or it may simply be that memories of a friend have conjured up an older style of playing. There is certainly more than a whiff of Bill Evans throughout the record. In what would have been Bill's 75th year, perhaps his spirit was abroad again. Even Bley's approach to 'I Surrender, Dear' has an element of a more delicate and lyrical style in it, a softness of focus that balances the blunt, blocky chords and fierce stabs of colour. The trio is working as a unit, but with ample space for individual expression. Anderson's solo on 'Do Something' is good enough to cue back and play again, and Lewis doesn't put a foot wrong, often taking a forward role while Bley chords restlessly round an idea.

 Sweet Time /  Hands On Justin Time 56 / Evidence ECD 22184 Bley (p solo). 95; 96.

Sweet Time is a fascinating set that underlines how deeply Bley is immersed in the blues, gospel, ragtime and a host of other piano idioms. The title-piece is a clotted blues rag, densely structured but rhythmically pungent. 'Contrary' draws on a host of classical references, some explicit, most of them very carefully absorbed into the structure. 'Never Again' is one of his seemingly spontaneous compositions, a minimal line packed with information and with emotion. 'Turnham Bay' seems to relate to something deeply personal and is as lovely as anything he's produced in years, while 'Pointillist' is a return to a more abstractionist approach.

The Evidence disc is more discursive and in some respects more demanding of the listener, but the quality of sound is stunning, with Bley conjuring layers of sound out of the Bosendorfer Imperial, an instrument big enough to contain his increasingly philosophical vision.

 Sankt Gerold ECM 157899 Bley; Evan Parker (ss, ts); Barre Phillips (b). 4/96.

This trio is now a fairly long-standing association and the three principals play with astonishing sympathy and understanding. This time the recording was made in the Sankt Gerold monastery in Austria, a setting that must have made an impact on three individuals with their own spiritual and philosophical understandings.

The concert is presented as a set of 12 'variations', though on what is never made entirely clear. Some are solo pieces, and Bley's two features, 'Variations 6/9', are vintage performances: free, rhythmic and intense, but with a floating lyricism that is borrowed in part from the graceful Phillips, who really holds this session together. Barre's solo is a model of its kind, idiomatic but also intensely musical. Whether the Austrian setting prompted thoughts of Webern, Berg and Schoenberg can only be guessed at, but there is certainly a hint of that drily romantic idiom floating through these astonishing tracks.

(*) Notes On Ornette Steeplechase SCCD 31437 Bley; Jay Anderson (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 9/97.
'Turnaround' has always been the Ornette theme that appeals to piano-players. Hampton Hawes memorably recorded it with Charlie Haden, and now Bley, who worked with Ornette at the Hillcrest Club in California all those years ago, makes it his own in a long and deeply thoughtful reading. There are a couple of surprises on the set, the inclusion of 'Lorraine' and 'Crossroads', but the key inclusion, all too short, is 'When Will The Blues Leave', the composer's most rawly evocative work. Though only half the length of the other Ornette pieces (there is also a closing original 'AARP'), it's the defining cut on a heartfelt and very effective album.

(*) Basics Justin Time JUST 154 Bley (p solo). 7/00.
'Monk's Mood' is the only non-original on this solo set of mostly new and unfamiliar material, almost all of it couched in Bley's signature post-bop style, but tempered by unexpected nods in the direction of Dave Brubeck and Ray Charles ('Told You So') and the pianoless Baker/Mulligan groups ('Chet'). The piano sounds lovely and full-voiced and the engineering gives it lots of presence and warmth.

 Solo In Mondsee ECM 1709975 Bley (p solo). 4/01.
A set of ten majestic 'variations', recorded on a magnificent Bosendorfer Imperial. Bley's capacious sense of form takes in blues, atonal études, popular song, purely abstract transitions, and through it all an extraordinary sense of music as movement in space and time. It sounds very much as if the separate parts are programmed in the order played. There is certainly an unfolding logic to the entire performance which dissolves if the tracks are resequenced. 'Variation IV' is at the heart of that process, a glorious conception that unfolds like a flower, with the briefer 'V' following like a seed or kernel that abstracts some basic essence from what has gone before. It is unclear why such an extraordinary performance should have waited six years for release, though its eventual appearance did coincide with Bley's 75th birthday.

 Nothing To Declare Justin Time 199 Bley (p solo). 5/03.
The title is interestingly ambiguous. It implies no obstacle to crossing a border or boundary, but it also suggests that perhaps after forty-some years at this business there is little left to say. The conclusion, which will already be obvious from our rating, is the former. Bley's pianism drifts across all generic boundaries. The title-track has an almost classical weight and resonance, and behind the wit of '8th Avenue' is a playful, puckish spirit that conjures up Art Tatum, Fats Waller and Earl Hines by turns. Beautifully recorded, this is vintage Bley.

Also, in brief:

 Tango Palace Soul Note 121090. 5/83.
A mellow solo piano date.

() The Paul Bley Group Soul Note 121140. 3/85.
A fine reading of Bley's staple 'Mazatalan', but little else of really compelling interest, though John Scofield (g) and Steve Swallow (b) blend almost seamlessly.

 Questions /  My Standard / (*) Live /  Live Again Steeplechase SCCD 1205, 1214, 1223, 1230. 2/85, 12/85, 3/86, 3/86.
The Danish rhythm section isn't all that special on Questions but Billy Hart (d) enlivens My Standard. The duos with Jesper Lundgaard (b) are pretty dry; oddly, the best performances have been held over for the follow-up.

 The Nearness Of You Steeplechase SCCD 31246. 11/88.
'Take The "A" Train' rousts along like it was trying to make up time between stops. The title-track is a long reverie punctuated by angry interpolations. Ron McClure (b) and Billy Hart (d): class.

 Lyrics Splasc(h) H 348-2. 3/91.
Tiziana Ghiglioni's strained vocal delivery does little more than point out the melody on her tracks. The instrumentals are a commentary on five otherwise uneventful standards. It's these re-readings which lift this rather low-key set.

(*) In The Evenings Out There ECM 517469-2. 9/91.
Not strictly a Bley session, but shared with John Surman (bs, bcl), Gary Peacock (b) and Tony Oxley (d), with solos, duos, trios and only one group cut.

 Speechless Steeplechase SCCD 31363. 93.
Bley was to record again, and more convincingly, with Jay Anderson (b) and Victor Lewis (d) somewhat later. For some reason, it fails to fire on this occasion.

 Chaos Soul Note 121285 2. 3/94.
Not strictly a Bley album since it involves solos from Furio Di Castri (b) and Tony Oxley (d). The five trio tracks mostly evolve slowly and quietly, with an emphasis on clearly articulated detail and small shifts of timbre and tonality rather than anything more dramatic.

 Not Two, Not One ECM 1860. 95.
Oddly disappointing. The empathy with Gary Peacock (b) and Paul Motian (d) is unmistakable but almost solipsistic and consistently fails to communicate.

 One Year After Platinum PLCD 022. 02.
Interesting trio with Giko Bavan (b) and Mauro Beggio (d).

Dan Block

TENOR SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

Came out of St Louis to study at Juilliard, hoping for a classical career. He has recorded with Charles Mingus, Maria Schneider and Marty Grosz, and performs regularly on Broadway.

 Almost Modern: The Swing To Bop Project Sackville SKCD22069 Block; Jon-Erik Kellso (t); Larry Ham (p); Chris Flory, John Hart (g); Lee Hudson (b); Chuck Riggs (d). 5 & 9/06.
It's all in the title and the track-listing, really. Block's fascinated with that moment of transition from swing to bebop. Interestingly, even when he's playing a recognized bop vehicle – Parker's 'Koko' and 'Meandering', stuff by Gillespie, Monk and Dexter Gordon – he still sounds like a swing-era player, particularly on his Goodmanish clarinet. The great thing about the band is that all the members seem to share that same spirit. It wouldn't be mistaken for a late-'40s date, not least because the recording is so crisply modern (might even have been improved by a little analogue dirt in the mix), but when you hear Flory soloing, it might well be some lost date of Charlie Christian's. Block's a less distinctive stylist than sidekick Kellso, who has less of Dizzy's attack than that of later followers but gets in some wicked stuff on 'Too Much Of A Good Thing'. Riggs is an unobtrusive master, who bestrides both 'schools' with ease. Why listen to this rather than the originals? Well, simply because Block is perfectly well aware of what followed. This isn't revivalist jazz; rather it is an attempt to go back to that fascinating period and relive its discoveries and some of its unexploited lodes.

Jane Ira Bloom (born 1954)

SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

She went to Berklee and Yale, before settling in NY and on the soprano horn. Ran her own Outline label for a time.

 Mighty Lights Enja ENJ 4044 Bloom; Fred Hersch (p); Charlie Haden (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 11/82.

 As One Winter & Winter 919003 Bloom; Fred Hersch (p). 9/84.

She's still one of the few soprano specialists around. Other recordings from the '80s – including a pair of quickly deleted Columbias which found her dabbling in electronics – suggest that she was becoming disenchanted with straight-ahead jazz, but the first of these is a distinctive acoustic setting. Bloom has a sparse, considered delivery, eschewing vibrato and sentimentality. 'Lost In The Stars' is accorded an attractively tart reading, but particularly impressive are two tracks where Hersch sits out and the remaining trio hits a propulsive groove.

The duo record was originally on JMT. We dismissed it rather peremptorily in our first edition, but returning to it has been a continuing pleasure. Bloom's partnership with Hersch has gone on to more profound levels since, but they find attractive common ground straight away in the opening 'Waiting For Daylight' and the mild tension between the pianist's romanticism and Bloom's starker delivery brings some interesting bounty.

(*) Art And Aviation Arabesque AJ0107 Bloom; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Ron Horton (t); Kenny Werner (p); Rufus Reid, Michael Formanek (b); Jerry Granelli (d). 7/92.

After a quiet period, Bloom returned with this. The seven originals are titled to suggest a concept of flying through dark skies and, with Wheeler in wonderful form and spare, sharply attuned playing by the rhythm players, the music does indeed soar and glide. The plangency of Wheeler's brass and Bloom's acerbic delivery give a pleasingly frosty feel to much of the playing. 'Hawkins' Parallel Universe' dovetails the horns so acutely that they might be figure-skating the melodies. In context, 'Straight, No Chaser' and the farewell of 'Lost In The Stars' work perfectly and the occasional flicker of live electronics is much better adapted than on Bloom's earlier records.

* The Nearness Arabesque AJ0120 Bloom; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Julian Priester (tb); Fred Hersch (p); Bobby Previte (d). 95.

The surprise card is Priester and, with no electronics and several standards in the programme, this might have been an orthodox blowing record. Instead, Bloom recasts every melody and form in refreshing ways. Incredibly, she manages to find something new in 'Round Midnight', here done as a sober dance for the horns. The ballads 'The Nearness Of You' and 'In The Wee Small Hours' are almost spoken, with cadences of melody soft enough to suggest music drifting down from the stars. Wheeler is irresistible, the rhythm section marvellous, and the original 'It's A Corrugated World' keeps navel-gazing at bay. Very fine.

* The Red Quartets Arabesque AJ0144 Bloom; Fred Hersch (p); Mark Dresser (b); Bobby Previte (d). 5/97–1/99.

Though in other ways she is quite unlike him, Bloom shares something of Steve Lacy's anti-virtuosity on the fish horn, often going aggravatingly against the grain of an otherwise busy dynamic. Her austere tone can at times seem baleful but on 'Time After Time' it comes across as bittersweet and affecting. In the absence of other horns, she forges an ever closer alliance with Hersch's flowing lyricism and it's their dialogue which is the heartbeat of the record, for all the excellent work put in by Dresser and Previte.

(*) Sometimes The Magic Arabesque AJO 155 Bloom; Vincent Bourgeyx (p); Mark Dresser (b); Bobby Previte (d). 6–7/00.

Solos, trios and five quartets; this isn't the best of Bloom. Bourgeyx isn't a match for Hersch, although the rhythm section plays with authority: 'Truth In Timbre' is especially effective. In soliloquy, on 'Bewitched' and 'How Are Things In Glocca Morra?', Bloom seems to be thinking to herself, but she does continue her particular combination of standards, post-bop playing and atmospheric abstraction to remarkable ends.

(*) Chasing Paint Arabesque AJ0158 As above, except omit Bourgeyx; add Fred Hersch (p). 4–5/02.

(*) Like Silver, Like Song Artistshare 0007 As above, except omit Hersch; add Jamie Saft (ky). 7/04.

… Meets Jackson Pollock is the subtitle of Chasing Paint, and Jane's interest in music, painting and astronomy commingle in a typically beautiful set. The quartet feel as if they're moving towards group improvisations, such is the empathy suggested by the title-track, and as usual Hersch is outstanding at reading Bloom's moves. Her playing is always unclichéd; nothing seems to fall too easily under her fingers, yet the impression isn't strain but freshness.

There's only the lightest use of electronics in that set, but they play a more significant role on the other disc, perhaps because Saft is more of an exponent: 'Altair 4' is all bubble and bleep. The result is both more episodic and more integrated than its predecessors, shorter tracks flowing together, but with a jumpy, exploratory feel, expertly stabilized by Dresser and Previte. A new chapter, but not yet followed up.

Blue Notes

GROUP

Legendary South African exiles.

 Township Bop Proper Pairs PRPCD013 Mongezi Feza (t); Dudu Pukwana (as); Nick Moyake (ts); Chris McGregor (p); Johnny Mbizo Dyani (b); Louis Moholo (d); other musicians. 64.

 Live In South Africa, 1964 Ogun OGCD 007 As above. 64.

Two years after Sharpeville, a mixed-race group (McGregor was white) playing jazz in Durban. Not long after, the Blue Notes went to the St-Juan-les-Pins jazz festival and never returned. The early group was more stylistically mixed than hindsight suggested. This is essentially a swing band, playing mostly in common time and with very few bop accents. Moholo (now the only survivor) mainly keeps it straight and the solos are delivered without much of the boiling dissonance that was to be a feature of later groups like Pukwana's Spear and Zila. Those bands were formed amid the agonies of exile, and it's idle to speculate how the Blue Notes might have evolved if they'd stayed in the Cape or in a more liberal climate. As the set progresses, a mixture of McGregor and Pukwana tunes (they take the bulk of the solo space, too) with 'I Cover The Waterfront' featuring a Gonsalves-like Moyake, it becomes possible to hear some intimations of the later style. Pukwana's 'B My Dear' has a tender plangency. Feza is less assertive than one expects, and nor is the sound pristine, but this still marks an important historical release and the closing 'Dorkay House' delivers raw excitement.

The other record is a genuine rarity, never previously available in Europe or the US. It is not strictly a Blue Notes record, but a larger band put together by McGregor after the nascent band's first appearance at the 1963 Johannesburg Jazz Festival. Some fine things, including two versions of 'The Blessing Light' and 'Take the Coltrane', but it offers only a partial sense of what was to follow.

Hamiet Bluiett (born 1940)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE, ALTO CLARINET, BAMBOO FLUTE

Settled in with the St Louis Black Artists Group in 1969, and in the '70s sparsely recorded before his association with the World Saxophone Quartet. Though the sound's been mollified by time, he can still make an elegant avant-garde roar on the big horn.

* Birthright India Navigation IN 1030 Bluiett (bs solo). 77.

The baritone saxophone enjoyed a boom in the '50s. Why then? Harry Carney had turned it into a viable solo instrument; there were probably more good ensemble players around, conscious equally of the run-down on paying gigs with big bands and of the attractions of a little solo spotlight; lastly, the prevailing role-models on alto and tenor were, perhaps, a little too dominant. By contrast, no established baritone style developed; Gerry Mulligan was as different from Serge Chaloff as Chaloff was from Pepper Adams; and round the fringes there were players like Sahib Shihab and Nick Brignola doing very different things indeed.

Currently, the situation is much the same. The three most interesting baritonists all play in markedly different styles. The young Amerasian Fred Houn is very much a Carney disciple; Britain's John Surman blows baritone as if it were a scaled-up alto (which by and large it is); Hamiet Bluiett, on the other hand, gives the big horn and his 'double', alto clarinet, a dark, Mephistophelian inflexion, concentrating on their lower registers, but also capable of pushing both horns up to extraordinary heights.

Heard unaccompanied at The Kitchen, he is dark, rootsy and at moments almost unbearably intense. 'In Tribute To Harry Carney' is a deeply personal testimonial, redolent of the blues. The saxophonist's wife Ebu is the dedicatee of a short and heartful song. Other family members, including Hamiet Sr, are invoked in 'My Father's House'. Recorded without overdubbing or effects, but with multiple microphones to capture a sense of movement, the playing is hauntingly present, a vocalized sound that never becomes discursive but harks back to the most primitive of music-making and the most sophisticated gestures of the avant-garde.

(*) Resolution Black Saint 120014 Bluiett; Don Pullen (p); Fred Hopkins (b); Famoudou Don Moye (perc). 11/77.
* Im/possible To Keep India Navigation IN 1072 2CD As above. 77.
 EBU Soul Note 121088 Bluiett; John Hicks (p); Fred Hopkins (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 2/84.

The Resolution quartet is perhaps heard to better effect on the deleted SOS, a live New York set of near-identical vintage, but the studio cuts are still absolutely compelling. Bluiett, on baritone only, is in sterling form, relaxed in perhaps the most conducive company he has assembled on record. Pullen and Hopkins are masters of this idiom, and Moye curbs his occasionally foolish excesses.

The reappearance of the material on Im/possible To Keep is a huge bonus to this rather truncated discography. More than two and a quarter hours of concentrated music here, including a massive version of 'Sobre Una Nube' and a splendid reading of Miles's 'Tune Up'. Hopkins is in great shape, sounding big and fast and unfailingly musical. Bluiett shifts from baritone to clarinet and flutes, playing fluently and with passion.

A generous mix and good registration of the lead horn redeems EBU's slack execution and raises it to the front rank. Hicks is a much lighter player than Pullen and is perhaps too much of an instinctive lyricist to combine well with Bluiett's increasingly declamatory responses. The rhythm section lacks incisiveness, fatally so on an odd 'Night In Tunisia'.

(*) The Clarinet Family Black Saint 120097 Bluiett; Dwight Andrews (sno cl, s cl); Don Byron, Gene Ghee, John Purcell (s cl, bcl); Buddy Collette (s cl, acl); J. D. Parran (sno cl, s cl, acl, contralto cl); Sir Kidd Jordan (cbcl); Fred Hopkins (b); Ronnie Burrage (d). 11/84.

Utterly remarkable. The ten-minute egg of hard-boiled clarinet revivalism. Bluiett's inspired project might look like a discursive guide to the woodwinds; in practice, it's a deeply celebratory, almost pentecostal rediscovery of the clarinet and its preterite cousins and second cousins. Kidd Jordan's hefty contrabass instrument, pitched at double B flat, has an extraordinary tonality on 'River Niger', a Jordan composition that conjures up oddly disconnected echoes of Paul Robeson in Sanders of the River.

There's a strong sense of tradition through this fine live set, recorded in Berlin: two long tributes to Machito and Duke Ellington, well-shared-out compositional credits, a startling bass solo from Hopkins and, following it, a beautifully judged climax. After Resolution and the better of the WSQ albums, this is the essential Bluiett album, albeit one in which he plays a collective and slightly understated role.

() Live At Carlos I /  Another Night / () Last Night Just A Memory 9129, 9136, 9139 Bluiett; Don Pullen, Mulgrew Miller (p); Fred Hopkins (b); Idris Muhammad (d); Chief Bey (perc). 86.

The title has always caused confusion to non-New Yorkers. Carlos I was a club in the city, which is why there isn't a Live At Carlos II/III. What causes us confusion is why all three discs should have been considered worthy of release. Bluiett's out of tune yelping on 'A Night In Tunisia' on the first disc is totally distracting; an earlier 'Oleo' is better controlled. There is a long 'Autumn Leaves' on the second disc which isn't a lot better and much slack on the final volume, which has Mulgrew Miller in place of the double-booked or sick Don Pullen. That shift in dynamic from Pullen's percussive attack to Mulgrew's more accommodating approach is worth a listen, but what this needs is a sharp edit.

 Sankofa/Rear Garde Soul Note 121238 Bluiett; Ted Dunbar (g); Clint Houston (b); Ben Riley (d). 10/92.

Here, with a pretty enterprising set that includes Julius Hemphill material as well as Bluiett originals, he seems to lag back and then over-compensate, happy to sit in with the band for a few measures and then roar away ahead of them. In places, Houston and Riley don't sound comfortable and what the set probably needed was a pianist more of Don Pullen's stamp.

* Young Warrior, Old Warrior Mapleshade 2932 Bluiett; Jack Walrath (t); Mark Shim (ts); Larry Willis (p); Keter Betts (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 10/92.

In some regards this was a confusing period for the baritonist, who seemed anxious to approach traditional situations at the same time as he reinvigorated his avant-gardism. 'Blue'n'Boogie' seems an unlikely place to start, though it suits Jack Walrath to a T. There are duets with both bassist and drummer that seem to be exploring quite basic aspects of language. Willis is as fine and undervalued as ever and there is much of interest on the record, though no raptures.

(*) Libation For The Baritone Saxophone Nation Justin Time JTR 8470-2 Bluiett; James Carter, Alex Harding, Patience Higgins (bs); Ronnie Burrage (d). 97.

Bluiett first experimented with these forces in 1972 with the Baritone Saxophone Retinue, co-led with Pat Patrick and Charles Davis, and featuring Cecil Payne. Twenty years later, he revived the idea with the more anonymous International Baritone Conspiracy. Introducing the band at the 1997 Montreal Jazz Festival on Libation, Bluiett calls in his three baritone-wielding colleagues and the up-for-it Burrage as if he was warming up for James Brown on a funk revival tour. Bluiett is a master of upper-register playing, and some of his top lines are light and fleet enough to sound like rootsy alto. On 'Discussion Among Friends' he further extends the big horn's range with vocalized chord effects; but for the most part he sticks to the instrument's middle register, leaving the foundation work to Higgins and Harding.

Carter has, of course, carved his own path through this kind of repertoire; his composition 'J. B. Groove' is a tribute to the master, but one cast in a version of Bluiett's own groovy hybrid of R&B and the avant-garde. The other material is splendidly varied, with a reading of Sam Rivers's 'Revival', a brassy version of trombonist Frank Lacy's 'Settegast Strut' and with E. J. Allen's 'Discussion Amongst Friends' used as a set exercise for the ensemble.

 The Calling Justin Time 162 Bluiett; D. D. Jackson (p, org, ky); Kahil El'Zabar (d, perc, v). 10/00.

This showcases compositions by Jackson and El'Zabar, organized round a central improvisation, 'Ask And You Shall Find'. It is disconcertingly brief, but this is intended very much as an album of songs rather than long-form improvisations. El'Zabar contributes four numbers, including the very powerful 'Open My Eyes'. At the other extreme, 'Blues Grind' is a raw and dirty showcase for Bluiett's characteristically muscular baritone and for Jackson's organ grooves. Hamiet switches to bamboo flute for 'Ask And You Shall Find' but sticks mainly to his big horn, which more than ever is presented as a singing voice and here as a foil to El'Zabar's plaintive, folky vocals.

 Blueblack Justin Time 158 Bluiett; James Carter (bs, cbcl); Patience Higgins, Alex Harding (bs, bcl); Lee Person, Kahil El'Zabar (d, perc). 1/01.

If you still use an ink pen, peer into a bottle of Quink blue/black for a sense of this album's basic tonality. The lower registers are well catered for, and it takes a player of Bluiett's extraordinary range to make such a project interesting. The most effective use of the massed baritones and bass clarinets comes on 'Humpback' by the intriguing black composer Coleridge Taylor Perkinson, the first of a number of his compositions covered on a record which kicks off with a Motown cover and then disappears in precisely the opposite direction. Bluiett is still a genuine experimenter, prepared to let a very restrictive format drive him forwards.

* If Trees Could Talk Mapleshade 6332 Bluiett; Larry Willis (p); Asante (perc). 02.

These are mostly baritone/piano duets with the consistently underrated Willis, though the opening 'The African' has Bluiett accompanied only by the percussionist, and the closing 'Runaway' is a solo. Willis doesn't need to be flashy to shine on material like this. He's absolutely there on the Monk cover 'Ask Me Now' and he digs into a suspiciously sentimental bag on 'Cherry Pink, Apple Blossom White', which pokes gentle fun at all sorts of people who've touched this repertoire. Bluiett often sounds like he's on a smaller horn, but every note has weight and presence.

Also, in brief:

(*) Saying Something For All Just A Memory JAM 9134-2. 7/77, 79.

Mostly duos with Muhal Richard Abrams (p) but 'Requiem For Kent State' was apparently recorded two years earlier at the Ohio college where four anti-Vietnam War protesters had been shot dead by the National Guard in 1970. Emotionally compelling and a definitive Bluiett performance.

 Dangerously Suite /  Nali Kola Soul Note 121018 & 121188. 4/81; 7/87.

Dangerously merely grafts African percussion and voice onto a basic quartet but just about succeeds. On Nali Kola, an awkward instrumentation is intriguingly handled and well recorded.

 Ballads And Blues: Live At The Village Vanguard Soul Note 121288. 2/94.

Muscular elegance at the iconic jazz joint, and no less than his due.

 Makin' Whoopee: Tribute To The King Cole Trio Mapleshade 040932. 97.

Bluiett's devotion to Nat Cole might seem improbable, but the overall effect is gorgeous and 'Route 66' is as bold a remake of an American classic as you'll hear.

() Same Space / () Join Us Justin Time JUST 109-2 & 124-2. 97; 10/98.

A rainbow coalition with D. D. Jackson (p) and Mor Thiam (perc) and not really in the front line of Bluiett records.

 With Eyes Wide Open Justin Time 138. 11/99.

Bluiett's playing has rarely been more soulful and melodic, but there are confrontational moments with guitarist Ed Cherry which raise the temperature and see the saxophonist head up into his very controlled false upper register.

Arthur Blythe (born 1940)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Also known as Black Arthur, he originally divided his career between bebop and an innovative style that united the passionate immediacy of the early pioneers with non-Western harmonies and rhythms. Brilliant but erratic.

(*) In Concert India Navigation IN 1029 Blythe; Ahmed Abdullah (t); Bob Stewart (tba); Abdul Wadud (clo); Steve Reid (d); Muhammad Abdullah (perc). 2/77.

Arthur Blythe is a marvellous musician whose path has often seemed luckless. His India Navigation sets of the late '70s were breathtakingly original, and his form-sheet included demanding stints with Gil Evans and Horace Tapscott, with whom he was a founding member of two radical co-operatives, Artists Ascension and Union Of God's Musicians.

In Concert covers two major pieces, 'Metamorphosis' and 'The Grip'. The band has the sort of dark, experimental feel of Tapscott's West Coast collectives. The use of Stewart is brilliant and the absence of a string bassist irrelevant in face of his robust legato playing. Ahmed Abdullah is sharp and forceful, combining elements of Pops with Roy Eldridge and Charlie Shavers (and, frankly, nothing more contemporary than that). Blythe's solo formation isn't always entirely secure, but he is brimming over with ideas, and he attempts to string them together at least logically.

[redacted]

♛ * Lenox Avenue Breakdown
Koch KOC CD 7871 Blythe; Bob Stewart (tba); James Newton (f); James Blood Ulmer (g); Cecil McBee (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Guilherme Franco (perc). 79.

In 1979 Blythe signed with Columbia and produced what became one of the masterpieces of modern jazz. Lenox Avenue Breakdown is a superlative piece of imaginative instrumentation, similar to the India Navigation set, but with the lighter and more complex sound of James Newton's flute backing the leader's extraordinary blues wail. There is scarcely a flat moment on the album, despite all four pieces being built round relatively static and repetitive ideas.

Stewart's long solo on the title-piece is one of the few genuinely important tuba statements in jazz, a nimble sermon that promises storms and sunshine. McBee has his moment on 'Slidin' Through', and Blythe himself saves his main contribution for the final track, the Eastern-sounding 'Odessa', on which he cries like a muezzin, a cantor and a storefront Salvationist, all in one impeccably structured arc. DeJohnette came of age with this record, playing with fire and authority, and with the sophisticated understanding of how rhythm and melody can combine. His own Special Edition, which included Blythe, was recorded the same year. His work behind Blythe on that final track deserves the closest attention. The other key element to the sound is Ulmer, who in those days was also moving comfortably between 'inside' and 'outside' projects.

There were more fine albums to come, but then Blythe's wind went, and he seemed lost. Much of his work in intervening years was in a pop vein, a watered-down version of the deep, urban groove he found on this great record. Sadly, most of Blythe's Enja records are no longer available, leaving a huge gap in the middle of the story.

(*) Today's Blues CIMP 158 Blythe; David Eyges (clo). 8/97.

An out-of-nowhere delight. The meeting with Eyges, who plays amplified cello, rekindles memories of Blythe with Abdul Wadud many years earlier, and the saxophonist's beautifully responsive and articulate lines are wonderful to hear. The ripe vibrato he puts on the end of some of his phrases, the rich, singing tone and speech-like reflexes all sound like Arthur at his best – and it's good to have him back on record sounding so strong. Eyges is no match – or for Wadud – but he plays second fiddle to the alto master with a fine good humour.

* Night Song Clarity 1016 Blythe; Chico Freeman (bcl, perc); Gust William Tsilis (vib, mar); Bob Stewart (tba); David Frazier, Josh Jones, Arto Tuneboyaciyan (perc). 97.

This finds Arthur in top form: raw, stylish, inventive and mixing tradition and experiment with great confidence. He varies an already enterprising personnel from track to track, calling on producer Freeman for some effective bass clarinet spots. He combines brilliantly with Stewart's parping tuba. The use of three hand-drummers gives parts of the set an almost ceremonial parade feel, something that has surfaced in Arthur's work here and there over the years. The title-piece – strictly 'Cancion De La Noche' – is a collaboration with vibist Tsilis and was set to become one of Arthur's signature pieces over the next few years, gently swinging, but also pointing at depths of harmony and of historical awareness. There is a nod to the modern-jazz tradition in a middle section that follows Monk's 'We See' with Strayhorn's mournful 'Blood Count'.

 Spirits In The Field Savant 2024 Blythe; Bob Stewart (tba); Cecil Brooks III (d). 99.

Recorded live at the Bimhuis in Amsterdam, this catches Blythe on a good night, playing with an intensity and focus not well represented by the recording. Stewart sounds muffled and the drums are overloud, but compositions as varied as the classic 'Lenox Avenue Breakdown' and Don Pullen's threnody for George Adams, 'Ah, George, We Hardly Knew Ya', are delightful performances and show that Arthur is still enjoying his purple streak.

 Blythe Bite Savant 2036 Blythe; John Hicks (p); Dwayne Dolphin (b); Cecil Brooks III (d). 3/01.

Largely dominated by Monk themes – 'Blue Monk', 'Ruby My Dear', 'Light Blue' – and graced by a fine interpretation of Trane's 'Naima', this is an appealing if slightly anonymous set. Relative to recent form, Arthur is a little low-key and leaves an unexpectedly large amount of space for Hicks and Dolphin. And yet it is the drummer who frequently captures the spotlight, a crisp and capable accompanist, with musical ideas of his own. The closing rendition of 'What A Friend We Have In Jesus' is moving.

(*) Focus Savant 2044 Blythe; Gust William Tsilis (b mar); Bob Stewart (tba); Cecil Brooks (d). 4/02.

This is essentially the working group. The instrumentation is a near perfect illustration of Blythe's desire to balance early jazz with 'avant-garde' philosophies and his fellow players seem consistently alert to the concept. Both Stewart and Tsilis contribute bass-lines and harmonic accompaniment. Their readings of two relatively unknown Monk tunes, 'Children's Song' and 'Stuffy Turkey', are a mixture of simplicity and sophistication, as is a rugged romp through 'C. C. Rider'. Blythe and Tsilis reprise the excellent 'Night Song', but the best of the writing is Arthur's. 'My Son Ra' is a moving and clearly very personal theme, while 'Hip Toe' suggests a range of listening that includes Ellington as well as Monk; sure enough, Duke's 'In A Sentimental Mood' is the album closer, but for the title-track, which is not much more than a solo coda.

Arthur's tone is stronger and more stringent than ever. He has a preacher's intensity and an increasingly vocalized attack that gives these tracks the immediacy and the power of song.

 Exhale Savant 2050 Blythe; John Hicks (p); Bob Stewart (b); Cecil Brooks III (d). 10/03.

The replacement of Tsilis with Hicks doesn't do this record any real favours. Blythe, though, is very much in his pomp and sails through these cuts with impressive intensity and admirable control. There isn't a bad track on the album, but it feels like more of the same, when we're looking to Arthur to push the envelope just a little bit again.

Also, in brief:

 Synergy In + Out 77033. 7/96.
An intriguing trio set with David Eyges (clo) and the perennially undervalued Bruce Ditmas (d). Worth seeking out.

Jimmy Blythe (1901–31)

PIANO

Originally from Kentucky, he moved to Chicago in 1915 and spent the next dozen years working the South Side until his early death.

 Jimmy Blythe 1924–1931 RST JPCD 1510 Blythe; Alfred Bell, Punch Miller (c); Darnell Howard (cl); Leroy Pickett (vn); Charlie Clark (p); William Lyle (b); W. E. Burton (d, kz); Jimmy Bertrand (wbd); Viola Bartlette, Alexander Robinson, Frankie Jaxon (v). 4/24–3/31.
 Messin' Around Blues Delmark DE 792 Blythe (pianola rolls). EARLY 20S.
An integral part of South Side music in the '20s, his extensive work for Paramount, Gennett and Vocalion mixes a strong blues-piano approach with flakes of stride and boogie-woogie, revealing a determined and creative thinker. The piano rolls remastered on Messin' Around Blues come in immaculate sound that must be as close as anyone will now come to Jimmy in the all too frail flesh. Some rinky-dink moments on these pop-blues tunes for the nickelodeon market, but for the most part thoughtfully conceived and executed. A slice of living history.

Also, in brief:

 State Street Ramblers: 1927–1928 /  ... 1928–1931 RST JPCD 1512 / 1513. 27–28.
* State Street Ramblers 1928–1931 Cygnet CYG 1003. 28–31.
Knockabout stuff, mostly, but Johnny Dodds (cl) appears on the early sides. The Cygnet issue repeats later material, but in better sound.

Peter Bocage (1887–1967)

CORNET, VIOLIN

Born in Algiers, Louisiana, from a musical family, he learned to play in Storyville dance halls. Worked with Papa Celestin, Fate Marable and King Oliver, and later with Bechet as well, but disbanded the Creole Serenaders in 1939 and stopped working as a full-time musician.

(*) Jazz Nocturne: Bocage & Bechet In Boston Jazz Crusade 3042 Bocage; Brad Gowans (vtb); Sidney Bechet (ss); Ray Parker (p); Pops Foster (b); George Thompson (d). 5/45.
* With His Creole Serenaders And The Love–Jiles Ragtime Orchestra Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1835 Bocage; Charles Love (t); Homer Eugene, Albert Warner (tb); Paul Barnes, Louis Cottrell Jr (cl); Benjamin Turner (p); Sidney Pfleuger (g); Emmanuel Sayles, (bj); McNeal Breaux, Auguste Lanoix (b); Albert Jiles, Alfred Williams (d). 6/60–1/61.
Bocage was a part of living musical heritage and these sessions, made a few years before his death, effectively got him out of a two-decade retirement in which he had done very little. He did, however, around this time join the Eureka Brass Band, which restored him to prominence. A gifted multi-instrumentalist, he had a light, fast trumpet sound that often, as here, sounds more sophisticated than its setting. The 1945 dates with Bechet are airshots from the Savoy Café and mostly of interest to Bechet collectors. Bocage doesn't sound ideally suited to the music and with just the two horns – Gowans comes in for the unavailable Foster on one date – the trumpeter is pretty much overwhelmed by the indomitable saxophonist.

Kim Bock (born 1967)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET

Born in Denmark and now settled in the US after studying there at Berklee and in Florida. Blooded on the circuit by a gig with Maynard Ferguson's Big Bop Nouveau Band.

(*) Secrets Steeplechase SCCD 31603 Bock; David Smith (T, FLHN); Adam Armstrong (b); Peter Retzlaff (d). 3/06.
It's always nice to discover a contemporary player whose first influence seems to be Sonny Rollins rather than the over-determining Coltrane. Bock writes a mean line and from the first bars of 'Secrets', you know you're in for something a bit special and different to the usual run. Without a harmony instrument, he and tearaway trumpeter Smith are required to touch in a bit of harmonic shading underneath the solos, but these are always integrated into the subsequent feature so that the feel is seamless. '65 Miles' evokes the great trumpeter's vintage bands, 'Cat In A Box' is a long piece apparently inspired by Elvin Jones's Lighthouse performances but named after a Bock family pet. 'Pivot Points' has a rugged, dramatic impulse, while 'Sepone' develops some ideas picked up on a study tour to South Africa. A name to watch, but already a highly impressive leader and composer, Bock sustains interest in this from first to last.

Phil Bodner (born 1919)

CLARINET, WOODWINDS

A valuable utility player, he saw service with Benny Goodman, Miles Davis/Gil Evans and countless others.

 Once More With Feeling Arbors 19347 Bodner; Joe Wilder (t); Ron Odrich (bcl); Hank Jones (p); Dick Hyman (p, org); Derek Smith (ky); Gene Bertoncini, Al Caiola, Jamie Colpitts (g); Milt Hinton, Dave Young (b); Charlie Gougen, Butch Miles, Bobby Rosengarden, Ron Traxler, Jimmy Young (d). 60–70.
This is a mixed bag of mosly unissued material from a musician who appeared frequently on other leaders' recordings without making much of a splash himself. Fairly undemanding repertoire, mostly old swing standards, but Phil's accurate pitching, keen sense of phrasing and quick harmonic reflexes make these thoroughly attractive sessions. Concentrating on clarinet (though the 'virtuosity' of the subtitle isn't often in view), he appears in a wide variety of settings over the decade, including a couple of tracks under Milt Hinton's leadership.

Eric Boeren

CORNET

Dutch improviser. Member of Available Jelly.

 Joy Of A Toy / (*) Soft Nose BvHaast 3341 / 1501 Boeren; Michael Moore (as, cl); Wilbert de Joode (b); Han Bennink (d). 6/77–3/99; 1 & 5/01.

A cluster of Ornette Coleman tunes, including the title-piece, enliven Joy of a Toy and confirm the obvious lineage with the great quartet of the '50s. That said, Boeren's own quirky 'A Fuzzphony', though obviously Ornette-influenced, is a vivid conception in its own right and so is his more mysterious 'The Elevation Of Colin Evans'. Moore is a master in these situations, wry and quirky but rock solid, while de Joode and Bennink provide an elastic but solid foundation. The formula is repeated on the second disc, with some more Ornette rarities – 'Eos', 'I Heard It Over The Radio' – mixed in with more strong originals; a more coherent set and, as with the earlier disc, a single standard: there it was 'Embraceable You', here it's Eubie Blake's 'Memories Of You'.

Stefano Bollani (born 1972)

PIANO

Raised in Milan, and an impressive stylist with big ideas.

 Les Fleurs Bleues Label Bleu 6635 Bollani; Scott Colley (b); Clarence Penn (d). 5–10/01.

 Smat Smat Label Bleu 6665 Bollani (p, v, acc solo). 5/03.

(*) Concertone Label Bleu 6666 Bollani; Orchestra Della Toscana. 04.

Bollani's recording debut with bassist Ares Tavolazzi made clever use of such 'authentic' Italian material as 'Volare' and 'That's Amore' and managed to lend an element of grandeur to them both. The trio here is another cracking record. There aren't too many piano-players around who can namecheck Raymond Queneau as comfortably as they might reference Bud Powell or Bill Evans, but Stefano is a poetic singer as well. Smat Smat – 'small, small' in Danish – is nicely varied with voice and accordion and with the best-ever jazz version of 'Norwegian Wood'. The ambitious Concertone teams the pianist with a band well versed in jazz and improvised situations, with some good soloists. Paolo Silvestri's arrangements were original enough to persuade Bollani to include a rare standard, 'My Funny Valentine', alongside his own stuff. A recent association with Venus has led to a flurry of Japan-only releases, though some of these may well be available in other territories.

(*) Piano Solo ECM 00071500 Bollani (p solo). 8/05.

ECM isn't short of graceful improvising pianists, but this intriguing release should add Bollani's name to the major-league roster. Everything is elegantly and thoughtfully done: a most unexpected 'On The Street Where You Live', given a new rhythmic profile; a Prokofiev improvisation (from the First Piano Concerto), which just about leaves the original theme audible; 'Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans' and 'Maple Leaf Rag' given notably romantic interpretations; and 'Don't Talk (Put Your Head On My Shoulder)' a gorgeous send-off. Much of his best stuff is not easily available; this, though, is strongly recommended, with the hope that there will be more on ECM to come. Needless to say, the sound is a huge plus.

Also, in brief:

 Gleda: Songs From Scandinavia Stunt STU 5012. 5/05.

Continues a curious obsession with Nordic musics and languages. A bit different, but worth exploring.

Paul Bollenback (born 1959)

GUITAR

Born in Hinsdale, Illinois, he listened to rock, fusion and jazz (in that order) and studied jazz at Miami University.

(*) Original Visions Challenge CHR 70022 Bollenback; Gary Thomas (ts, f); Joey DeFrancesco (org); Ed Howard (b); Terri Lyne Carrington (d). 2/95.

 Double Gemini Challenge CHR 70046 Bollenback; Joey DeFrancesco (org); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 3/97.

() Soul Grooves Challenge CHR 70064 Bollenback; Jim Rotondi (t); Steve Davis (tb); Steve Wilson (as); Eric Alexander (ts); Joey DeFrancesco (org); Jeff Tain Watts (d); Broto Roy (perc). 12/98.

 Dreams Challenge CHR 70082 Bollenback; Joe Locke (vib); Ray Drummond (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 01.

Bollenback progressed from able sideman to leader comfortably enough, though these records seldom stand out from the crowd. He seems divided, on Original Visions, between a harder, rockier route to catharsis and a more rigorous jazz achievement. He's not helped by the bottom-heavy sound and an indifferent choice of material, or indeed by Thomas, who seldom does this kind of gig any more. Yet when guitar, organ and drums lock together the music sometimes takes off.

Bollenback and De Francesco (a former boss) are clearly simpatico. 'Breaking The Girl', which opens Double Gemini, is about as swinging and hard-hitting a guitar/organ blowout as one can imagine. The set blends four originals with six pop tunes (Hootie And The Blowfish rather than Cole Porter) and Bollenback sounds very easy. Sting's 'Fields Of Gold' comes out very prettily, if just ahead of mood music, but the burners are genuinely exciting.

Soul Grooves is self-explanatory, drawing on Stevie Wonder, Marvin Gaye and the Temptations for material. The crack horn section is on hand mostly to play charts, though Wilson gets some agreeable space on 'Papa Was A Rolling Stone'. Three originals add some variety but it all needs one solid jolt to shake off the niceness.

The presence of the Rolling Stones' 'Wild Horses' on Dreams might raise hackles, but Bollenback pulls it off with aplomb and the trio format (with Locke in on the opening 'Estate') is settled and communicative. The interpretation of Michel Legrand's 'Summer Of 1942 (The Summer Knows)' is a stroke of genius. There's a Kenny Kirkland song as well, a welcome airing for the late pianist's 'Chance'. A fine record and a delight for anyone disillusioned with more recent Sco records.

(*) Brightness Of Being Elefant Dreams ED4548 Bollenback; Tim Garland, David 'Fathead' Newman, Gary Thomas (ts); James Genus (b); Terri Lyne Carrington, Ari Hoenig (d). 10/05.

 Invocation Elefant Dreams 4550 Bollenback; Randy Brecker (t); Ed Howard (b); Victor Lewis (d); Chris McNulty (v). 6/07.

The first is a powerful, eclectic record on which Bollenback attempts to broaden his repertoire with a strong three-part suite based on Tosca (some sublimely dramatic moments on that), a version of Neil Young's 'Philadelphia' and a great take on 'Unchain My Heart' in tribute to Ray Charles. The second for the new label isn't quite as strong, and there's an elegiac quality, clinched on the closing 'After The Rain'. James Williams's 'Alter Ego' is the other interesting pick, but the two-part original title-track is masterly writing. Chris McNulty adds a pleasing dimension.

Salvatore Bonafede

PIANO

A quiet but solid progress on small Italian labels, but the reputation gathers momentum.

 Ortodoxa Red RR123294 Bonafede; Fabrizio Bosso (t); Rosario Giuliani (sax); Pietro Ciancaglini (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 00.

Apart from a couple of Splasc(h)es and some early things on Ken which appeared here briefly, Bonafede isn't much known outside Italy. He isn't the kind of virtuoso to make a dramatic splash and most of the interest on the Red disc is in the quiet, authoritative writing on things like 'Charles Mingus' and two takes of a homage to Fellini. He has a sure, romantically boppish touch and a strong time-sense and always plays for the band.

 Journey To Donnafugata CamJazz 7762 Bonafede; Enrico Rava (t); John Abercrombie, Ralph Towner (g); Ben Street (b); Clarence Penn (d); Michele Rabbia (perc). 5/03.

Music by Nino Rota from The Leopard, interwoven with a couple of cadenzas from Rava on Verdi's 'Gran Valzer'. That, plus a couple of original themes from Bonafede, yields a set that might itself work as a soundtrack but is also a rewarding listening experience. Abercrombie and guest Towner bring their very different styles to the table, but it's the trumpeter and the solid, thoughtful piano that makes the date.

* For The Time Being CamJazz 7771 Bonafede; Joe Lovano (ts); Adam Rogers (g); Mark Dresser (b); Paul Motian (d); Michele Rabbia (perc). 2/05.

Bonafede steps onto an international stage with this and remarkably, apart from a couple of Rota bookends, it's a set entirely consisting of his own material. Lovano and Rogers lock together with the leader on some strong and memorable music, though often the shorter tracks have greater impact than the more extended pieces.

 Dreams And Dreams CamJazz 7789 Bonafede (p solo). 3/06.

Bonafede's liking for homage pieces to musical greats is a sign of his essential modesty and thoughtful application to study. Here, it's John Taylor who is acknowledged and one can see why the Italian might admire the great Englishman: the same lyricism with a firm edge, an ability to play quietly but with massive substance, an almost folkish directness of expression where it's called for. Intriguing after so many strong group records to hear Bonafede solo. His coming out continues apace and at this rate even the great Enrico Pieranunzi will have to look to his laurels.

Also, in brief:

 Paradoxa Red RR 123305. 05.

A muddy record by contrast with other recent dates, but Bonafede's intelligence shines through.

Sharkey Bonano (1904–72)

TRUMPET, CORNET, VOCAL

Born in New Orleans and much associated with NO revivalism. This, though, followed a period when he drifted around several musical jobs across America, waiting for renewed interest in the classic Louisiana style.

 Sharkey Bonano 1928–1937 Timeless CBC 1-001 Bonano; Shorty Sherock (t); Santo Pecora, Moe Zudecoff, Julian Lane, George Brunies (tb); Meyer Weinberg (cl, as); Sidney Arodin (cl, tin whistle); Joe Marsala, Irving Fazola (cl); Hal Jordy (as, bs); Dave Winstein (ts); Johnnie Miller, Clyde Hart, Joe Bushkin, Stan Wrightman, Freddy Newman, Armand Hug (p); Joe Cupero, Frank Federico, Eddie Condon (g); Bill Bourjois (bj, g); Steve Brou (bj); Luther Lamar (tba, b); Chink Martin, Ray Bonitas, Thurman Teague, Artie Shapiro, Hank Wayland (b); Monk Hazel (d, melod, v); Leo Adde, Augie Schellange, Ben Pollack, George Wettling, Al Sidell, Riley Scott (d). 4/28–4/37.

Although he was a New Orleans native, Bonano's early career points elsewhere. He tried out as a replacement for Bix with both the Wolverines and Jean Goldkette, for instance. The first two sessions here, though, are among the very few home-grown New Orleans sessions of the '20s, both showing an ironic New York influence, but with fine clarinet by Sidney Arodin and Bonano proving that he had a light but engaging lead as a cornetist. A jump forward to 1936 brings a more Dixieland-orientated sound, and three further sessions from later in the year and next find him in New York with a band largely made up of Condonites. Four tracks by a Santa Pecora group with Sherock round off the disc. Bonano's vaudevillian vocals dominate several tracks, but when his trumpet emerges he sounds in good fettle.

 At Lenfant's Lounge Storyville STCD 6015 Bonano; Jack Delaney (tb); Bujie Centobie (cl); Stanley Mendelson (p); Arnold 'Deacon' Loyacano (b); Abbie Brunies, Monk Hazel (d); Lizzie Miles (v). 8–9/52.

 And His Band Storyville STCD 6011 As above, except omit Hazel and Miles. 12/52.

Bonano returned to New Orleans and spent the rest of his life there, recording frequently in the aftermath of the great revival. Location recordings catch his able band in lively form. The leader's own playing suggests that he was more convincing as a front-man than as a soloist: if he pushes too hard, his tone thins out and his phrases buckle. But Delaney and Centobie are perfectly assured soloists and Bonano sensibly gives them the lion's share of the attention. Lizzie Miles sings a couple of songs on her first recording, and shouts encouragement, too. The recordings are clear enough, though they don't have much sparkle.

Joe Bonner (born 1948)

PIANO

Born, like Thelonious Monk, in Rocky Mount, North Carolina, which may explain something about his curious radical-conservative piano style. McCoy Tyner was also an influence.

(*) Parade Steeplechase SCCD 31116 Bonner; Johnny Dyani (b); Billy Higgins (d). 2/79.

 Devotion Steeplechase SCCD 31182 Bonner (p solo). 2/83.

 Suburban Fantasies /  Two & One Steeplechase SCCD 31176 / 37033/4 2CD Bonner; Johnny Dyani (b). 2/83.

A modernist who obviously listened productively to the swing masters, Bonner has a nice rolling delivery, which often contains gospelly touches. Dyani has the same dark strength, which in Bonner sounds as if filtered through some place between Monk and Cecil Taylor, and the association seems to grow in authority over time. Parade is relatively orthodox bop, but by the 1983 dates the two men are exploring more interesting territory; Two & One is a valuable mid-price compilation of their work together – generously proportioned, too.

(*) Suite For Chocolate Steeplechase SCCD 31215 Bonner; Khan Jamal (vib); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Leroy Lowe (d). 11/85.
African elements emerge again on this lovely disc, which also features the under-recorded Jamal, who provides the leader with a continuous stipple of sound over which to lay his discontinuous and often edgy melody lines. A surprising record in many ways, it veers between experiment and conservatism, eventually coming down on the side of easy, unstressed swing.

 Impressions Of Copenhagen Evidence ECD 22024 Bonner; Eddie Shu (t); Gary Olson (tb); Holly Hoffman (f); Paul Warburton (b); J. Thomas Tilton (d); string trio. 81.
Formerly on Theresa (who also released Bonner's intriguing New Beginnings) this is now available with a bonus version of 'Lush Life'. There are some effectively impressionistic moments and the use of strings is quite original and uncluttered, but it's not entirely consistent with Bonner's main line of interest in jazz.

(*) Monkisms Capri 74003 Bonner (p solo). 7/91.
Ironically, where he sounds most like his distinguished homie and inspiration is on the closing 'Abide With Me'. Bonner is sufficiently *un*like Monk in approach to make this work. 'In Walked Bud' and 'Ugly Beauty', right in the centre of the set, both make genuine contributions to the literature. Other tunes are more conventional, though they repay careful listening. This lay unreleased for nearly a decade.

(*) The Art Of Jazz Piano Black Orchard 5580 Bonner (p solo). 03.
Nice to have something new to add to Bonner's long-static entry, which hasn't changed much since our first edition. The pompous title apart, this is a terrific set, thoughtful and darkly romantic, with a certain resemblance to Horace Tapscott's work. An intriguing set-list includes 'Willow, Weep For Me', McCoy Tyner's 'Passion Dance' and Herbie Hancock's 'Speak Like a Child', two Harold Vick tunes (!) and some fine originals from Joe, including 'We Will Be Together' and 'Ode to Trane'. It would be nice if this helped propel a largely forgotten figure back into deserved prominence, but it may be too subtle for that.

Also, in brief:

 New Life Steeplechase SCCD 31239. 8/86.
A routine trio record.

 The Lost Melody Steeplechase SCCD 31227. 3/87.
A different trio, and better, but even the addition of Bob Rockwell (ts) doesn't set it on fire.

Thomas Borgmann (born 1955)

SOPRANINO, SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, WHISTLES

Born in Münster, he is an improviser in the grand tradition of European free playing.

(*) Orkestra Kith 'N Kin Cadence CJR 1081 Borgmann; Martin Mayes (frhn); Lol Coxhill (ss); Erik Balke (as, sno); Dietmar Diesner (as, ss); Jonas Akerblom (bsx); Pat Thomas (p, elec); Hans Reichel (g, daxophon); Christoph Winckel (b); Mark Sanders (d). 5/95.
 The Cooler Suite Grob 539 Borgmann; Peter Brötzmann (as, ts, cl); William Parker (b); Rashied Bakr (d) 1/97.
 Stalker Songs CIMP 160 Borgmann; Peter Brötzmann (ts, cl, tarogato); Wilber Morris (b); Dennis Charles (d). 9/97.
 The Last Concert: Dankeschön Silkheart SHCD 20151 As above, except omit Brötzmann. 5/98.
 BMN Trio ... You See What We're Sayin' CIMP 188 As above, except omit Charles; add Reggie Nicholson (d) 10/98.
The 1995 ensemble recording has a spirited hour-long piece (and a foolish ten-minute encore). There are few 'solos' as such, more disparate lines drawn by different groupings, with the rousingly arranged finale raising the spirits despite an amateurish recording.

The trio with Morris and Charles was a regular working outfit. Guesting on Stalker Songs, Brötzmann seems to be scaling himself down a bit for the occasion, and CIMP's 'truthful' sound isn't entirely adequate, but the two half-hour improvs are good and gripping. Charles died a few months later; the Silkheart documents their last preserved appearance – two enormous cuts plus another meaningless encore. A new trio convened to make You See What We're Sayin', which starts with a solemn tribute to the departed drummer before thundering through three more intense blows. Borgmann synthesizes a lot of the familiar uproar of his predecessors to ends which are intermittently dramatic.

Although recorded almost by chance on a spare tape he happened to have in his pocket, The Cooler Suite, from that now-defunct club in New York, has plenty of presence; it isn't a great recording and when the music peaks, there's troublesome distortion. Parker is often relegated to the background but he comes through with clarity here and there. Borgmann holds his own.

David Borgo

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, WHISTLE, CLARINET

A fine player, Borgo is also much admired as director of jazz at the University Of California San Diego and as the author of Sync or Swarm, a theoretical study of contemporary improvisation.

(*) Ubuntu Cadence CJP 1045 Borgo; George Lewis (tb); Jason Robinson (ts); Anthony Davis, Rick Helzer (p); Bob Magnusson (b); Nathan Hubbard, Bob Weller (d). 05.
The winner of the 1994 International John Coltrane Competition, Borgo has more of Dexter Gordon and Wayne Shorter in his sound. His tenor has a rich but edgy quality that, coupled with a strong harmonic sense and crisp but never mechanical rhythm, gives his work a compelling quality.

Most of his recording to date has been on small and hard-to-find labels, though some were covered in our last edition. Ubuntu is a fascinating programme of material by Abdullah Ibrahim, Harry Miller, Curtis Clark, Winston Ngozi and Zim Ngqawana, the cream of South African jazz. It's a very different record from Borgo, not least in having a certain consistency of tone and substance from start to finish. The large ensemble is again used in different combinations and with considerable taste and logic. Ibrahim's 'Blues For A Hip King' is the only disappointment, possibly a touch overworked. Otherwise, excellent, and the opening 'Nkosi Sikeleli Afrika', with Lewis blaring out his line like a preacher, is quite wonderful.

Ralph Bowen

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Experienced post-bopper who's seen service with Horace Silver, Renee Rosnes and elsewhere.

(*) Movin' On Criss Cross Criss 1066 Bowen; Jim Beard (p); Jon Herington (g); Anthony Jackson (b); Ben Perowsky (d). 12/92.
(*) Soul Proprietor Criss Cross 1216 Bowen; John Swana (t); Sam Yahel (org); Peter Bernstein (g); Brian Blade (d). 5/01.
 Keep The Change Criss Cross 1243 Bowen; Ryan Kisor (t); Orrin Evans (p); Reuben Rogers (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 10/03.

Bowen was already a mature player when he made his debut as leader. He'd been building up a stock of compositions since his teens and there are seven of them on Movin' On. The title-track is a lean but lyrical tune that propels him into the first of a batch of fine solos. 'A Little Silver In My Pocket' acknowledges an apprenticeship with Horace, and Beard even contributes an idiomatic solo. 'Just Reconnoitring' is the only disappointment and a giveaway title, noodling through some 'sheets of sound' stuff in a cursory way.

The follow-up was slow in coming and at first glance looks like a routine blowing situation. What saves it is the absolute confidence of the playing right through the group. Bowen's all over 'My Ideal' in an indolent, Dexterish way, and there are good things from Swana and Blade in particular. Perhaps too 'insiderish' to attract much public notice, but a cracking performance none the less. Keep The Change proceeds in a similar way. There's been nothing since, though Bowen has kept busy in Philadelphia and elsewhere, perhaps honing another batch of songs for a return to the studios.

Lester Bowie (1940–99)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Born in Maryland, he grew up in St Louis and then based himself in Chicago from the mid-'60s, becoming a major force in both the AACM and the Art Ensemble Of Chicago. He lived and worked in Africa and Jamaica for spells and finally found his most popular niche with his Brass Fantasy group.

 Duet Improvising Artists IAI 123854 Bowie; Phillip Wilson (d). 1/78.
 The Fifth Power Black Saint 120020 Bowie; Arthur Blythe (as); Amina Claudine Myers (p, v); Malachi Favors (b); Phillip Wilson (d). 4/78.

Bowie's '70s band provides a more straightforward kind of post-Chicago jazz, but this quintet is loaded with expressive talent; Blythe and Myers are the outsiders – he swaggeringly verbose, she a gospelish spirit – but they add new flavours to Bowie's sardonic music. The 18 minutes of 'God Smiled On Me' are several too many although the free-for-all in the middle is excitingly done, while '3 In 1' beautifully balances freedom and form. Wilson was briefly with the proto-Art Ensemble, later with Paul Butterfield, and was later cruelly murdered. The duos are strong, of their time, free music full of vernacular references. Very short duration.

 The Great Pretender ECM 829369 Bowie; Hamiet Bluiett (bs); Donald Smith (ky); Phillip Wilson (d); Fontella Bass, David Peaston (v). 6/81.
(*) All The Magic! ECM 810625 2CD As above, except omit Bluiett, Smith; add Ari Brown (ss, ts), Art Matthews (p). 6/82.

This was a disappointing band, at least on record. In concert, Peaston's rendition of 'Everything Must Change' was astonishingly uplifting, but the version on All The Magic! Is very tame. The Great Pretender began Bowie's exploration of pop standards as vehicles for free-jazz satire, but it tends to go on too long. Perhaps the typically resplendent ECM recording didn't suit the group, though the leader's feature on 'Rios Negroes' is fine. The second half of All The Magic! multitracks his trumpet into an expressionist cartoon of smears, growls, chirrups and other effects.

 The Odyssey Of Funk And Popular Music Vol. 1 BirdologyFDM 37004 Bowie; Joseph Gollehon, Ravi Best, Gerald Brazel (t); Joseph Bowie (tb, v); Luis Bonilla, Josh Roseman, Gary Valente (tb); Vincent Chancey (frhn); Bob Stewart (tba); Victor See Yuen (d); Dean Bowman (v). 9–10/97.
(*) When The Spirit Returns Birdology FDM 83471 As above, except omit Joseph Bowie. 9–11/99.

Bowie kept working until overtaken by liver cancer. By this time, the Brass Fantasy was a showbiz outfit and there's no shock in hearing them tackle 'Don't Cry For Me, Argentina', 'Nessun Dorma', and something each by Marilyn Manson and the Spice Girls. It's still fun, though, on the first of these at least; the later one is shadowed by Lester's looming demise, but the choice of material, apparently inspired by Bowie's teenage daughter, is even bolder and more contemporary.

Also, in brief:

() I Only Have Eyes For You / () Avant Pop ECM 825902 / 829563. 2/85; 3/86.

On record, Brass Fantasy only ever delivered a lightweight irreverence. The title of the second of these is an awful giveaway.

 Works ECM 837274. 81–86.

Selections from four ECM discs, plus one track ('Charlie M') from AEOC's Full Force.

Charles Brackeen (born 1940)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Oklahoma, he was influenced by Ornette Coleman but created his own intense sound and style. Ex-wife JoAnne is a significant piano stylist.

(*) Bannar Silkheart SHCD 105 Brackeen; Dennis Gonzalez (t); Malachi Favors (b); Alvin Fielder (d). 2/87.
 Attainment / * Worshippers Come Nigh Silkheart SHCD 110 / 111 Brackeen; Olu Dara (c); Fred Hopkins (b); Andrew Cyrille (d, perc); Dennis Gonzalez (perc). 11/87.

Apart from a 1968 disc for Strata East with three quarters of the Ornette Coleman group, Brackeen was a stranger to the studios until in 1986 the managing director of Silkheart persuaded the reclusive saxophonist to record again. In contrast to most reed-players active at the time, Coltrane wasn't the main influence. The stop-start melodic stutter of 'Three Monks Suite' on Bannar is immediately reminiscent of Ornette, while 'Allah' on the same album recalls Ayler. Brackeen favours a high, slightly pinched tone; his soprano frequently resembles a clarinet, and his tenor work often disappears into the altissimo range. Interestingly, 'Three Monks Suite' is wholly composed and Brackeen only really lets rip as a soloist on 'Story', a limping melody with enough tightly packed musical information to fuel two superb solos from the horns.

Gonzalez is a fine, emotive trumpeter, but he lacks the blowtorch urgency of Dara's more hotly pitched cornet. 'Worshippers Come Nigh' is an exciting jazz piece. 'Bannar' confusingly finds its way onto this session rather than the one named after it. Of the two discs cut at the session, Attainment is the less interesting, but only because there are no solos on a par with 'Worshippers' and 'Story'. Good support from the rhythm players, even if they aren't quite up to the quality of Haden and Blackwell.

JoAnne Brackeen (born 1938)

PIANO

JoAnne Grogan grew up in California and moved to NY after divorcing saxophonist Charles Brackeen. The only female Jazz Messenger (1969–72), she has a muscular but harmonically limpid solo style.

 Six Ate /  Snooze Candid 71009 / Choice CRS 109
Brackeen; Cecil McBee (b); Billy Hart (d). 3/75.
Much of Brackeen's earlier work is no long available. This is an exception. Originally called Snooze, one of the best of her originals, it's also still available in that form on Choice though it lacks the bonus track of 'I Didn't Know What Time It Was'. The material is nicely varied, with JoAnne tackling Miles's rarely covered 'Circle' and Wayne Shorter's always demanding 'Nefertiti'. There's a hint of a McCoy Tyner influence in some of the voicings, but she has her own strong voice already, as well she might at 36.

(*) Turnaround Evidence 22123 Brackeen; Donald Harrison (as); Cecil McBee (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 2/92.
On Turnaround, taped at Sweet Basil in New York, Brackeen's group kicks into top gear straight away with a finely judged version of 'There Is No Greater Love'. The set is dominated, though, by the original 'Picasso' (no discernible relation to the famous Coleman Hawkins solo) and by Ornette Coleman's title-tune, which is played very straight and confounds any notion that Brackeen avoids playing in orthodox blues formats. Harrison is hesitant here and there, forming his solos with unusual care, perhaps thrown off slightly by the pianist's use of unconventional supplementary harmonies. Smith and McBee are a dream combination, and the whole set is very well recorded, if a little toppy in places.

(*) Power Talk Turnipseed Music TMCD 08 Brackeen; Ira Coleman (b); Tony Reedus (d). 4/94.
The concert documented on Power Talk takes the wheel on an extra turn. Opening with a magnificent stop-action reading of 'There Is No Greater Love', Brackeen powers through a mostly standards trio, repeating 'Picasso' and 'Cosmic Ties And Mud Pies' from Where Legends Dwell and giving both the big treatment. Her young colleagues don't show her undue deference, forging ahead a couple of times as she pauses to elaborate points and then defiantly accelerating again as she changes pace to catch up. It must have been an exhilarating night.

* Pink Elephant Magic Arkadia 70371 Brackeen; Nicholas Payton (t); David Liebman (ss); Chris Potter (ss, ts); John Patitucci (b); Horacio El Negro Hernanadez (d); Jamey Haddad (perc); Kurt Elling (v). 3/99.
This sounds like a template for about five different albums and a proving ground for as many unpredictable and creative bands. As a soloist Brackeen is not as prominent as on her trio recordings, but she is emphatically in charge of the music, and the set showcases half a dozen wildly original new numbers. 'Beethoven Meets The Millennium In Spain' is a clever meeting of musical languages, the title-piece is sheer playfulness and wit, and 'What's Your Choice, Rolls Royce?' provides Kurt Elling with a wacky feature. His is not the only guest voice on the album. The ever-inventive Liebman is supreme on two numbers. Perhaps the centrepiece of the album is an unaccompanied variation on Dave Brubeck's 'Strange Meadowlark', a meditative excursion that clinches the old ballad's mysterious quality.

(*) Popsicle Illusion Arkadia 70372 Brackeen (p solo). 7/99.
This has the feel of a fire hydrant being turned on, at least in the number of bases it touches. Though we rate it highly, it's more for its individual, track-by-track achievements. At length, it's a tiring listen, given the sweeping changes which Brackeen brings. Boogie and blues variations jostle with what sound like homages to modern composers and a version of 'From This Moment On' that feels like the tune's being turned inside out. Strong and accomplished work from a very individual figure, but sample a track or two at a time.

Also, in brief:

 Aft Timeless TTD 115. 12/77.
Intriguing trio with Ryo Kawasaki (g) and Clint Houston (b).

 Prism Choice 1024 / Absord 148. 6/78.
Possibly available as an import, this duo with bassist Eddie Gomez urgently deserves wider circulation.

Don Braden (born 1964)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A swinging mainstream player who won Grammys with both Betty Carter and Jeanie Bryson. Now a solid recording artist in his own right.

 The Time Is Now / (*) Wish List Criss Cross 1051 / 1069
Braden; Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Steve Turre (tb on Wish List only); Benny Green (p); Christian McBride (b); Carl Allen (d). 1/91; 12/91.
Braden's debut was widely praised but it wasn't a patch on the sequel, an elegant set of standards and refreshingly straightforward originals. Instead of overloading themes with harmonic changes, Braden builds in bridge sections which shift the tempo from fours to threes. He's an intelligent arranger, too. Turre and Harrell wouldn't be everyone's idea of a simpatico brass-line, but Braden has them working in easy tandem without diluting what each does best; Harrell is unusually fiery on 'Just The Facts', a schematic minor blues with a gentle twist in the tail. It's the title-track, appropriately closing the record, that confirms Braden's enormous potential, a dreamy, almost wistful song that steadily uncovers its riches.

CORE COLLECTION

* After Dark
Criss Cross 1081 Braden; Scott Wendholt (t, flhn); Noah Bless (tb); Steve Wilson (as); Darrell Grant (p); Christian McBride (b); Carl Allen (d). 5/93.
The third Criss Cross marks a sudden and dramatic maturing of his style. Not only is Braden playing with grace and beauty as before, but his writing and arranging skills seem to have made a huge step forward. There is a nocturnal programme to the record which gives it a sombre, though by no means downbeat, emphasis. Originals like the uneasy 'R.E.M.' and the gently upbeat 'Dawn' are interspersed with 'You And The Night And The Music', 'Monk's Dream' and Stevie Wonder's 'Creepin''. An essential contemporary record.

* Brighter Days High Note 7076 Braden; Xavier Davis (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Cecil Brooks III (d). 01.
This is as straightforward and swinging as it gets, a top-notch hard-bop set with no pretensions and more swing than the biggest kids' playground you ever saw. Don pays tribute to Stanley Turrentine on 'Sweet T', nods to Coltrane on 'My Favorite Things', while still making the song his own, and even manages to banish memories of Duke's great soloists on his interpretation of 'Prelude To A Kiss'. He's never made a more coherent or a more relaxed album, and while it doesn't quite match up to the glory of After Dark, it's still a major statement by one of the best repertory players in the business at the moment.

(*) Workin' High Note HNCD 7155 Braden; Kyle Koehler (org); Cecil Brooks III (d). 6/05.
Typical of Braden not to deliver just another generic organ trio date. This is a beautiful set, atmospherically recorded at Cecil's with announcements left in place and a touch of background buzz. The group rips through 'You Can't Find Love' (an Earth, Wind And Fire song) as opener, but then Braden plays an unaccompanied welcome to his new baby daughter; he adds the tiny 'Moving In' later, also without accompaniment. There is a nice batch of originals in the centre of the set, with 'Where There's Smoke' generating terrific power over ten minutes, then a bit more funk with 'The Closer I Get To You', another subtle original 'The Vail Jumpers' and an orthodox funk-out on 'Feel Like Makin' Love' to finish the date. There's not an awkward moment, forced climax or unnecessary gesture anywhere on this.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Open Road Double-Time DTRCD 114. 7/96.
Lacks a certain focus, but in 'Lush Life' delivers a career-best performance, so still a considerable disc.

 The Fire Within RCA 63297. 99.
There are still copies of this around, despite RCA's apparent indifference to modern jazz. Kenny Kirkland was supposed to have been involved on some tracks but died before the recording and wasn't replaced. The trio cuts are still exceptional, but two other groups were also involved.

* Contemporary Standards Ensemble Double-Time DTRCD 177. 00.
Co-fronted with Terell Stafford (t) and Vincent Herring (as), so less focus on Braden himself. Fine record, though.

Bobby Bradford (born 1934)

TRUMPET, CORNET

Played with Ornette Coleman in Los Angeles in the '50s, and eventually replaced Don Cherry in the quartet in 1961; then closely associated with John Carter, both as a duo and in group contexts.

 Love's Dream Emanem 4096 Bradford; Trevor Watts (ss, as); Kent Carter (b); John Stevens (d, co). 11/73.
Bradford's best work with Ornette is apparently lost, and the recordings made under his own name are curiously unsatisfactory, full of good things but ultimately underachieved.

Most of this material originally appeared on two early Emanem LPs. There are a couple of extra tracks for the CD, including a second version of 'Coming On'. The material was recorded at Le Chat Qui Pêche club in Paris. Bradford had been in London two years before and made a couple of records for Freedom (later Nessa) with the Spontaneous Music Ensemble. He invited Watts and Stevens over to play at the club gig (there's a nice story about John, having gone in to get a light for his cigarette, leaving the gas burning for the week they were away) and called in Kent Carter, who already lived in France.

But for the tonality and timbre of the horns, the immediate impression is of some lost Ornette Coleman/Don Cherry date. It's clearly not Blackwell or Higgins at the kit. Stevens sounds immaculately on the money; Watts is in fine voice, endlessly inventive; only Bradford sounds dull. Most cuts have had to be edited for technical reasons, but it's still an interesting disc.

 Lost In LA Soul Note 121068 Bradford; James Kousakis (as); Roberto Miguel Miranda, Mark Dresser (b); Sherman Ferguson (d). 6/83.
 One Night Stand Soul Note 121168 Bradford; Frank Sullivan (p); Scott Walton (b); Billy Bowker (d). 11/86.
Lost In LA has precious few striking moments and the single-horn format of One Night Stand prompts some more of his bravura and his most thoughtful solos; but these are largely indifferent works. An important and adventurous player, Bradford has yet to recapture the brilliance of the 1973 Secrets with Carter; even the live sets seem to lose something of their burnish.

 Purple Gums Asian Improv AIR 0064 Bradford; Francis Wong (ts, f); William Roper (tba, perc). 10/02.
The nine pieces are all co-credited – 'No notes, no discussions, just horn to the lips, blow some air'. Which makes the rounded, harmonious results some tribute to a very simpatico threesome. Cornet, tenor and tuba would once have been a very scarce instrumentation and Bradford's place in the development of chamber-jazz is likeably honoured by such a set. Everyone does, though, play carefully and deferentially and across 71 minutes one might wish for the occasional eruption. Roper contributes a shaggy dog story or two as a spoken-word component and they fit in rather well. Bradford's elegance and choice of notes are unimpaired, though he wobbles a little here and there.

Carmen Bradford

VOICES

From Austin, Texas, but raised in California, and a ballad singer with genuine warmth. Has done sterling educational work at the University Of Southern California. Won a Grammy with George Benson.

 Finally Yours Evidence ECD 22186 Bradford; Bill Easley, Steve Greenfield (ts); Charlton Johnson (g); James Polk (p); a.o. 92.
(*) With Respect Evidence ECD 22115 Bradford; Charles Owens (sax); Donald Brown, Cedar Walton (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Dori Caymmi, Michael O'Neil (g); Robert Hurst (b); Ralph Penland (d); Bill Summers (perc). 7/93.
 Home With You Azica 72227 Bradford; Shelly Berg (p). 5/04.
Originally on Amazing, Carmen's debut isn't quite that, but it has some nice things going on. Her take on Ella's 'Rough Riding' is great and there isn't much that seems to faze that rich, sonorous voice. Ray Charles's 'I Believe To My Soul' perhaps steps on the emotional gas too hard, but this is a lady who feels every line and it's pointless to expect cool and laid-back performances.

The second album is a cracker and stands up well even after a decade and more. Walton was a great phone call and his 'Even Steven' is a highlight. The personnel is cleverly deployed: Caymmi is featured on a duo setting of 'Lush Life', Donald Brown takes some of the other piano parts. The material is strong and Carmen sounds in fantastic voice.

It's something of a mystery why ten years went by without a follow-up. Busy as she is, recording may simply not have seemed a priority. The new one finds the voice sounding maturer and more subtly inflected. There isn't quite the same power but in this intimate setting that doesn't matter too much. 'My Shining Hour' was an obvious choice in the circumstances and it's a triumph, but there are nice versions too of 'Take The "A" Train' (a seeming quote in there from Anita O'Day) and 'Sweet Georgia Brown', and Carmen indulges herself with a bit of modern pop in 'How Sweet It Is'. A successful disc, but With Respect is still the one to go for.

Perry Bradford (1893–1970)

PIANO, VOCALS

Born in Alabama and raised in Atlanta, he was working in Chicago before the First World War. Later became Mamie Smith's musical director. Known as Mule.

 And The Blues Singers In Chronological Order Document 5353 Bradford; Gus Aiken, Louis Armstrong, Johnny Dunn, Bubber Miley (c); Bud Aiken, William Dover, Herb Fleming, Charlie Green, Calvin 'Fuzz' Jones (tb); Harry Hull (btb, b, bhn); Buster Bailey (cl); Hersal Brassfield (cl, as, ts); Garvin Bushell (as, cl); Don Redman (as); James P. Johnson, Charles Edward Smith, Leroy Tibbs (p); Gus Horsley, Stanley Wilson (bj); Walter Wright (b, bhn); Ed Jackson, Kaiser Marshall (d); Julia Jones, Louise Vant (v, acc); Ethel Ridley (v). 5/23–2/27.

 A Panorama: 1923–1927 Timeless 1073 Similar to above. 23–27.

* I Ain't Gonna Play No Second Fiddle Frog 56 Similar to above. 23–27.

Bradford's not much more than a footnote in most jazz histories, but his association with some of the great names and his ability to create vivid blues settings and novelty songs of real musical worth – 'I Ain't Gonna Play No Second Fiddle' (with Louis Armstrong), 'Liza Johnson Got Better Bread Than Sally Lee' – make him a musician of real interest and charm. His vocals are workmanlike and it's really as a blues composer (he and Mamie Smith effectively kicked off the blues craze) that he is worth remembering. The Document set doesn't entirely exhaust the legacy and the chronological organization can be tiring, but it's probably the best resource. That said, either of the other two will do: Panorama has much the same stuff, with cuts by the Gulf Coast Seven and the Georgia Strutters; Frog also do a nice job. The Depression basically did for Bradford but he lived on through another two or three generations of popular music, largely forgotten but always ripe for rediscovery.

Tiny Bradshaw (1905–58)

VOICES, PIANO, DRUMS

A master of blues and jump, born in Youngstown, Ohio. Graduated in psychology from Wilberforce University but worked with Luis Russell and the Mills Blue Rhythm Band.

(*) Breakin' Up The House Proper Pairs 23 2CD Bradshaw; Shad Collins, Talib Dawud, Billy Ford, Henry Glover, Lincoln Mills, Sammy Yates (t); Leslie Ayres (t, p); Leon Comegys, Eugene Green, George Matthews, Andrew Penn, Alfonso Young (tb); Don Hill, Bobby Holmes, Russell Procope, Sonny Stitt (as); Ornington Hall (as, bs); Pritchard Chessman, Rufus Gore, George Nicholas, Red Prysock (ts); Happy Caldwell (ts, cl); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Duke Anderson, Wild Bill Davis (p); Jimmy Robinson (p, org); Les Erskine, Willy Gaddy, Leroy Harris, Bob Lessey (g); Clarence Mack, Curley Russell, Eddie Smith, Leonard Heavy Swain (b); Arnold Boling, Earl Fox Walker (d); Dorena Deane, Jack Wolf Fine (v). 9/34–7/51.

 Tiny Bradshaw, 1934–1947 /  ...1949–1951 Classics 5011 / 5031 Similar to above. 9/34–3/47; 11/49–7/51.

 The Great Composer King 653 Bradshaw; various personnels. 2/50–1/58.

'He wrote and played them all,' it says on the cover of The Great Composer, and while that's a bit overdone, he was a fantastic entertainer whose energy impressed Johnny Hodges. The first Classics documents the transition from swing to jump-blues and shows how shrewd a recruiter he was. Things like 'Well, Oh Well' and 'The Train Kept A'Rollin'' were jukebox hits. The later stuff is increasingly generic but never fails to entertain.

Ruby Braff (1927–2003)

CORNET, TRUMPET

Reuben – hence Ruby – Braff left his native Boston at the start of the '50s and began to record in New York with Vic Dickenson and Urbie Green. He played powerful, melodic cornet, utterly distinctive, and had an outsize personality. After a brief eclipse, Braff continued to make fine records into his seventh and eighth decades.

(*) Linger Awhile Vanguard 79608 Braff; Buck Clayton (t); Vic Dickenson, Benny Morton (tb); Samuel Margolis (ts, cl); Buddy Tate (ts); Edmond Hall (cl); Jimmy Jones, Nat Pierce, Sir Charles Thompson (p); Steve Jordan (g); Aaron Bell, Walter Page (b); Jo Jones (d). 52, 53, 54.

Some of the tracks are under Dickenson's leadership, but it's Ruby who's the main solo voice throughout, in a variety of partnerships. A long 'Sweet Sue, It's You' finds him in company with saxophonist Samuel Margolis, over whom posterity has drawn a veil. It bookends the disc with a wonderful 'I Can't Get Started', where Ruby is partnered by the effervescent Clayton, an interesting exercise in contrasting trumpet styles. Lots of good things in between, including 'Ghost Of A Chance' and 'I Cover The Waterfront', all played at length. Nice moments, too, from Morton, Hall, Tate and Thompson.

 Little Big Horn Fresh Sound FSRCD 321 Braff; Billy Byers (tb); Sam Margolis, Marty Napoleon (ts, cl); Milt Hinton (b); Jo Jones (d). 55.

Not the greatest of recordings, but some very nice performances, including 'Between The Devil And The Deep Blue Sea', 'Shootin' High' and 'In The Shade Of The Old Apple Tree'. Ruby cuts through the mix nicely and his top notes are mostly free from distortion. The rest don't fare quite so well.

* 2 × 2: Ruby Braff And Ellis Larkins Play Rodgers And Hart Vanguard 8507 Braff; Ellis Larkins (p). 10/55.

A dream ticket. Larkins is the consummate accompanist and he knew more about these songs than almost anyone currently working. Ruby is in full voice, both pungent and lyrical on 'My Funny Valentine', 'I Could Write A Book' (compare with Miles Davis's floating filigree), and the less well-known 'Where Or When' and 'I Married An Angel'. The sound is up close and very faithful to both instruments.

(*) Braff Lone Hill Jazz 10210 Braff; Lawrence Brown (tb); Coleman Hawkins (ts); Ernie Caceres (bs); Dave McKenna, Nat Pierce (p); Don Elliott (vib); Freddie Green (g); Eddie Jones (b); Buzzy Drootin (d). 55.

Lone Hill smartly snapped up this Columbia Portrait set, which seemed to disappear almost as soon as it was released. The personnel speaks for itself, and the prospect of hearing Braff in the company of Hawkins is irresistible. The addition of some bonus tracks only makes the set – which has a terrific cover picture – even more appealing.

 Hi-Fi Salute To Bunny RCA 2118250 Braff; Benny Morton (tb); Pee Wee Russell (cl); Dick Hafer (ts); Nat Pierce (p); Steve Jordan (g); Walter Page (b); Buzzy Drootin (d). 3–4/57.

(*) Easy Now RCA 211852 Braff; Emmett Berry, Roy Eldridge (t); Bob Wilber (cl, ts); Hank Jones (p); Mundell Lowe (g); Leonard Gaskin (b); Don Lamond (d). 8/58.

Not the most personable or accommodating figure to do business with (hence the 'Mr Hyde and Mr Hyde' joke), Braff is a hugely entertaining performer whose cornet style seems to have arrived a generation too late. It has an almost vocal agility that balances delicacy of detail with a strong underlying pulse and harmonic richness. Like Roy Eldridge, who joins him on some of the Easy Now tracks, he is a player who bridges the gap between early jazz and swing, and then between swing and (hard as it may be to square this with his conservative/mainstream niching) bebop. Listen, though, to the phrasing on the tribute to Bunny Berigan and it is possible to hear strong intimations of Fats Navarro and even that other style-switcher Charlie Shavers.

The two RCAs see him develop into a different player, and in embryo the protean stylist he was to remain until the '90s. Comparing these lushly mastered sessions with a recent Concord does the RCA technical department no favours, but it also confirms that Braff's mature style was in place almost from the beginning rather than coming along later in a bid to keep pace with the youngsters. One further indication of his bridge-building capacity is that old-school players like Morton and Russell manage to sound comfortable alongside the bustly Hafer.

* Complete Original Quartet/Quintet Sessions Gambit 69261 Braff; Roy Eldridge (t); Urbie Green (tb); Benny Goodman (cl); Sam Herman, Steven Jordan, Mundell Lowe (g); Hank Jones, Dave McKenna (p); Leonard Gaskin, Al Lucas, Tommy Potter (b); Buzzy Drootin, Don Lamond (d). 9/55–8/58.

A valuable gathering together of the small groups from the period. The sound isn't exceptional, but Braff's association with McKenna was one of the most fruitful of his career; two men so very different physically – Dave is huge – but with the same leathery romanticism in their playing. There probably isn't a single classic performance on this, though 'It's Wonderful' and 'Dancing In The Dark' would be on most fans' compilation tapes; just strong, melodic playing from start to finish.

 You're Getting To Be A Habit With Me Fresh Sound FSCD 1614 Braff; Hank Jones, Nat Pierce (p); Don Elliott (vib); Milt Hinton (b); Don Lamond (d). 59.

A fascinating reissue from a fertile time in Ruby's life, though also sadly the beginning of a longish fallow spell on record. 'Cabin In The Pines' and 'When Your Lover Has Gone', as well as most of the other tunes, are rarely played now in a jazz context, so there's a curious period feel to the set (actually two separate sessions). 'You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To' is great and Ruby's clever flattening of his top notes lends the piece a gently sardonic edge.

 Recovered Treasures Jump 1229 Braff; Bobby Hackett (c); Vic Dickenson (tb); Kenny Davern, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Al Klink (ts); Dave McKenna, Ralph Sutton (p); Marty Grosz, Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Jack Lesberg (b); Mel Lewis, Buzzy Drootin, Jake Hanna (d); strings. 1/61, 12/81.

The '60s were a thinnish time for Ruby, so anything from that decade has to be considered a plus. There is material from January 1961 from a club date with Sutton at Eddie Condon's, followed by the only surviving recordings of Braff with Hackett, stretching out over some familiar medley material; McKenna is stunning on these cuts. The final track, 'When You're Smiling', comes from 1981 and a loose jam with Dickenson, Davern and Klink. That's the solid jazz core of the album. The first few tracks are taken from a 1981 date on which he and Ralph Sutton played a series of classical arrangements by Dick Hyman, originally planned as a demo tape for André Previn while he was chief conductor at the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. They're pretty stiff and unyielding, but pleasant enough and certainly welcome to any dedicated Braff collector.

 Grand Reunion Chiaroscuro 117 Braff; Ellis Larkins (p). 72.

This was the first reunion of a duo that had got together in 1955 and was to repeat the experiment 20 years later. The pace is mostly gentle, partly to suit Larkins, who is a fine ballad player, but also to highlight a more reflective side to Braff. Ruby invests even his most languid solos with a hint of fires beneath, and when occasion demands he simply doubles up the tempo and raises the ante that way. There are a couple of extra tracks not on the original LP, but the best of the session is still to be found in 'Love Walked In' and a lively but philosophical version of 'Ain't Misbehavin''.

(*) Live At The New School Chiaroscuro CRD 126 Braff; George Barnes, Wayne Wright (g); Michael Moore (b). 4/74.

Despite the amiably waspish chat on the first of these, they couldn't get along together, but while they were playing rather than squabbling Braff and Barnes produced some of the best small-group jazz of the day. Needless to say, the critics were looking in the other direction at the time. The Chiaroscuro documents an entire concert at the prestigious New School for Social Research, a recording made by the audio engineering class. It was actually the last gig in an influential series known as Jazz Ramble, and it seems appropriate that it should have been a group touching so many stylistic bases that rang down the curtain. Braff's sponsorship of the young wasn't limited to having students in the booth. The inclusion of young Michael Moore in the quartet was a masterstroke, bringing forward one of the best mainstream–modern bassists of his generation and taxing him to the limit. You can almost hear Moore learning on some of the less familiar material, things like 'With Time For Love' and Don Redman's 'Nobody Else But You', just two of ten tracks that were not included on the original release.

 Ruby And Woody: It Had To Be Us Chiaroscuro 204 Braff; Woody Herman (cl, v); John Bunch (p); Wayne Wright (g); Michael Moore (b); Jake Hanna (d). 75.

Augmented by three alternates and an interview with George Avakian, this is a welcome part of the current Braff discography and will, of course, appeal to Herman collectors as well. The partnership is outstanding on 'I Hadn't Anyone Till You' and 'There Is No Greater Love', with both men blending tradition with a thoroughly modern approach.

 R & R Chiaroscuro 211 Braff; Ralph Sutton (p); Jack Lesberg (b); Gus Johnson (d). 10/79.

Back in 1980, Ralph Sutton released a batch of duo performances on the Chaz label. This is one of the most valuable, brought back from obscurity in 2002 by Chiaroscuro. Braff is in fine form and relishes the partnership from start to finish. There are lots of Armstrong references in Ruby's solos; 'Royal Garden Blues', 'Big Butter And Egg Man' and the closing 'Dinah', always a favourite, are pungently authentic. The recording isn't pristine but is more than acceptable.

 America, The Beautiful Arbors 19269 Braff; Dick Hyman (org). 4/82.

Brass and organ has been a winning combination for 400 years, and this is no exception. Hyman turns in lovely, flowing lines. Braff is responsive and alert, but also deeply evocative. This was originally issued as part of the George Wein Collection under the off-putting title Pipe Organ Recital Plus One, but in the wake of the World Trade Center attacks interest in sentimental Americana increased exponentially and this reissue has probably started tears coursing many times since. Few of the tunes are overtly nationalistic: 'When It's Sleepy Time Down South', 'Muskrat Ramble' and a rumbustious 'Dinah' are probably the best cuts.

 The Canadian Sessions Sackville 5005 2CD Braff; Gene DiNovi (p); Ed Bickert (g); Don Thompson (b); Terry Clarke (d). 79–84.

Themed much as big Dave McKenna likes to programme a set, with songs about love and the heart, the first half of this is clever, allusive and entirely convincing. The doubts creep in a bit later, when Ruby is playing with Thompson and Clarke and the pace somehow drops, not so much rhythmically as emotionally. The Gershwin and Berlin material is expertly played, but without much excitement. DiNovi has spent too many years in the shadows, but sounds convincing here, bringing his own agenda to the material without crowding the boss.

 As Time Goes By Candid 79741 Braff; Howard Alden (g); Frank Tate (b). 5/91.

Recorded live in London, with a thoroughly sympathetic group and an intriguing programme of songs. Braff is in excellent form, trying out variants on familiar harmonies and sometimes wholly recasting old songs. Mary Lou Williams's wonderful 'Lonely Moments' is too rarely covered and, following 'Shoe Shine Boy' as it does, gets the album off to a stunning start which isn't quite sustained.

(*) Live At The Regattabar Arbors ARCD 9131 Braff; Gray Sargent (p); Jon Wheatley (g); Marshall Wood (b). 11/93.

 Controlled Nonchalance Arbors ARCD 9134 As above except omit Wheatley; add Scott Hamilton (ts); Dave McKenna (p); Chuck Riggs (d). 11/93.

The earlier of these – by just a few days – was recorded on the 30th anniversary of President John F. Kennedy's assassination and in the heart of Kennedy country – the Regattabar is in the Charles Hotel, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Though there is no mention of the date's significance on the record, can it be that it contributed something to the quiet centredness of the session, which conveys a mood closer to melancholy than to nonchalance? Control, though, definitely. Braff's activities had been curtailed somewhat in the previous couple of years by attacks of the wind-player's curse, emphysema; but he was fit enough to take charge of both these groups, leading them through two superbly crafted programmes of standard material. 'No One Else But You' is revived and gives Jon Wheatley his most effective feature, and here Braff's increasingly obvious interest in playing saxophone lines on cornet (Ben Webster is his avowed model) is given full rein. Gray Sargent has a more plangent, blues-influenced style, which is effectively deployed on 'Give My Regards To Broadway' and on the brand-new 'Orange' – a departure in the Braff canon in that the composer introduces it on piano. That warms the instrument up nicely for McKenna, four nights later with the augmented group. Qualitatively there really isn't much to choose between these groups, but one misses the stillness and precision of the drummerless quartet and the slight sense that, except for 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue' (played with a Latin spin) and 'Sunday', both of which are triumphant, Braff is slightly eclipsed by the others.

[illegible]

* Calling Berlin: Volume 1

Arbors ARCD 19139 Braff; Ellis Larkins (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g). 6–7/94.

The Berlin they're calling on isn't the German capital but the great composer. This is the kind of intimate setting and this is the sort of material that suits Braff to a 't', and he plays superbly. 'Blue Skies' and 'Alexander's Ragtime Band' are impossible to fault, and 'How Deep Is The Ocean?' has a wise and almost philosophical quality that is utterly engaging. Working with Ella Fitzgerald turned Larkins into a front-row accompanist. He is never less than interesting; even when he and Braff seem to start in different keys, the pianist makes something of a virtue of their displacement.

 Calling Berlin: Volume 2 Arbors ARCD 19140 As above, except omit Pizzarelli. 6–7/94.

Pizzarelli doesn't appear on the second volume at all, a pity because he adds light and shade to 'It's A Lovely Day Today' and 'Russian Lullaby', and it would have been good to get more of him.

(*) Being With You: Ruby Braff Remembers Louis Armstrong Arbors ARCD 19163 Braff; Joe Wilder (flhn); Jon-Erik Kellso (c); Dan Barrett (tb); Scott Robinson (bs, cl); Jerry Jerome (ts); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Johnny Varro (p); Bob Haggart (b); Jim Gwin (d). 4/96.

Pops was always the single greatest influence on Braff's playing, and this nicely crafted tribute shows some of the ways. The group is a mixture of the great-and-good and relative unknowns, but the playing is of the highest quality; though fellow cornetist Joe is around for only a single track, the long 'Royal Garden Blues', he brings such colour and vibrancy to it as to colour the whole album. The opening take on 'I Never Knew (Where Roses Grew)' sets the tone for a richly varied session that ends on the theme tune ('When It's Sleepy Time Down South') and on a point of rest.

* Braff Plays Wimbledon: First Set /  ... Second Set Zephyr ZECD 15 / 16 Braff; Warren Vaché (flhn); Roy Williams (tb); Brian Lemon (p); Howard Alden (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 9/96.

Braff Plays Wimbledon: The Second Set ZECD 16 As above. 9/96.

Not, as it probably sounds, a live album but an exquisitely crafted studio session that sees Braff tackling a batch of unusual and rarely visited standards and bringing to them all a now familiar but no less startling creative verve. His ability to climb inside the harmonic structure of the tune and to reinvent it wholesale is endlessly satisfying, and on this occasion he is joined by three players – Vaché, the estimable Williams and Zephyr's leading light, Lemon – to create two hours of vibrant and intelligent jazz. The first set includes a long version of 'Take The "A" Train' and 'The Very Thought Of You', while the second majors on an extended reading of the Sweets and Basie jumper 'Jive At Five'. Williams is supreme, poised and unflustered by the fastest and sometimes not the most secure change of pace and key; and the rhythm section, which has been tested almost to destruction over the years, delivers a rich, elastic beat that is the perfect platform for Braff.

(*) Born To Play Arbors 19203 Braff; Kenny Davern (cl); Howard Alden, Bucky Pizzarelli, Jon Wheatley (g); Michael Moore, Marshall Wood (b); Jim Gwin (d). 4/99.

This is not a collective personnel but the actual line-up for a most unusual band, Braff as ever experimenting and trying out new combinations of sound. The combination of three guitars is excellent, filling out a rich harmonic backdrop for the two horns. Davern is in quiet and thoughtful form, but Ruby goes for broke with big solos on Charlie Chaplin's 'Smile' and on the opening 'Avalon'. He decides to sing on the final number, 'Born To Lose', but the performance is so weighted with irony that one is inclined to grant him the small self-indulgence in return for so imaginative and unexpected a set.

 Ruby Braff And Strings: In The Wee, Small Hours In London And NY Arbors 19219 Braff; John Bunch, Brian Lemon (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Lennie Bush, Michael Moore (b); Terry Jenkins, Kenny Washington (d); strings. 11/78–3/99.

The former of these is an elegant and mostly very good strings session, marked by solid and unspectacular solos. Lemon is masterly and Bucky Pizzarelli lopes along with amiable inattention, often sounding as if he's listening to some other set on headphones. The passage of time confirms its quiet authority.

The other set offers more recent material from the Big Apple. The emphasis was on tunes associated with Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra, but there's nothing either gently crooning or unduly blue-eyed about Braff's playing, which is as pugnacious and forthright as ever. Some of the ballad playing does sound as if it is past everyone's bedtime, but Ruby keeps the interest up, throwing in some unexpected items like the Irish song 'Too-Ra-Loo-Ra-Loo-Rai' from the New York sessions and a brilliant rendition of 'Go Fly A Kite'. The NY band is fantastic, with Pizzarelli and Bunch providing the kind of accompaniment that allows Ruby to take flight.

(*) The Cape Codfather Arbors 19222 Braff; Kenny Davern (cl); Tommy Newsom (ts); John Bunch (p); Howard Alden (g); Michael Moore (b); Kenny Washington (d). 3/99.

 Music For The Still Of The Night Arbors 19221 As above, except omit Davern, Newsom. 00.

Arbors have done him proud over the last few years, and Ruby turns in another cracking set on The Cape Codfather. Nothing to set the heather on fire, innovation-wise, but solid standards jazz and a rare Braff original in 'Orange' which is just about the shortest thing on the set but certainly one of the most compelling. Davern is his grouchy, curmudgeonly best (let's hope they didn't have to share a dressing room), and the now familiar line-up does its stuff with impressive ease and assurance..

Music For The Still Of The Night carries on the theme. Lest anyone think this is a mild, late-night set of slow jazz ballads, it actually comes across much more pungently than that, a set of mid-tempo swingers that allows Ruby to do his stuff with uncomplicated authority. 'When It's Sleepy Time Down South' and 'Willow Weep For Me' are astonishingly good, and completely unsurprising. The miracle is that Ruby continued to turn in quality jazz performances well past his 70th birthday.

(*) I Hear Music Arbors 19244 Braff; Tommy Newsom (ts); Bill Charlap (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); John Beal (b); Tony DeNicola (d); Daryl Sherman (d). 7/00.

A new band this time out, but not much significant difference in the sound. Ruby is in great form on 'Wouldn't It Be Loverly?' and a brisk and breezy 'Chicago Medley'. His tone and attack sound as supple and responsive as ever, and he deliberately softens his approach around Newsom. All the way from the opening title-track to the last bars of the original 'We're All Through', this exudes delight.

 Watch What Happens ... Arbors 19259 Braff; Dick Hyman (p); Howard Alden (g); Jake Hanna (d). 9/01.

You wouldn't know it from the music, but this was recorded in Manhattan just one day after the World Trade Center attacks. Ruby is in spanking form and if the trauma of the day before hit him at all, it wasn't until after this beautifully crafted set was put to bed. There was no bass-player, possibly because of disruption in the city, and Alden had to be called in to sub for Bucky Pizzarelli, but you wouldn't think that was anything other than the planned session. 'The Blue Room' is a tour de force, and it's only topped by a lovely reading of 'Over The Rainbow' and by a version of 'Shadowland', which counts as one of Ruby's best solos of recent years. He and Hyman have a telepathic partnership and Hanna is in the groove from start to finish. Lovely as it is, thank God they weren't tempted to re-record 'America, The Beautiful'.

* You Brought A New Kind Of Love Arbors ARCD 19260 Braff; Bill Charlap, Dick Hyman (p); Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Jake Hanna (d). 01.

Though ailing and at times audibly short of strength, Braff plays here with the studied sincerity that made him such a great soloist. There are no emotional fireworks, just a steady restatement of the musical armature that seems to reveal much more than a florid approach could. The melodic understanding is rich and deep. On the title-track (wonderful) and 'Between The Devil And The Deep Blue Sea', Braff manages to hint at half a dozen harmonically related songs without ever getting into a tiresome quotation game. Ruby's thoughtfulness has never been better evidenced than on these trios and quintets.

 C'Est Magnifique! Arbors 19270 Braff; Bucky Pizzarelli (g); John Pizzarelli (g, v); Ray Kennedy (p); Martin Pizzarelli (b); Jim Gwin (d); Rachel Domber, Ross Firestone, Dan Morgenstern, Daryl Sherman (v). 6/02.

These were the last studio recordings. Braff was seriously ill with a pulmonary disorder and was transported by wheelchair much of the time. Even so, he scarcely sounds like an old man on most of these tracks, playing with all his old subtlety, still building up solos from the bottom note of a sequence, still sounding pungent and romantic by turns. As usual, some relatively unusual material, including 'Was I To Blame For Falling In Love With You', 'When A Woman Loves A Man' and 'My Honey's Lovin' Arms'. The Pizzarellis play supportively, but with imagination. The Cole Porter title-tune features an extraordinary vocal chorus consisting of the session producer Rachel Domber, singer/pianist Daryl Sherman and two of the most distinguished jazz writers, who happened to be in the studio. A lovely, warm curtain call.

Also, in brief:

 Ruby Got Rhythm /  Where's Freddie Jazz Colours 874716 2 / 874773 2. 51, 54, 67; 67.
Sessions from 1951, 1954 and 1967 on the first disc and from 1967 on the second, featuring the Alex Welsh band, and featuring Vic Dickenson, George Wein, Ed Hall and many others.

 Complete Recordings Featuring Jim Hall Gambit 69620. 58.
These dates were co-led with Hank Jones, who actually takes much of the credit on this useful compilation. Variable sound, but well within acceptable limits. Material from Goes Girl Crazy, You're Getting To Be A Habit and Easy Now.

 Concord Jazz Heritage Series Concord Jazz 4833. 74–95.
Not easy to sum up such a wonderful archive, but track by track this is a jewel.

 Mr Braff To You Phontastic 7568. 10/83.
The title offers a nice insight into Ruby's character, abrasive, but able to send himself up. The music's tough and playful by turns, too. Scott Hamilton features.

(*) Ruby Braff And Dick Hyman Play Nice Tunes Arbors ARCD 19141. 94.
That they do, but in a curiously uninvolving way.

 You Can Depend On Me Arbors 19165. 9/98.
Rising 70, and ably abetted by Johnny Varro and Bucky Pizzarelli, Ruby sounds in good form. 'S'posin'' and 'Big Butter And Egg Man' stand out.

 Variety Is The Spice Of Braff Arbors 19194. 02.
Several groups represented but the variety actually blunts the impact rather than enhancing it.

Anthony Braxton (born 1945)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, ALL OTHER SAXOPHONES AND CLARINETS, FLUTE, ELECTRONICS, PERCUSSION

Few modern musicians have been so extensively documented. Joined the AACM in Chicago and emerged as a free-jazz experimenter but one who claims an influence from the cool, white sound of Paul Desmond and Warne Marsh. An enormous body of work ranges from solo saxophone performance to huge orchestral and operatic projects, the latter based on a highly personal cosmology/mythography admixed equally of African sources and science fiction.

 Three Compositions Of New Jazz Delmark DS 423 Braxton; Wadada Leo Smith (t, perc); Leroy Jenkins (vn, vla, perc); Muhal Richard Abrams (p, clo, cl). 4–5/68.
 Anthony Braxton/B-X/N-O-147A Sunspot 524 As above, except omit Abrams; add Steve McCall (perc). 9/69.
 This Time ... Sunspot 525 As above. 1/70.
The dateline on Three Compositions is significant, a year of radical departures and revolutionary hopes. The disc contains two compositions by Braxton, one by Smith. As John Litweiler suggests in a useful biographical liner-note, the middle piece is the one in which the new language that Braxton, Smith and Abrams are articulating can most readily be accessed. The saxophonist still sounds hot and fierce, still the disciple of Parker and Dolphy, not yet of Marsh and Desmond. All the same, these graduation exercises by the 1968 AACM show class. The loose, drummerless concept works well for all three, and the music, though still slightly raw, stands up well after 40 years.

The quartets with Jenkins, Smith and McCall, originally on BYG/Actuel, are a welcome reappearance of two sets that illustrate the same aesthetic with equal clarity. The addition of a percussionist gives the music a fleeting impression of regular metres. The two non-Braxton compositions are Smith's brooding processional 'The Light On The Dalta' (sic) and Jenkins's 'Simple Like', a howling atavistic 'blues'. Braxton's own procedures were at this time closer to free improvisation than they became later. Full appreciation of both the later sets is hampered by shaky sound quality, which blurs most of the detail, and a sometimes capricious multi-instrumentalism.

♛ * For Alto Delmark 420 Braxton (as solo). 10/68.
An epoch in modern jazz. Here Braxton virtually deconstructs his instrument. The piece dedicated to John Cage moves into areas where the saxophone is no longer played idiomatically or even identifiably but creates it own instant sound-world, a philosophy very much in keeping with Cage's own. Bent notes, smears, trills and tongue-slaps are by no means new in jazz, indeed they have always been part of the jazz musician's dialect, but what Braxton does here is to make them the basis of a new language.

There are moments when he appears to invoke and to subvert the structure of the blues, and it is possible to hear the whole of For Alto as a radical gloss on the blues. But it's no mere musicological exercise; Braxton creates a highly personal drama and one that was to provide the template for much of what he was to do subsequently. For Alto is one of the genuinely important American recordings, still powerfully listenable and endlessly fascinating.

 Donna Lee Free America/Universal 067 849-2 Braxton; Michael Smith (p); Peter Warren (b); Oliver Johnson (d). 72.
(*) Saxophone Improvisations Series F Free America/Universal 087 345-2 Braxton (as solo). 72.
Recorded in Paris, where the whole American free jazz community seemed to have decamped at the beginnng of the '70s. Braxton's exploration of 'the tradition' was just getting under way at this point and his interrogation of 'Donna Lee' and 'You Go To My Head' sit strangely alongside his original compositions.

A week after the group recording, Braxton returned to Studio Decca and taped a further series of solo alto saxophone improvisations. The tracks are again dedicated to tutelary presences in Braxton's world, from fellow AACM member Maurice McIntyre, to utopian inventor Buckminster Fuller and chess grandmaster Bobby Fischer. There is a spectrum of attacks and articulations within the 'Composition No 26' range. Again, one senses that each section is devoted to specific technical parameters. These, though, are never the only point of the exercise. These are vividly expressive pieces from a master musician.

* News From The 70s Felmay 7005 Braxton; Kenny Wheeler (flhn); George E. Lewis (tb); Dave Holland (b); Barry Altschul (d). 5/72–11/76.
Braxton's second creative high-water mark came through his membership of Circle and his association with Chick Corea, Kenny Wheeler, Dave Holland and Barry Altschul. The latter trio provide the anchor to this valuable set, which is edited by the musicologist Francesco Martinelli, using tapes long hidden away in Braxton's home. Long-standing fans who these days are used to very high opus numbers indeed will be excited by the inclusion of 'Composition 8c/g', two striking solo horn performances, and even more enticingly 'Compositions -1 & -2'. The first of these is a Town Hall recording of Braxton on clarinet with Dave Holland on cello, and it has been heard before. 'Four Winds' is also familiar (though not this version) from Holland's classic Conference Of The Birds disc on ECM. Braxton is immensely engaging on his high-end instruments (including piccolo) and Lewis is in powerful, almost tailgating form. Wheeler's flugelhorn work is as intense and thoughtful as ever on the other quartet piece. Rounding out the set, a very effective clarinet/bass duo with Dave Holland.

Braxton's articulation is still boppish and phrase-based, but one can also hear him break his line down into constituent parts, experiment with drones and almost toneless passages, and delve into rhythmic complexities which draw something from Coltrane's later period with Rashied Ali.

(*) What's New In The Tradition Steeplechase 37003 2CD
Braxton; Tete Montoliu (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/74.

The two-volume In The Tradition was Braxton's first released attempt to show that underneath the hard edge there was a jazz spirit. It's an awkward, strangely antiquated and often unappealing session, largely because Montoliu was so patently at odds with Braxton's intentions. The saxophonist's lines on shibboleths like 'Ornithology' are so clearly drawn as to render the piano accompaniment almost redundant. The bass and drums by contrast are almost ideally adapted to Braxton's needs, a particular tribute to NHØP's resilience and catholicity of taste. The bassist's finest moment is a sombre contrabass/contrabass clarinet duet on 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat', the most funereal of funeral music.

 First Duo Concert Emanem 4006 Braxton; Derek Bailey (g). 6/74.

The two players met and rehearsed the day before the London concert and swapped notes. Braxton did not want to improvise freely, while Bailey did not want to play predetermined structures. The ensuing concert represented a compromise in which each piece – or 'area' – was about certain types and categories of sound: staccato, sustained, and so on. Two pieces were set aside as solos. Braxton's 'Area 9' is one of his unaccompanied alto essays: straightforward, jazz-based and emotionally unemphatic. Notwithstanding the mismatch, some fascinating music.

(*) Trio & Duet Sackville SKCD2-3007 Braxton; Leo Smith (t); Richard Teitelbaum (syn); Dave Holland (b). 9/74.

Sackville have a very decent track record with the avant-garde and this is one of the best of their 'creative improvised music classics'. The trio cut is a 19-minute version of 'Composition No. 36' with Smith and Teitelbaum, followed by a small group of duo standards performances with Holland, which count among the best of Braxton's encounters with the tradition; 'You Go To My Head' is particularly good.

 Quartet (Dortmund) 1976 hatOLOGY 548 Braxton; George Lewis (tb); Dave Holland (b); Barry Altschul (d). 76.

A vintage line-up and a very powerful set that finds Braxton juggling post-bop, free improvisation and a more structured approach to jazz composition. The sound quality is good and all four players clearly defined, though Holland is a bit muffled and rumbly in some passages.

 Quintet (Basel) 1977 hatOLOGY 545 Braxton; George E. Lewis (tb); Muhal Richard Abrams (p); Mark Helias (b); Charles 'Bobo' Shaw (d). 7/77.

Concentrating very largely on Braxton's 'Composition No. 69' and its derivatives, this finds him once again in the company of the catalytic Abrams. At some distance, the music seems simpler, more discursive and unexpectedly open-textured, perhaps because the pianist hints constantly at generic source material. Shaw is a little inclined to treat the material as if it were merely expanded bebop. Lewis, on the other hand, revels in his role and manages once again to cement the association between Braxton's radicalism and his deep awareness of the jazz and swing traditions. Braxton limits himself to alto, sopranino and clarinet.

(*) Solo (Köln) 1978 Golden Years Of New Jazz 17 Braxton (as solo). 78.

* Solo (Milano) 1979: Volume 1 /  ... Volume 2 Golden Years of New Jazz 20 / 23 As above. 79.

Braxton seemed to jump from Parker to a language all of his own, but the influence is certainly there. As usual, he mixes original compositions and heterodox standards interpretations. The first date has a wonderful 'Impressions', which was something of a signature piece for Braxton in those years, but even that is topped by the brilliant 'I Remember Clifford' and 'Out Of Nowhere' on the Milano date. These are stunning performances, as are 'Compositions 8g/I' and 'Composition 77b', both again on the excellent Italian session.

 Composition No. 94 For Three Instrumentalists (1980)
Leo/Golden Years of New Jazz GY 3 Braxton; Ray Anderson (tb); James Emery (g, elec). 4/80.

Braxton's brief association with Ray Anderson offered him a range of singing tonalities not available from other instruments, and whenever the two worked together Braxton's own playing seemed to open out. Recorded live in Bologna, the three sections of 'Composition No. 94' are played forwards and then, risible as it may sound, played backwards. Graham Lock points out in his informed and illuminating liner-note that Braxton was increasingly thinking in terms of visual parallels at this time, and much of the piece seems to be concerned with the movement of water or cloud, or with the shifting patterns of fabric. This is apparently the only recording of the trio, which mitigates its poor quality somewhat.

(*) Composition No. 96 Leo CD LR 169 Braxton (cond); very large ensemble. 5/81.

This apocalyptic monolith is dedicated to Karlheinz Stockhausen and reflects Braxton's interest in the relationship between 'dynamic symbolism' (the Jungian archetypes, close enough) and planetary change. The symbols are realized as projected photographic slides of actual physical phenomena. Braxton's earlier experiments with large-scale orchestral 'composition' were not particularly happy. It's ironic that while one of the routine criticisms levelled at his small-group work is that it is too rigidly formalized, his orchestral works can sound unproductively chaotic.

Graham Lock's immensely detailed liner-note explains the genesis and structure of the music, but essentially Composition No. 96 consists of 16 separate elements and their numerological product, seven distinct parts, which move from the vibrant collisions of the opening through slower and faster sections, punctuated by fermata or pauses like those that signal the beginning of cadenzas in classical concertos. Even at the level of pure sound, it is an impressive achievement. The Composers And Improvisers Orchestra has an ad hoc feel, and some of the transitions sound fudged and incomplete. The only recognizable jazz name in the ensemble is trombonist Julian Priester.

(*) Solo (Pisa) 1982 Leo Golden Years 28 Braxton (as solo). 82.

The crowd went wild for this, though only after Braxton treated them to 'Giant Steps'. It's excellent on its own terms and usefully fills in one of the few chronological gaps in the story. Decent sound for a live date, even if it's a bit heavy on audience noise.

 Four Compositions (Quartet) 1984 Black Saint 120086 Braxton; Marilyn Crispell (p); John Lindberg (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 9/84.

(*) Six Compositions (Quartet) 1984 Black Saint 120092 As above. 84.

(*) Quartet (London) 1985 Leo CD LR 200/201 2CD As above, except omit Lindberg; add Mark Dresser (b). 11/85.

(*) Quartet (Birmingham) 1985 Leo CD LR 202/3 2CD As above. 11/85.

* Quartet (Coventry) 1985 Leo CD LR 204/205 2CD As above. 11/85.

(*) Five Compositions (Quartet) 1986 Black Saint 120106 As above, except omit Crispell; add David Rosenboom (p). 7/86.

For all his compositions for amplified shovels, 100 tubas and galactically dispersed orchestras, the core of Braxton's conception at this period remains the conventional jazz quartet. The touring group of 1984–5 was of remarkable vintage and Crispell's piano-playing was one of its outstanding features. There are unauthorized recordings of this band in circulation, but the Leo sets are absolutely legitimate, and pretty nearly exhaustive; the CDs offer good-quality transfers of the original boxed set, six sides of quite remarkable music that, in conjunction with the other quartet sessions, confirm Braxton's often stated but outwardly improbable interest in the Lennie Tristano school, and in particular the superb harmonic improvisation of Warne Marsh. Those who followed the 1985 British tour may argue about the respective merits of different nights and locations, but there really isn't much to separate the London, Coventry and Birmingham sets for the non-specialist. Record sleeves – and Graham Lock's Boswellian notes – offer a breakdown of the compositions performed and their sequence, but it's worth noting how often they are collaged with 'Composition No. 96', the 'multiple-line' orchestral piece which serves as a main reference point for the Coventry date. Lock also discusses a range of subjects with Braxton: Frankie Lymon, Coltrane, Warne Marsh, chess, the blues, the nature of music itself.

Though the Birmingham set reaches a hectic climax with an encore performance of 'Kelvin 40(O)', the extra half-star has to go to Coventry, first for the interview material, but also for the most sheerly beautiful performance in Braxton's entire recorded output, the peaceful clarinet music on 'Composition No. 40(N)' that ends the first set. Nothing else on the remaining five discs quite reaches that peak of perfection. Rosenboom is a poor substitute for Crispell on the 1986 set, but the rhythm section of Dresser or Lindberg and Hemingway was beginning to sound custom-made by this stage.

* Six Monk's Compositions (1987) Black Saint 120 116 Braxton; Mal Waldron (p); Buell Neidlinger (b); Bill Osborne (d). 7/87.

These are a triumph. Without a hint of pastiche, Braxton reinvents half a dozen obscurer Monk tunes. Waldron is there to confirm the apostolic succession, but Braxton's readings are thoroughly apostate, furiously paced and unapologetically maximal.

 Victoriaville 1988 Victo 7 Braxton; Paul Smoker (t); George Lewis (tb); Evan Parker (ts); Bobby Naughton (vib); Jöelle Léandre (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 10/88.

This has an indefinable 'supergroup' feel and attendant awkwardness. Consisting of two long Braxton compositions – 141 and 142, the latter only a fifth the length of the titanic opener – it's familiar enough territory, but marked out by some extraordinary showmanship from Braxton, Smoker and Lewis, all of whom seem to be having great fun. Parker is more reserved, but also seems to be most conscious of what is happening elsewhere in the group, notably bass and vibraphone, where the harmonic decryption is going on.

CORE COLLECTION

* Eugene (1989)

Black Saint 120137 Braxton; large 'creative orchestra'. 1/89.

Eugene* is one of Braxton's finest larger-group recordings; this features eight compositions dating from 1975 to 1989, and was recorded in Eugene, Oregon, during a 'creative orchestra' tour of the Pacific North-West. Trombonist Mike Heffley originally proposed and subsequently organized the tour. The earliest of the pieces, 'Composition No. 45', was written for a free-jazz festival in Baden-Baden and is defined by Braxton in his Composition Notes C as 'an extended platform for the challenge of post-Coltrane/Ayler functionalism'. A march, it anticipates the more complex 'Composition No. 58' (not included here) but demonstrates how creatively Braxton has been able to use the large-scale 'outdoor' structures he draws from Henry Brant, Sun Ra and traditional marching music, to open up unsuspected areas of improvisatory freedom; the link with Ayler's apocalyptic 'Truth Is Marching In' is immediately obvious. 'Composition No. 91' is a delicately pointillistic piece with a much more abstract configuration. Less propulsive than 'No. 45' or the more conventional ensemble-and-soloists outline of 'No. 71', it underlines the composer's brilliant grasp of instrumental colour; synthesizer and electric guitar provide some unfamiliar tonalities in the context of Braxton's work and, perhaps in reaction, he limits his own playing to alto saxophone. Braxton's work has taken on an increasingly ritualistic quality, as in the processional opening and steady two-beat pulse of 'Composition No. 134'. As such, it stands beside the work of Stockhausen and the composers mentioned above. If its underlying philosophy is millennial, its significance is commensurate with that.

(*) Vancouver (Duets) Music & Arts 611 Braxton; Marilyn Crispell (p). 6/89.

The label seemed devoted around this period to documenting Braxton in duo situations. This is perhaps the best of them, catching him with a collaborator who always seemed to intuit best what he was about. Braxton plays alto and flute exclusively, while Crispell conjures up huge, ringing sonorities from what sounds like a beautiful piano. 'Composition No. 136/ No. 14 (+112+30)/No. 62' is despatched in a continuous three-quarter-hour performance.

* Duets: Hamburg 1991 Music & Arts 710 Braxton; Peter Nikolaus Wilson (b). 2/91.

Most of these pieces, in the 'Composition No 150' series, were specifically written for reeds/bass duets. It's hard to say whether they sound any more idiomatic than any other selection of Braxton musics, but the interplay between composer and the late bassist, one of the most thoughtful performers and commentators on the European free scene, is arresting and often moving, particularly when Braxton keeps to a more orthodox register.

* Four (Ensemble) Compositions Black Saint 120124 Braxton; Robert Rumboltz (t); Roland Dahinden, John Rapson (tb); Don Byron (cl, bcl); Marty Ehrlich (f, picc, cl, as, ts); J. D. Parran (f, cl, bcl, acl, bamboo f); Randy McKean (cl, as, bcl); Ted Reichman, Guy Klucevsek (acc); Amina Claudine Myers (org, v); Jay Hoggard (vib, mar); Lyndon Achee, Warren Smith (perc). 92.

(*) Composition No. 165 New Albion NA 050 Braxton; University Of Illinois Creative Music Orchestra. 2/92.

The material on Four (Ensemble) Compositions is a combination of brand-new compositions – numbers 163 and 164 – with a fascinating performance of the pivotal 'Composition No. 96'. This time, the orchestra includes time-served jazz players and improvisers, and the piece takes on a limber, relaxed charm that it can't altogether claim on the Leo recording. 'Composition No. 165', on the New Albion, is surprisingly direct and unfussy, but it lacks the element of surprise and there are moments when it drifts perilously close to cosy classicism.

 (Victoriaville) 1992 Victo 21 Braxton; Marilyn Crispell (p); Mark Dresser (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 8/92.

The analogy with John Coltrane's classic quartet is reinforced by a stirring encore rendition of Trane's blues-based 'Impressions', a signature piece for Braxton. The group is in wonderful form, perhaps less engaged and certainly less well recorded than on their closely documented British tour in 1985, but still in powerful form. 'Composition 147' serves as the multiple-line anchor piece in most of these improvisations, much as 'Composition 96' did in earlier days, and it's worth spending some time following Braxton's procedures here.

(*) 9 Standards (Quartet) 1993 Leo CD LR 237/238 2CD Braxton; Fred Simmons (p); Paul Brown (b); Leroy Williams (d). 2/93.

This was effectively a pick-up group, albeit a highly experienced one. Simmons is known to have worked with Dewey Redman, while Brown and Williams were a useful hard-bop partnership in the '70s. As a working unit, they sound seamless and instinctive. With the exception of Simmons's opening 'In Motion', all the tunes are standards or blowing themes. The set includes Braxton's first documented version of 'On Green Dolphin Street', though we must correct Art Lange's suggestion that Braxton hasn't tackled Coltrane's 'Impressions' more than once before. There are two or three versions currently available, none more straightforwardly in the tradition than this, though.

Performing 'What's New' on flute is an interesting oddity. This is now one of Braxton's least-used instruments, and it's fascinating to hear him negotiate the changes at some speed (in vertical terms, if not in actual enunciation). 'Cherokee' is not much more than a settler, to follow the Simmons tune and give the band some familiar material to stretch out on. Heard unannounced, Braxton sounds resolutely mainstream, suggesting one of the white saxophonists of the '50s, curbing any hint of whoop or holler.

* Duo (London) 1993 Leo CD LR 193 Braxton; Evan Parker (ts). 5/93.

* Trio (London) 1993 Leo CD LR 197 As above, except add Paul Rutherford (tb). 5/93.

The duo is almost telepathic, as intricate, bleached lines spiral upwards at ever-higher levels of organization. Parker in particular sounds as though he has awakened ancestral ghosts, at a couple of points sounding disconcertingly like one of Braxton's masters, Warne Marsh, and hovering on the verge of harmonic improvisation throughout the set. In strict harmonic terms, he may even be ahead of his partner in this sort of project. He seems to be able to hear harmonics two places above the ostensible playing position and to bring them into play quite seamlessly and unforcedly.

He is doing the same thing on the trio set, recorded at the same London festival. Rutherford's contribution is to make the music more abstract, confounding Braxton's tendency still to fall back on bebop discourse. These are exhilarating performances, and very listenable.

(*) The Braxton Quartet Plays Twelve Braxton Compositions Music & Arts CD 835 2CD Braxton; Marilyn Crispell (p); Mark Dresser (b); Gerry Hemingway (d, mar). 7/93.

Everyone who heard the group during its residencies in Santa Cruz and at Yoshi's nightclub in Oakland concedes that it was playing at its peak, while these recordings are probably the best and most generously balanced this line-up had enjoyed to date, which undoubtedly helps the complex, richly textured music to make its maximum impact. Braxton dips back into his composition books to revive some early ideas like '23C' and '40(O)', one of the early Kelvin series, but he also includes some of the more recent, theatre-based works, such as 'Composition 173', later documented with a full orchestral ensemble. The choice of material is slightly less varied on the Yoshi's discs, which were released on hatART and are currently deleted, and the playing is rather compressed in places. However, Crispell is in exceptional form and plays with unqualified brilliance from start to finish.

(*) Charlie Parker Project hatOLOGY 2-612 Braxton; Paul Smoker (ss, ts); Ari Brown (ss, ts); Misha Mengelberg (p); Joe Fonda (b); Pheeroan akLaff, Han Bennink (d). 10/93.

For anyone who doubts Braxton's understanding of bebop language or who feels he has moved far beyond it, try the amazing readings of 'Dewey Square' and 'An Oscar For Treadwell', not the best known of Parker compositions but given extended interpretations here. The other horns were brilliantly chosen – Smoker hot and dry, Brown just hot, while Misha Mengelberg and Bennink take a pawkily subversive line. Near perfect.

(*) Live At Merkin Hall Music & Arts 949 Braxton; Richard Teitelbaum (syn). 4/94.

Two large, slabby improvisations and an encore. The whole event sprawls awkwardly, but one can hear Braxton responding to the synthist's old-fashioned sound and coming back with some elegantly shaped and often witty ideas of his own. It sounds companionable and alert.

(*) With The Creative Jazz Orchestra Leo CD LR 453/454 2CD Braxton; Creative Jazz Orchestra. 5/94.

Directed by the ever-resourceful Nick Purnell and conducted by Braxton, the Creative Jazz Orchestra is a highly responsive and well-schooled unit with a fair smattering of familiar British jazz names: Iain Dixon, Nikki Iles, Richard Iles, Gary Culshaw, Mike Walker. The material here is for vocalists, creative orchestra and constructed environment. 'Composition No. 126' is subtitled 'Trillium Dialogues M – Joreo's Vision Of Forward Motion', while 'Composition No. 175' is premised on a series of mythic encounters at Garthstone Castle. Full texts are provided, but no annotation to explain where these narratives sit in the Trillium opus. Some of the writing is prosaic in the extreme – 'Our children must be told about what ethics really are – and why the world of spirituality is serious' – but then 'Body And Soul' doesn't make very good reading either, and the singing (Jackie Perkins, Lesley Davies, Paul Phoenix, Paul McNamara) is consistently good across both discs.

 Knitting Factory (Piano/Quartet): Volume 1 Leo CD LR 222/223 2CD Braxton; Marty Ehrlich (as, ss, cl); Joe Fonda (b); Pheeroan akLaff (d). 94.

 Piano Quartet, Yoshi's, 1994 Music & Arts CD 849 4CD As above, except omit akLaff; add Arthur Fuller (d, perc). 6/94.

 Knitting Factory (Piano/Quartet) 1994: Volume 2 Leo CDLR 297/298 As above. 6/94.
Braxton is a fine pianist and drummer. What is astonishing is that he should have permitted the release of six CDs with himself at the piano, with more to come. These are exclusively jazz repertoire sessions, an examination of composers who have affected Braxton and his music. The range of material is astonishing: Mingus, Brubeck, Monk, Golson, Noble, Miles, Dolphy, Gryce, and (on the Leo) Shorter, Mingus and Monk again, Ellington, Tristano. It is difficult to gauge how we might assess these performances if the pianist were anyone but Braxton. In a sense, he does not sound 'like himself', but it is clear that he is directing operations. Ehrlich is a strong player but not a particularly passionate soloist, and he seems to follow where Braxton leads. Fonda is masterly throughout.

 10 Compositions (Duet) 1995 Konnex 5071 Braxton; Joe Fonda (b). 8/95.
Braxton has never been short of sympathetic collaborators, and Fonda is just the latest in a line. That is not to dismiss his contribution here. This album includes three of his compositions, of which the well-named 'Restlessness' is the most substantial. The set is bracketed by a couple of standards, most notably a majestic reading of 'Autumn In New York'.

 14 Compositions (Traditional) 1996 Leo CDLR 259 Braxton; Stewart Gillmor (t, frhn, p). 3/96.
It's not clear what Braxton means by 'traditional' here, since the material covered takes in songs by Hoagy Carmichael ('Skylark'), Duke Ellington ('In A Sentimental Mood'), W. C. Handy ('Memphis Blues') and the Wesleyan University football fight song, Wesleyan being Braxton's academic base of operations. Gillmor is a responsive collaborator, but not much more than that, and the record is another opportunity to sample Anthony's astonishing multi-instrumentalism, with starring roles for the extreme sonority of bass saxophone and contrabass clarinet. The tracks weigh in at a fairly standard length and there is something slightly 'by rote' about the playing but, longueurs aside, there is plenty to enjoy.

 Composition 192 Leo Records CDLR 251 Braxton; Lauren Newton (v). 6/96.
This piece for two musicians in a constructed environment consisting of a fairground Wheel of Fortune and a video projection of the environs of New York City through a car windshield is said to be the first of Braxton's new cycle of Ghost Trance Music. This is what Braxton has described as a 'new image logic', seemingly a way of converting ordinary, even domestic environments into cosmic spaces by endless, weaving melodies, here played on saxophones and clarinets, while Lauren Newton recites the letters of the alphabet. This was the first encounter between Braxton and Newton, curiously enough. Whatever she thought and however much she understood of the music's premisses, she enters into it with great enthusiasm and with a wry humour.

 Ninetet (Yoshi's) 1997: Volumes 1–3 Leo CDLR 343/344 2CD / 382/383 2CD / 420 Braxton; Brandon Evans (sno, ts, bcl, f); James Fei (ss, as, bcl); Jackson Moore (as, bb cl); Andre Vida (ss, as, ts, bs); J. D. Parran (ss, bsx, f); Kevin O'Neil (g); Joe Fonda (b); Kevin Norton (d, vib, mar, perc). 8/97.
Braxton's week-long residency at the Oakland club was his most sustained examination of Ghost Trance Music. These recordings are warmly satisfying and usefully demystifying; for all the abstruseness floating around, here is a jazz group, in a club, playing themes and heads, and heard at length.

What's immediately evident from both sets is how important Kevins Norton and O'Neil had become to Braxton's music, successors you might say to Marilyn Crispell and Gerry Hemingway. The drummer's possibly less important as a kit-player than as a vibist and marimba-player on these. On 'Composition 209' (Volume 2) he opens up improvising areas that are obviously implicit in Braxton's GTM codes but which no one else seems to be examining. It's reminiscent of what Rashied Ali gave to John Coltrane. Norton's joyous gong-splashes are another delight amid the chatter of the saxophones.

O'Neil is somewhat recessed in the mix but he's also an engagingly modest player who never grandstands and who understands completely how to use dynamics effectively. Whether picking out single note Morse or pulling off complex chords, he's always integral to what is going on. Thirty-three minutes into 'Composition 210' and he's in the spotlight, his guitar bubbling like magma while the horns, Braxton to the fore, low like prehistoric creatures around him. It's one of the highpoints of the whole week.

There are moments when individual horn voices come to the fore: Braxton's attractive quaver, Fei's pinched, haunted tone, Parran's extremes of pitch. However, it's probably best to stop searching out who is playing what and to concentrate on the totality of these remarkable performances. Writer Steve Days spins out a complicated conceit in his liner-notes, aligning this group with the Birth Of The Cool band and Braxton's new music with Miles Davis's innovations of the '50s. It might seem far-fetched or lateral, but the analogy ends up absolutely on the money.

Volume 3 came along with another two compositions. There are more languors here than on the earlier records. 'Composition No. 212' is fairly routine, though J. D. Parran makes fascinating use of bass saxophone.

Six big pieces, then, played by a biggish group that had the luxury of a whole week to explore this language. The music whirls and winds, unravels ideas only to wrap them up knottily tight again. It's hard to avoid the impression on 'Composition 207' that you're not listening to music but moving inside it.

 Two Compositions (Trio) 1998 Leo CDLR 327/328 2CD Braxton; Chris Jonas, Seth Misterka, Jackson Moore, David Novak (sax, etc). 4/98.
Two separate trios here: Braxton students Jonas and Novak on the first disc and 'Composition 227', the rather more experienced Moore and Misterka on the other, consecutively numbered piece. Performance at Wesleyan has become a regular source of Braxton recordings and these are no more than routine documentations, without much sense of moment or theatre. The range of sounds is, as ever, enormous, from the lowest-pitched saxophones to flute, from celesta to a strange 'tourist instrument' Novak seems to have picked up in Indonesia. The level of detail is extraordinary but, on the first disc at least, there is little of the pulse and swing one expects from a Braxton performance.

 Four Compositions (GTM) 2000 Delmark 544 Braxton; Kevin Uehlinger (p, melod); Keith Witty (b); Noah Schatz (perc). 00.
 Four Compositions (GTM) 2000 CIMP 235 As above. 00.
GTM refers to Ghost Trance Music, Braxton's radical improvisational philosophy which utilizes a highly restricted range of materials in a seemingly infinite number of ways. The impression is of a vast body of pre-existent music examined from the inside by any number of idiosyncratic performers, each of whom brings personal and musical baggage and a time-specific understanding of the basic code. This could be universalism of the most flabbily mystical sort, were the discipline of a Braxton performance not so rigorous. His fellow players here are not naïfs, but they bring a fresh and uncomplicated perspective to both dates. The Delmark recording interestingly brings the story round almost full circle to 1968's Three Compositions Of New Jazz. What an extraordinary musical road Braxton has travelled since then.

* Solo (NYC) 2002 Parallactic 53 Braxton (as solo). 02.
A generation after For Alto, and for all his experimentation with larger ensembles and orchestras, Braxton is still often most compelling when playing alto saxophone solo. This set has a familiar configuration: 12 compositions from all over his career, plus three 'standards'. It's with them that the main interest lies. Braxton has shown an increasing interest in Miles Davis's legacy in recent years and 'Tune Up' is a case in point, a spikier and more academic reading than Miles would have considered possible or desirable, but recognizable and utterly convincing. He makes more of a statement on Ornette's 'Peace', which seems to expose some of the song's naivety, but saves his most profound meditations for a titanic exploration of 'Body And Soul'. Sceptics who think it was mined hollow before Coleman Hawkins hung up his saxophone should listen and think again. A wonderful record, and a salutary reminder that Braxton is an alto man through and through.

(*) Ten Compositions (Quartet) 2000 CIMP 225 Braxton; Kevin O'Neil (g); Andy Eulau (b); Kevin Norton (d). 5/00.
(*) Nine Compositions (Hill) 2000 CIMP 236 Braxton; Paul Smoker (t); Steve Lehman (as); Kevin O'Neil (g); Andy Eulau (b); Kevin Norton (d). 5/00.
These are two of the most interesting repertoire projects Braxton has ever undertaken. The second album is dedicated entirely to work by Andrew Hill, most of it drawn from his classic Blue Note period; but Hill also dominates the first record, with six compositions covered there as well. Braxton and his (pianoless) group respond to the dark sonorities and restless rhythmic probing of tunes like 'Black Monday', 'The Griots' (both on CIMP 225), and 'New Monasery', 'Euterpe' and 'Tail Feather' (236). Braxton restricts himself to relatively conventional instrumentation, just alto, with flute and soprano on the two records respectively.

The addition of extra horns on the second album is a considerable bonus. Smoker has shown himself to be a sympathetic partner before, and his take on Hill is as interesting as the leader's, though Steve Lehman does little more than fill. The presence of a guitar-player gives the harmonic language a looser and more open aspect, and O'Neil is a key performer throughout this three-day project which helped round out an astonishingly busy period for Braxton at Wesleyan, with countless hours of music put on tape during May alone.

 8 Compositions (Quintet) 2001 CIMP 243 Braxton; Richard A. McGhee III (ss, ts, f); Abubakar Alvin Benjamin Carter Sr, Babafemi Alvin, Benjamin Carter Jr, Sipho Robert Bellinger (perc). 3/01.
This, as with much of CIMP's output, is an extremely dry and slightly forbidding set. The lack of any acoustic sweetening and any manipulation beyond the careful placement of the five players with horns bracketing the trio of percussionists makes it a demanding listen as a continuous performance. Best, we've found, to take it a track at a time and let the rigorous complexities of 'Compositions 293' and '299' work in their own time, and the simpler beauties of '296', with the lowest of the clarinet family and the huskily delicate flute, exert a more immediate charm. It is worth spending time with these recordings. They do not yield up their power at a single, casual sitting.

 10 (Solo Bagpipe) Compositions 2000 Parallactic 36 Matthew Welch (bagpipes). 4 & 5/00.
(*) Composition No. 247 Leo CDLR 306 Braxton; James Fei (ss, as, bcl); Matthew Welch (bagpipes). 5/00.
It would be tickling to report that Braxton had diversified his instrumentation yet again to include the bagpipes, but such duties are devolved to Matthew Welch and it is he who determines the range of this piece, another of Braxton's Ghost Trance Music projects. The pipes offer a very limited range of notes, and these are the basis of a long, repetitive motif which becomes the backbone for an hour of technically demanding, psychologically wearing music. The two other reed-players execute some complex manoeuvres, often at a high level of rhythmic complexity, but the overall impression is one-dimensional and rather static. Welch is also the performer on a set of ten bagpipe compositions by Braxton, released on the Parallactic label. 247 suggests some development of the possibilities inscribed on that record but fulfils them only in the most limited way.

 Four Compositions (Ghost Trance Music) 2000 Delmark 544 Braxton; Kevin Uehlinger (p, mel); Keith Witty (b); Noam Schatz (perc). 5/00.
It's always curiously comforting to find Braxton back on Delmark, where he started out, and not on yet another of a proliferating series of small labels. He plays beautifully here as well, digging deep into the idiom that has become his most approachable, and that includes the standards work. Braxton hefts an impressive array of horns, including the legendary contrabass saxophone, but it is his touch on B flat and E flat sopranos that really captures the essence of this music. Just for the record: 'Compositions NN 242–245'.

 Composition No. 249 Parallactic 27 Braxton; Brandon Evans (C ss, B flat b ss, ts, bs, cl, bcl, f). 00.
(*) Elliptical Axis 15 Parallactic 28-30 3CD As above; additional instruments. 5/00.
 Compositions/Improvisations 2000 Barely Auditable 222 Braxton; Scott Rosenberg (sno, as, ts, cl, cbcl). 00.
Much of the music Braxton released in the later '90s was from his Ghost Trance idiom. This group of duet records immediately strikes a contrast, because once again Braxton sounds propulsive and directed, and once again has focused on the idiomatic possibilities of his admittedly preposterous range of instruments. Evans is a Braxton acolyte who shares his mentor's ambition. Strictly credited to him, Elliptical Axis 15 amounts to almost 165 minutes of music, distributed over three CDs, and all of it delivered on a range of exotic saxophones, including the F soprano and the C melody, clarinets and flutes. Impressive as it is in sheer technical virtuosity, we can say with some sureness that you are unlikely to revisit the whole performance a second time.

Braxton's Composition No. 249 is a less wearying experience. At less than an hour, it is manageable and logical and the interplay of voices has more direct moment. Evans's work seems like an exercise in parallelism rather than a genuine dialectic. The delivery is also a little crisper all round.

In point of fact, only three very short tracks on Compositions/Improvisations 2000 are freely improvised, and much of the weight of composition falls to Rosenberg, another Braxton disciple and a very impressive instrumentalist. There are moments here when one might be listening to the master multitracked, so sympathetic a collaborator is the younger man. Where Rosenberg differs from Evans is that he seems more obviously rooted in jazz idiom, an anchor that allows him to range even wider musically.

(*) Six Compositions (Ghost Trance Music) 2001 Rastascan BRD 050 4CD Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (t, pocket t, flhn, trumpbone, mar, shell, trec, mar); Greg Kelley (t, v); Jesse Gilbert (as, srec, mar); Justin Yang (as, ts, bcl, vn, vla); Dan Plonsey (C mel, ob, Turkish cl, srec, vib, mar); Scott Rosenberg (sno, ts, bs, cbcl, f, v); John Shiurba (g, v); Matthew Sperry (b); Gino Robair (d, perc, syn, elec). 1/01.

This is a further huge documentation of Braxton music, bringing his total recorded output since the millennium to more than Charlie Parker produced in his lifetime, which is either a meaningless or a very significant stat, depending on how you look at it. There is a wide range of personnels here, ranging from a duo with John Shiurba on 'Composition No. 195' to the tentet cuts that occupy the first two discs. These are messy performances, far less interesting than the Yoshi's material, though they bear something pretty substantial in common, and Braxton himself is not in strong enough evidence.

(*) Solos (NYC) 2002 Parallactic 53 2CD Braxton (as solo). 5/02.

This is still arguably Braxton's most effective setting, the solo alto saxophone recital. His mastery of the horn is total, if unorthodox, and no other instrument so completely mirrors the richness and complexity of his imagination. This is, inevitably, another hefty slice of music. Miles's 'Tune Up', Ornette's 'Peace' and a lovely version of 'Body And Soul' intersperse the originals.

 Duets (Wesleyan) 2002 Innova 6576 Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (co, t, slide t). 02.

If you want to confirm the genius of, say, Jackson Pollock, check out some of the forgeries that have been fraudulently attributed to him. If you want to confirm the extraordinary order and discipline of Anthony Braxton's sound-world, check out the hideously chaotic 'improvisation' that nestles unwanted in the midst of this otherwise compelling record. Unusually, in addition to his own pieces, 'Compositions 304/305', Braxton here addresses the work of another composer, and not a standards composer either. Bynum is a Wesleyan pupil of the saxophonist's; his playing style is reminiscent of Joe McPhee's brass; 'Scrabble' might mean the word game rather than the physical activity, and there is a good deal of language improvisation in both players' unusually vocalized tones; 'All Roads Lead To Middletown' sounds like a throwback. The real value of the set lies in 'Composition No. 305 (+ Language Improvisation 44)', which moves beyond the whirls and four-dimensional spirals of Ghost Trance Music, and back into something spikier, more boppish and in many respects more engaging. How interesting it should happen in the presence of one of his own students.

 2 + 2 Compositions 482 Music 5034 Braxton; Matt Bauder (ts); Zach Wallace (b); Aaron Siegel (perc). 7/03.

With the Falling River Musics, Braxton has again begun to explore a more abstract musical language than the Ghost Trance material. He shares the compositional space here with Wesleyan student Bauder, who has his own rather different ideas but clearly draws something from the professor's example. 'Scaffolding' and 'Dots', however, do come across as workshop ideas not really worthy of permanent documentation. The set's redeemed by Braxton's two compositions, though, and especially the short '327c', which rates as one of his most arresting ideas for years.

(*) ABCD Not Two MW768 Braxton; Chris Dahlgren (b, elec). 7/03.

Braxton has always written a good deal of music specifically for saxophone/bass situations; early work with Dave Holland prefigures some of what is going on here, with Braxton moving into the realm of his 'Falling River Musics'. It's an obvious but clever title from the Polish label, not least because the music does seem to move at times with an alphabetical simplicity that is in no way compromised and which recommends this album (featuring Braxton on most of his current favourite horns and his partner using electronics) as a fine introduction to the work.

 Concept Of Freedom hatOLOGY 614 Braxton; Roland Dahinden (tb); Hildegard Kleeb (p); Dimitris Polisoidis (vn); Robert Höldrich (elec). 8/03.

Billed as 'Anthony Braxton + Duke Ellington', the interesting idea is to add elements of Duke's Sacred Concert music to the familiar palimpsest approach, applied to Braxton's 'Composition No. 257' and other pieces. Kleeb plays some gorgeously gospelly piano, but much of the interest comes from Dahinden and Höldrich, who seem to have telepathic understanding. There are lots of ideas floating around here, not quite integrated, but not quite floating free either. It's an intoxicating blend.

 Willisau Solo Intakt CD 126 Braxton (as solo). 9/03.

Braxton toured extensively in Europe in the autumn of 2003 and the tape machines seemed to roll (legitimately or not) wherever he turned up. This is an immaculately presented solo date and for sheer beauty of sound is ahead of the musically more varied and challenging Leos, fine as they are. The only standard in the set is 'All The Things You Are', a sign that Braxton is highly focused on his own languages and procedures. His articulation is clean, dry, occasionally vocalized in unexpected ways; his command of the material hugely impressive.

 Triotone: Montenegro 2003 Leo CD LR 416 Braxton; György Szabados (p); Vladimir Tarasov (perc). 9/03.

Caught live at the 9th Festival Of Jazz And Improvised Music in Cnesa Kanizsa, this reunites Braxton with charismatic pianist Szabados, who dominates the first half of the disc. The improvisations are fascinating in that they mimic the instrumentation of the legendary Ganelin Trio, of which Tarasov was a charter member. Braxton inevitably has more blues-based jazz in his sound, however abstractly he is playing and it is clear in an instant that very different idioms are at work here. Splendid music, all the same.

 Shadow Company Emanem 4113 Braxton; Milo Fine (p, cl, perc). 2/04.

Fine begins the set behind the piano and with both musicians in a relatively gentle mood. The pace picks up sharply when Fine moves to his clarinet, and by the time they're experimenting with what one almost inevitably thinks of as the 'Interstellar Space line-up', the music is cooking fiercely. Fine continues to alternate piano and drums and Braxton works his way through a range of saxophones. There are no obvious breaks in the flow of ideas, simply pauses as the players change their instruments, but these are like breath-stops in a thoroughly organic performance.

(*) Quintet (London) 2004: Live At The Royal Festival Hall Leo CD LR 449 Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (t); Mary Halvorson (g); Chris Dahlgren (b, fx); Satoshi Takeishi (perc). 11/04.

Symbolically, an important gig for Braxton in that this was his first London performance for many years and on a bill headed by the great Cecil Taylor. Braxton's young quintet was drawn from students at Wesleyan and is one of the strongest units he has had for years. Most of the music was drawn from the GTM cycle, warmly and generously interpreted. Halvorson's guitar and Dahlgren's bass, occasionally treated with music box motor and other devices, are the heart of the group. Takeishi acts largely as a colourist and Bynum increasingly sounds like he's working on his own bold ideas.

* Victoriaville 2005 Victo 98 Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (c); Jay Rosen (tba); Jessica Pavone (vn); Chris Dahlgren (b); Aaron Siegel (pec). 5/05.
* Duo (Victoriaville) 2005 Victo 100 Braxton; Fred Frith (g). 5/05.
Internationally 2005 was a big year for Braxton and Victoriaville was a major showcase. His sextet gig was a particularly good one. 'Composition No. 345' is a complex piece, coming in at just under an hour of highly concentrated music. Rozen's amplified tuba is a curious reminder of early Braxton pieces for the instrument, and it and Dahlgren's rasping bass are key components. Bynum, though, is now an important collaborator, rising to the status of Kenny Wheeler and Leo Smith in previous Braxton groups. A very powerful experience.

Braxton has been working a good deal with guitarists in recent years and so an encounter with the estimable Frith was always on the cards. There's something almost lyrical about their opening exchanges and on the short 'Improvisation No. 4'. The third of the group is more complex, and on the fifth and last Braxton kicks over the traces and blazes away with his sopranino, while Frith puts his guitar through cruel and unusual punishment to squeeze out every last anguished cry at the climax. Great stuff from two old stagers who still like to rock out occasionally; Braxton also performed at Victoriaville with noise terrorists Wolf Eyes, a set released on Victo as Black Vomit!

 Four Compositions (Ulrichsberg) 2005/Phonomanie VIII Leo CD LR 468-471 4CD Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (t); Aaron Siegel (perc); Geneviève Foccroulle (p); Ulrichsberg Tri-Centric Ensemble. 7/05.
The trio material with Bynum and Siegel on disc three is amazing, terse, flowing, often wildly exuberant free playing, but there is a great deal of ponderous large ensemble work (in 'tri-centric versions') to wade through on the way, to say nothing of Foccroulle's solo piano performance of 'Composition No. 301'. Less, here, would surely have been more; doubtless Braxton considers it important to document ensemble performances that may never be repeated. Whether such music transfers comfortably to commercial CD is debatable, and it blunts the impact of one of Braxton's best small-group dates for some time.

(*) Trio (Glasgow) 2005 Leo CD LR 487/488 Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (c, flhn, trumpbone); Tom Crean (g). 7/05.
It might have been a disaster. Braxton's precious F-alto saxophone was stolen before the date (which came four days after the item above) and his sopranino and soprano saxophones were lost by the airline en route from Ulrichsberg to Scotland, temporarily, as it turned out, but returned too late for this Glasgow Jazz Festival date. This is a highly sympathetic group, and with a highly sympathetic audience (who may well have been secretly glad that Braxton was obliged to play alto only) the playing is free, buoyant and often exciting. Bynum strikes one as a younger Herb Robertson here, exploiting his different horns with delightful abandon.

* Nine Compositions (Iridium) 2006 Firehouse 12 04-03-001 9CD/DVD Braxton; Taylor Ho Bynum (c, picc t, bt, flhn, trumpbone, shell); Reut Regev (tb, flugelbone); Jay Rozen (tba, euph); Andrew Raffo Dewar (ss, Cmel, cl); James Fei, Stephen H. Lehman (as, sno); Nicole Mitchell (picc, f, af, bf, v); Sara Schoenbeck (bsn, suona); Mary Halvorson (g); Jessica Pavone (vn, vla); Carl Testa (b, bcl); Aaron Siegel (perc, vib). 3/06.
Braxton on Times Square. Four nights at Iridium, representing what he himself regards as the most important summation of his work so far, and the culmination of the Ghost Trance Music series. There are, of course, similar documentations of jazz musicians working residencies in clubs – Miles Davis, Chick Corea immediately spring to mind – but it is incredibly rare for an 'avant-garde' musician to be documented in this detail and with such a lavish production. The set, complete with commentaries and other texts, is presented in an impressive box with booklet. The music is rich, strange and as vividly textured as the instrumentation would suggest. Bynum's role is crucial, but Lehman, Fei, Halvorson and Rozen are now as securely embedded in Braxton's musical philosophy (and perhaps with fewer residual preconceptions) as were the 'classic quartet' of Crispell, Dresser or Lindberg, and Hemingway, whose time with Braxton was, after all, two decades ago.

The worklist is now showing opus numbers that go beyond 350. In essence, though, these are mainly heads and themes that can be worked and reworked much as a conventional standards-and-changes player would work a basic jazz set. Braxton's music requires – and deserves – demystification, and while this sumptuous box is only likely to appeal to established fans, it would do very well as a means of induction to Braxton's misleadingly forbidding aesthetic. Here he is, doing what bandleaders have done for decades: leading a band in a club residency, making mistakes, having off-nights (the second disc is shaky in places) and some great moments (it gets ever stronger towards the end), and for the most part enjoying being in out of the cold and in the company of sympathetic fellow travellers. Expensive, but a magnificent achievement, from players and label alike.

Also, in brief:

(*) 2 Compositions (Järvenpää) 1988 Leo CD LR 233. 11/88.
In autumn 1988, Braxton toured Finland with the ad hoc Ensemble Braxtonia. It is to their credit – considerable collective experience notwithstanding – that they coped so well with numbers 144 and 145. Let down by the recording.

 Duo (Amsterdam) 1991 Okkadisk OD 12018. 10/91.
Apparently improvised spontaneously, this Dutch date with Georg Graewe (p) is notable for some wonderful flute-playing from Braxton.

* Duets (1993) Music & Arts 786. 1/93.
With Mario Pavone (b). They share the compositional credits and even throw in a standard, 'I Remember You'.

(*) At Leipzig Gewandhaus Music & Arts 4848. 93.
With Ted Reichman (acc). Curiously unspirited.

* 11 Compositions (Duo) 1995 Leo CDLR 244. 3/95.
The koto has turned up in jazz before, but Brett Larner is a master. A near-perfect album of duo improvisation, unexpected in sonority and rich in association.

(*) Composition No. 169 + (186 + 206 + 214) Leo CDLR 320 321. 6/00.
More impressive than genuinely enjoyable. Braxton's liner-note is tediously convoluted and self-defining, and one really wonders whether anyone but the composer himself has any idea what is going on.

() Four Compositions (Duets) 2000 CIMP 235. 10/00.
Fifteen brief improvised accompaniments to the 'comic' readings and monologues of Alex Horowitz, who is neither subversive, provocative, nor funny.

 Eight Standards (Wesleyan) 2001 Barking Hoop 004. 01.
'Nuages' can rarely have been treated quite so searchingly, while 'Someday My Prince Will Come' is both true to and a light-year away from the Miles Davis version. Much credit here has to go to the Kevins Norton and O'Neil.

 Duo Palindrome 2002: Volume 2 Intakt CD 089. 10/02.
The return leg of a set reviewed under Andrew Cyrille's (d) name.

 23 Standards (Quartet) 2003/  20 Standards (Quartet) 2003 Leo CD LR 402/405 4CD & 431/434 4CD. 2–11/03.
A wildly eclectic mix of material from 'Crazy Rhythm' to 'Recorda Me', 'Lonnie's Lament' to 'Waltz for Debbie'. Hard to see the logic sometimes, but undeniably beautiful. Limited editions.

(*) 4 Improvisations (Duets) 2004 Leo CD LR 429. 5/04.
A thoroughly annoying duo record with Walter Frank (p), who seems to thunder aimlessly. Spelling his name wrong on the cover seems just desserts.

Joshua Breakstone (born 1955)

GUITAR

Berklee-trained, he favours open-toned electric bop.

 Sittin' On The Thing With Ming Capri 74042 Breakstone; Kenny Barron (p); Ray Drummond (b); Keith Copeland (d). 1/93.
(*) Let's Call This Monk! Double-Time DTRCD 121 Breakstone; Dennis Irwin (b); Mickey Roker (d). 12/96.
 This Just In ... Double-Time DTRCD 149 Breakstone; Sid Simmons (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Kenny Washington (d). 2/99.
 The Music Of Bud Powell Double-Time DTRCD 172 Breakstone; Earl Sauls (b); Keith Copeland (d). 6/00.
Breakstone loves the sound of traditional jazz guitar, as in cool, clear, single-note lines, delivered with a soft articulation and a tone that insinuates rather than jumping out of the amplifier. He peels melodies off the frets with little effort, though sometimes the improvisations go to sleep, and these impeccable rhythm sections can't always be expected to save the day.

The originals on Sittin' are so crafted as to give Breakstone ample scope for his trademark runs, leaving much of the harmonic work to Barron, who seems curiously reserved. A nice enough record, but not one to set the world on fire. The surprise in the batch is the Monk session, where Breakstone's leanness sits comfortably with some of the least tractable Thelonious tunes in the book: 'Work', 'Let's Call This', 'Brilliant Corners' are played with deadpan bite and the team is impeccable.

The third is a perfectly plausible continuation, but with so much else going on with the guitar in jazz at that moment, Breakstone needed to do something startling to win new listeners. This is just another placid bebop set, played skilfully and painlessly. And so is the Bud date, though with no piano present Joshua puts himself under pressure to deliver. Powell's awkward emotions are absent, inevitably, though in his liner-note Breakstone makes a useful distinction between playful Bud ('Comin' Up') and difficult Bud ('Tempus Fugit').

 Tomorrow's Hours Capri 74054 Breakstone; Earl Sauls (b); Keith Copeland (d). 02.
 A Jamais Capri 74065 Breakstone; Louis Petrucciani (b); Joël Allouche (d). 8/03.
 Memoire: The French Sessions – Vol. 2 Capri 74070 Breakstone; Louis Petrucciani (b); Christian Salut (d). 8/04.
Wes Montgomery is a more obvious source for a guitarist, but the obvious stuff ('Bumpin'', for instance) isn't covered here, and apart from a few giveaway octave runs there isn't much to suggest the great one's legacy, which didn't much run to striking composition. In fact, and encouragingly, the best track is the sole Breakstone original, the swinging, delicately balanced title-track.

Powell reappears on A Jamais: a solo 'Hallucinations' at the end of the disc. The other material, 'Sittin' On The Thing With Ming' and 'Tomorrow's Hours', is taken from a now extensive back catalogue. Recorded in Valflaunesse with Michel Petrucciani's brother, it's a fairly routine date. The second is a more twilit, ballad-dominated affair, though 'C'est Si Bon' is pure joy. He's never made a dud or even dull record, but Breakstone seems to be enjoying his cisatlantic sojourn and plays with elegance and sophistication.

Also, in brief:

 Walk Don't Run Evidence ECD 22058 2. 8/91.
Kenny Barron (p) features on an unusual set that puts Shadows/Ventures tunes alongside 'Lullaby of the Leaves' and Richard Rodgers.

 Remembering Grant Green Evidence ECD 22146. 1–3/93.
Funky guitar/organ workouts with Brother Jack McDuff.

Michael Brecker (1949–2007)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A major contemporary saxophone stylist, whose own Coltrane-influenced approach has in turn made an impact on a younger generation of players. He began in rock and soul, worked with Horace Silver and Billy Cobham, as well as the very successful Steps Ahead and the Brecker Brothers, with older brother Randy. After a career as superleague sideman and relatively infrequent recorder under his own name, he succumbed prematurely to leukaemia.

 Tales From The Hudson Impulse! 051191 Brecker; Joey Calderazzo, McCoy Tyner (p); Pat Metheny (g); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Don Alias (perc). 96.
 Two Blocks From The Edge Impulse! 051261-2 Brecker; Joey Calderazzo (p); James Genus (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Don Alias (perc). 98.
Michael Brecker appeared on more than 500 record dates, but made few discs as solo leader. His steely brilliance and sense of structure informs almost every solo he played; whether it was matched with emotional resonance may depend on the listener.

The early GRP discs are currently unavailable, which means that apart from some live things (below) one first meets Brecker on his own records past the age of 45. There's still no sign of a masterpiece. There's the expected quota of hard-nosed tenor-playing on both discs (though no real interest in writing), and he varies his methods from solo to solo. 'African Skies' on the first record is an explosive display of licks, while gentler tempos elicit a longer line. Ballads still seem carved out of an impersonal block and his reluctance to characterize is frustrating. There's an all-star feel to Hudson, with Tyner sitting in on two tracks, but the smaller and less imposing group on Two Blocks is a better situation, where he can play powerfully without seeming to compete.

(*) Time Is Of The Essence Verve 547844 Brecker; Larry Goldings (org); Pat Metheny (g); Elvin Jones, Jeff 'Tain' Watts, Bill Stewart (d). n.d.
The three different quartets here (each with a different drummer) enjoy some strong moments. With Goldings on the date, and with Metheny digging into his funky rather than impressionist bag, the results are only occasionally like the world's highest-paid bar band. As a mix of personalities, it's worth sampling but the main effect may have been on Brecker himself. At 50, he was relaxing as much as he ever let himself. Chord sequences are harvested for notes as intensively as ever, but one feels that the saxophonist wants to throttle back at points where previously he would have gone for broke. The warm undertow of Goldings's chords and pedal bass and the lyricism of Metheny (who can't do harsh, even when he tries) add up to a disc one can almost cosy up to.

 Nearness Of You: The Ballad Book Verve 011030 Brecker; Herbie Hancock (p); Pat Metheny (g); Charlie Haden (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); James Taylor (v). 00.
A supergroup idling in the departure lounge. The most expensive jazz group on earth (give or take a Marsalis or two) purrs through some standards and pop. Michael's never going to wear his heart on his sleeve, so only on the title-piece, groomed to a fault, does he get close to what could be called feelings. Otherwise, as well played as it obviously is, the music reminds one of the romantic interlude in a Jean-Claude Van Damme film: it's only going to get exciting when somebody gets thumped.

 Wide Angles Verve 7614288 Brecker; Alex Sipiagin (t); Peter Gordon (flhn); Robin Eubanks (tb); Steve Wilson (f, af); Iain Dixon (cl, bcl); Charles Pillow (ob); Mark Feldman, Joyce Hammann (vn); Lois Martin (vla): Erik Friedlander (clo); John Patitucci (b); Antonio Sanchez (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc). 1/03.
Brecker's Quindectet works through arrangements by Gil Goldstein, although they're used mostly as vehicles for the saxophonist, who understandably hogs most of the solo limelight. As ever, the admirability quotient is high, the temperature uncomfortably low. But he does have a big problem: when you can play anything you want, with anyone you want, what exactly is there to do? The star-sideman rating is relatively low here and Goldstein has picked the best executants, yet Brecker still feels isolated by his very eminence and that tells in the music. The remainder of the story was sadly determined by life-threatening illness.

(*) Pilgrimage Emarcy 1726531 SACD Brecker; Herbie Hancock, Brad Mehldau (p); Pat Metheny (g); John Patitucci (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 8/06.
This was posthumously released, which guaranteed it even better press. It may seem harsh to say it, but Brecker's enormous reputation and influence are scarcely ever suggested by his own records and his great talent seems to have best expressed itself on other leaders' work. That said, a line-up like this could hardly have produced a bad record and Brecker's late-developing interest in composition yielded some fascinating lines here, notably the two long tracks, 'Anagram' (which may be too much like the old closed-off Michael) and the moving finale, 'Pilgrimage'. Whether ill-health made a physical difference ('When Can I Kiss You Again?' is a direct reference to his chemotherapy, something his son apparently said) or whether he had simply found a new philosophical calm in the face of mortality, there is a calm authority here which avoids the parade-ground playing of previous years. The pianists seem to treat him very respectfully, and as a memorial it's pretty good. It may seem cynical to say this, but were he still around, our assessment might be less accepting and gentle.

Also, in brief:

 Cityscape Warner/WEA 25074. 82.
Michael as soloist with a Claus Ogerman project; mixed results.

* The Cost Of Living Jazz Door 1260. 89.
A bright live quartet date with Joey Calderazzo (p).

 The Michael Brecker Band Live Jazz Door 1264. 89.
The line-up with Mike Stern (g), who plays as erratically as ever.

Randy Brecker (born 1945)

TRUMPET

The older Brecker sibling left college to go on the road, stayed in Europe for a time, and then returned home to join R&B giants Blood, Sweat And Tears. Unlike Michael, he still likes to dabble in fusion.

 Score Koch 51416 Brecker; Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Michael Brecker (ts); Hal Galper (p); Larry Coryell (g); Eddie Gomez, Chuck Rainey (b); Mickey Roker, Bernard Purdie (d). 1–2/69.
Randy's debut album is an amazingly confident and polished effort, devised to demonstrate his skill in both jazz and more popular settings. Unlike most others in his field, Brecker has never remotely sounded like a Miles clone. If anything, his tonality comes from Dizzy and Freddie Hubbard, and both influences are still in place today, even though he has developed a strongly individual voice along the way. Score features two basic groups but is remarkably consistent in feel. The tone is light and seemingly effortless, with occasional outbreaks of more heated improvisation, though these tend to be short-circuited. Where even the 19-year-old Michael digs deep (technically, at least), Randy tends to tire of an idea before it climaxes naturally. Boldly, the whole set – with the exception of the kids' song 'The Weasel Goes Out To Lunch' – is original material. The elegant Galper contributes three tunes, 'Name Game', 'The Vamp' and the title-track, and is a model of easy swing throughout.

 Into The Sun Concord Vista CCD 4761-2 Brecker; Dave Bargeron (tb); David Taylor (btb, tba); David Sanborn (as); Bob Mintzer (bcl); Keith Underwood (af, bf); Lawrence Feldman (bf); Gil Goldstein (ky); Adam Rogers (g); Bakithi Kumalo (b); Jonathan Joseph (d); Café (perc); Maúcha Adnét (v); Richard Sussman (syn prog). 97.
Unlike his younger brother, who has stayed true to post-bop jazz, Randy has experimented widely in more popular forms. That spirit surfaces on Into The Sun. 'The Sleaze Factor' and 'Just Between Us' are the strongest tracks, relying on a careful integration of parts and on strong, concise soloing. One quality Brecker does share with Miles is an ability to make single notes and tiny phrases stand out and represent much. The album depends largely on subtle colorations from an unusual array of horns, mostly favouring lower pitches.

(*) Some Skunk Funk BHM 1004-2 Brecker; Michael Brecker (ts); Jim Beard (p, syn); Will Lee (b); Peter Erskine (d); Marcio Doctor (perc); WDR Big Band Köln ; Vince Mendoza (con). 11/03.

A sharp return to form, live at the Leverkusener Jazztage. The real heros of the set are Michael, who solos first and strongly on nearly every track, and the orchestra, who take the opening, title-track at breakneck speed and with dizzying precision. Randy's on his own for 'Levitate', a magically luminous and optimistic piece, and shares 'And Then She Wept' with Beard, who plays beautifully throughout. There are some excellent solos from orchestra members as well. Guitarist Paul Shigihara opens the bidding on 'Shanghigh'; trumpeter John Marshall shines on 'Freefall'; while Olivier Peters reminds us there was more than one tenor-player on stage. 'Strap-Hangin'' is like an old Brecker Brothers tune and none the worse for that. Fantastic sound.

Also, in brief:

 Hanging In The City ESC 4902. 01.
A grim, hop-hop-tinged project on which the 'real' Randy Brecker only surfaces occasionally. Conversation with Michael (who plays) must have resembled Marsalis conversations when Branford went off to play with Sting.

(*) 34th N Lex ESC 03684 2. 5/02.
More obviously a jazz record, but it lacks urgency and only 'Tokyo Freddie' (a tribute to Hubbard) really sings out.

Wolfert Brederode (born 1974)

PIANO

Dutch stylist of lyrical intent.

* Currents ECM 2004 Brederode; Claudio Puntin (cl); Mats Eilertsen (b); Samuel Rohrer (d). 06.
He has seen service with the label on Susanne Abbuehl's records. This is a slightly more pointed and focused project, but the clear aim is to create a sound that doesn't so much swing in any conventional sense as follow the contours of melody wherever they lead. A deceptively mainstream line-up (though clarinets still aren't favoured as lead horns) shouldn't lead anyone to expect an orthodox blowing date. This is ECM, after all; instead, a nicely various patchwork of ideas held together by Brederode's subtle touches.

Patrick Brennan (born 1954)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

The Detroiter won Cadence and Coda accolades with his 1982 debut but hasn't broken through to the big time.

 Saunters, Walks, Ambles CIMP 187 Brennan; Lisle Ellis (b). 9/98.
A misleadingly laid-back title for a record of such intensity. Duos of this kind are always demanding, but the saxophonist has tried to put in some reference points with two Monk tunes and two versions of 'Misterioso'. The other, 'Crepuscule With Nellie', is the longest thing on the set and serves as introduction and warm-up number. It's only when Brennan and Ellis get into the meat of their encounter on the four-part 'Saunter, Walk, Amble' that things warm up. The saxophonist has a rather clenched and inconsistent tone, but Ellis stays with him every step. Roscoe Mitchell's 'Nonaah' (the AEOC man is a key influence on Brennan) brings out the best in them both, though Brennan's unaccompanied 'Bucket-A-Blood' suggests he might do interesting things in that direction.

(*) Rapt Circle Cadence CJR 1168 Brennan; Hilliard Greene (b); Newman Taylor Barker (d); Juma Santos Ayantola (perc). 6/02.
(*) The Drum Is Honor Enough CIMP 305 As above, except omit Ayantola; add Steve Swell (tb). 2/04.
Brennan has a few other records out on small or personal imprints but these, subtitled Sonic Openings Under Pressure, are the only you'll readily find. Despite the two guests, these are basically trio discs, though even he admits that the four-part 'Permeations Gumvindaboloo' on the second album requires a bigger instrumentation. The earlier offers two similar sets (two tunes are repeated) from the New York Vision and Montreal Festivals; the latter is thinly recorded and buries Brennan away, though the NY music is more vivid. Both feel rather tightly wound. Adding Swell doesn't really change that and as a result the tricky compositions sound merely pretentious, though the playing is committed and often good.

Willem Breuker (born 1944)

SAXOPHONES, CLARINETS, RECORDER

His Kollektief's approach is compounded of jazz, special effects, classical forms, jingles, church tunes, pop, spoken word, circus performance, radio, theatre – in fact, whatever is to hand.

(*) To Remain BvHaast 1601 Breuker; Andy Altenfelder, Boy Raaymakers (t); Chris Abelen, Bernard Hunnekink, Garrett List, Gregg Moore (tb); André Goudbeek (as); Peter Barkema, Maarten Van Norden (ts); Henk De Jonge (p, ky); Arjen Gorter (b); Rob Verdurmen (d, perc). 9/83–4/89.
(*) In Holland BvHaast 0101 Similar to above. 5/81.
* Bob's Gallery BvHaast 8801 As above, except add Peter Kuit Jr (tapdance). 12/87.
Stylistic eclecticism has been a feature of postwar Dutch music, but the music and theatrics of Frank Zappa are probably the best single point of comparison for Breuker's music. They even both started out listening to Varèse.

Two problems. Breuker's different projects are not only difficult to place in terms of jazz and other musics – its availability on his label BvHaast has always been somewhat erratic. Any selection of a massive body of recorded work has to be determined by both considerations. To Remain and Bob's Gallery are among the very best of the records, and certainly the only ones from before the late '90s (when Breuker's creativity rekindled) that should be in every comprehensive modern jazz collection. On the latter, the title-track, inspired by a Gary Larson cartoon, features magnificent solos from Goudbeek, Raaymakers and Breuker himself; the leader often sounds wild but there's more thought and discipline to his reed-playing than at first appears. 'Morribreuk', with Altenfeder and Raaymakers processing from the back of the hall to the stage, is a dedication to Ennio Morricone. There's also a selection of work from theatre pieces. In Holland catches the Kollektief at a typical moment, with everything from 'Tango Superior' to a funeral march; the rapid-fire juxtapositions and throwaway virtuosity still sound both disorientating and breathtaking and haven't yet settled into any kind of routine.

(*) Celebrating 25 Years On The Road BvHaast 9914/9915 2CD Various personnels as above. 74–99.
No more chaotic than any other Kollektief package, this draws in music – released and unreleased – from a quarter-century of sometimes anarchic activity. Even amid the stylistic confusion, though, an impression slowly settles of an ensemble with a great deal of discipline, considerable technical merit and, despite the democratic name, led by a strong authority figure. Choice cuts include 'Jalousie-Song', 'Potsdamer Stomp', 'Tango Superior', 'Pakkepappen' – 36 tracks in all, with 'I Want To Be Happy' as a tiny, delightful coda.

(*) Kurt Weill BvHaast 9808 As above, except add Nico Nijholt (tb); Alex Coke (picc, f); Loes Luca (v), string trio. 83–97.
 With Strings Attached BvHaast 0203 Similar to above, except add Mondriaan Strings. 2/82–5/98.
A nicely compiled anthology of earlier Weill-inspired recordings with new interpretations of the 1928 Ol Musik which features the dynamic voice of Loes Luca. There is also a wonderful 1997 performance of 'My Ship' from Lady in the Dark which highlights the skills of new member Coke. Some of the recordings were made for film or television, but here they sound like performance pieces rather than utility music. The other record has the added spice of Holland's finest string ensemble. A formidable 'Rhapsody In Blue' is the highlight.

(*) Pakkepapen BvHaast 9807 Breuker; Andy Altenfelder, Boy Raaymakers (t); Bernard Hunnekink (tb, tba); Nico Nijholt (tb); Alex Coke (ts, picc); Henk De Jonge (p, perc); Lorre Trytten (vn); Arjen Gorter (b); Rob Verdurmen (d). 9/97.
* Psalm 122 BvHaast 9803 As above, except add Trytten Strings; Koor Nieuwe Muziek. 2/98.
These again combine fiery playing, wry satire, genuine emotion and a gift for imaginative packaging. The group interplay on Pakkepapen is strongly reminiscent of pre-theatrical Breuker albums. He himself is scarcely featured, leaving solo space to Gorter and Raaymakers on 'Pakkepapen – 6' and to Coke, who narrates 'Hello, My Name Is Joe' before turning in a superb tenor solo on 'Worksong Part 2'.

Fine as it is, Psalm 122 is the stunner: an apotheosis of Jerusalem as the refuge and triumph of the scattered tribes. Compared to John Zorn's often bloodless interrogation of the Judaic tradition, it has rigour and daring. Barrel-organ renditions and a wonderfully executed a cappella performance of the psalm – more properly, song of degree – punctuate a long and complex suite. The ending is quite breathtaking: barrel-organ gives way to the blessing of 'Peace Be Within Thy Walls', with Coke on bass flute and tenor saxophone, and then violin with Breuker on soprano bringing the whole work to a climax. Rich, deeply cadenced music.

(*) Hunger! BvHaast 9916 As above, except add Loes Luca (v). 6–8/99.
(*) Thirst! Bvhaast 0300 As above, except omit Luca; add Peter Barkema (as); Denise Jannah (v). 9/97–6/00.
The first recordings since the death of long-serving saxophonist Peter Barkema, who appears only on the final track of Thirst!, an arrangement of Ravel's Pavane pour une infante défunte. Otherwise, it's business as usual. Hunger! is marginally the pick of the two, with two extended Breuker works, arrangements of Claude Bolling, Rossini, John Roger Thomas and Boris Vian, as well as a Verdurmen original. Luca is the guest vocalist sounding a bit like Mistinguette, but it's Breuker who takes the singing prize with 'Yes, We Have No Bananas'. Thirst! is oddly programmed, with the title-suite played out of sequence, consecutive versions of 'Lonely Woman' (one with a Denise Jannah vocal) and a madcap treatment of Bartok's Bagatelle Op 6, starring Henk De Jonge. Some hits, some misses, but as engaging as ever.

Also, in brief:

 The Pirate: Previously Unreleased Recordings 1969–1994
BvHaast 0301. 69–94.
Scraps, leftovers and unfinished business from Breuker's vault. All over the place, but full of small treasures.

Dee Dee Bridgewater (born 1950)

VOICES

Hailed as a natural successor to Ella Fitzgerald, she has the same unfailing swing and instinct for complex harmony. A commanding presence, she communicates equally well in the studio but has mostly favoured live recordings.

 Just Family Elektra Masters 75596 2719-2 Bridgewater; Chick Corea, George Duke, Ronnie Foster, Bobby Lyle (ky); David T. Walker (g); Scarlet Rivera (vn); Stanley Clarke, Alphonso Johnson, Abraham Laboriel, Ken Wilde (b); Leon Ndugu Chancler, Harvey Mason, Norman Farrington (perc); Airto Moreira (perc). 10/77.
This Elektra Masters reissue underlies just how far back Dee Dee now goes; Afro Blue, her debut, is still available in Japan. The album, produced with bassist Stanley Clarke, is very much of its time, featuring a whole phalanx of fusioneers and a set of soul-infused songs that lack the sophistication of later recordings. The production values may be dated, but there is no mistaking the quality of the work. The main question mark seems to be Dee Dee's inability or unwillingness to change pace or dynamic. Even the quieter ballads seem a touch forced, though on something as unexpected as Elton John's 'Sorry Seems To Be The Hardest Word' she genuinely triumphs, bringing power and pathos to what was already an overworked song.

 Live In Paris Verve 014137-2 Bridgewater; Hervé Sellin (p); Antoine Bonfils (b); André Ceccarelli (d). 11/86.
 Live At Montreux Verve 511895-2 Bridgewater; Bert Van den Brink (p); Hein van de Geyn (b); André Ceccarelli (d). 7/90.
Dee Dee's best work has been in concert recordings and these are the discs that probably set her back on course as a jazz singer after her spell trying to cut it in soul and pop. A move to Paris put her in touch with competent, like-minded players who were able to bring a touch of sophistication to the material. Sellin has a lovely touch and brings a quieter and less forceful dynamic to songs like 'Misty' and 'There Is No Greater Love', allowing Dee Dee to ease her own tendency to push too hard. The Montreux set has a less relaxed quality, but the choice of material is more challenging, both technically ('A Night In Tunisia') and emotionally (it's tough for singers to take on 'Strange Fruit'). She pays further tribute to Horace Silver on a brightly executed medley, but the outstanding cuts are the bebop classic and an occasionally startling version of Jobim's 'Insensatez'.

(*) Keeping Tradition Verve 519607-2 Bridgewater; Thierry Eliez (p); Hein van de Geyn (b); André Ceccarelli (d). 92.
* Love And Peace: A Tribute To Horace Silver Verve 527470-2 As above, except add Stéphane Belmondo (t); Lionel Belmondo (ts); Horace Silver (p). 94.
(*) Dear Ella Verve 527896-2 Bridgewater; Cecil Bridgewater, Byron Stripling (t); Bob Flowers (tb); Antonio Hart (as); Lou Levy (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Kenny Burrell (g); Ray Brown (b); Grady Tate (d). 1–2/97.
A title like Keeping Tradition is a strong clue to Dee Dee's musical instincts. Her cool, limber swing works brilliantly on 'Fascinating Rhythm', 'Just One Of Those Things' and a superb medley of 'I'm A Fool To Want You' and 'I Fall In Love Too Easily'. If her debt to Ella weren't obvious from this, it's heavily underscored on the 1997 tribute album, which was recorded with a star-laden band over four nights in New York and Chicago. She starts with a light, buoyant reading of 'A Tisket A Tasket', establishing her voice before reaching for something more in the ballads. Her ability to convey the drama of 'How High The Moon' and 'Stairway To The Stars' while exploring their complex harmonic potential – echoes of bebop in her interchanges with Brown, the former Mr Fitzgerald – is endlessly impressive.

Like the eponymous Atlantic album (see below), Love And Peace is a funkier conception, as befits its dedication to the music of Mr Funk himself. Surprisingly, Horace Silver's tunes lend themselves well to vocal performance, and Dee Dee is content to swap tags and allusions with the composer, who has always been a one-man dictionary of musical quotations. Good to hear him playing with such obvious enjoyment.

(*) Live At Yoshi's Verve 543354 Bridgewater; Thierry Eliez (p, org); Thomas Bramerie (b); Ali Jackson (d, perc). 98.

The important thing about this date was the date. Dee Dee's appearance at the Oakland club would have been Ella Fitzgerald's 80th birthday. Her old idol was clearly much in her mind, but so too were some of the other great jazz divas, and Bridgewater takes the opportunity to show what she's learned from Betty, Sassie and here and there Billie as well. 'What A Little Moonlight Can Do' will always seem like Lady's song, but Dee Dee stakes a formidable claim on it here. Her scatting is less mannered than it once threatened to become, and there is a logic and elegance to her improvisational solos now. The band is very good indeed, with some stunning work from Eliez. There is also a video version of this gig.

Also, in brief:

(*) Dee Dee Bridgewater Atlantic 76567 80 760-2. 76.

An attempt to relocate her in a rock-tinged mainstream.

 Victim Of Love Charly 122. 4/98.

Very average, and not at all enlivened by a duet with Ray Charles.

 This Is New Verve 68 842. 01. 01.

Kurt Weill isn't the obvious choice of composer for Dee Dee Bridgewater, and this studio album is a major disappointment.

(*) J'ai Deux Amours DDB Music 99869777. 10 & 11/04.

A collection of French café songs; very atmospheric and elegantly done, but she ain't French and doesn't sing like one.

(*) Red Earth: A Malian Journey Emarcy 000909102 CD/DVD. 8–11/06.

She draws on her own Malian ancestry and on classic Malian songs ('Bambo', which led to the end of forced marriage) to create a narrative about a lost child going home. Beautiful, but nothing like as powerful as the cheapest Malian recording picked up in a Paris flea market.

Nick Brignola (1936–2002)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE, OTHER REEDS, FLUTES

Born in Troy, NY, this distinctive hard-bopper worked with Woody Herman, Herb Pomeroy and others as well as leading his own groups.

 Raincheck Reservoir RSR CD 108 Brignola; Kenny Barron (p); George Mraz (b); Billy Hart (d). 9/88.

* On A Different Level Reservoir RSR CD 112 Brignola; Kenny Barron (p); Dave Holland (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 9/89.

Given that baritone saxophone is still a relatively under-subscribed category, given how prolific he was, and how good, it's amazing that Brignola isn't better known. He may lack the sheer sophistication of a Mulligan (to whom he pays tribute on a now unavailable Stash CD) or the workmanlike authority of Pepper Adams, but he has a huge sound, an authoritative line in solos and an overall approach that is open to almost anything; he even played fusion for a while.

Reservoir have done him proud over the years, with a strong streak of activity towards the end of the '80s. He brings to both of these an imposing sound that, however fast and fluent, always makes the baritone sound like the big horn that it is. The only flat spots on Raincheck are when he sidelines on clarinet and soprano. But On A Different Level is head and shoulders above it. Nick sticks to baritone and the solos on 'Tears Inside', 'Hot House' and 'Duke Ellington's Sound Of Love' are sustained with fantastic strength, mirrored in the playing of the rhythm section. A shrewd choice of tunes offers a capsule history of the baritone saxophone in jazz – from Carney on 'Sophisticated Lady' to Adams on the Mingus tune – but he puts it all under his own flag.

(*) Like Old Times Reservoir RSR CD 133 Brignola; Claudio Roditi (t, flhn); John Hicks (p); George Mraz (b); Dick Berk (d). 5/94.

(*) The Flight Of The Eagle Reservoir RSR CD 145 Brignola; Kenny Barron (p); Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 6/96.

Like Old Times is a blowing date that avoids any suspicion of routine. The two long blow-outs on 'When Lights Are Low' and 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes' are marked by perfectly controlled dynamics, with no loss of excitement as one solo passes to another. Roditi is in rare form and Hicks supplies all the right leads, but the saxophonist surrenders nothing, with a pointed clarinet meditation on 'More Than You Know' and his terrific solo on 'Thousand Eyes' as particular highlights. Rudy Van Gelder still doesn't put enough air round the horns and this diminishes the impact a little. No problems with sound, though, on the impeccable Flight Of The Eagle. A simple quartet, baritone for the most part and an inch-perfect section. 'Gerrylike' is a nod of farewell to Mulligan, the gentlest guying of the older man's methods, while the complex changes of the title-tune are wholly absorbing. 'My Foolish Heart' is a near-perfect ballad.

(*) All Business Reservoir RSR CD 159 Brignola; Dave Pike (vib); Chuck D'Aloia (g); John Patitucci (b); Billy Hart (d). 3/99.

Nick rips into 'Pent Up House' with controlled abandon, showing that he hasn't lost a whit in terms of chops. The better stuff is subtler: a nice interchange with guitarist D'Aloia (who contributes the rather good 'Fast Food') on 'Darn That Dream' and two contrasting versions (fast and slow) of 'Seven Come Eleven'. Pike solos plentifully and to good effect, which means that the guitarist, pretty much a first for a Brignola group, is left to do a lot of the comping work.

(*) Tour De Force Reservoir RSR CD 168 Brignola; Chuck D'Aloia (g); Eddie Gomez (b); Bill Stewart (d); Café (perc). 12/00.

The final studio album is everything a last act should be: authoritative, exciting, full of solid predictability ('Donna Lee', 'I Should Care', 'In Your Own Sweet Way') and fresh material (D'Aloia's 'V.I.', Dave Holland's 'Backwoods Song', Brignola's own 'Local Motion' and 'Labyrinth'). The voice is still huge, bustling, impatient but courteous, and this is an exceptional band, even if Gomez's featured moments are typically without substance. No harm, if you haven't ever heard him, in starting at the end; this and Different Level are the thoroughbreds.

Also, in brief:

 It's Time Reservoir RSR CD 123. 2/91.
A feat of overdubbing, with his whole armoury (even piccolo) brought to bear. Mark Feldman's mix just doesn't bring it off convincingly. No drums, interestingly.

 Live At Sweet Basil, First Set /  ... Second Set Reservoir RSR CD 125 / 174. 8/92.
Occasional longueurs, and the familiar need to bring out some of his 'doubles', but generally speaking a very strong club date. The second volume was released posthumously.

() Spring Is Here Koch 3-6905. 94–97.
A dream date with the Netherlands Metropole Orchestra. Over-egged here and there, but Mulligan himself scarcely did better in similar situations.

(*) Poinciana Reservoir RSR CD 151. 4/97.
An unaccountable disappointment; edgy and uncoordinated.

Alan Broadbent (born 1947)

PIANO

A New Zealander, he went to Berklee in 1966 and from there joined Woody Herman as pianist-arranger. His career has divided along those lines ever since. Member of Charlie Haden's Quartet West.

(*) Pacific Standard Time Concord CCD 4664 Broadbent; Putter Smith (b); Frank Gibson Jr (d). 1/95.
* Personal Standards Concord CCD 4757 Broadbent; Putter Smith (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 10/96.
There's great clarity of thought about his playing, the interpretations entire and well-formed rather than merely busked, and if that suggests a lack of spontaneity, he always manages to make the music sound fresh. Broadbent takes his cues first from Parker and Powell, yet one seldom thinks about bop while listening to his two-handed approach. Some of the material on the first of these is over-familiar and since Broadbent's way is to personalize his themes with small, well-chosen gestures, the music isn't quite characterized enough by the trio. But the pianist's touch is so lucid and refined that he makes every note seem like a specific choice.

Personal Standards is superlative. Here he tackles eight originals, plus one he wishes he had written himself, Smith's 'North'. The playing is so impeccable, the interplay so refined (LaBarbera has never played better) that one is left at a loss for words. Broadbent deserves the highest acclaim.

 Round Midnight /  Every Time I Think Of You Artistry 7005 / 7011 Broadbent; Brian Bromberg (b); Kendall Kay (d); Tokyo Strings (on second only). 9/05; 06.
This is the current trio, smooth and capable, but still inventive enough to wring something new, though hardly revolutionary, out of 'Round Midnight'. J. J. Johnson's 'Lament' and the standard 'I'm Old Fashiond' are the other highlights. Broadbent saves the best for last on Every Time I Think Of You. The playing, orchestration and production are all superb, but it's all a bit lightweight and veers close to easy listening, saved only by Broadbent's impeccable technique and ability to coax emotion even out of a cool setting. That final piece is 'Woody 'N' Me', an affectionate tribute to his old boss (there's also a thoroughly idiomatic acknowledgement of Lennie Tristano) and one of three nice, if undemanding, originals.

Herbie Brock

PIANO

A fine bop pianist, latterly based in Florida.

 Herbie's Room VSOP 106 Brock; Brooks Caperton (b); Bill Ladley (d). 8/57.
There's not much of Brock's work around, because there was never that much in the first place. These tracks for Criteria suggest an imaginative rather than innovative bop stylist, who's incapable of sounding anodyne even on such well-trodden material as 'Tenderly' and 'My Funny Valentine', but who really comes into his own on quirkier stuff like Rollins's 'Doxy' and Lennie Niehaus's 'Johnny Jaguar'. Recorded in a Miami club with two local players, it's a salutary reminder that good music was being made away from New York, but it's a pity that Herbie didn't have more chances in the Big Apple.

Magnus Broo

TRUMPET

Exciting young Swedish leader.

 Sudden Joy /  Levitation Dragon DRCD 339 / 365 Broo; Torbjörn Gulz (p); Mattias Welin (b); Jonas Holgersson (d). 7/99.
 Sugarpromise Moserobie 016 As above. 4/03.
A capable section man and guest soloist, Broo sounds a little exposed out on his own. His insistence on using original material also blunts the impact a little and there is nothing here that is genuinely memorable. Holgersson is a powerful drummer who needs something more substantial in front of him. Promising discs, though, and Broo can be relied on to do more.

Brooklyn Sax Quartet

GROUP

Formed in 1995 with an ambitious remit.

 The Way Of The Saxophone Innova 549 John O'Gallagher (ss); Sam Furnace (as); David Bindman (ts); Fred Ho (bs). 01.
 Far Side Of Here Omnitone 12206 As above, except add Rudresh Mahanthappa (as). 10/03, 5/04.
The seeming democracy of an ensemble like this can be misleading. Unlike the World Saxophone Quartet, ROVA and to a lesser extent the 29th Street boys, both of which groups were made up of stars in their own right, the Brooklyn Sax Quartet is refreshingly unstellar. There's no mistaking, however, that this is largely Bindman's project. His compositions ('Pier Sketch', 'Gadzo' and 'Climate Conditions' on the first album) and arrangements of Ellington ('In A Sentimental Mood') are at the heart of what the BSQ was about, coolly complex ensemble jazz with more emphasis on thought than on emotional grandstanding. In terms of the group sound, there is inevitably more evenness, with O'Gallagher, the much-missed Furnace and Ho (who also wrote 'Hipster Harvey' on the first album) all contributing strongly.

Furnace died shortly after the first sessions for Far Side Of Here and was replaced by Mahanthappa, a logical choice given his idiosyncratic tone and eclectic approach; Furnace was no mainstreamer, either. Unfortunately, the later album seems to have been overtaken by Ho's pan-cultural concept. He's the arranger of a long central suite, derived from traditional themes, while Bindman's compositions ('Tie Me Sufre' and 'Jajo') have an ethnomusicological cast. Significantly, the best cut on the second set is 'A Night In Tunisia'. On this form, they were unstoppable.

Bob Brookmeyer (born 1929)

VALVE TROMBONE, PIANO

The Missourian is the first man since Juan Tizol to favour the valve trombone over the slide instrument. He replaced Chet Baker in the Gerry Mulligan quartet and subsequently spent many years as a studio musician and arranger. Despite alcohol problems he has continued to compose and lead ambitious bands.

(*) Complete 1953–1954 Quintet Studio Recordings With Stan Getz Definitive 11264 Brookmeyer; Stan Getz (ts); John Williams (p); Bill Anthony, Bill Crow, Teddy Kotick (b); Frank Isola, Al Levitt (d). 4, 7 & 8/53, 11/54.

(*) The Dual Role Of Bob Brookmeyer Original Jazz Classics OJC 1729 Brookmeyer; Jimmy Raney (g); Teddy Charles (vib); Teddy Kotick (b); Mel Lewis, Ed Shaughnessy (d); Nancy Overton (v). 1/54, 6/55.

Valve trombone has a more clipped, drier sound than the slide variety, and Brookmeyer is probably its leading exponent, though Maynard Ferguson, Stu Williamson and Bob Enevoldsen have all made effective use of it.

Definitives seem to be disappearing as fast as they come, so the 1953–4 Clef and Norgran dates (which will appeal just as much to Getz fans) are worth getting as a matter of priority. There's a fine 'Have You Met Miss Jones?' from April 1953 and some terrific stuff from the following year, when the Verve At The Shrine was recorded. Sound isn't terrifically good, but these are valuable recoveries.

Brookmeyer has always been keen to share piano duties and is a very considerable keyboard-player, as he proves on The Dual Role. 'Rocky Scotch' and 'Under The Lilacs' are both readily categorized as 'cool' jazz, but there is a surprising degree of variation in Brookmeyer's tone that anticipates the more inflected and expressive playing of later years.

 Brookmeyer RCA Victor 74321 59152 2 Brookmeyer; Al DeRisi, Joe Ferrante, Bernie Glow, Louis Oles, Nick Travis (t); Joe Singer (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba); Gene Quill (as); Al Cohn (as, ts, cl); Al Epstein, Eddie Wasserman (ts); Sol Schlinger (bs); Hank Jones (p); Milt Hinton, Buddy Jones (b); Osie Johnson (d). 9 & 10/56.

This was an attempt to showcase Brookmeyer in three rather different contexts, from large band down to octet. The big-band arrangements, like the opening 'Oh, Jane Snavely', are interestingly pared down, but arranged in the most interesting way with four trumpets, three tenors, baritone and rhythm providing the background for the solitary trombone. The next session was very different, with a pair of trumpets, french horn and tuba, but just two reeds, alto doubling clarinet, and, once again supporting a roomy bottom end, Sol Schlinger's baritone. The results are no less spare and undramatic, but the subtlety and control are equally striking, and these are more compelling performances than the two later octets, 'Confusion Blues' and 'Zing Went The Strings Of My Heart'. These sessions represented quite a substantial investment in Brookmeyer's growing reputation. Even given the tastes of the time, they must have been quite difficult records to sell, but they come up to date very impressively.

(*) Traditionalism Revisited Blue Note 94847 Brookmeyer; Jimmy Giuffre (ts, bs, cl); Jim Hall (g); Joe Benjamin, Ralph Pena (b); Dave Bailey (d). 7/57.

Late-'50s recordings, like Traditionalism Revisited, saw Brookmeyer exploring classic material with an augmented version of Giuffre's trio and in an idiom the clarinettist was to christen 'folk jazz'. The aim here was something that almost became the legitimacy in the '90s, playing classic jazz tunes and standards with due respect to the tradition, but with markedly modern harmonies. The effect is most noticeable on 'Sheik Of Araby' and 'Louisiana', which bracket the set, but the entire session is handled with a great consistency of vision, as much to the credit of Jimmy Giuffre as to Brookmeyer. On 'Honeysuckle Rose' there are some choruses on which Bob accompanies himself on piano without double-tracking, a rather extreme example of the 'dual role'.

 Kansas City Sound Fresh Sound FSRCD 430 Brookmeyer; Harry Edison (t); Paul Quinichette, Zoot Sims (ts); Al Cohn (ts, bs); Hank Jones, Nat Pierce (p); Freddie Green, Jim Hall (g); Addison Farmer, Eddie Jones (b); Osie Johnson, Charlie Persip (d); Clarence 'Big' Miller (v). 10 & 12/58.

Brookmeyer retained a deep affection for the Kansas City sound and offers unapologetically 'regressive' interpretations of 'Jumpin' At The Woodside', 'Moten Swing', 'King Porter Stomp' and others on these mid-size group dates from the end of the '50s. The octet date with Edison, Sims and Cohn is arguably the stronger of the two – a richer sound, certainly – but there are fine things right across this valuable reissue.

 Bob Brookmeyer And Friends Sony/Columbia 77632 Brookmeyer; Stan Getz (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Gary Burton (vib); Ron Carter (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5/64.

This isn't by any means an epochal record, but much of its interest lies in the young and hip rhythm section and the association with Getz. Inevitably, Brookmeyer has to defer to them all to some degree, the saxophonist most obviously, but this was a strong date, with some lovely standards playing. The CD reissue comes with some extras.

 Paris Suite Challenge 70026 Brookmeyer; Kris Goessens (p); Riccardo Del Frà (b); Dre Pallemaerts (d). 10/93, 1/94.

With the exception of Berg's 'Chaconne', played in a delicately swinging way, this is entirely dominated by originals. Goessens is responsible for three of them, including the déjà-vu 'Gospel Song', while Brookmeyer contributes 'Chanson', 'Airport Song' and 'Erik Satie'. The group interaction is consistently interesting and Goessens's solos are far from negligible.

(*) Old Friends Storyville STCD 8292 Brookmeyer; Thomas Clausen (p); Mads Vinding (b); Alex Riel (d). 11/94.

Brookmeyer remained a fascinating live small-group performer. This was recorded in the Jazzhus, Copenhagen: five long numbers packed with invention, if a little hampered by Brookmeyer's cool, slightly expressionless delivery. His phrasing on 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams' recalls Jimmy Giuffre, though elsewhere on the set he is brassier and more impacted. The closing 'All Blues' is the only track that doesn't quite work and only because the rhythm section seem to have gone to sleep a bit.

[illegible]

* New Works / Celebration

Challenge CHR 70066 Brookmeyer; Thorsten Beckenstein, Jorg Engels, Ralf Hesse, Torsten Maass, Sebastian Strempel (t); Christian Jakso, Ludwig Nuss, Ansgar Striepens (tb); Edward Partyka (btb); Marko Lackner, Stefan Pfeifer (as); Nils Van Haften, Paul Heller (ts); Marcus Bartelt, Scott Robinson (bs); Kris Goessens (p); Jurgen Grimm (ky); Ingmar Heller (b); John Hollenbeck (d); Christopher Dell (perc). 7/97.

The earlier music on this delightful set was written for a festival in Lübeck in 1994, with Gerry Mulligan as guest soloist. Posthumously documented on record, it features the multi-talented Scott Robinson in the solo role, turning the folk- and dance-based material into something at once familiar and strange. Robinson is a formidable soloist and he brings a genuine individuality to the part. Of the other tracks, 'Cameo' is essentially a solo spot for Brookmeyer, while 'Duets', built on one of Bob's minimalist themes, is a great basis for improvisation and includes some inventive drumming from John Hollenbeck. The closing item, 'Boom Boom', is derived from the earlier 'Danish Suite' and provides a light-toned and joyous closer. Brookmeyer has rarely written or played better.

(*) Together Challenge CHR 70068 Brookmeyer; Mads Vinding (b). 10/98.

The sonorities are delightful, Brookmeyer's wuffling sound set against Vinding's smart, articulate lines, and the notes are pretty good too. Each of these is a full-on duet, no sense of either man giving much in the way of quarter to the other, yet they're beautifully co-operative, little counter-melodies or riffs emerging as they go, before it's on to the next thing. Brookmeyer turns to the keyboard for three tracks, including his originals, 'New Song' and 'Pretty Song' – not a man to waste time on fancy titles.

 Madly Loving You Challenge CHR 70097 Brookmeyer; New Art Orchestra. 9/99.

Bill Kirchner, in the notes, advises the listener that the CD is too rich for a single sitting, and he's right – it's too long, the pieces (eight compositions from various hands, including Maria Schneider, Bill Holman, Manny Albam and Jim McNeely) sometimes exhaustingly complex. Brookmeyer is the principal soloist and he plays with keen interest, though, as with all such projects, some pieces seem more effective than others.

 Holiday Challenge CHR 70103 Brookmeyer; Mads Vinding (b); Alex Riel (d). 6/00.

Brookmeyer's piano-playing used to be described, not without affection, as faintly eccentric. It's a little hard to agree with the note-writer who claims 'a rich sound, a dazzling touch and effortless swing feeling'. Brookmeyer's playing is effort*ful*, a ponderous manner which makes his off-kilter voicings and individual way with time all the more characterful. A whole CD of Bob at the piano may strike some as too much of an interesting thing, which accounts for our moderate rating. But it's a very sweet change from the plentiful, blandly virtuosic piano-trio music which has been made of late. Vinding and Riel enjoyed it, too.

 Stay Out Of The Sun Challenge 70110 Brookmeyer; Larry Koonse (g); Tom Warrington (b); Michael Stephans (d). 8/00.

Stephans was a young friend who helped Brookmeyer in his darker years. The debt is nicely repaid here, an elegant but undemanding set which sets off the trombone very nicely indeed. The guitar sits beautifully under the solo lines, especially on 'The Turtle', which moves more like a racehorse. Stephans himself is no Max Roach, but he knows his bop and has a nice melodic touch for the ballads as well.

(*) Waltzing With Zoe Challenge CHR 70081 Brookmeyer; New Art Orchestra. 1/01.

Brookmeyer describes these compositions for the New Art Orchestra as 'character pieces', a term he may have derived from classical practice, but which is richly resonant here. 'For Maria' is dedicated to fellow bandleader Maria Schneider. Other tracks, like the title-piece, have a more programmatic feel, though not necessarily a restrictive one, and 'American Tragedy' is criss-crossed with ambiguities. The opening 'Seesaw', which features a decidedly old-fashioned drum part, is potentially off-putting, but even casual listeners should stay online; the rest of the album is packed with intrigue. Brookmeyer's genius as an orchestrator can be gauged from 'Child At Play', in which a sequence of fragmentary melodic shapes suddenly reveals an overall design that, in retrospect, has been there all along.

* Island Artists House 670006 Brookmeyer; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Frank Carlberg (p); Jeremy Allen (b); Paul Hollenbeck (d). 9/02.

If you can't play with Thad Jones any more, Kenny Wheeler would seem to be the obvious next choice. Compare this with 1978's Back Again and it is clear how much Brookmeyer's vision has deepened. The chops aren't quite as secure as they once were, but the playing is stately and very gorgeous, rarely rising to anything of a climax, but never short of satisfying. The writing is divided between the two leaders, with Bob contributing one composition in tribute to his colleague as well as the title-track, and Wheeler starring on his own '114', a tiny modern masterpiece. Recommended.

 Spirit Music ArtistShare 50 Brookmeyer; New Art Orchestra. 07.

This is a limited-edition disc, only available direct from the label. One hopes an orderly queue is forming, because this is one of Brookmeyer's most compelling big-band dates of recent times, immaculately arranged and performed by the NAO (who really deserve a fuller personnel listing, given the number of good – though not big-name – soloists). There's an upbeat tone to the record, though 'The Door' is a more solemn conception and one wonders to what degree these sanguine themes – 'Silver Lining', 'Happy Song', 'Blue Skies' – were inspired by Bob's own recovery and rehabilitation.

Also, in brief:

 Portrait Of An Artist / The Four Brothers Sound Collectables COL 6284. 6/58, 4/59.

Excellent Atlantic dates with Jimmy Giuffre (ts), including an ambitious four-part suite on the first record.

* Back Again Sonet 14893. 78.

A difficult decade and the title suggests how he had spent time away from active music. A dream band and some lovely music.

(*) Dreams Dragon DRCD 169. 8/88.

Bob came to the fore again in the later '80s; this isn't particularly inspiring, but lifted by one or two passages on 'Cats' and 'Missing Monk'.

 Electricity ACT 892 192. 3/91.
Based in Europe, Brookmeyer found more opportunities for large-scale sessions; this, with the WDR Big Band, isn't particularly wonderful but immaculately arranged and dotted with fine solos.

 Get Well Soon Challenge 70111. 8/02.
An elegant set with Till Bronner (t) and the New Art Orchestra.

Roy Brooks (born 1938)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, SAW

Detroit-born and influenced by Elvin Jones, he worked with Horace Silver and in Max Roach's percussion ensemble M'Boom. His own recording was impeded first by educational work, but increasingly by the onset of bipolar disorder.

 Beat Fresh Sound FSRCD 350 Brooks; Blue Mitchell (t); George Bohannon (tb); Junior Cook (ts); Hugh Lawrence (p); Gene Taylor (d). 63.
By rights Roy Brooks should be one of the most celebrated drummers of his generation. He charmed the pants off European audiences with his musical saw routine during Charles Mingus's stormy 1972 tour. Unfortunately, opportunities to record on his own account were quite rare and ill-health kept him out of the studios after 1983's Enja Duet In Detroit. From twenty years earlier, this Workshop Jazz disc (the imprint was started by Motown's Berry Gordy) still sounds as fresh as the reissue label suggests.

The personnel is essentially the Horace Silver group, with a couple of Detroiters (Lawson and Bohannon) sitting in. The formula is uncomplicated, at times verging on the crude, but Brooks generates an immediate excitement and even if the horn arrangements are nothing to write home about they do the job admirably.

Tina Brooks (1932–74)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Harold Floyd Brooks – known as 'Tiny' or 'Tina' – was a stalwart of the late-'30s Blue Note stable, but was sidelined from the release programme, probably owing to the drug dependency that eventually hastened his death.

(*) Minor Move Blue Note 22671 Brooks; Lee Morgan (t); Sonny Clark (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Blakey (d). 3/58.
(*) True Blue Blue Note 875264 Brooks, Freddie Hubbard (t); Duke Jordan (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 6/60.
 Back To The Tracks Blue Note 21737 Brooks; Blue Mitchell (t); Jackie McLean (as); Kenny Drew (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 10/60.
 The Waiting Game Blue Note 40536 2 Brooks; Johnny Coles (t); Kenny Drew (p); Wilbur Ware (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/61.
For a considerable time, Brooks's Blue Note work was only available in Japan or in a Mosaic box set. A powerful and able player whose touch never faltered at faster tempos and whose ballad playing was markedly individual, he was also a decent composer, as 'Nutville' and the title-track on the first LP suggest. This is a quintessential Blue Note session, tough, professional hard bop with a sophisticated emotional temper. Morgan and Clark are legends in their own way but there is no mistaking that the record belongs to the leader; his 'The Way You Look Tonight' is stunning.

'Back To The Tracks' is also a fine original and gets the 1960 album up to impressive speed. A pace, alas, that it doesn't quite sustain. Brooks had a habit of starting strongly and tailing off. It happens in solos and the habit seems imprinted on album sessions as well. Mitchell and McLean are less obviously sympathetic partners but Jackie is in great form, and when the two saxophones lock, the harmonics are intriguing.

Release of The Waiting Game in 2002 was a significant moment. It is not necessarily Tina's most satisfying record, but it is certainly his boldest, starting conventionally enough with the bluesy 'Talkin' About' followed by the show-off bebop of 'One For Myrtle', but it also harbours the surprising minor-key 'David The King' and a weird, south-of-the-border version of 'Stranger In Paradise'. Brooks sounds on the case throughout, supremely confident at all tempos.

Cecil Brooks III (born 1961)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

A reliable and inventive player on the New York scene, influenced by bebop masters like Art Blakey and Max Roach.

 For Those Who Love To Groove Savant 2023 Brooks; Riley Mullins (t); Bruce Williams (as); Don Braden (ts); Radam Schwartz (org). 99.
Packed with short, pugnacious tracks, this is credited to the CB3 Band, and calls on organist Schwartz's arranging skills, as well as Brooks's own confident leadership. The organ accompaniment is effective but one-dimensional. Don Braden is a commanding presence and it's a pity that he isn't cut loose more often. Cecil's tough, elastic groove is an ideal platform for saxophone-players, but none of the solos are given sufficient time to develop, the better ones terse and emphatic, the rest merely abbreviated. Brooks makes his own most impressive statement on 'Lakumbe's Theme', but he also bridges a nice medley of standards – 'Body And Soul', 'I Can't Get Started', 'Tenderly' – and he shows an imaginative take on recent repertoire in programming Babyface's 'Can We Talk?'.

 Live At Sweet Basil /  ... Volume 2 Savant 2034 / 2039 Brooks; Riley Mullins (t); Don Braden (ts); John Hicks (p); Dwayne Dolphin (b). 8/00.
These are somewhat drawn-out performances, ponderously long in the case of the opening 'Bounce' and the closing 'Vamp For Cho', a little more focused and energized in between. 'Chelsea Bridge' and 'But Beautiful' are especially good, and the two horns mesh well in the ensembles.

Good as the first set was, a second tranche from his Sweet Basil residency was a surprise. A pleasant one, as it turns out. Jimmy Heath's 'Voice Of The Saxophone' was an inspired choice for this group, as was Errol Garner's 'Dreamy'. After the opening 'Swamp Run', there's nothing more of Cecil's own until the closing 'Yvette', 'Spontaneous Percussion' and 'Hill District', which end the album on a thoughtful high. Brooks is not exclusively a high-end energy player, as he proves on 'Prelude To Yvette', but his real strength is driving a group along, and he does that cheerfully throughout this set.

 Double Exposure Savant 2072 Brooks; Gene Ludwig (org). 7/00.

Ludwig has a strong reputation and one immediately detects his quality and commitment on this crisp, funky date which seems to have been around for some time before release. Brooks is such a well-bottomed drummer that there is little need for the organist to keep time as well, or to fill in the bass-lines too explicitly. That suits him well. Off they go with Grofe's 'On The Trail' and it's entertainment every step of the way after that.

Bobby Broom (born 1961)

GUITAR

The New Yorker had to turn down an offer to play with Sonny Rollins in order to finish high school. Later studied at Berklee and moved to Chicago in the '80s.

(*) No Hype Blues Criss Cross 1109 Broom; Ron Perilla (p); Peter Washington (b); Lewis Nash (d). 6/95.

 Waitin' And Waitin' Criss Cross 1135 Broom; Ron Blake (ts); Dennis Carrol (b); George Fludas (d). 12/96.

Broom starts No Hype Blues with a Wes Montgomery tune and with a warm tone and fat sound straight from that lineage. An experienced sideman, he brings a pleasing take-my-time feel to these confident but not excessively ambitious discs. The two discs are a straight split between New York and Chicago: the noisy and unpredictable Perillo was in Broom's regular Chicago group, as are Carrol and Fludas on the second date. 'Father' and Perillo's 'Mirthy' are harmonically interesting ballads, making a neat balance to the standards and a not-too-fast 'Pent-Up House'.

With no keyboard on the second disc, Broom's more expansive with his use of time and space. If anything, Blake is a distraction, albeit on just four tracks, but he blows with pointed intensity.

 Modern Man Delmark DE 530 Broom; Ronnie Cuber (bs); Dr Lonnie Smith (org); Idris Muhammad (d). 6/00.

You don't have to hear a note to spot the George Benson lineage. Smith and Cuber played with George in the '60s and Modern Man might come from around that time. It's evocative soul-jazz in the main, distinguished by an extraordinary late-night reading of Eric Clapton's 'Layla' alongside more predictable fare like 'I'll Never Fall In Love Again'. The title-blues and the opening 'Dance For Osiris' suggest Broom's still developing into an interesting composer.

(*) Stand! Premonition 90754 Broom; Dennis Carrol (b); Dana Hall (d). 1/01.

* Song And Dance Origin 82574 Broom; Dennis Carroll (b); Kobie Watkins (d). 2 & 3/05.

Another two sets of contemporary – '60s and '70s – pop songs, beginning with the Sly Stone title-track on the 2001 session to 'Wichita Lineman' on Song And Dance. Broom gets better and better and shows no sign of losing interest in this particular vein. Again, the arrangements are inventive and 'Can't Take My Eyes Off Of You' (Stand!) is exhilaratingly brisk and not at all slushy. The tighter format suits Broom admirably. Carrol is a long-standing colleague, intuitive and firm; Hall keeps the metre springy. The second date almost sounds like a run-on from the first, but Broom's ability to improv(is)e on these over-familiar songs is startling. At 45, he's shaping up as the new Kenny Burrell.

Håkan Broström (born 1955)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Born in Hotala, Sweden, he began playing tenor in blues bands before switching to alto and going into post-bop.

(*) Dark Light /  Celestial Nights Dragon DRCD 190 257 Broström; Bobo Stenson (p); Max Schultz (g); Christian Spering (b); Anders Kjellberg (d). 12/90; 2/94

 Still Dreaming Dragon DRCD 297 Broström; Tim Hagans (t); Marc Copland (p); Christian Spering (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 11/95.

Broström is a fluent and ambitious improviser on all three of his horns, although the tenor only comes out on the first record. Some of the music is merely meandering, and little really compels attention. He likes to set up long, drifting pieces which let the players communicate without undue stress. 'Dark Light' and 'Till Cornelis' on the first disc, 'Spring' on the second, and the haunting 'Carmilla' on the third are good examples. Stenson is quirkily intelligent on the earlier records, Spering splendid on all three, but there's a change of pace with the arrival of the American players, and not necessarily for the better.

Brotherhood Of Breath

GROUP

Formed in 1970 by South African expatriate Chris McGregor, who kept the name alive through various reunions.

(*) Live At Willisau Ogun OGCD 001 Harry Beckett, Marc Charig, Mongezi Feza (t); Nick Evans, Radu Malfatti (tb); Dudu Pukwana (as); Evan Parker, Gary Windo (ts); Chris McGregor (p, ldr); Harry Miller (b); Louis Moholo (d). 1/73.

The trick was always to keep breathing, because Death was always nearby. Feza, Pukwana, McGregor, Miller: there was a shadow across this music, as if the life breathed into it had to be paid for with interest. From the opening moments of 'Do It', with its searing Evan Parker solo, to the relative ease of the closing 'Funky Boots', this is affirmative music of a rare sort, bringing together African kwela, free jazz, post-Ellington swing and even touches of classicism in a boiling mix that grips the heart.

Peter Brötzmann (born 1941)

ALL SAXOPHONES AND CLARINETS, TAROGATO

Studied art in Wuppertal, then played trad before moving into free and leading a trio with Fred Van Hove and Han Bennink from 1968. Now well-established in the US as well as Europe and a godfather-figure to a new generation of improvisers.

(*) For Adolphe Sax Atavistic Unheard Music UMS/ALP 230 Brötzmann; Fred Van Hove (p); Peter Kowald (b); Sven-Åke Johansson (d). 6–9/67.

Brötzmann's influence over the European free scene is enormous. By the time of this album – originally pressed and distributed by the saxophonist himself – he was already an established stylist of some intensity and focus. The huge, screaming sound he makes is among the most exhilarating in the music, and while he has often been miscast as a sonic terrorist, that does insufficient justice to his mastery of the reed family. The only precedents are to be found in the work of Albert Ayler, although Brötzmann arrived at his methods independently. This trio record (Van Hove is only featured in a bonus ten-minute piece recorded at Radio Bremen) is of a similar cast to Ayler's Spiritual Unity, a raw, ferocious three-way assault.

[illegible]

♛ * Machine Gun
FMP CD 24 Brötzmann; Willem Breuker, Evan Parker (ts); Fred Van Hove (p); Buschi Niebergall, Peter Kowald (b); Han Bennink, Sven Åke Johansson (d). 5/68.

The three saxophonists fire off a ceaseless round of blasting, overblown noise, built on the continuous crescendo managed by the two drummers. As chaotic and ''68' as it sounds, the music is formed by an iron purpose and control. Although the recording is crude, the grainy timbre is a fitting medium for this. The CD has two alternative takes which match the released version in their fearsome power.

 Complete Machine Gun Sessions Atavistic Unheard Music Series ALP262 As above, except add Gerd Dudek. 3/68, 5/68.

As with so many completist projects, having the whole session doesn't add substantially to its enjoyment or importance. The original record still gives off a fierce and concentrated power.

(*) Fuck De Boere Atavistic Unheard Music ALP211 Brötzmann; Paul Rutherford, Malcolm Griffiths, Willem Van Manen (tb); Willem Breuker, Evan Parker, Gerd Dudek (ts); Fred Van Hove (p); Derek Bailey (g); Peter Kowald, Buschi Niebergall (b); Han Bennink, Sven-Åke Johansson (d). 3/68–3/70.
(*) Nipples /  More Nipples Atavistic Unheard Music ALP205 / 236 Brötzmann; Evan Parker (ts); Fred Van Hove (p, org); Derek Bailey (g); Buschi Niebergall (b); Han Bennink (d). 4/69.

Dedicated to Johnny Dyani, Fuck De Boere brings together two Frankfurt Festival appearances. The first is a live take of 'Machine Gun', which inevitably pales beside the original, but the title-piece is a typically extravagant opus for ten players which carries all before it, the trombones and saxophones making tumult over the relatively sparse backing. Nipples was originally released on the tiny Calig label (and produced by Manfred Eicher!): only half an hour of music, half of it actually recorded elsewhere by the group minus Parker and Bailey, but this medium-size ensemble is actually rather rare in the Brötzmann discography and the results are fascinating. The follow-up could have been fitted on the same CD.

 The Berlin Concert FMP CD 34/35 2CD Brötzmann; Albert Mangelsdorff (tb); Fred Van Hove (p); Han Bennink (cl, d, perc). 8/71.

Originally released as three separate LPs, culled from two days at the Berlin Free Music Market, where the long-standing trio was augmented by the great trombonist, who sounds unintimidated by the demands of the group. Sound is only average, but the vigour and earthy bravado of the quartet sustains the listener through the unglamorous setting. Some nicely detailed piano, though again the sound is obscured.

 Schwarzwaldfahrt Atavistic 254 2CD Brötzmann; Han Bennink (d, etc). 77.

A notorious record, now expanded. The two musicians were let loose in the Black Forest to duet with themselves, and with birdsong, running water and a few distant-sounding cows. Back to nature, indeed.

* Pica Pica Atavistic Unheard Music UMS/ALP258 Brötzmann; Albert Mangelsdorff (tb); Günter Sommer (d). 9/82.

Another very valuable retrieval by Atavistic, reissued in 2006. Arguably Brötzmann and Mangelsdorff (along with Peter Kowald and Sommer) are the three most important musicians in modern German jazz/free jazz. Their interplay on 'Instant Tears' is breathtaking, eminence speaking to eminence.

(*) Berlin Djungle Atavistic Unheard UMS/ALP246 Brötzmann; Toshinori Kondo (t); Hannes Bauer, Alan Tomlinson (tb); Tony Coe, J. D. Parran, Ernst Ludwig Petrowsky (cl); Louis Sclavis (cl, bcl); John Zorn (cl, mouthpieces); William Parker (b); Tony Oxley (d). 11/84.

Intriguing to compare this with similar American projects led by Hamiet Bluiett. This is certainly still within the realms of 'European free', but these two large slabs of music, recorded as one at the Jazzfest Berlin, have a logic and timbre that somehow does move closer to American models. The ensemble is full of star names, of course, and that quality is reflected episodically through the piece.

(*) 14 Love Poems Plus 10 More: Dedicated To Kenneth Patchen FMP CD 125 Brötzmann (as, ts, bs, mouthpiece, clarinets, tarogato). 8/84.
 No Nothing FMP CD 34 As above. 8/90.

A most unexpected Brötzmann title, but he pretty much delivers as promised. The real glories of this are the opening interpretation of 'Lonely Woman' (the only named composition) on baritone and 'No 15', the first of the bonus tracks and one of the longest on the set, played on A-clarinet. However, there isn't a dull moment and this second solo disc remains his best, certainly the most varied. No Nothing is his most quiescent, though there are catharses: a beautiful recoding by Jost Gebers.

* Songlines FMP CD 53 Brötzmann; Fred Hopkins (b); Rashied Ali (d). 10/91.
 Sacred Scape Rastascan BRD-015 Brötzmann; William Parker (b); Gregg Bendian (d). 92.
(*) Die Like A Dog FMP CD 64 Brötzmann; Toshinori Kondo (t, elec); William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 8/93.

Increasingly an international figure, Brötzmann plays here like an elder statesman, but not carelessly; these records are still soaked in the intensity he's been pursuing for 30 years and he alights on new situations and turns them to fit some part of an entrenched but flexible aesthetic. Die Like A Dog is a stark, harrowing meditation on the life and work of Albert Ayler; it's fuming and intractable stuff, but its spiritual measure is palpable and the quartet plays with stunning commitment. Songlines is more a 'traditional' free trio, the American team playing with flair and swing, which Brötzmann uses for shape and context with his own severe lyricism. Sacred Scrape is more of a scattershot battle of wits between saxophonist and drummer, with Parker calmly finding his own space.

 Nothing To Say FMP CD 73 Brötzmann (saxes, cl, tarogato solo). 11/94.

He picks up the tenor only once, is rumbustious on the bass sax for the title-track but delivers an almost sorrowful lament on the same instrument for 'A Heavy Creeping Shade'; the album is a tribute to Oscar Wilde! Tarogato and alto are used for more-piercing solos.

* The Dried Rat-Dog Okkadisk 12004 Brötzmann; Hamid Drake (d). 5/94.
 The 'WELS' Concert Okkadisk 12013 As above, except add Mahmoud Gania (guembri, v). 11/96.

Drake has become a perceptive and persuasive partner. The great advantage of these is Bradley Parker-Sparrow's excellent sound, which lets one hear the nuances in both men's playing. Drake's rhythms have a steadier, more momentous pulse than most free-jazz drumming and his use of frame drums and tablas adds a global touch. There are six pieces, brimful with eloquent interplay, and on 'Trees Have Roots In The Earth' and 'Dark Wings Carry Off The Sky' Brötz uncorks some of his most vivid tenor-playing for some time.

He's somewhat overwhelmed by the shamanic Gania on the live record and Brötzmann often decorates rather than finding a way into the music. Impressive, though.

 The Chicago Octet / Tentet Okkadisk OD12022 3CD Brötzmann; Joe McPhee (c, vtb, ss); Jeb Bishop (tb); Mars Williams (ts, as, cl); Ken Vandermark (ts, cl, bcl); Mats Gustafsson (bs, fluteophone); Fred Lonberg-Holm (clo); Kent Kessler (b); Michael Zerang, Hamid Drake (d). 1–9/97.

 Stone Water Okkadisk OD 12032 As above, except omit McPhee, Williams; add Toshinori Kondo (t, elec); William Parker (b). 5/99.

The three-disc set is a landmark: a major documentation of Brötzmann on an American label, a rare instance of his large-group music, and a definitive meeting with some of the many American masters – from McPhee to Vandermark – who've been influenced by him. One and half discs each of live and studio material; Brotz himself contributes only two pieces, 'Burning Spirit' and 'Foolish Infinity', so it can be said to be a co-operative effort, even if the saxophonist's name features on the marquee. Of course, he plays a huge role as performer, but so do the other participants and the exhilarating reed section makes an awesome racket. There's much to surprise, too: the worldly groove of 'Makapoor', the sombre, granite-block textures of 'Other Brothers', which explode into a fast shuffle. An affecting tribute to the great man and his influence.

The sequel, cut at the 1999 Victoriaville Festival, is hardly less exciting and absorbing. For all the extraordinary volume on show, this is a remarkable feat of engineering and one that tends to suggest that Brötz has all too rarely had his music documented with this level of accuracy (though Gebers usually manages on the small scale). This leaves the listener breathless.

 Peter Peter Peter Und Johannes Ninth World Music 013 Brötzmann; Johannes Bauer (tb); Peter Friis Nielsen (b); Peter Ole Jørgensen (d). 97.

(*) Three Rocks And A Pine Ninth World Music 020 As above, except omit Bauer; add Mats Gustafsson (ts, bs). 99.

A rare but disappointing encounter between Brötzmann and Bauer. The clarinet comes out more often than the tenor, but the trombonist descends into expressionism, which, even on a CD that comes in at 40 minutes, smacks of space-filling. The exhilarating follow-up suggests at once that the former session needed a more nuanced recording; the same engineer gets a bigger and more imposing sound for Gustafsson, another of Peter's spiritual offspring and an ideal partner for the great man. Fourteen tracks that range from a perfect, 22-second miniature to elongated blowouts.

 Little Birds Have Fast Hearts 1 & 2 FMP CD 97 / 101 Brötzmann; Toshinori Kondo (t, elec); William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 11/97.

A return visit from the 'Die Like A Dog' quartet and the best 'rhythm section' Brötz has had for years. Kondo, one of the most unfettered and genie-like spirits in free playing, is far too seldom encountered in this kind of situation now and his madcap sounds are the heat-haze high-altitude counter to Peter's massive, earth-rooted oratory. Recorded over three nights at the 1997 Total Music Meeting, there might even be enough left for a third volume.

(*) From Valley To Valley Eremite MTE018 As above, except omit Kondo; add Roy Campbell (t). 7/98.

(*) Aoyama Crows FMP CD 118 As above, except add Kondo. 11/99.

Guesting for the day with the quartet, Campbell has no problem with the turbulent setting, but he does bring a boppish feel to some of his parts, and without Kondo's surreal presence the group does seem tamer, though Campbell brings his own intensity. Kondo was back for the 1999 Total Music Meeting. Brötzmann says in his notes that they played in a state of near-exhaustion; whether that makes this fierce, dark music any fiercer and darker is a matter for the listener, though one can hardly call it fatigued.

 Never Too Late But Always Too Early FMP CD 112 Brötzmann; William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 4/01.

Subsequently released in memory of Peter Kowald, this catches the trio in magnificent form in Montreal. Two long sets have very little in the way of treading water; Parker and Drake get funky at several points.

(*) Right As Rain FMP CD 112 Brötzmann (ts, bsx, cl, bcl solo). 8/00.

Dedicated to the memory of saxophonist Werner Ludi, who dropped in and out of the free scene for a time. The wild man of legend is barely recognizable on a piece such as the long clarinet soliloquy 'There Were Tears In Her Eyes'. Some very beautiful playing, even if sometimes it feels uncomfortably like eavesdropping.

 No Hard Feelings: For Steve Lacy Corbett vs Dempsey CvsD 0009 Brötzmann; Tom Raworth (v, music box). 9/00.

An intriguing spoken-word and music project that has some dead patches but also some sublimely good playing from Brötz.

(*) The Darkest River Ninth World Music NWM 027 Brötzmann; Pierre Dørge (g); Peter Friis Nielsen (b); Peter Ole Jørgenson (d). 5/01.

Dørge seems an unlikely guest star, but he fits in comfortably, shifting between his various rock, jazz and melodious-worldy positions and making most of it work. Broodingly quiet episodes mingle with the expected firestorms.

(*) Tales Out Of Time hatOLOGY 589 Brötzmann; Joe McPhee (c, ts); Kent Kessler (b); Michael Zerang (d). 6/02.

This pairing is logical though a little problematic, since McPhee tends to think schematically, which pulls back the element of freedom. Much of this, though, is excellent: 'Blessed Assurance' is a traditional lament, and 'Do You Still Love Me/Did I Ever?' has the quartet in fine form.

 No One Ever Works Alone Okkadisk 12053 Brötzmann; Mats Gustafsson (ts, bs); Ken Vandermark (ts, bs, cl). 10/03.

Peter meets his most dedicated disciples under the name Sonore. There continues to be something poignant about the way the German master's vocabulary has been honoured by these second-generation figures; that mitigates the potential bluster and these solos, duo and trios are beautifully interwoven without any loss of intensity.

() Images / () Signs Okkadisk 12047 / 12048 Brötzmann; Joe McPhee (t); Jeb Bishop (tb); Ken Vandermark, Mats

Gustafsson, Mars Williams (reeds); Fred Lonberg-Holm (clo); Kent Kessler (b); Michael Zerang, Hamid Drake (d). 6/02–11/03.
 Be Music, Night Okkadisk 12059 As above, except omit Drake; add Paal Nilssen-Love (d); Mike Pearson (v). 11/04.
* American Landscapes: Volumes 1 & 2 Okkadisk 12067 / 12068 As above, except omit McPhee, Williams; add Hannes Bauer (tb); Per-Åke Holmlander (tba). 5/06.

Since the Chicago Tentet has been around for more than a decade, it has taken on something of a reportorial mantle and the long pieces on these suggest an evolving set of procedures for the group. As formidable as the horn line-up is, there is plenty of space for the other voices – the title-track of Images makes vivid use of space and Lonberg-Holm takes a significant role on 'Bird Notes' and the title track of Signs.

Be Music, Night features Kenneth Patchen's poetry (an inspiration for the early solo record) and Pearson handles his task with aplomb, though the ensembles are occasionally awkward.

American Landscapes, recorded at the Le Weekend festival in Scotland, is also a reminder of Brötzmann's skills as a painter; he provides the covers. There was a mass of good music from the Tentet, easily worthy of two volumes, and the addition of trombone (Bauer always a reliable collaborator) and tuba restores something of an earlier sound to Brötzmann's ensemble-work.

 Full Blast Jazzwerkstatt JW001 Brötzmann; Marino Pliakas (b); Michael Wertmuller (d). 2/06.

This is reminiscent of the trio with Peter Friis Nielsen and Peeter Uuskyla (see below, 'in brief'), but there's more emphasis on bump and thump and with little of the melodious subtlety the earlier group used to leaven the more metallic stuff with. Very listenable, though it sounds like a by-blow rather than a key recording. Taped at the Loft in Cologne.

* Only The Devil Has No Dreams Jazzwerkstatt JW01 As for No One Ever Works Alone. 9/06.

A Sonore date, recorded live at the Jazzwerkstatt in Berlin. A dazzling recital by three like-minded souls at the peak of their powers. Brötzmann is magisterial; his two companions work their familiar respectful but self-determined course.

Also, in brief:

 3 Points And A Mountain, Plus FMP CD 107. 2/79.

With Misha Mengelberg (p) and Han Bennink (d). Curiously unfocused.

 Reserve FMP CD 17. 11/88.

A relatively conventional trio date with Barre Phillips (b) and Günter Sommer (d).

 Wie Das Leben So Spielt FMP CD 22. 9/89.

Werner Ludi (as) drifted in and out of music. These duos with Peter reveal his stuttery romanticism.

* The März Combo FMP CD 47. 2/92.

An international line-up, with great playing from Paul Rutherford (tb), but no one else rising to the Brötzmann challenge.

(*) Live At The Empty Bottle Okkadisk 1005. 7/98.

Kent Kessler (b) stands in for William Parker, and almost rises to the challenge. Hamid Drake (d) as polymorphous as ever.

 Noise Of Wings / (*) Live At Nefertiti /  Flying Feathers /  Medicina Slask SLACD 019 / Ayler AYL 21 / FMP CD 91 / Atavistic ALP 149. 3/99; 3/99; 01; 3/03.

An interesting trio with Peter Friis-Nielsen (b) and Peeter Uuskyla (d). Regularly convened.

 Fryed Fruit Red Toucan RT 9316. 6/99.

From a club date in Finland with guitarist Sakari Luoma. Heavy.

Marlon Browden

DRUMS

Currently at work in New York.

 Marlon Browden Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 115 Browden; Pete Rende (p); Matt Pavolka (b). 12/00.

A modest, almost introspective debut, which is refreshing, given the big and in-your-face approach of most drummer-led sessions. The music is slightly shapeless, Browden's four originals rather drifting past, and covers of Björk and Miles Davis – the latter finding Rende on electric piano in a bid to recapture the gentler side of Miles's plugged-in period. Browden drums propulsively, but he's a thinker at the kit, as interested in tone and colour as he is in pushing things along.

Ari Brown (born 1944)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

A Chicagoan, equally at ease in the blues and avant-garde situations.

 Ultimate Frontier /  Venus Delmark DE 486 / 504 Brown; Kirk Brown (p); Yosef Ben Israel (b); Ayreeayl Ra (d). 1/95.
 Live At Green Mill Delmark DE 577 As above, except add Pharez Whitted (t); Dr. Cuz (perc). 6/07.

Brown was over 50 before he made his debut recording as leader. Ultimate Frontier doesn't overturn any stylistic boundaries but sits comfortably within Brown's familiar sideman role as warm-voiced collaborator in orthodox or more 'outside' contexts. The pianist is his brother and the empathy is strong and supportive. 'Lester Bowie's Gumbo Stew' is a nod to a favourite homeboy; only 'Motherless Child' overcooks things. The husky, slightly out of tune delivery works even better on Venus, which is largely taken up with tributes to favourite saxophonists, including Roscoe Mitchell, Coltrane and Roland Kirk, whose two-saxophones-at-once trick Brown sometimes deploys. He's shown doing just that on the cover of the live date which marked the centenary of the old club. It's a workmanlike date, though it's trumpeter Whitted who makes the most impact on his four tracks. There's a DVD bonus track of 'Waltz Of The Prophets' on the CD, but the whole performance is separately available as video footage and it makes a colourful and agreeable watch, with Brown's warm but reluctant personality coming over intriguingly.

Cameron Brown

DOUBLE BASS

A veteran of many significant modern sessions.

 Here And Now OmniTone 15205 Brown; Dave Ballou (t); Dewey Redman (ts); Leon Parker (d); Sheila Jordan (v). 11/97.

Even without two guest spots by Dewey Redman, this is a fascinating line-up. Recorded live in Gouvy and Brussels, Brown's Hear & Now (the album title is differently spelt) doesn't offer much insight into Brown the composer. 'Rylie's Bounce' and 'For Dad And Dannie' (which is melded with Ornette's 'What Reason Could I Give?') are both workmanlike and nicely focused on a melodic bass part. The other material gives more scope for improvisation. The set opens with Don Cherry's 'Art Deco', a flawless performance, and there's another tune by the trumpeter a bit later. The highlight is 'Double Arc Jake', something Cameron will have remembered from his days with Don Pullen, played out here at nearly quarter of an hour. Jordan is her extraordinary self and Ballou does his own inside/outside thing with absolute sureness. A special word for Leon Parker, not the most celebrated of modern drummers, but playing with utter authority.

Cleo Brown (1905–95)

PIANO, VOCAL

She played in Chicago bars in the '30s and became a radio favourite. Later became a Seventh Day Adventist and nursed under the name Cleo Patra Brown!

 Cleo Brown 1935–1951 Classics 1252 Brown; Perry Botkin, Mike McKendrick, Nappy Lamare, Bobby Sherwood (g); Artie Bernstein, Leonard Bibbs, Manny Stein (b); Gene Krupa, Tubby Hall, Vic Berton, Zutty Singleton (d); Ella Logan, The Tune Twisters, Johnnie Davis (v); Victor Young Orchestra. 3/35–51.
 Here Comes Cleo Hep 1034 Similar to above. 35–36.
This engaging disc brings together almost everything Brown ever recorded, though Marian McPartland coaxed her out of retirement in the '80s to make an album. She was a capable pianist – a fine version of 'Pinetop's Boogie Woogie' on her first 1935 date and a later solo called 'Pelican Stomp' – but for the most part it was her singing which made her popular, the words delivered in a curious hybrid growl and pout. Not-quite-racy material such as 'The Stuff Is Here And It's Mellow' and 'Mama Don't Want No Peas An' Rice An' Cocoanut Oil' suited her perfectly and the first 19 tracks for Decca, 1935–6, are great, swinging small-combo fun. Even on the later stuff, she sounds as if she's just picking up where she left off, though no one was listening by then. The Hep disc has better sound.

Clifford Brown (1930–56)

TRUMPET

Relative to the length of his career, he had a greater impact on the music than any comparable instrumentalist. A whole generation was affected by his combination of fast attack and broad, lyrical tone, which sounded like a hybrid of Fats Navarro and Miles Davis. Brownie's early death was a genuine tragedy for the music.

[illegible]

* The Complete Blue Note And Pacific Jazz Recordings
Blue Note 34195-2 4CD Brown; J. J. Johnson (tb); Stu Williamson (vtb); Gigi Gryce (as, f); Lou Donaldson (as); Charlie Rouse, Zoot Sims (ts); Jimmy Heath (ts, bs); Bobby Gordon (bs); Russ Freeman, Elmo Hope, John Lewis, Horace Silver (p); Percy Heath, Joe Mondragon, Curley Russell, Carson Smith (b); Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke, Philly Joe Jones, Shelly Manne (d). 6/53–8/54.
This four-CD compilation of all the Blue Note and Capitol recordings is as elegantly remastered and packaged as anyone could possibly wish. Two of these sessions were recorded under the leadership or co-leadership of J. J. Johnson, Art Blakey and Lou Donaldson. The live Birdland sessions of February 1954 are splendidly extended and afford the best possible glimpse of the young genius on the brink of his breakthrough. The rest of the material simply teems with promise and it is almost inconceivable – indeed heartbreaking – listening to the first three discs, to think that none of it would ever come to proper fruition. The sheer fecundity of Brown's musical imagination never fails to amaze.

* Memorial Album Blue Note 32141-2 Brown; Gigi Gryce (as, f); Lou Donaldson (as); Charlie Rouse (ts); Elmo Hope, John Lewis (p); Percy Heath (b); Philly Joe Jones, Art Blakey (d). 6–8/53.
 Clifford Brown Memorial Original Jazz Classics OJC 017 Brown; Art Farmer, Idrees Sulieman (t); Herb Mullins, Ake Persson (tb); Arne Domnérus , Gigi Gryce (as); Benny Golson (ts); Oscar Estell, Lars Gullin (bs); Tadd Dameron, Bengt Hallberg (p); Percy Heath, Gunnar Johnson (b); Philly Joe Jones, Jack Noren (d); collective personnel. 6–9/53.
(*) Clifford Brown Quartet In Paris Original Jazz Classics OJC 357 Brown; Henri Renaud (p); Pierre Michelot (b); Benny Bennett (d). 10/53.
(*) Clifford Brown Sextet In Paris Original Jazz Classics OJC 358 Brown; Gigi Gryce (as); Henri Renaud (p); Jimmy Gourley (g); Pierre Michelot (b); Jean-Louis Viale (d). 10/53.
(*) Jazz Immortal Blue Note 32142-2 Brown; Stu Williamson (vtb); Zoot Sims (ts); Bobby Gordon (bs); Russ Freeman (p); Joe Mondragon, Carson Smith (b); Shelly Manne (d). 7–8/54.
In the days after Clifford Brown died – Richie Powell with him – and as the news filtered through to clubs and studios up and down the country, hardened jazz musicians put away their horns and quietly went home to grieve. Only 26, Brown was almost universally liked and admired. Free of the self-destructive 'personal problems' that haunted jazz at the time, he had seemed destined for ever-greater things when his car skidded off the turnpike.

To this day, his influence on trumpeters is immense, less audibly than Miles Davis's, perhaps, because more pervasive. Though most of his technical devices – long, burnished phrases, enormous melodic and harmonic compression within a chorus, internal divisions of the metre – were introduced by Dizzy Gillespie and Fats Navarro, his two most significant models, it was Brownie who melded them into a distinctive and coherent personal style of great expressive power. Almost every trumpeter who followed, including present-day figures like Wynton Marsalis, has drawn heavily on his example; few though have managed to reproduce the powerful singing grace he took from the ill-starred Navarro.

After a first, near-fatal car accident, Brown gigged in R&B bands and then worked briefly with Tadd Dameron, before touring Europe with Lionel Hampton towards the end of 1953, on which he enjoyed a good-natured and stage-managed rivalry with Art Farmer, and recorded the excellent quartet, sextet and big-band sides now reissued on OJC and sampled on Blue And Brown. By this time, he had already recorded the sessions on the confusingly titled Memorial (OJC) and Memorial Album (Blue Note). The former combined European and American sessions and isn't the most compelling of his recordings, though Dameron's arrangements are as challenging as always, and there are some fine moments from the Scandinavians on the September date.

In their new RVG editions, both Memorial Album and Jazz Immortal are tempting buys, even if you have the complete edition, since once again the Van Gelder magic has been worked on the sound, which beats any previous issue (even if Mr VG didn't do the original engineering in both cases). The former has been extended to include all alternative takes and would make a fine introduction to Brown for a newcomer. The latter sets Clifford up with a gang of West Coasters in a series of Jack Montrose charts, and while the set might seem 'slick' in comparison with some of Clifford's playing situations, it does bring out the excellence of Brownie originals such as 'Daahoud' and 'Joy Spring' and the playing is handsome.

* Alone Together Verve 526373-2 Brown; Harold Land, Hank Mobley, Paul Quinichette, Sonny Rollins (ts); Danny Bank (bs); Herbie Mann (f); Ray Bryant, Jimmy Jones, Richie Powell (p); Barry Galbraith (g); Joe Benjamin, Milt Hinton, George Morrow (b); Roy Haynes, Osie Johnson, Max Roach (d); Helen Merrill, Sarah Vaughan (v); strings. 8/54–1/56.
 Study In Brown Emarcy 814 646 2 Brown; Harold Land (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 2/55.
 More Study In Brown Emarcy 814637-2 As above, except add Sonny Rollins (ts). 1/56.
* Clifford Brown And Max Roach Emarcy 543306 Brown; Harold Land (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 8/54–2/55.
All the material Brown recorded for Emarcy between 2 August 1954 and 16 February 1956 was included on a ten-CD box which sometimes turns up. Inevitably, the best of the music is in the Roach–Brown sessions. The drummer's generosity in making the younger man co-leader is instantly and awesomely repaid.

Alone Together, it should be made clear, consists of one CD of Brownie material (much of it with Roach) and one CD of somewhat later Roach recordings; these latter are discussed in the appropriate place. As a package it makes a very attractive introduction to both artists. Of Brownie, there is the magnificent 'Joy Spring' from August 1954 (which is on Clifford Brown And Max Roach), the February 1955 'Cherokee' from A Study In Brown, 'Gertrude's Bounce' from January 1956 with 11 other tracks from the Emarcy sessions. No surprises, but elegantly packaged and very desirable.

Study In Brown and More contain material already covered elsewhere but they are also attractive individually. Brown's 'Cherokee' is still one of the most arresting performances in modern jazz and his solo on 'Take The "A" Train' is a masterpiece of organization, holding a typically long line in suspension over many bars.

 The Historic California Concerts Fresh Sound FSRCD 277 Brown; Teddy Edwards, Harold Land (ts); Carl Perkins, Richie Powell (p); George Bledsoe, George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 4 & 8/54.
Interesting largely as a way of comparing two rather different line-ups. If Edwards and Land were hardly cut of the same stamp, Perkins and Richie Powell were radically different rhythm section players. The differences don't seem to make too much difference to Brownie, who sails over the changes with his usual grace and lustre, but there is some work to be done transcribing his solos, particularly on the earlier date when he had extra space as sole horn, with Edwards only contributing to two tracks. The phrasing is immaculate and the harmonic understanding lightning fast, but what seems to make these sides is the tone quality, evident even on an indifferent recording and transfer.

* The Ultimate Clifford Brown Verve 539776-2 Brown; as for Verve recordings above. 54–56.
 Clifford Brown's Finest Hour Verve 543602-2 As various Verve albums above. 8/54–2/55.
Another in Verve's excellent series of Ultimate artist-selected compilations. This time, it's Nicholas Payton who chose the tracks, including doubtless a few that had a direct impact on his own playing style. Nearly all standards and covers, in the event, and with perhaps too diplomatic an emphasis on Brownie's work as accompanist to Helen Merrill, Sassie and Dinah Washington, but irreproachable apart from that. Anyone who encounters the opening 'Gertrude's Bounce' and catches the Brown–Roach–Rollins–Richie Powell–Morrow band for the first time is likely to be hooked for the duration. The Finest Hour set includes the odd curios, such as Helen Merrill's 'Yesterdays', but with two other Brown compilations on Verve still in the racks this one's docked a point for pointlessness.

 Together: Recorded Live At Dolphy's Home Rare Live 88616 Brown; Eric Dolphy (as); Harold Land (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 54.
Perhaps more valuable for Eric's first extended recorded solos, but still fascinating for the way Brownie seemed to be driven to play in every context that presented itself. It is indeed fortunate that tapes like this and of some of his final appearances actually survived. Musically, there is nothing especially revelatory. The tunes are mostly familiar standards, along with 'Crazeology' and an untitled original based on familiar changes. The sound is lo-fi but grittily authentic.

(*) Clifford Brown With Strings Emarcy 558078-2 Brown; Richie Powell (p); Barry Galbraith (g); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d); strings. 1/55.
Beautifully repackaged and presented, the January 1955 sessions are, in retrospect, most remarkable for Neal Hefti's delicately nuanced arrangements, which always seem to deliver up surprises. The 12 tracks are almost perfectly uniform in length and delivery, and it's all the more remarkable that they remain fresh and inventive. Brown sounds as bright as a new pin in this digitally remastered version, but he isn't artificially foregrounded in front of the strings; they receive their due share as well.

 More Live At The Beehive Rare Live Recordings 88626 Brown; Harold Land, Sonny Rollins (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 6/55, 2/56.
This is a very different kettle of fish to the similarly named item below. In the first place, the group is decently audible and in absolutely cracking form at the Beehive in Chicago. For Browniephiles, the excitement is the opening cut, more than twenty minutes of 'After You've Gone', which they did not otherwise record. Both Brown and Land are in strong voice, each picking up ideas from the other, though Land seems to vary the structure of his solos more radically than the trumpeter. Roach keeps the pace driving along, but with Powell and Morrow both properly audible on the tape, one can hear what a democratic group this was when firing on all cylinders. The last five tracks on the record, with Rollins on board, were taped in New York and have previously been available on LP. Even so, anyone interested in Brown's short, meteoric life will want this.

(*) Complete 1955: Live At The Beehive Lone Hill Jazz 10438 Brown; Nicky Hill, Sonny Rollins (ts); Chris Anderson, Billy Wallace (p); Leo Blevins (g); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 11/55.
It might as well have been recorded in an actual beehive. The sound is so poor on this, and Max Roach's drums so artificially prominent, that it requires an effort of will to absorb the music that is taking place. Recorded at the Chicago club, it represents one of a series of archaeological recoveries in the Clifford Brown story, and is interesting for glimpses of pianist Chris Anderson on 'Cherokee' and, even more important, of Sonny Rollins guesting with the group for the first time. An important document, then, but as a musical artefact its value is sadly limited.

(*) At Basin Street Universal 9531 Brown; Sonny Rollins (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 1 & 2/56.
The last official Brown–Roach album has wonderful versions of 'Love Is A Many-Splendored Thing', 'What Is This Thing Called Love' and 'Flossie Lou', all worked at carefully in the studio – alternative takes are included on this expanded edition with crisply remastered sound. A few live documents follow, but this is really the end of the story, and Brownie's choruses on the above tunes are perhaps the last time he was able to shape his music to perfection and in ideal circumstances.

 At The Cotton Club Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10292 3CD Brown; Sonny Rollins (ts); Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 2 & 6/56.
A wonderful haul of unreleased material from the last year. Brownie's in terrific form on 'Take The "A" Train' and a titanic 'Get Happy', but the sound is indifferent and there really isn't anything here that does more than add quantitatively to the discography, rather than offering fresh insights into how he was developing. Precocious though he was, Brown was a member of a working band at this period and, while he's always inventive, he can't be expected to have evolved night on night.

 The Last Concert Rare Live 88617 2CD Brown; Chet Baker (t); Sonny Stitt (as); Harold Land, Sonny Rollins (ts); Gerry Mulligan (bs); Dave Brubeck, Richie Powell (p); George Morrow (b); Max Roach (d). 6/56, 7/55.
Formerly available on Philology's Brownie's Eyes, this catches the quintet (with Stitt guesting on 'I Get A Kick Out Of You') at the Continental Restaurant in Norfolk, Virginia, a week before the fatal accident that robbed jazz of both Clifford Brown and Richie Powell. The broadcast on WIOR was taped by a fan. Consequently, the sound is rough-hewn and somewhat dominated by other members of the live audience. There are distortions here and there, which are more atmospheric than intrusive, and some tracks are incomplete, presumably because tapes ran out at inopportune moments.

There is additional material from the Newport Festival the previous year (with Harold Land as tenor saxophonist) and an all too brief edit of a jam with Chet Baker, Gerry Mulligan and Dave Brubeck. A great souvenir for Browniephiles, but pretty average fare otherwise.

 The Beginning And The End Columbia Legacy 66491 Brown; Vance Wilson (as, ts); Billy Root, Mel Vines (ts); Sam Dockery, Duke Wells (p); Eddie Lambert (g); James Johnson, Ace Tisone (b); Osie Johnson, Ellis Tollin (d); Chris Powell (v). 3/52–6/56.
This is almost unbearably poignant. Brownie at the very beginning of his career with Chris Powell and the Five Blue Flames, and recorded live on the very last night of his life, 25 June 1956, saying goodbye to a hometown crowd in Philadelphia after a fine rendition of 'Donna Lee', unaware that goodbye really was that. What makes the set most shockingly poignant is how little time had actually passed between the two dates. The two R&B cuts with Powell (Johnny Echo sang on the remainder of that session) are nothing much, but they serve to heighten the drama of Brownie's subsequent development. He made a huge evolutionary leap within a year and in his work with Lou Donaldson on their co-led quintet, and while the music was still R&B-tinged, Brown's playing had already transcended genre.

It would be perversely good to report that the final gig was one of the greatest of his life, but in many respects it was just another date in the calendar. There is some slightly suspect intonation here and there, some fudged passages on 'A Night In Tunisia', but otherwise it's great stuff and the local band do their bit as well. The horns went away; the guys said goodnight and then it was time for the road ...

Also, in brief:

* Jazz Masters: Clifford Brown Emarcy 842933. 2/54–2/56.
A fair sampling of the material once comprehensively covered in the Brownie box.

 Brownie Live!: Live At Basin St NY & Carnegie Hall Fresh Sound FSRCD 389. 1 & 2/56.
Two more pieces of the puzzle. Familiar enough recordings by now but not so much so that they can't reveal new wrinkles from all the principals.

 Brownie Speaks: A Proper Introduction / * Joy Spring Proper INTROCD 2023 / Properbox 86. 52–56.
Genius distilled and available either in the short-service form or the regular. Either way, these are compelling collections and nicely assembled introductions to one of the jazz greats.

Damon Brown

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VOCAL

Experienced in pop situations, but now going straight ahead.

(*) Blues On The Run Jazz House JHCD 065 Brown; Tim Garland, Renato D'Aiello (ts); Jim Watson, Jonathan Gee, Leon Greening (p); Arnie Somogyi, Ben Hazleton (b); Sebastian Rochford, Winston Clifford (d). 1/00.
(*) Good Cop Bad Cop 33 Jazz 061 Brown; Jonathan Gee (p); Yorai Oron (b); Yaaki Levy, Shai Zelman (d); Idit Eshel (v). 5/00–4/01.
 A Bigger Picture 33 Jazz CD 068 Brown; Rico Rodriguez (tb, v); Christian Brewer (as); Ed Jones, John Miles (ts); Leon Greening (p); Ben Hazelton (b); Sebastian Rochford (d); Jahziz (v). 04.
The decisive playing on Blues On The Run is a pleasure after so much rhetoric on so many standard post-bop records. Brown likes to make every part of the line matter. A lot of his improvising is in short, incisive phrases, but when he goes long, he breaks it up with a snarled note or deliberately wayward intonation. The results are clean, but not squeakily so. It helps to have two contrasting tenors – a pity that they only play together on the smart 'Keep Moving' – and the three pianists are an asset, too. 'Sky Blue' is a less than enthralling ballad and 'Mack The Knife' sounds like filler. The follow-up came after a gig at the Israeli Red Sea Festival and because Gee gets co-billing there's as much emphasis on piano as on trumpet. Jonathan's 'Cicada' and 'Catwoman' are both effective and Brown plays some exultant solos.

The second 33 disc is bright and well-constructed. Everything is self-written except 'God Bless The Child' and Brown – albeit surrounded again by powerful voices, including the charismatic Rodriguez – seems determined to proceed at his own pace.

Guillermo E. Brown (born 1976)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Born in New Haven, Connecticut, and celebrated for his work with David S. Ware and others.

 Soul At The Hands Of The Machine Thirsty Ear THE 57118 Brown; Daniel Carter (t, as, cl, f); Andre Vida (sax); Pete Cafarella (p); Morgan Michael Craft (g); Shahzad Ismaily, Keith Witty (b); Yorel Lashley (perc); Clay Holley (prog, beats); Natasha Latasha Diggs (v). 02.

He shows a considerable facility for sustaining a groove in off-centre rhythms. Listen to what Vida is doing and it's not so far removed from his work with Anthony Braxton. Likewise the puckishly indefinable Carter, who seems to hop from project to project, and track to track here, with a trickster's refusal to be pinned down. The other important element is Letasha Nevada Diggs's curious vocalese/spoken word approach, which lifts four of the tracks out of the ordinary. In an oversubscribed market, it's hard to see how this would clamour for attention, but it has genuine qualities and is worth a spin.

Jeri Brown (born 1952)

VOICE

Born in Missouri, she has a graceful and intelligent approach to a lyric.

(*) New Wonderland Justin Time JSTCD 223 Brown; Seamus Blake, David Murray (sax); Cyrus Chestnut, Fred Hersch, John Hicks, Alain Jean-Marie, Kirk Lightsey, Jimmy Rowles, Simon Sloutsker, Tony Suggs (p); Peter Leitch (g); Roberto de Brashov (acc); Erich Kory (clo); Curtis Lundy, Pierre Michelot, Rufus Reid, Eric Von Essen (b); John Betsch, Dominique Cote, Sangoma Everett, Wali Muhammad, Grady Tate (d); Andre Martin (perc); Yves Aime Pierre, Leon Thomas (v). 91–01.

We have covered the gorgeous Ms Brown's Justin Time records in previous editions. No room here to do more than point you to this very worthwhile compilation, which does a pretty good job of what it promises in the subtitle, but more important goes for the more challenging of her songs, rather than the most obvious. Nine Justin Times – including Unfolding The Peacocks with Jimmy Rowles and the equally good A Timeless Place – may be difficult to get hold of now, so this is a decent way to make her acquaintance.

Marion Brown (born 1935)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Studied music in his native Atlanta, then was caught up in New York's free jazz of the '60s. After some years in Europe, he returned to the USA and has since worked mainly in education.

 Marion Brown Quartet ESP Disk 1022 Brown; Alan Shorter (t); Ronnie Boykins, Reggie Johnson (b); Rashied Ali (d). 65.

* Why Not? ESP Disk 1040 Brown; Stanley Cowell (p); Norris Jones (Sirone) (b); Rashied Ali (d). 10/68.

(*) Three For Shepp Impulse! IMPCD 12692 Brown; Grachan Moncur III (tb); Dave Burrell, Stanley Cowell (p); Norris Jones (b); Bobby Capp, Beaver Harris (d). 12/66.

 Afternoon Of A Georgia Faun ECM 527710-2 Brown; Anthony Braxton (as, ss, cl, cbcl, Chinese musette, f, perc); Bennie Maupin (ts, af, acorn, bells, wood f, perc); Chick Corea (p, bells, gong, perc); Larry Curtis (p); Jack Gregg (b, perc); Billy Malone (d); Andrew Cyrille (perc); William Green (top o'lin, perc); Jeanne Lee (v, perc); Gayle Palmore (v, p, perc). 8/70.

Possessed of a sweet, slightly fragile tone, Brown is curiously undervalued and thinly represented. His only recording for ECM comes out of the AACM ethos, performed by six instrumentalists and three assistants on 'little instruments' like Brown's invented top o'lin (pot lids fixed to a board and bowed like a fiddle). The players permutate their instruments at work-stations in fulfilment of Brown's ideal of 'interchangeable discourse'. The results are uneven and slightly unkempt, but there is some affecting music on the album. Chick Corea's solo on the title-piece is near perfect, and both Braxton and Maupin produce passages of great beauty.

Brown's ESP recording is pretty typical of the label's output at the time: full-on free jazz – Brown played on Coltrane's Ascension – with an emphasis on energy and intensity. The opening 'Capricorn Moon' is the best cut; many listeners may decide not to proceed further. The second ESP album is much better. Cowell is in extraordinary form and steals the show with a brilliant opening solo on 'La Sorella'. He is equally good, but subtler on 'Fortunata', which features Brown's most poignant solo of the set. It is hard to judge what he builds it on, because the great beauty of this record is that it seems to create an impressive edifice with the scantiest of materials. Ali is as powerful as ever, though remarkably unobtrusive.

The dedicatee glowers out from the cover of Three For Shepp, the way Coltrane did on Shepp's Four For Trane on the same label. This session consists of three Brown compositions and three – 'Spooks', 'West India' and 'Delicado' – by Shepp. The two had worked together for Impulse! when the altoman played on Shepp's Fire Music, and the musical sympathy established there is unmistakable. Brown's 'Fortunato' suggests a direct influence, albeit without Archie's fierce ideological muscle. The contrast between the two rhythm sections is interesting and instructive. Sirone plays on both, but the partnership of Dave Burrell and Bobby Capp works ideally for the leader's own themes, while the more emphatic and blues-influenced Shepp tunes call for players of Cowell's and Harris's authority. The front-row combination of alto and trombone still sounds faintly alien, but Moncur is such an expressive player that the slight mismatch of register only jars a little.

 Reeds'N'Vibes / (*) Gemini + Play Live Sun Ra Compositions Improvising Artists 123855 / Birth 0037 Brown; Gunter Hampel (vib). 1/78; 6/83, 6/93.

Brown and the enigmatic Hampel struck up an interesting association and these sessions have many interesting elements. The earlier date is perhaps the more generic, while Gemini is an album of Hampel compositions with another live set from a decade later attached on which a trio of Sun Ra tunes is played. That's not to say the music short-changes in any way. Brown is a brilliant duo player, as witness his work with Mal Waldron, but this is superb even by his own high standard. The Monk workout on 'Ask Me Now' is exemplary, but it's the vibist's 'Serenade For Marion Brown' which really beguiles.

Pete Brown (1906–63)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

He grew up in Maryland, but moved to NY. Despite working with Buster Bailey and John Kirby, the career never came to much and he was overtaken by ill-health and bebop.

 Pete Brown, 1942–1945 Classics 1029 Brown; Dizzy Gillespie, Joe Thomas (t); Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Sam Price, Kenny Watts (p); Al Casey, Herman Mitchell, Bill Moore (g); Charlie Drayton, Al Hall, Milt Hinton, John Levy, Al Matthews, Ed Nicholson (b); J. C. Heard (d); Nora Lee King (v). 42–45.

Brown's swing alto should have been distinctive enough to sustain a more successful solo career, but he remains a relatively unknown figure. Though he continued recording until 1961, virtually nothing remains in print. These amiable sides, mostly aimed at the jukebox market ('Pete's Idea', 'Pete Brown's Boogie', etc.) are a decent record of his brightly pitched horn and his gift for the kind of easy, bluesy soloing that Captain John Handy made famous later, possibly influenced by Brown.

Ray Brown (1926–2002)

DOUBLE BASS, CELLO

His career spanned the bebop era and myriad sessions as sideman and leader since then. The Pittsburgher witnessed the birth-pangs of bebop, acted as MD for his wife, Ella Fitzgerald, and played with Dizzy Gillespie and countless others. He also worked with Oscar Peterson and was a founder member of the L.A.4, as well as his own groups.

 Jazz Cello Verve 065395 Brown; Don Fagerquist (t); Harry Betts (tb); John (Jack) Cave (frhn); Paul Horn, Bob Cooper, Med Flory, Bill Hood (reeds); Jimmy Rowles (p); Joe Mondragon (b); Dick Shanahan (d). 60.

A fascinating early glimpse of Brown as leader, doubling on cello as a lead voice. The arrangements are crisp and mellow, even if the balancing is suspect in places. It's all standards material, which is a shame given the amount of arranging skill on show. 'Alice Blue Gown' and 'Rock-A-Bye Your Baby With A Dixie Melody' are tiny pieces but among the most effective. It falters a bit when the duration stretches.

 Something For Lester Original Jazz Classics OJC 412 Brown; Cedar Walton (p); Elvin Jones (d). 6/77.

The OJC is an old Contemporary release, with that label's openness of sound. Jones isn't perhaps the ideal drummer and he gets in the way on 'Georgia On My Mind', but all in all this is a very enjoyable session and Brown's introductory statements on 'Love Walked In' are pure class.

(*) Soular Energy Concord CCD 4268 Brown; Red Holloway (ts); Gene Harris (p); Emily Remler (g); Gerryck King (d). 8/84.

A fine album which only needs Jeff Hamilton in his usual slot behind the drums to lift it into minor-classic status. King lacks sparkle and is inclined to hurry the beat. Perhaps in retaliation, Brown takes the '"A" Train' at a pace which suggests privatization may be around the corner. Slowed to an almost terminal grind, it uncovers all manner of harmonic quirks which Brown and the attentive Harris exploit with great imagination. Holloway and the late Emily Remler sign up for a shortish and slightly inconsequential 'Mistreated But Undefeated Blues'. Brown's countermelody figures on 'Cry Me A River' and, especially, the closing 'Sweet Georgia Brown' are signature devices.

 Summer Wind /  Black Orpheus Concord CCD 4426 / Evidence ECD 22076 Brown; Gene Harris (p); Jeff Hamilton (d). 12/88.

Superb live sets from an excellent working trio. Brown's blues stylings get more assured with each passing year. Originals like 'The Real Blues' and Milt Jackson's oblique, bebop-flavoured 'Bluesology' all repay careful attention. 'If I Loved You', 'Summertime' and 'Days Of Wine And Roses' all comfortably fit Ray's approach, while 'It Don't Mean A Thing', 'Mona Lisa' and 'Put Your Little Foot Right Out' uncover quite different aspects of Brown's increasingly complex musical persona. Black Orpheus is a nicely weighted Latin date, on which Gene Harris again shines.

(*) Moore Makes 4 Concord CCD 4477 Brown; Gene Harris (p); Jeff Hamilton (d); Ralph Moore (ts). 91.

 3 Dimensional Concord CCD 4520 As above, except omit Moore. 8/91.

Does Moore make more? The Brown trio has stood up on its own for years now and scarcely needs the help. On the other hand, Moore's forceful tenor adds such an effective element to 'My Romance' and the superb 'Stars Fell On Alabama' that one wonders what filled those spaces before. Brown's bass-lines are still among the best in the business, and the desk-slide was pushed well up to catch them. The trio date is as reliable as any of the others.

(*) Bassface /  Don't Get Sassy Telarc CD 83340 / 83368 Brown; Benny Green (p); Jeff Hamilton (d). 93; 94.

The shift to Telarc was a positive one for Brown, and it yielded more albums than he had been able to release on Concord. These albums are testimony to the quality and understanding of the trio. There's not much to say about either critically, beyond the obvious point that the sound quality is the equal of the Concord sessions, but that Brown himself doesn't seem to be stretching and he remains content to leave the spadework to his two younger colleagues.

 Some Of My Best Friends Are ... The Piano Players Telarc CD 83373 Brown; Benny Green, Ahmad Jamal, Geoff Keezer, Dado Moroni, Oscar Peterson (p). 94.

(*) Some Of My Best Friends Are ... The Sax Players Telarc CD 83388 Brown; Benny Carter, Jesse Davis (as); Joe Lovano, Ralph Moore, Joshua Redman, Stanley Turrentine (ts); Benny Green (p); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 11/95.

It's axiomatic that Brown adapts to almost any musical company. These two sessions set out to nail the point for ever. The choice of piano-players was scarcely controversial, though Moroni perhaps sticks out as the least celebrated of the bunch. Jamal is predictably smooth and over-prepared, and it's Peterson who approaches the session with the most open mind, pitching into his cameos with cheerful good grace.

It's the saxophone album, no less appealing in concept or execution, which stands out; if you wanted to provide someone with a sampler which helped explain how rhythm sections shift their premisses and adapt to a new voice, then this would be the logical primer. Everyone is absolutely in character. Jesse Davis does his now-accomplished Parker impression on 'Moose The Mooche' and a quieter, Hodges-tinged take on 'These Foolish Things'. Carter is featured on 'Love Walked In' and 'Fly Me To The Moon', proving once again that he is indestructible. Redman and Moore have less experience with standards, and the laurels go to Turrentine and to Lovano, who kicks off with 'How High The Moon' and continues with 'Easy Living', while big Stan contributes the Illinois Jacquet theme 'Port Of Rico' and 'God Bless The Child'. Programmed into the CD are brief conversation tracks with each guest, which can be cued to play just before the relevant number.

 Seven Steps To Heaven Telarc CD 83384 Brown; Benny Green (p); Ulf Wakenius (g); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 95.

Wakenius has been making waves in recent years and has proved himself to be a guitarist of genuine initiative and talent. Even so, he's a surprising guest on this trio set, and he melds only rather uneasily with a settled line-up. Green and Hutchinson are both in muted form, so there's a lot of bass.

 Super Bass Telarc CD 83393 Brown; Benny Green (p); John Clayton Jr, Christian McBride (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 10/96.
(*) Live At Scullers Telarc 83405 Brown; Benny Green (p); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 96.

In fact, both are recorded live at Sculler's nightclub in Boston. Super Bass is a feast for bassophiles. Brown and former Basie stalwart Clayton stand for the older generation, but McBride, hip as he is, is well clued-up on the history of his instrument, and isn't left standing. After stating the 'SuperBass' theme, the three stringfellows launch into a riveting interpretation of 'Blue Monk'. After very little time, it's easy to separate the voices and determine who's playing what. Brown tends to favour the fast, upper-register lines, Clayton the low, gentle throb, and McBride the intermediate harmonic region, never overawed or diffident, but certainly paying his elders due respect. 'Bye Bye Blackbird' has him duetting with the boss, as Clayton does on 'Lullaby Of Birdland'. There are just two tracks from Brown's regular trio of Green and Hutchinson, who sound excellent on both 'Who Cares?' and the specially composed 'Sculler Blues'. Hutchinson appears elsewhere, but Green seems underused. McBride's 'Brown Funk' is the closer, a new theme that sounds as if it has been around for generations.

The trio set is terrific, kicking off on a rousing version of 'Freddie Freeloader', following up with 'En Estate', a brilliant 'Bye Bye Blackbird', 'But Not For Me' and 'If You Only Knew', the last of these a titanic performance from Brown, who stamps his authority on the group on every track, growling 'My tempo' if anyone else decides to take the initiative.

 Some Of My Best Friends Are ... Singers Telarc 83441 Brown; Antonio Hart (as); Ralph Moore (ts); Russell Malone (g); Geoff Keezer (p); Gregory Hutchinson (d); Dee Dee Bridgewater, Etta Jones, Nancy King, Kevin Mahogany, Marlena Shaw, Diana Krall (v). 12/97, 4/98.

Ray's years with Ella must have sensitized him to the needs of singers, and he is all taste and unobtrusive support on these dozen songs featuring the talents of half that number of talented and even idiosyncratic modern vocalists. Rising star Diana Krall is strongly featured in the top half of the record on 'I Thought About You' and 'Little Boy', performances deeply influenced by Ella's extraordinary musicianship and sense of rhythm. The two tracks with Etta Jones are equally good and 'There Is No Greater Love', with Malone on guitar, is a revelation. The pairing of guest instrumentalists and singers is very subtle, but the key to the whole elegant package is the now seasoned trio.

(*) Some Of My Best Friends Are ... The Trumpet Players Telarc 83495 Brown; Terence Blanchard, Jon Faddis, Roy Hargrove, James Morrison, Nicholas Payton, Clark Terry (t); Geoff Keezer (p); Karriem Riggins (d). 00.

The series continues with perhaps the most surprising chemistry yet. Australian Morrison trades some wonderful lines with Ray on 'I Thought About You'. Of the younger guys, it's Payton who slays the rest with his version of Joe Henderson's 'The Kicker', while the ever more-seasoned Blanchard makes some lovely contemporary moves on Benny Goodman's curtain-piece, the Gordon Jenkins-composed 'Goodbye'. Ray is, as ever, mixed well forward but not intrusively so. These sets all suffer from a certain diffusion of style, but this time around that works in the album's favour. Nice stuff.

 Walk On Telarc 83515 2CD Brown; Monty Alexander, Benny Green, Geoff Keezer (p); Lewis Nash, Josh Clayton (b); Gregory Hutchinson, Karriem Riggins (d). 94, 96, 1/00.

Ray's last studio date with the trio would have made a very fine record on its own, but Telarc have released what is effectively a memorial volume with live material from the mid-'90s and with earlier groups. The January 2000 set is headed by the 'Ray Brown Suite', a three-part conception that puts the bassist very much in the foreground. However, the strongest things on the record are a lovely reading of 'Honeysuckle Rose' and an unexpected version of Wes Montgomery's 'Fried Pies'. 'Hello Girls' is also a high-point, with Keezer and Brown locked tight together, while Riggins picks out all sorts of funky accents, similar to his soul-jazz reading of 'Lined With A Groove'.

The live cuts are welcome souvenirs. Alexander and Nash turn in some very fine things on 'In A Mellow Tone' and the sprightly 'Woogie Boogie', and there is a fine strut through 'F.S.R.' (i.e. 'For Sonny Rollins') with Green and Hutchinson, but it's the other group, with Keezer, second bassist Clayton and McBride that stands out on disc two.

* Some Of My Best Friends Are ... Guitarists Telarc CD 83499 Brown; Geoff Keezer (p); Herb Ellis, John Pizzarelli, Kenny Burrell, Ulf Wakenius, Bruce Forman, Russell Malone (g); Karriem Riggins (d). 1–2/00.

Released posthumously, and therefore hard to criticize in any case, this is the 'best friends' gig we'll remember most affectionately. There is some great playing on this fifth disc in the series, notably from Burrell on 'Fly Me To The Moon' and 'Soulful Spirit', a tender eulogy to the late Billy Higgins. John Pizzarelli sets the ball rolling with a bouncy 'Squeeze Me', but it's when the familiar tones of Herb Ellis kick in with 'I Want To Be Happy', returning later with a more workmanlike 'Blues For Junior', that you sense how comfortable Ray is with open-toned guitarists. Wakenius is magnificent on 'Blues For Ray' and 'My Funny Valentine'. And plaudits too to Malone for one of the most unexpected tracks, a quick-changing 'Heartstrings'. The little genius himself is in great form throughout, full-voiced, sly, sometimes engagingly brusque. Not a dud phrase from him in the entire session. A record to treasure.

(*) With Monty Alexander And Russell Malone / Producer's Choice Telarc CD 83562 2CD Brown; Monty Alexander, Benny Green, Ahmad Jamal, Geoff Keezer (p); Russell Malone (g); John Clayton, Christian McBride (b); Jeff Hamilton, Gregory Hutchinson, Lewis Nash, Karriem Riggins (d). 93–01, 3/02.

This memorial volume comprises Brown's last recording, made with Alexander and Malone, both in fine form, with a selection of recordings from the last decade of his life, a compilation disc put together by producer Elaine Martone. There are some wonderful gems on the bonus disc, including a duet with McBride and a superb 'Blue Monk' with Jamal. But it's the new and sadly final outing that really commands the attention. Alexander is forceful but respectful, giving the boss lots of room, but insistent enough in his solo spots. Malone gives them both the perfect basis for loose, rhythmic improvisation, but sometimes swamps the mix a little. Instead of 'choosing' older material, the producer might have been better employed tweaking the balance.

Ray Brown's true monument is a body of recorded work that still rivals any in this book. From beginning to end, he was a model of musical intelligence, a living historian of jazz.

Also, in brief:

 This Is Ray Brown Polygram International 2611. 2/58.
Generous introduction, but Ray's artificially pushed forward.

(*) Much In Common Verve 533259-2 2CD. 1/62–1/65.
A valuable compendium of three of Brown's albums for Verve, co-starring with vibist Milt Jackson and also Cannonball Adderley (as), who is the featured soloist on the earliest of the three sessions, which also includes some Brown cello.

* The Best Of The Concord Years Concord CCD 2164 2CD. 73–93.
Two dozen selections drawn from Ray's long and distinguished tenure at the label. Fans will quibble with some of the selections but, ironically, the variation of line-up helps one concentrate on Brown's own contribution.

 Duo Sessions Concord CCD 4938 2CD. 12/77–10/79.
This brings together As Good As It Gets and Tasty! into an attractive double set of Brown/Jimmy Rowles (p) duos.

 Live At The Concord Jazz Festival Concord CCD 4102. 8/79.
Decent trio date which seems to have missed the cull. Ernestine Anderson (v) guests.

 Don't Forget The Blues Concord CCD 4293. 5/85.
A cheery 'all-star' date with Al Grey (tb), Gene Harris (p) and Grady Tate (d) (plus Ron Eschete on guitar); it never really amounts to much.

 Two Bass Hits Capri 74034. 91.
Unusual concept with fellow bassist Pierre Boussaguet and pianist Jacky Terrasson. Interesting, if not a classic.

 Christmas Songs With Ray Brown Telarc 33437. 12/97, 4/98.
The trio of the time with lots of tinsel-wrapped vocals from Marlena Shaw, Diana Krall, Dee Dee Bridgewater, Etta Jones and more. Yo ho ho.

(*) Live At Starbucks Telarc 83502. 9/99.
Jazz and a good cup of joe is presumably the formula, though a wise management managed to keep the steamer silent for this delightful live set with Geoff Keezer (p) and Karriem Riggins (d).

 Super Bass 2 Telarc 68483. 12/00.
More of the same, but the concept has settled down and the interplay with Christian McBride is spot on.

Reuben Brown

PIANO

Excellent hard-bop stylist from Washington DC, who seems to have disappeared.

(*) Ice Scape Steeplechase SCCD 31423 Brown; Rufus Reid (b); Billy Hart (d). 1/94.
* Blue And Brown Steeplechase SCCD 31445 Brown (p solo). 1/94.
Recent postings suggest that Marion McPartland's team were trying to track down Brown to hand over due royalties. The pianist, who seems to have suffered ill-health, disappeared after making these fine Steeplechase records, which seem to have been recorded at the same time. The solo disc is fascinating, cast largely in a middle-to-low register, but ranging between the terse bop of 'I Believe In You' to the melancholy impressionism of 'Central Park West', all of it very accurately recorded. There was another (perhaps earlier) record on Adelphi, but Ice Scape is the de facto debut. It's perhaps a more conventional disc than the solo follow-up, and it allows a couple of tracks to play out at length. Brown even makes a convincing epic out of 'Mack The Knife' and turns in a superb original called 'Twilight At Duke's Place' – 'Catania' and 'Lonely Afternoon' are two more worthy of notice – a level of composition that makes his absence from the scene even more unfortunate. It would be good to hear from, or of, him.

Rob Brown (born 1962)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

A free-form man whose 'out' playing is tempered with lyricism.

(*) Breathe Rhyme Silkheart SHCD 126 Brown; William Parker (b); Dennis Charles (d). 4/89.
Brown's first record looked back to the frantic avant-gardism of the '60s and forward to a new, third-way approach which combined that freedom and radicalism of purpose with a more melodic and expressive idiom. The association with Parker has proved to be a lasting one and their interplay on 'Firewalk', 'PB' and 'Beehive', the three most substantial tracks here, is deeply impressive: always logical, never playing more than the song demands.

(*) High Wire Soul Note 121266 Brown; William Parker (b); Jackson Krall (d). 7/93.
This isn't Parker's best playing with Brown, though the sound-mix is largely to blame for that impression. The bassist sounds foggy and lacking in detail. The leader is in impressive form, though, with a further roster of fiery and more emotive pieces; 'Hex Key', 'Just A Touch' and 'Trickster' are the most distinctive cuts. There's no track called 'High Wire', and the title gives a slightly misleading sense of music played for exciting effect rather than deeper sustenance. That isn't the impression left. Not his best record, but yards ahead of most of the opposition.

* Scratching The Surface CIMP 161 Brown; Assif Tsahar (ts); Chris Lightcap (b); Lou Grassi (d). 10/97.
Bob Rusch's sleeve-note seems to hint at a disappointment that this band is playing in a fundamentally conservative style as far as free music is concerned. Brown does hint at a Konitz influence on the broken ballad 'Stray Arrow' and Tsahar is a lot more effective in this temperate setting than on his own all-out sessions. Lightcap and Grassi are as happy to play a slow four like 'A Hatful' as they are to be the time-and-motion men of 'Clean Sweep'. A terrific record and, pace Rusch's hesitancy, one of his label's best.

(*) Round The Bend Bleu Regard CT 1962 Brown; William Parker (b); Warren Smith (d). 5/01.
This one sounds better than the CIMP record and nearly tops it. The trio comes over with a plangent immediacy, and Brown's bruising tone has never had more impact. The tunes continue to mine the inexhaustible vein of free-jazz song which Ornette once proposed. Parker's paternal soulfulness is wonderful and Smith keeps his hyperactivity just within bounds. A few dead ends, but ultimately satisfying.

* Sounds Clean Feed CF077 Brown; Daniel Levin (clo); Satoshi Takeishi (d). 07.

A logical move to employ Levin, given how much Brown seems to relish a singing bass tone and long, legato lines, and Takeishi is a fine successor to Dennis Charles. Things like 'Stutter Step' underline how much of Brown's language still comes from the '60s avant-garde, but there is considerably more going on here. 'Moment Of Pause' is a graceful, ballad-like idea that again taps into Brown's more romantic side. The title-suite was actually written as ballet music. Other pieces see him developing his strain of free-song ever more ambitiously. Levin's the key to this one, though, and with Takeishi given a relatively free role it's a further step away from the generic sax/bass/drums trio. There are other records around on small labels; always worth picking up.

Sandy Brown (1929–75)

CLARINET, VOCAL

Born in India, he grew up and learned to play in Edinburgh. Formed a band with Al Fairweather and went to London, moving from simple trad beginnings to a more sophisticated style, though he recorded little. Worked as an architect building sound studios and was a gifted writer. Died watching a Scotland–England rugby international.

(*) The Historic Usher Hall Concert Lake LCD 94 Brown; Al Fairweather (t); Bob Craig (tb); Stan Greig (p, d); Norrie Anderson (b); Jim 'Farrie' Forsyth (d). 1/52.

(*) Sandy's Sideman Lake LACD 133 Brown; Al Fairweather, Spike Mackintosh (t); John R. T. Davies, John Picard (tb); Dick Heckstall-Smith (ss); Alan Thomas, Dave Stephens (p); Bob Clarke (vn); Diz Disley (g); Mo Umansky (bj); Brian Parker (b); Graham Burbidge (d). 4/55–6/56.

* McJazz And Friends Lake LACD 58 Brown; Al Fairweather (t); Jeremy French (tb); Dick Heckstall-Smith (ss); Ian Armit, Dill Jones, Dave Stephens, Harry Smith (p); Diz Disley (g, bj); Cedric West, Bill Bramwell (g); Tim Mahn, Major Holley, Brian Brocklehurst, Arthur Watts (b); Graham Burbridge, Stan Grein, Don Lawson, Eddie Taylor (d). 5/56–11/58.

(*) Work Song Lake LACD 160 Brown; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Al Fairweather (t); George Chisholm, Tony Milliner (tb); Tony Coe (ts, cl); Ron Rubin, Brian Lemon (p); John McLaughlin (g); Brian Prudence, Bobby Orr (b); Benny Goodman, Terry Cox, Bobby Orr (d). 7/62–12/68.

(*) Splanky Spotlite SPJ 901 Brown; Ray Crane (t); Brian Lemon (p); Phil Bates (b); Mike Scott (d). 66.

(*) In The Evening Hep 2017 Brown; Ray Crane (t); John Picard (tb); Bruce Turner (ss, as, ts); Tony Coe (ts); Brian Lemon (p); Tony Archer, Dave Green (b); Bobby Orr (d). 6/70–5/71.

Brown enjoys legendary status among British musicians and fans of a certain age, but as memories fade there isn't much of a recorded legacy to keep him before the jazz public. The 1952 recording (of fair amateur quality) captures the Brown–Fairweather axis before leaving for London, and while the leaders are already players of some character, the rest of the band aren't. Much stronger is the next Lake disc, which reissues the Nixa LP McJazz and adds tracks from various EPs and compilations, four of them under Heckstall-Smith's leadership. Both Brown and Fairweather play beautifully on the McJazz tracks, with Brown's interest in African high-life music adding a distinctive tang. His clarinet-playing had shed the Johnny Dodds influence of earlier years and become strikingly individual – fluent, but with a carefully controlled gaspipe edge that let him stand out in any ensemble.

Sandy's Sidemen is a real collectors' piece, tracks recorded for Tempo which have long been sought avidly on vinyl. The Brown–Fairweather group is augmented by various guest stars, and there are live tracks from a Festival Hall concert. Work Song is also valuable. There are three live tracks (Railway Hotel, Hampstead) from an old Decca various-bands album called Hot Jazz, Cool Beer and four from an EP made a year later. Fairweather is on both dates; Coe comes in for the second. The live music is terrific and closes with a rousing take on Mingus's 'Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting'. The 1963 tracks are a shade more ordinary, but still show off British mainstream in rude good health. But it's the Hair At Its Hairiest session – Lemon arranged a sequence of tunes from the then-controversial musical – which is unique; a band which numbers Brown, Wheeler, Chisholm and McLaughlin is obviously unrepeatable. Musically, it's very ordinary, sad to say; no one breaks away from the charts, though Brown and Chisholm do plug in some witty solos.

Splanky is a respectable club date from the Gallery in Nottingham; not the Village Vanguard, though some of the music played might almost have fitted in Stateside. Brown's playing never declined – he was still a young man, after all – but his health did. The final quartet record, originally issued on Doug Dobell's 77 label, is on the Hep disc, plus a few tracks with a larger group, cut a year earlier. The tone is mostly mellifluous but takes on a tart edge when he wants to make some point, and the lines played are still completely original and fresh, even on a blues or a familiar standard.

Ted Brown (born 1927)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A Tristano associate whose cool tone is balanced by a big voice.

(*) In Good Company Criss Cross 1020 Brown; Jimmy Raney (g); Hod O'Brien (g); Buster Williams (b); Ben Riley (d). 12/85.

Warne Marsh was also recording for Gerry Teekens's label around this time, and it was good to hear how strongly the unfashionable Tristano 'school' was reinventing itself. Raney is co-leader on this date, and though Brown contributes more original material, including the opening 'Blimey' (which sounds like it might be 'Limehouse Blues') is also excellent, the guitarist's touch is consistently excellent throughout the set, which now reappears with alternative takes. O'Brien is deceptively good in these situations and Williams and Riley provide a strong, flexible platform.

(*) Free Spirit Criss Cross 1031 Brown; Hod O'Brien (p); Jacques Schols (b). 10/87.

Another finely judged set that this time majors on cool bop. Brown opens with Bird's 'Relaxin' At Camarillo' and gives a live reading of 'Yardbird Suite' later. He also does a slow Coltrane blues and one of his own, as well as 'Body And Soul', 'Darn That Dream', 'Lover Come Back To Me' and a couple more. O'Brien is solidly professional throughout, and takes some pleasant spots; Schols is terrific, managing the impossible by being both unobtrusive and intriguing at the same time.

* Preservation Steeplechase SCCD 31539 Brown; Harold Danko (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 02.

This is slightly disappointing after the strong earlier dates. It isn't Danko's fault: he plays with command and leads a strong rhythm section through the tunes. It's more that Brown's solos don't have the solid logic he showed on past dates and they don't seem to have much of a story to tell.

 Shades Of Brown Steeplechase SCCD 31628 Brown; Steve LaMattina (g); Dennis Irwin (b). 1/07.
The association with LaMattina goes back several years and is close and empathetic. Add Irwin's flexible metres and this comes over as a commanding, if slightly dry, trio encounter that demonstrates formidable musicianship on every track.

Dave Brubeck (born 1920)

PIANO

Born in Concord, Mass., he studied in California and with Darius Milhaud, interrupted by a stint in a services band. The first trio was augmented to a quartet with the addition of altoist Paul Desmond, whose peerless sound (and signature composition, 'Take Five') became definitive of Brubeck's music. The pianist's blocky chordal compositions and smooth melodic runs were apt to be dismissed as college or cocktail jazz, but he has continued in impressive vein for more than half a century.

(*) The Dave Brubeck Octet /  Complete Octet Sessions Original Jazz Classics OJC 101 / Definitive DRCD 11234 Brubeck; Dick Collins (t); Bob Collins (tb); Paul Desmond (as); Dave Van Kriedt (ts); Bill Smith (cl, bs); Ron Crotty (b); Cal Tjader (d). 48–49.
* Early Concepts Proper Pairs 132 2CD Similar to above. 48–52.
Though often derided as a buttoned-down formalist with an unhealthy addiction to classical music and complex time-signatures, Brubeck is one of the most significant composer-leaders in modern jazz. Tunes like 'Blue Rondo A La Turk', 'Kathy's Waltz' and Paul Desmond's 'Take Five' (which Brubeck made an enormous hit) insinuated their way into the unconscious of a whole generation of American college students. Though 'In Your Own Sweet Way' is probably the only Brubeck original that is regularly covered by others, he has created a remarkable body of jazz and formal music, including orchestral pieces, oratorios and ballet scores. The Brubecks constitute something of a musical dynasty. His elder brother, Howard, is a 'straight' composer in a rather old-fashioned Francophile vein, while his sons, bassist and trombonist Chris, drummer Danny and keyboard-player Darius, have all played with Dave.

It used to be conventional wisdom that the only Brubeck records which mattered were those that featured the liquid alto of Paul Desmond. Such was the proprietary closeness of the relationship that it was stated in Desmond's contract that his own recordings had to be pianoless. What no one seemed to notice was that Desmond's best playing was almost always with the Brubeck group. Brubeck himself is not a particularly accomplished soloist, with a rather heavy touch and an unfailing attachment to block chords; it's fair to say that his instrument was the quartet as a whole.

The early Octet catches Brubeck at the height of his interest in an advanced harmonic language (which he would have learnt from Darius Milhaud, his teacher at Mills College); there are also rhythmic transpositions of a sort that popped up in classic jazz and were subsequently taken as read by the '60s avant-garde, but which in the '50s had been explored thoroughly only by Max Roach. Brubeck has not been widely regarded as a writer-arranger for larger groups, but the better material on this recorded set underlines how confidently he approached the synthesis of jazz with other forms. Tracks like 'Serenades Suite' and 'Schizophrenic Scherzo' are a great deal more swinging than most products of the Third Stream, a movement one doesn't automatically associate with Brubeck's name. Early Concepts is a hefty trawl through the early material that yields no fewer than 52 elegantly thoughtful tracks and some intriguing Dave Van Kriedt material.

 The Dave Brubeck Trio Fantasy CDJZD 005 2CD Brubeck; Ron Crotty (b); Cal Tjader (d, vib, perc). 48–50.
(*) Dave Brubeck–Paul Desmond Fantasy F 24727 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Ron Crotty, Wyatt Ruther (b); Herb Barman, Lloyd Davis, Joe Dodge (d). 52, 53, 54.
 Stardust Fantasy F 24728 As above, except add Norman Bates, Fred Dutton (b). 52–54.
The trios are bubbly and smoothly competent but lack Desmond's luminous quality. Brubeck disbanded the trio after injuring his back in a swimming accident. The lay-off was a significant one and led indirectly to his most creative association. Desmond joined the reconvened group in 1951 (Tjader had left) and immediately transformed it. His duos with Brubeck on the later Fantasy are a measure of their immediate mutual understanding; 'Over The Rainbow' is one of the loveliest improvisations of the period, caught in a whispery close-up. Tjader is still an interestingly varied player at this period, far from the bland stylist he was to become later.

The quartets with Crotty (who succeeded Norman Bates) and Davis aren't considered to be the classic Brubeck groups; that was the later line-up with Wright and Morello, but they were excellent on their own less ambitious terms. Brubeck–Desmond compiles two earlier Fantasy LPs, Jazz At The Black Hawk and Jazz At Storyville. There's an intriguing rehearsal version of the 'Trolley Song' that suggests something of what went into this music. Stardust is more of a grab-bag and is perhaps the dullest compilation from this early period; there are, though, fine Desmond performances throughout, and Brubeck fans will want to have some less-familiar material collected there.

 Jazz At Blackhawk / ... Storyville /  At Storyville Fantasy FCD 24727 2 / Fresh Sound FSRCD414 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Bob Bates, Ron Crotty, Wyatt Ruther (b); Lloyd Davis, Joe Dodge (d). 10/52, 9/53, 3/54.
Honoured locations, both, in the history of modern jazz. Brubeck was pioneering the college circuit when the later of the Storyville sessions were recorded, but it seemed that he also wanted to keep his club presence going, a shrewd hedge. These are not classic sets and they lack the presence and authority Brubeck got from playing in larger halls. Desmond sounds 'dirtier' in some indefinable way, almost as if he were playing up to the funkier environment. Nice material, and certainly worth having. There's also some interesting material recorded in rehearsal at Bob Bates's home.

* Jazz At Oberlin Original Jazz Classics OJC 046 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Ron Crotty (b); Lloyd Davis (d). 3/53.
 At Wilshire Ebell Fresh Sound FSRCD426 As above. 6/53.
 Jazz At The College Of The Pacific Original Jazz Classics OJC 047 As above. 12/53.
 In Concert Fantasy 60-013 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Ron Crotty (b); Joe Dodge (d). 53.
Jazz At Oberlin was an enormous success on its first release and is still durable more than 50 years later, with some of Brubeck's and Desmond's finest interaction; one of the pianist's innovations was in getting two musicians to improvise at the same time, and there are good examples of that on the Oberlin College set. It's all standard material, and there are excellent performances of 'Perdido', 'Stardust' and 'How High The Moon' which adumbrate Brubeck's later interest in unconventional time-signatures. The other 1953 set was another of Brubeck's celebrated college gigs, a shrewd promotional move that opened up his music and jazz more generally to a young, well-educated audience. Desmond has a slightly quieter night than usual in Stockton, but Brubeck, back at his alma mater, is in exceptional form, showing all his class and sophistication.

The Wilshire Ebell College concert is less well-known and not as well recorded, but there is some nice material, including a fine 'All The Things You Are'.

In Concert is a slightly pointless compression of the two live records. Given that both are still available, there seems little reason for a sampler, though a budget double-CD would be welcome. The repetition of 'Stardust' and 'All The Things You Are' confounds the notion that this was a 'reading' band, too stiff to improvise.

 Jazz Goes To College Sony International 9513 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Bob Bates (b); Joe Dodge (d). 3/54.

A nicely provocative title! This is a delightful album, full of clever ideas that would appeal to the music students – a touch of polytonality and some unexpected signatures – and exciting enough to draw in everyone else. 'Balcony Rock' is a stunner, with superb solos from both Desmond and Brubeck, high-points for them both. 'The Song Is You' and 'Out Of Nowhere' are probably the best of the rest, though the original 'Le Souk' and 'Take The "A" Train' are fine performances.

(*) Brubeck Time Columbia CK 65724 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Bob Bates (b); Joe Dodge (d). 10/54.

This was recorded round a film shoot by the celebrated Gjon Mili and George Avakian's brother Aram (who went on to film Jazz on a Summer's Day). A purist to his suede shoes, Mili had taken a good deal of convincing that Brubeck was a worthy subject but had relented. There is a story that Mili's dismissiveness spurred Brubeck to angry heights; certainly, 'Stompin' For Mili' sounds as if he might have meant the preposition to read 'On'. There is some fabulous music on the disc. Desmond's solo on 'Why Do I Love You' is brilliantly subtle, and 'Audrey', a soft minor blues, is delicate to the point of fragility. This really was Brubeck time. He even appeared on the cover of Time magazine.

 Jazz: Red, Hot And Cool Columbia CK 61468 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Bob Bates (b); Joe Dodge (d). 10/54, 8/55.

A good representation of how much Brubeck was still learning from the example of his teacher, Darius Milhaud. Desmond is still rather raw and uninflected at this point, but Dave is playing with great authority and confidence, and his solo on 'Little Girl Blue' is jaw-dropping. Even remastered, the sound is a bit muddy and one-dimensional.

(*) Brubeck Plays Brubeck Columbia Legacy CK 65722 Brubeck (p solo). 56.

 Dave Brubeck Plays And Plays And Plays ... Original Jazz Classics OJC 716 Brubeck (p solo). 2/57.

After these, Brubeck more or less gave up solo performance for the next few decades. Brubeck Plays Brubeck is distinguished by his most famous composition, 'In Your Own Sweet Way', a gloriously understated performance. 'The Duke' is rarely covered, but it is another of Dave's great conceptions, moving cleverly and logically through the 12 keys. Plays And Plays ... is less sparkling but no less packed with ideas.

 Reunion Original Jazz Classics OJC 150 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Dave Van Kriedt (ts); Norman Bates (b); Joe Morello (d). 2/57.

Following the end of his association with Fantasy (he'd signed for Columbia in 1954) Reunion brings back the full-voiced Van Kriedt and Bates from the early bands. There's a greater preponderance of 'classical' tags – 'Pieta', 'Prelude', 'Divertimento', 'Chorale' – most of them interpreted rather loosely. The danger of reunions is that they underline all that has changed in the interim. Brubeck had moved on, assimilating his advanced ideas ever more comfortably; it shows here in Van Kriedt's palpable unsuitability.

 Dave Digs Disney Columbia 471250 2 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Norman Bates (b); Joe Morello (d). 6 & 8/57.

Sun Ra's take on Disney tunes isn't any more way-out than Dave's canny manipulation of the Dwarves' song 'Heigh Ho!' Other tunes, 'Give A Little Whistle', the CD bonuses 'Very Good Advice' and 'So This Is Love', are more so-so, but as you might expect 'When You Wish Upon A Star' and the Miles-sanctified 'Someday My Prince Will Come' are delicious, packed with romance and a certain wistfulness that occasionally came upon Brubeck as well as Desmond.

 Jazz Impressions Of Eurasia Columbia Legacy CT 48531 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Joe Benjamin (b); Joe Morello (d). 7 & 8/58.

Somewhat like Duke's Far East Suite, this was inspired by a long hike round Asia, where Brubeck was already a bona-fide star. The most famous piece here is 'Brandenburg Gate' (only the gateway to 'the East' if you take a strict Cold War view, but then Isfahan isn't in the Far East either) and deservedly so. It's quintessential Brubeck, with a superb contribution from Desmond, who approaches these charts with effortless grace. 'The Golden Horn' and 'Calcutta Blues' are more generic, though the latter has hidden pitfalls that Brubeck copyists must have stumbled across over the years.

(*) The Great Concerts Columbia 462403 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d). 3/58, 2/63.

This combines the double-LP At Carnegie Hall with Brubeck In Amsterdam. 'Great' is pushing it for the earlier of the two, but the Dutch gig is quite special. Morello's easy swing on 'Wonderful Copenhagen' (from 1958) sets the pace and the standard for most of the disc, which is more than usually even in tempo and might have benefited from a more judicious trawl.

[illegible]

* Time Out

Columbia CK 65122 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d). 6–8/59.

Catalogued as a 'Historic Reissue' (industry-speak for a golden egg), this is the music everyone associates with Brubeck. So familiar is it that no one actually hears what's going on any more. As the title suggests, Brubeck wanted to explore ways of playing jazz that went a step beyond the basic 4/4 that had remained the norm long after jazz threw off the relentless predictability of B flat. The opening 'Blue Rondo A La Turk' (with its Mozart echoes) opens in an oddly distributed 9/8, with the count rearranged as 2-2-2-3. It's a relatively conventional classical rondo but with an almost raucous blues interior. Desmond's 'Take Five' is in the most awkward of all metres, but what is remarkable about this iconic slice of modern jazz is the extent to which it constantly escapes the 5/4 count and swings. Morello's drum solo is perhaps his best work on record (though his brief 'Everybody's Jumpin'' solo is also excellent) and Brubeck's heavy vamp has tremendous force.

Most of the other material is in waltz and double-waltz time. Max Roach had explored the idea thoroughly on Jazz In 3/4 Time, but not even Roach had attempted anything as daring and sophisticated as the alternations of beat on 'Three To Get Ready' and 'Kathy's Waltz', which is perhaps the finest single thing on the album. Desmond tends to normalize the count in his solo line, and it's easy to miss what is going on in the rhythm section if one concentrates too exclusively on the saxophone. The Desmond cult may be fading slightly and as it does it may be possible to re-establish the Brubeck Quartet's claim as a unit to be considered among the most innovative and adventurous of modern-jazz groups.

(*) Brubeck & Rushing Columbia Legacy CK 65727 As above, except add Jimmy Rushing (v). 60.
Mr 5/4 meets Mr 5-by-5. One of the unlikelier encounters in modern jazz, but also one of the happiest as Brubeck gets down to some serious blues comping in support of the former Basie vocalist whose compact frame and big voice are a constant delight. 'Ain't Misbehavin'' finds them both on familiar ground and the chemistry is remarkable, confounding any abiding impression of Brubeck as a buttoned-down college boy. As with most of these reissues, there is just one additional track, an engaging if slight version of 'Shine On, Harvest Moon'.

 Brubeck A La Mode Original Jazz Classics OJC 200 Brubeck; Bill Smith (cl); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d). 5 & 6/60.
 Near-Myth Original Jazz Classics OJC 236 As above. 5/60.
A La Mode introduced another regular associate, fellow Californian Smith, who has a lumpier touch than Desmond and a far less sophisticated improvisational sense. Interesting writing on Near-Myth, but both the playing and the reproduction are a shade muted. It may be that Smith is playing literally muted on parts of Near-Myth; he's certainly experimenting with different articulations on his horn, and though for the most part these were techniques that belonged back in the conservatory, they provide an intriguing resonance to the date.

 Time Further Out Columbia Legacy CK 64668 As above, except omit Smith; add Paul Desmond (as). 61, 63.
There weren't many groups of the time or since that included the time-signature of each number beside the title, but so central to Brubeck's idiom had metre become that it was almost expected. The lead-off track here, in a sequence of tunes which constitute a suite dedicated to painter Joan Miró, is 'It's A Raggy Waltz', laid in a relatively conventional time. What makes it particularly interesting is the inclusion of a live version, recorded at Carnegie Hall two years later, which suggests how comfortable the group was with non-standard times. 'Unsquare Dance', 'Bru's Boogie Woogie' and 'Blue Shadows In The Street' are all effective ideas, executed with classical authority. Desmond is in sparkling form, rawer and more blues-based than usual.

(*) Brandenburg Gate: Revisited Columbia Legacy CK 65725 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d); orchestra. 8/61.
The title-piece was written for the Jazz Impressions Of Eurasia date, and Brubeck reworks it here as a set of 11 orchestral variations in which a string ritornelle provides the 'rhythm section' for small-group improvisation. This includes some impressive work, not just from the leader and Paul Desmond, but also from bassist Wright, who has a firm tone and an impressive array of blues lines at his disposal. Brother Howard Brubeck's arrangements of 'Kathy's Waltz' and 'In Your Own Sweet Way' keep respectfully close to the original performances, augmenting them and rethinking their improvisational course. Howard acknowledges that the interplay between sympathetic soloists is more sensitive than anything an arranger can pull off, but he has attempted to give the settings the same light, responsive feel, and Brandenburg Gate: Revisited is a model for jazz recording with strings.

(*) The Dave Brubeck Quartet At Carnegie Hall Columbia CK 61455 2CD As above. 2/63.
Benny Goodman had transformed the old place 25 years earlier, and this vintage live recording merely adds to the Carnegie Hall's reputation. The quartet play astonishingly well on this cold late-winter night. The opening version of Handy's 'St Louis Blues' is amazingly inventive and the old standard 'Pennies From Heaven' is turned inside out. Hits like 'Blue Rondo A La Turk', Desmond's 'Eleven Four' and 'Take Five' are subject to the same inventive re-creation and the climax is held off through more than 12 minutes of 'Castillian Drums', a piece of artful theatre that shows how good Dave was at shaping a show.

* Jazz Impressions Of Japan Columbia CK 65726 As above. 6/64.
(*) Jazz Impressions Of New York Columbia CT 46189 As above. 6–8/64.
Brubeck and the band had been in the Far East a few months before and they came back infused with new ideas and new harmonies, many of which make their way into these original themes. 'Fujiyama', 'Osaka Blues' and 'The City Is Crying' make inventive use of non–Western harmonies, even where the basic idiom is still familiar. On the last of these, Desmond bears comparison with Johnny Hodges' 'Isfahan' solo for Duke. The New York record, by contrast, is a real disappointment. The music was originally written for a television show called Mr Broadway but none of it really comes across and what is left is a wishy-washy tone-poem chopped into song form.

(*) Time In Tristar 35092 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Gene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d). 9 & 10/65.
Were it not for the utterly distinctive sound of Paul Desmond and Dave Brubeck locked in some classically tinged theme, it might be hard for a few measures to determine who's playing here. It's a harder, more bop-oriented mix than one normally associates with Brubeck. The title-track finds him fuguing on early-20th-century classical (or neo-classical ideas), but the outstanding composition and performance is 'Softly, William, Softly', a stunning ballad with a Desmond solo that vies with Johnny Hodges at his finest. Morello is superb throughout, multiplying the beat, breaking it down, stretching it. There's an uncredited tambourine on 'He Done Her Wrong'. Whoever it was, they were present at the last of the 'Time'-themed sessions for Columbia, put together with typical care.

 Bravo! Brubeck! Columbia Legacy CK 65723 As above, except add Benjamin 'Chamin' Correa (g); Salvador Rabito Agueros (perc). 5/67.
 Buried Treasures Columbia Legacy CK 65777 As above, except omit Correa, Agueros. 5/67.
Brubeck's sold-out tour to Mexico in 1967 opened up to him yet another new range of musical impulses, and they are prominently displayed in this excellent live record. Apart from 'Poinciana', 'Besame Mucho' and his own 'Nostalgia De Mexico', all the songs are drawn from traditional material arranged for the quartet by Brubeck. The anchor of the group is Wright, who seems to revel in this idiom. Desmond is less forthright and expressive than usual and his solos are far short of their usual expressive brilliance.

Interesting to hear the classic group augmented with two local players.

The material on Buried Treasures wasn't heard on an official release until 1998. It isn't by any means as compelling as the earlier record, but the central sequence of 'Sweet Georgia Brown', 'Forty Days' and 'You Go To My Head' contains the essence of a Brubeck concert of the time. The sound is also very good.

(*) Greatest Hits Columbia CK 65417 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d). VARIOUS DATES.
Fairly predictable packaging of standard fare. For the record: the single-album set includes 'Take Five', 'It's A Raggy Waltz', 'Camptown Races', 'Unsquare Dance', 'Mister Broadway', 'I'm In A Dancing Mood', 'The Trolley Song', 'In Your Own Sweet Way' and 'Blue Rondo A La Turk'.

* Live At The Berlin Philharmonie Columbia 481415 2CD Brubeck; Gerry Mulligan (bs); Jack Six (b); Alan Dawson (d). 11/70.
Now including the opening 'Out Of Nowhere' and no fewer than six tracks not originally issued in the USA, this double-CD set restores one of the legendary concerts of the period. It catches both Brubeck and Mulligan on top form, playing with great spontaneity and charm. Their exchanges on 'St Louis Blues', 'Limehouse Blues' and 'Basin Street Blues', the middle segment of the second disc and (except for the first) previously unheard in the States, casts a new light on both men's musical background, while on more deliberate material like 'Blessed Are The Poor' and 'Out Of The Way Of The People' Mulligan shows himself to be equal to Brubeck's more reflective side. This was an evening for the front men and only modest duties were expected from anyone else.

 Vocal Encounters Columbia CK 61551 Brubeck; Paul Desmond (as); Eugene Wright (b); Joe Morello (d) Louis Armstrong, Tony Bennett, Carmen McRae, Jimmy Rushing, Peter, Paul and Mary; Lambert, Hendricks and Ross (v). 1/60–3/70.
One certainly doesn't associate Brubeck with singers, but over the years he recorded many vocal encounters and some of the strongest of them are documented here. Louis Armstrong sings 'They Say I Look Like God' and with a notable lack of irony. Lambert, Hendricks and Ross and Peter, Paul and Mary put in an appearance, as does Jimmy Rushing. Dave's classical interests emerge on the latter encounter, which is an adaptation – 'Because All Men Are Brothers' – from the St Matthew Passion. Tony Bennett fans will enjoy his unrehearsed appearance, but the real delight of the set is Carmen McRae's brilliant, witty attempt on 'Take Five'. A slightly odd compilation – only because the premiss is odd – but a thoroughly enjoyable set of tracks.

 The Last Set At Newport Atlantic 81382 As above. 7/71.
 We're All Together Again For The First Time Atlantic 81390 As above, except add Paul Desmond (as). 10/72, 11/72.
Brubeck and Desmond teamed up again for one-shot tours all through the early '70s, and they played to huge crowds. Something of the magic had gone, though. Desmond's playing still provokes a thrill, especially when he weaves round Mulligan on 'Rotterdam Blues' on the All Together Again European tour compilation. Mulligan fitted perfectly into Brubeck's conception, swinging hard in uneven measures when there was a call for it, caressing a ballad the next moment. The Newport session is mostly upbeat, a show-stopping bravura performance that lacks subtlety but confirms Brubeck's remarkable ability to work a crowd. Desmond, one suspects, was happier in more intimate settings.

 Two Generations Of Brubeck Wounded Bird 1645 Brubeck; Perry Robinson (cl); Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Peter 'Madcat' Ruth (hca, jew's hp); Darius Brubeck (ky); Dave Mason (g); Stephan Dudash (vn); Chris Brubeck (b, btb); Dave Powell (b); Danny Brubeck (d); Randy Powell (perc). 8/73.
 Truth Is Fallen / Two Generations Of Brubeck Collectables 86547 As above, except add Chris Brown (b); Charlene Peterson, St John's Assembly (v); Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. 8/83.
An interesting line-up, with Robinson and Bergonzi playing in unfamiliarly mainstream contexts. This was the group Dave called New Heavenly Blue, though the main interest was, of course, his collaboration with three musical sons. There are interesting versions of old pieces, like 'Blue Rondo a la Turk' and 'Unsquare Dance', alongside 'Circadian Dysrhythmia' and other new tunes. A version of this group, with voices, made the roughly contemporary Truth Is Fallen and there is a gospelly edge to some of the cuts here. None of the Brubeck boys has a particularly distinctive sound, though Chris's bass trombone has lots of character, but they did seem to bring something from the rock/blues generation that is generally very appealing.

 Back Home Concord CCD 4103 Brubeck; Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Chris Brubeck (b, tb); Butch Miles (d). 8/79.
 Tritonis Concord CCD 4129 As above, except omit Miles; add Randy Jones (d). 3/80.
Concord would oversee the next phase of Brubeck's career, and this eloquent set is testimony to how modern the group of the time could sound. Bergonzi is the key element after the leader himself, bringing a broad, resonant sound to 'Caravan', 'Yesterdays' and the original 'Two Part Contention'. Miles would shortly give way to Randy Jones, who gave the group a more uniform and swinging feel on Tritonis. The title-piece and 'Theme For June' are both outstanding.

 Paper Moon Concord CCD 4178 Brubeck; Jerry Bergonzi (ts, b); Chris Brubeck (b, btb); Randy Jones (d). 9/81.
(*) Concord On A Summer Night Concord CCD 4198 Brubeck; Bill Smith (cl); Chris Brubeck (b, tb); Randy Jones (d). 8/82.
(*) For Iola Concord CCD 4259 As above. 8/84.
 Reflections Concord CCD 4299 As above. 12/85.
(*) Blue Rondo Concord CCD 4317 As above. 11/86.
 Moscow Night Concord CCD 4353 As above. 3/87.
Only the most dedicated fans will find much to get excited about on these albums, though there are lovely things on Paper Moon which hark back to the old days. 'We Will All Remember Paul' on Reflections is a heartfelt tribute to Desmond (who died in 1977) and the surrounding material seems to be lifted by it. Moscow Night (a much bootlegged occasion) also seems to be up a gear and the versions there of 'Three To Get Ready', 'Unsquare Dance' and 'St Louis Blues' are the best for years. Otherwise non-essential. Brubeck fils and Jones are curiously stiff and unswinging, and Smith's initial promise seems (temporarily at least) to have evaporated; he is probably a less sophisticated player now than he was in 1960. Jerry Bergonzi was one of a number of young radicals introduced to Dave by Chris and Danny. It's still clear whose record it is, but there are signs that Brubeck was able to take on board new ideas, often far removed from his primary concerns.

 Late Night Telarc 83345 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as, ts, f); Jack Six (b); Randy Jones (d). 10/93.
 Nightshift Telarc 33351 As above, except add Chris Brubeck (btb); Bill Smith (cl). 10/93.
This was a good spell for Brubeck. Late Night was recorded at the Blue Note and is a model for anyone wanting to make a live jazz recording, with every instrument realistically located in the mix and every note and nuance exactly registered. The music isn't as inspiring as the sonics, unfortunately, though Dave's relaxed and quite possibly unrehearsed procession through the Ellington songbook is one of his best performances of the great man's work, so similar and yet so radically different from his own.

Though Nightshift is essentially a trio album with guest appearances by the horns, it is the augmented tracks that remain in the ear. Smith is in cracking form on 'You Go To My Head', dizzy and sober at the same time. Militello captures attention almost every time he is featured. His under-employed tenor is very fine on 'Travelin' Blues' and is almost reminiscent of Booker Ervin, while his alto feature on 'Yesterdays' once again had critics and most listeners reaching for comparisons with Paul Desmond.

 In Their Own Sweet Way Telarc 83355 Brubeck; Darius Brubeck (p); Matthew Brubeck (clo); Chris Brubeck (b, btb); Dan Brubeck (d). 1/94.

The great snowstorm of January 1994 in New York had a few unintended musical consequences, not least an opportunity for the Brubeck family to make this rare quintet record. Matthew is the obvious outsider, but his cello gives an extra weight to the middle register. Most of the real action takes place between Dave and Darius and their self-titled duet is by far the best thing on the record. Brubeck's only really established standard, of which the album title is an obvious variant, gets the disc off to a good start, but it also confirms just how solidly this is the old man's record; every tune, except the closing 'Sweet Georgia Brown', is his.

 Young Lions & Old Tigers Telarc CD 83349 Brubeck; Roy Hargrove (t); Ronnie Butacavolli (flhn); Michael Brecker, Joe Lovano, James Moody, Joshua Redman (ts); Gerry Mulligan (bs); George Shearing (p); Chris Brubeck, Christian McBride, Jack Six (b); Randy Jones (d); Jon Hendricks (v). 95.

It wasn't a bad idea to pair Brubeck with old and new friends but, as with so many projects of this type, no single relationship is given enough time to establish basic ground-rules, let alone develop into something more substantial. On the tango specially written for him, Lovano sounds respectful and slightly constrained. There are also named dedications to Chris McBride, Roy Hargrove, James Moody, Gerry Mulligan and Michael Brecker, all of them redolent of a relaxed, jamming atmosphere. It might have been more effective if Brubeck had elected to do what he did with George Shearing and play an established tune (in this case his own established repertory piece 'In Your Own Sweet Way') with whatever wrinkles and variations the youngsters chose to work on it.

 Double Live From The USA And UK Telarc 83400 2CD Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as); Alec Dankworth, Jack Six (b); Randy Jones (d). 95, 98.

Despite shaky health, Brubeck's activities showed no signs of slackening during the '90s, and this 2001 release brought together material recorded at the National Cathedral in Washington DC, an occasion on which Brubeck had presented his sacred mass. Some of the playing is astonishing, like his polytonal introduction to 'Cherokee'. Dave is also stunning on 'Body And Soul', and with Militello sounding like Desmond reborn on several cuts, this is a vintage record.

The remaining tracks were made during a British tour three years later and from Cardiff and London. This was a more straightforwardly crowd-pleasing affair, and so 'Take Five', 'Take the "A" Train' and 'Take The Tickets At The Door, Please' seemed to be the order of the day. But Dave is incapable of playing cynically and delivers eight strong performances with the band. We just doubt that they belong together on a double CD.

(*) So What's New? Telarc CD 83434 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (sax, f); Jack Six (b); Randy Jones (d). 97.

Issued to coincide with the 40th anniversary of Brubeck's first visit to Britain in 1958. The writing is as vivid and stretching as ever: 'Fourth Of July' shifts in just that interval with a summery, affirmative sound; 'Her Name Is Nancy' is a dazzlingly clever set of changes; and 'Chorale' is another Bach tribute.

Even past his 75th birthday, Brubeck continued to compose with unabated enthusiasm, and this record boldly consisted of brand-new material, seemingly devised to counter any impression that the old man had settled back into sepia-tinted ballad playing. 'It's Déjà Vu All Over Again' is a clever exercise in nostalgia-that-isn't, recapturing the classic group sound, but finding new and challenging things to say in the old block-chord style. Three additional tunes stand out: 'Marian McPartland' was written for that lady and featured in a duet version with her in the same spring as this was recorded; 'Thing You Never Remember' is another antidote to the life lived backwards; 'Waltzing' is simply and sheerly beautiful, an instant standard. The 'new' quartet pushes no boundaries but sticks very much to the idiom of its predecessors. Militello has a quiet session, perhaps because in this studio session and with such challenging new compositions he was happier to leave the spotlight to the boss; Bobby's moment was to come on the road.

(*) 40th Anniversary Tour Of The UK Telarc 83440 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as); Alec Dankworth (b); Randy Jones (d). 11/98.

Anticipation was heightened by rumours that Dave's health was once again causing concern and that he might not be able to fulfil engagements. In the event, the 1998 tour was packed with good material, though most of the exciting playing was from saxophonist Militello, who has established himself as the new Paul Desmond. Alec Dankworth also sounds as if he had listened to a good few early Brubeck records in his mum and dad's collection. What was particularly interesting was how readily Brubeck experimented with the set-list, including unexpected things like his own 'Salmon Strike', the tango-based 'Time Of Our Madness' and 'Oh, You Can Run (But You Can't Hide)', in which the famous Joe Louis line might seem to be an ironic comment on the need to keep down to business: making the date and playing the blues, which Brubeck does with notable darkness and vigour. The closing number is a solo tribute to the departed Gerry Mulligan, 'Goodbye Old Friend'.

 The Crossing Telarc 83520 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as, f); Alec Dankworth (b); Randy Jones (d). 9 & 10/00.

In the late '90s Brubeck seemed to ponder a lot about his transatlantic travels over the years, perhaps recognizing the special warmth with which he was regarded in Britain and Europe. The title-track here is an evocation of putting out to sea in a big liner. Don't expect Mingus- or Zawinul-style grunts and hoots; this is a cheerful departure, criss-crossed with streamers and ticker-tape. Other highlights include 'All My Love', a ballad for Iola Brubeck, and 'Randy Jones', which gives the seasoned sideman a well-deserved feature. The final part, 'Hold Fast To Dreams', reflects Brubeck's literary side as well as his bigger musical ambitions. It comes from a suite of pieces inspired by the poetry of Langston Hughes, another who looked out, sometimes more broodingly, over the Atlantic.

(*) One Alone Telarc 83510 Brubeck (p solo). 00.

Solo records are relatively rare in the Brubeck canon and this is a delight. Dave closes the set with a wonderful revoicing of 'Over The Rainbow'. There are only two originals on the programme, 'Weep No More' and 'Summer Song', which was originally written for Louis Armstrong; but what this set demonstrates more than anything is Dave's ability to colonize almost any material to his own particular vision.

 80th Birthday Concert: Live With The LSO LSO Mode LSO0011 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as, f); Darius Brubeck (p); Matthew Brubeck (clo); Chris Brubeck (b, btb); Dan Brubeck (d); London Symphony Orchestra. 12/00.

A very special occasion which saw Dave's four boys on the stand with him. Veteran manager Russell Gloyd conducted the LSO in a series of arrangements, including some by the late Howard Brubeck, which just filled out the family association further. The long 'Chorale' is mainly for the strings. Matt is featured strongly on cello on 'In Your Own Sweet Way', one of Howard's arrangements, but it's the augmented quartet which steals the show towards the end. Following 'Brandenburg Gate Revisited' (another Howard chart), Bobby Militello kicks into 'Take Five' and sets up a delightfully exuberant and joyous performance of the classic, almost ten minutes long, in which Dan takes the spotlight for an unexpectedly good drum solo. 'Unsquare Dance' rounds out an extraordinary evening. The old chap must have been beaming.

 Park Avenue South Telarc 83570 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as, f); Michael Moore (b); Randy Jones (d). 7/02.

This was recorded in a Starbuck's in New York City, which might once have prompted cynical comments about Brubeck's cappuccino jazz. There's nothing decaff about the bright opener, 'On the Sunny Side of the Street', which bounces along on Brubeck's punchy chords, and the peerless Moore's astonishingly fluent bass. They build up the pace and emotional temperature with a superb 'Love For Sale', before Brubeck slows things down with 'Elegy', a piece written for the Norwegian journalist Randi Hultin, who sadly didn't live to hear it played. 'I Love Vienna' and 'Don't Love Me' are both exquisite jazz waltzes, but the most famous Brubeck piece of all explores a different time-signature. 'Take Five' is these days a feature for drummer Jones, who negotiates the threes and twos brilliantly. After it, 'Show Me The Way To Go Home' rounds out a vintage set.

 London Sharp, London Flat Telarc 83625 Brubeck; Bobby Militello (as); Michael Moore (b); Randy Jones (d). 1/04.

The first reaction is admiring disbelief: that at nearly 84 Brubeck should turn in a composition as daring as the title-track – opposite runs in sharps and flats for each hand – and secondly that the band should take it on so confidently. Moore is right behind him, as he always is in such contexts, and Militello plays one of his best solos on a Brubeck disc. The remainder of the record isn't quite up to that standard of inventiveness, but he digs into some fascinating material, old and new. 'To Sit and Dream' survives from a Langston Hughes-based commission; 'Yes, We All Have Our Cross To Bear' is co-written with his daughter in law for a sacred concert and 'Steps To Peace' was written by the father of one of the 9/11 hijack victims, which seem to belong in a different world to the opening cut. But there is also 'Mr Fats' and a revival of a song written while Brubeck was in uniform, 'Ballad Of The Rhine'.

(*) Private Brubeck Remembers Telarc CD 83605 Brubeck (p solo); Walter Cronkite (int). 1/04.

A set of beautiful piano reconstructions of the kind of music Dave was playing and listening to while in the service. It's unashamed nostalgia, but played with a wise wit and not a hint of sentimentality. Even 'Don't Sit Under The Apple Tree' sounds like it's about something serious. The real bonus is the one-hour extra, limited-edition disc containing an interview between Brubeck and Walter Cronkite, a man whose voice is America. 'Living Legends Reminisce', and they do, fascinatingly. You'll find yourself – should you be lucky enough to snag one of the special discs – listening to the speech as much as to the music.

 Indian Summer Telarc 83670 Brubeck (p solo). 06.

A gorgeously recorded solo recital, which finds Dave digging back through a stack of songs that must have coloured his first summers: 'Sweet Lorrain', 'Georgia On My Mind', 'You'll Never Know'. There are a couple of nicely judged originals in the mix, but the problem here is that the music is under-characterized. Far from seeming full of ripe experience, as on Private Brubeck Remembers, it's played with a curious lack of effect that in the end makes this a forgettable set.

Also, in brief:

 Dave Brubeck Plays Standards /  Ballads Columbia Legacy CK 65450 / 89919. 7/55–10/68.

A widely scattered trawl of tunes from Brubeck's Columbia catalogue. Desmond insisted that the group write its own material (or hire someone to do so), so no one thinks of Brubeck as a standards performer.

 Gone With The Wind Columbia CT 40627. 4/59.

Or: 'Jazz Impressions Of The Deep South', complete with a flying read of 'Camptown Races', plus 'Ol' Man River', 'Shortnin' Bread' and 'Basin Street Blues'. At points, it's forced, even crude, and one of our least favourite.

() The Real Ambassadors Columbia Legacy 57663. 9/61.

A failed experiment. Dave and Iola's anti-racism show featured Louis Armstrong, Carmen McRae and others, but they don't get much to work with.

() Songs Naxos 9024. 1/04.

Classical tenor John de Haan and his wife, soprano Jane Giering, perform a mixture of jazz and classical Brubeck repertoire. Dave and the group accompany. Results: decidedly mixed.

 Time Signatures: A Career Retrospective Columbia/Legacy 472776-2 4CD. 46–91.

The stocking-filler for a Brubeck fan, a magnificently packaged four-CD box with immaculately reproduced liner-photographs and a detailed booklet breaking down each and every track.

 Just You, Just Me Telarc 33363. 94.

He hadn't recorded solo for nearly 40 years, but this was thin and musing in comparison to what came before and after.

 A Dave Brubeck Christmas Telarc 83410. 6/96.

Bah, humbug, and, yes, God bless us every one also.

 Time Was Properbox90 4CD. VARIOUS DATES.

Career survey, done with Proper's usual honest care, but without much gloss. Budget alternative to the Columbia set above.

Bruise

GROUP

British improvisers, working off an unusual instrumental palette.

(*) Bruise With Derek Bailey Foghorn FOGCD006 Tony Bevan (bsx); Derek Bailey (g); Orphy Robinson (mar, steel d, perc, elec, t); John Edwards (b); Mark Sanders (d); Ashley Wales (elec). 8/04.

* We Packed Are Bags Foghorn FOGCD008 Tony Bevan (ts, bsx) then rest of musicians from above, apart from Bailey. 9 & 10/05.

The band name and the track titles of the first Bruise CD – 'Search', 'Locate', 'Destroy' – might suggest music of unremitting hostility and power. Bevan's devotion to the bass saxophone (he adds tenor on the second date) certainly suggests you won't be hearing delicately nuanced ballads. In fact, it's all subtler and more approachable than it might have been in lesser hands. Bailey's presence on the first record gives the session added gravitas, but his presence isn't essential. His role is reminiscent, in a more attenuated way, of what he did on Tony Oxley's classic early CBS records, working mostly in the background, but deconstructing any hints of groove or settled direction. Robinson is a revelation, as he has been since moving into free music. Edwards is simply masterful in these situations and Sanders, at first listen the least distinctive presence, goes about his business with calm authority and wit. The follow-up album, recorded after Bailey's death, is better still, partly because Wales's soundscapes are better integrated; the Spring Heel Jack man isn't always an empathetic group player. Second time around, though, the group has a more unified character and generates the kind of excitement that isn't just about fizz and frills. Serious, determined, very modern music.

Ray Bryant (born 1931)

PIANO

A Philadelphia man, Bryant is a major and often undersung player of bebop piano, with blues and gospel subtexts never far away.

 Meet Betty Carter & Ray Bryant / Little Susie Collectables COL 5676 Bryant; Tommy Bryant (b); Gus Johnson, Eddie Locke (d); Betty Carter (v). 5&6/55, 12/59, 1/60.

 Plays The Complete Little Susie Lone Hill Jazz LHJR10278 As above. 1/60.

Bryant is not an orthodox bopper in the way Hampton Hawes once was, and his solo performances are even further from the predominant Bud Powell model of bop piano. Noted for an imaginative and influential alteration of the basic 12-bar-blues sequence on his 'Blues Changes', Bryant is a distinctive pianist who, unlike Hawes, has often been content to record solo.

Ray had a jukebox hit with 'Little Susie' and it became the focus of his first Columbia record, along with some other tunes which hadn't had quite the same impact. They all seem much of a muchness now, though listenable enough. The disc with Carter, originally made for Epic, was an attempt to showcase the 25-year-old singer's scatting, which was already quite highly developed. Bryant was a year younger but is already playing in a distinctive manner.

 Ray Bryant Trio Original Jazz Classics OJC 793 Bryant; Ike Isaacs (b); Specs Wright (d). 4/57.

(*) Alone With The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJC 249 Bryant (p solo). 12/58.

The two early OJCs (originally done for Prestige and New Jazz) are both welcome revivals, the solo set in particular a thoroughgoing investigation of Bryant's favourite form. Original blues compositions are interwoven with an affecting 'Lover Man' and a delicious, gospelly 'Rockin' Chair'. Bryant's coming out as a solo performer could hardly have been more gracefully handled.

 The Madison Time Collectables 9335 Bryant (p solo). 3/60.

This was formerly released on Collectables as The Madison Time With A Hollywood Big Beat and included a second set of film themes played the Bryant way. Whether copyright problems have prompted its withdrawal we don't know, but even on its own this is an engaging session, featuring the two-part 'Madison Time' from the jukeboxes and a fine version of 'The Hucklebuck', a dance craze of the time. We're told.

 Cold Turkey Collectables Records COL 5749 Bryant; Jimmy Rowser (b); Ben Riley (d). 63–64.

(*) Groove House Collectables 6434 Bryant; Wally Richardson (g); Tom Bryant (b); Bobby Donaldson, Panama Francis (d). 5–6/63.

(*) Soul Collectables Records COL 5754 Bryant; Tom Bryant (b); Sonny Brown, Walter Perkins (d). 64.

(*) Live At Basin Street East Collectables Records COL 5755 Bryant; probably as above. 64.

These are valuable reissues for Bryant fans, though we might wish for a little more information on their provenance. Some of the sessions were made for Sue Records and, while we have no reason to think these CDs are anything but above board, the presentation is decidedly slipshod.

The most desirable of the bunch is the live set, which opens with a superb 'What Is This Thing Called Love?' and swings in every measure from there to the close. Cold Turkey is a more acerbic set, but with some strong points. Soul is a disappointment and Groove House could do with some variation of pace. A feast for confirmed Bryant fans, but nothing of any real moment for casual listeners.

 Montreux 77 Original Jazz Classics OJC 371 Bryant (p solo). 12/76.

(*) Here's Ray Bryant Original Jazz Classics OJC 826 Bryant; George Duvivier (b); Grady Tate (d). 1/76.

 Solo Flight Original Jazz Classics OJC 885 Bryant (p solo). 12/76.

 All Blues Original Jazz Classics OJC 778 Bryant; Sam Jones (b); Grady Tate (d). 4/78.

 Potpourri Original Jazz Classics OJC 936 Bryant; Jimmy Rowser (b); Mickey Roker (d). 5/80.

There's still a slight feeling of uncertainty, as if Bryant wasn't yet sure what direction his revived career was going to take. That was to become much clearer over the next few years, with a signing to Pablo; most of these albums have returned via the OJC series. They're a strong, idiomatic sequence of blues-to-bop piano and there's little to choose between them, although if pressed we'd pick the impeccably programmed Here's Ray Bryant.

 Somewhere In France Hyena 9315 Bryant (p solo). 93.

This was a tape given to Bryant by a soundman on one of his gigs. No one knows exactly where it was recorded, but certainly in France and therefore in 1993. It could have been any time in the previous 25 years, so consistent and recognizable is Bryant's style. Interesting that Dizzy's 'Con Alma' should sound more like a classical étude in this arrangement than on the original. 'Django' and a making-up-time 'Take The "A" Train' are both superlative and make you forget the rather indifferent source. Bryant apparently has dozens of cassettes of this kind; whether Joel Dorn finds enough worthy of formal release remains to be seen.

Also, in brief:

 Ray Bryant Trio / Dancing The Big Twist Collectables 7417. 55, 62.
Fun records, restored by those loyal Bryant fans at Collectables.

 The Complete Recordings With Jimmy Rowser And Ben Riley Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10251. 63–64.
Much of this stuff is available elsewhere, but it was a vintage group for Ray, so it's nice to have it all in the one box, and with some fine live cuts as well.

Jeanie Bryson (born 1958)

VOICES

The daughter of songwriter Connie Bryson and Dizzy Gillespie (though not acknowledged as such in his lifetime), she studied ethnomusicology and took classes with Kenny Barron.

 I Love Being Here With You Telarc 83336 Bryson; Wallace Roney (t); Don Braden (ts); Kenny Barron, Ted Brancato (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Vic Juris (g); Bob Crane, Ray Drummond (b); Ron Davis (d); Rudy Bird (perc). 1/93.

 Tonight I Need You So Telarc 83348 As above, except omit Roney, Barron, Drummond; add Claudio Roditi (t); Jay Ashby (tb); Paquito D'Rivera (as); Danilo Perez (p); Christian McBride (b); Ignacio Berroa (perc). 1/94.

 Some Cats Know: Jeanie Bryson Sings Songs Of Peggy Lee Telarc 33391 Bryson; personnel includes Ronnie Buttacavoli (t); Red Holloway (ts); Paquito D'Rivera (cl); Terry Trotter (p); John Chiodini (g). 10/95.

(*) Deja Blue Koch 7881 Bryson; personnel includes Gerry Niewood (f, af); Ted Brancato (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Christian McBride (b); Etta Jones (v). 3/01.
Her own website likens Jeanie to 'a single perfect Belgian chocolate'. While there probably aren't enough hard centres in these albums, there's plenty of variety and some very salty and thoughtful music-making. Peggy Lee is the obvious influence (as witness the Some Cats Know tribute), but Jeanie had moved some way beyond that by the second record.

The first album benefited hugely from the presence of top-flight players. Barron is exemplary and Braden and Roney provide tough yang counterbalance to Jeanie's unexpected fragility. 'Bittersweet' and 'A Sleeping Bee' – where Brancato replaces Barron – are exceptional performances, but there is scarcely a dull note throughout the session. A special word for Drummond for his lush, full-bodied accompaniment.

On Tonight, he is replaced by McBride, who also brought along his electric bass for a couple of soul numbers, Stevie Wonder's 'Too Shy To Say' and Luther Vandross's 'What Can A Miracle Do?' It would have been fascinating to have heard a simple bass/voice duet – perhaps 'Alone Together' – to highlight what sounds like a very fruitful relationship. Roditi is a very different kind of player to Roney, but his warm, reservedly passionate sound is perfect for a session of this sort and he holds in check the busier and more assertive D'Rivera and Braden.

The Lee album is thoroughly enjoyable, though nothing on it stands up to the original and the most interesting cut is mum Connie Bryson's closing 'Where In The World Are You?' We like the latest album best of all. It would be misleading to put too much emphasis on a title like 'It's So Nice To Have A Man About the House' (a duet with Etta Jones) or to read too much into the closing version of Dizzy's 'Con Alma'. It does, though, seem a more personal set, deeply felt rather than stylish, and more resonant as a result.

Steve Buckley and Chris Batchelor

SAXOPHONES, CLARINETS / TRUMPET, TUBA

Winners of the BBC Jazz Award for New Work in 2001 and the core of Big Air with Myra Melford and Oren Marshall. Inventive players and composers, by no means joined at the hip but together and severally responsible for some fine, hip music over the years.

* The Whole And The Half FMR CD 11 Buckley; Batchelor; Wayne Batchelor, Steve Watts (b); Martin France, Steve Noble (d). 2–11/94.

* Life As We Know It Babel BDV 9925 Buckley; Batchelor; Paul Clarvis, Mark Sanders (d, perc). 12/97–6/98.
A powerful, highly considered set of creative jazz pieces, recorded between 'The Shortest Day' (one of the bigger cuts) of 1997 and the longest of 1998. The blend of world beats, complex rhythms and rich rhythmic textures (all four play percussion at some stage) provides a perfect setting for the two leaders' rich array of horns. The basic group language had already been set out in The Whole And The Half a few years before, but the Babel disc is a league or two on in terms of sophistication and creative adventure, though 'Carson McCullers' on the earlier record (inspired by the great American novelist) is an epic on a scale they haven't attempted since.

Milt Buckner (1915–77)

ORGAN, PIANO

The Detroiter started out in McKinney's Cotton Pickers and the Lionel Hampton band, where his much-imitated locked-hands style attracted notice.

 And His Alumni Black & Blue 909 Buckner; Wallace Davenport (t); Buster Cooper (tb); Earl Warren (as); Eddie Chamblee, Arnett Cobb (ts); André Persiany (p); Roland Lobligeois (b); Panama Francis (d). 71.

 Block Chords Parade Black & Blue 953 Buckner; Major Holley (b); Jo Jones (d). 2/74.

 Green Onions Black & Blue 929 Buckner; André Persiany (p); Roy Gaines (g); Roland Lobligeois (b); Panama Francis, Michael Silva (d). 2/75.

 Pianistically Yours Black & Blue 917 Buckner; André Persiany (p); Roland Lobligeois (b); Sam Woodyard (d). 11/75.

 Milt Buckner Progressive 7017 Buckner; Illinois Jacquet, Buddy Tate (ts); Joop Scholten (g); Koos Van der Suils, Chris Smidiger (b); Sonny Payne (d). 75.
Relatively thin pickings, but Black & Blue covers Milt's time in Europe; much of the material was only released later, on CD. The locked-hands approach is an acquired taste, riveting over short periods but wearing over a whole album. 'Hamp's Boogie Woogie' on the first of these is a good place to start, but even here the greasy solos and blocky chords are less than appealing. 'King Porter Stomp' and a long indulgent 'Green Onions' are better, but apart from flashes of Cobb and some nice licks from Milt, it's fairly drab.

The trio is probably the most interesting of the bunch. Milt's chording is less mannered than usual and he allows some of his lines to flow rather than delivering them in chunks. Holley is a great accompanist. The last sessions with Jacquet and Tate, who don't appear together, still find Buckner in breezy form but it's hard to be excited about his playing, and it's pretty much the same story with Green Onions and Pianistically Yours.

David Budbill

POET, SHAKUHACHI

Reviving the almost abandoned connection of jazz and poetry.

 Songs For A Suffering World Boxholder BXH Budbill; William Parker (b, shakuhachi, balafon, t, perc); Hamid Drake (d, perc). 9/02–3/03.

One is more used to seeing Matthew Shipp or Peter Brötzmann playing with Parker and Drake. Budbill is a formidable musician in his chosen form, though, delivering his Beat-inspired but unmistakably contemporary poems (some of them clearly improvised) and contributing shakuhachi to the instrumental interludes that also see Parker dip deep into his bag of sounds. The most obvious influences on Budbill are, arguably, Gary Snyder and Michael McClure rather than Kerouac and Ginsberg, but the line of descent matters less than the vividly expressive improvisations which emerge from these encounters. Recommended, even – or especially – to those who are resistant to jazz-and-poetry projects.

Chick Bullock (1908–81)

VOICE

He seems to have been Montana-born and he certainly started out in vaudeville. A serious and unsightly eye condition confined him to studio and broadcast work, but in the '30s Bullock made more than 4,000 recordings, under his own name and with the Levee Loungers. Retired in his early 30s and lived out the rest of his life on the West Coast.

* The Essential Chick Bullock Challenge 79035 Bullock; Ed Anderson, Bunny Berigan, Sterling Bose, Bill Coleman, Shelton Hemphill, Wardell Jones, Manny Klein, Eddie Mallory (t); J. C. Higginbotham, Benny Morton, Al Philburn, Jack Teagarden, George Washington (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Gene Mikell (as, cl); Crawford Wethington (as, bs); Benny Goodman, Edmond Hall, Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Larry Binyon, Bud Freeman (ts); Edgar Hayes, Fulton McGrath, Joe Moresco, Teddy Wilson (p); Eddie Gibbs, Benny James (g); Hayes Alvis, Artie Bernstein, Billy Taylor Sr (b); Larry Gomar, Stan King, Yank Porter (d); O'Neill Spencer (d, v); Joe Venuti (v). 9/32–2/41.

A fair representation of an enormously prolific 'career', which he packed into just ten years of steady recording. Hard to categorize the voice, which is jazz-flavoured rather than that of a genuine vocal improviser. However, there is no mistaking the quality of the instrumental talent Bullock assembled for these sessions, a virtual who's who of jazz at the time. Some of Bullock's performances border on novelty singing, but there's a keen sense of rhythm and clever phrasing, which lifts even the cheesiest of numbers. The standouts are 'My Melancholy Baby', 'Oh! How I Hate To Get Up In The Morning' and a clever read of 'I'm An Old Cowhand'. Not perhaps a key figure in the history of the music, but he tapped into something during his decade of prominence and the legacy is still fresh enough to merit a look at this fine survey.

John Bunch (born 1921)

PIANO

Grew up in Indiana and worked on West Coast, with Benny Goodman and as Tony Bennett's MD. Widely respected.

(*) John's Bunch Progressive PCD 7113 Bunch; Urbie Green (tb); Al Cohn (ts); Milt Hinton (b); Mousey Alexander (d). 10/75.

(*) John's Other Bunch Progressive PCD 7134 Bunch; Warren Vaché (t); Scott Hamilton (ts); Michael Moore (b); Connie Kay (d). 1–8/77.

Until his 50s, he was a little-known sideman, accompanist and orchestra pianist. Concord championed him in the '70s and '80s, though that stuff has gone. There's nothing demonstrative about his style, which is in the aristocratic swing tradition of Teddy Wilson, but he can play with power as well as fingertip delicacy. This pair of reissues was originally on Famous Door when that label was documenting the modern mainstream. It was a fine idea pairing Green and Cohn and John's Bunch is a happy, outgoing date which blossoms under Bunch's simple, tight charts. 'Who Cares?' goes off like a rocket under Alexander's swinging time and 'Love You Madly' stretches their limbs to fine effect. The other disc sets up a veteran rhythm section with two then-young fogeys and the results are hardly less pleasing. Kay sounds a bit more proper than Alexander, but Moore is terrific and the pianist plays some biting, incisive solos.

(*) John Bunch Plays Kurt Weill Chiaroscuro CD(D) 144 Bunch (p solo). 5/75–1/91.

 Struttin' Arbors ARCD 19157 Bunch; Phil Flanigan (b). 11/95.

 Arbors Piano Series At Mike's Place Arbors ARCD 19184 Bunch (p solo). 11/96.

The Weill album is a rare and strikingly imaginative project: only a handful of Weill songs have entered jazz repertory and Bunch's thoughtful settings – some at ballad tempo, others with a flavour of stride, some delivered with Monk-like rhythms – make all of them sound like plausible vehicles. The original sessions have been extended with six tracks cut in 1991, easily as good.

The other discs have a less incisive quality, as if he was prepared to settle for a routine excellence on record dates. Duetting with the solid Flanigan points up how much bop influenced Bunch's style, albeit down a gear; he does 'Crazeology' and Pettiford's 'Laverne Walk'. The later solo disc offers 18 pleasant interpretations, with a bare handful of surprises.

(*) A Special Alliance Arbors ARCD 19272 Bunch; Dave Green (b); Steve Brown (d). 12/01.

 An English Songbook Chiaroscuro CR(D) 377 Bunch (p solo). 2/03.

 Tony's Tunes Chiaroscuro CR(D) 372 Bunch; Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Jay Leonhart (b). 5/03.

The trio set with the English pairing of Green and Brown is beautifully cadenced. 'So Sorry Please' reinvents Bud Powell as suave and playful and Tommy Flanagan's 'Beyond The Bluebird' is six minutes of bliss. Monk, though, really isn't John's thing and 'Pannonica' is merely bland. Green is imperturbable as ever, but the real bonus is the great Steve Brown. John spends several months each year in England and the Songbook is a gracious nod. Coward, Noble and Novello are among the writers featured. It's done with customary finesse, though over the length of a CD

Bunch can seem becalmed with the tempo set at a steady musing lope. One at a time, still delightful. The trio set ends up with much the same result, but if anything it's the other two who are the culprits this time.

* At The Nola Playhouse: Salutes Jimmy Van Heusen Arbors ARCD 19326 Bunch; Dave Green (b); Steve Brown (d). 1 & 2/06.
A wonderful body of songs, given intriguing twists here and there by this now well-established trio. 'All This And Heaven Too' gets the set off to a breezy start. 'Nancy (With the Laughing Face)' is almost hesitant and elegiac and there are intriguingly sombre inflections here and there throughout the rest of the CD. Certainly, John seems edgier than we've heard him previously, and while Green and Brown are impeccably measured and supportive (the drummer is a master with brushes), they, too, manage to imply ambiguous drama here and there. Our favourites: 'The Second Time Around' and 'Come Fly With Me'; utter delight.

Jane Bunnett

SOPRANO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE

She studied with Steve Lacy and was given early support by the late Don Pullen, but with partner Larry Cramer the Canadian has developed her own approach, with a strong commitment to Cuban music.

 New York Duets Music & Arts CD 629 Bunnett; Don Pullen (p). 89.
Like her role model Steve Lacy, Bunnett is fascinated by Monk's music and both 'Bye Ya' and 'Little Rootie Tootie' are strongly covered here, with Pullen coaxing and provoking the saxophonist through some unstuffy progressions. Her slightly chill soprano sound is better suited to duo situations than to straightforward blowing groups, but interestingly here she concentrates somewhat on texture, leaving the piece to plod its own way home.

(*) The Water Is Wide Evidence ECD 22091 Bunnett; Larry Cramer (t); Don Pullen (p); Kieran Overs (b); Billy Hart (d); Jeanne Lee, Sheila Jordan (v). 8/93.
Augmented by two charismatic vocalists, the band tackles an ambitiously eclectic set of tunes. Bunnett kicks off with three originals, of which 'Real Truth' is the most distinctive. She then switches to flute for Roland Kirk's idiosyncratic 'Serenade To A Cuckoo'. Sheila's feature is a magnificent 'You Must Believe In Spring', which underlines her fantastic musicianship. Much of the remaining material is by Cramer, though two Monk tunes, 'Pannonica' and 'Brake's Sake', allow Jane to show off her Steve Lacy influence once again, and a good deal of originality besides. The singers are united on the closing 'Water Is Wide', the old spiritual taking on an unearthly quality as the differences between the two voices and two horns are exploited to the full.

(*) Spirituals & Dedications Justin Time JUST 109 Bunnett; Larry Cramer (t); Dewey Redman (ts); Stanley Cowell (p); Kieran Overs (b); Mark McLean (d); Dean Bowman (v). 2/01.
The laurels here belong to Cowell, whose dedications to Cal Massey and Paul Robeson are at the heart of the set; also a chance to hear his fine 'Illusion Suite'. Bowman makes an interesting job of the traditional material, though the closing 'Motherless Child' is perhaps too much. Bunnett's ability to persuade senior players to guest is an undoubted plus and Redman, who has the raw directness required by this material, turns in some preacherly solos.

 Radio Guantánamo: Guantánamo Blues Project – Volume 1 Blue Note 52340 Bunnett; Larry Cramer (t); Dewey Redman (ts); Howard Johnson (tba); Kevin Breit (g); Jumpin' Johnny Sansone (hca, acc, v); Jose Olivares Perez (mar); Kieran Overs (b); Tiburon Morales (v); Grupo Changüi de Santiago/Guantánamo (perc, v). 12/03–10/05.
The start of a fascinating project to render the traditional music of Guantánamo province in Cuba in a jazz setting. Ironically, it's the original material – Bunnett's 'Changüi Para Alfredo' and 'You Have Changed My Life', Cramer's deceptively simple 'Conga Blue' and the collaborative 'New Orleans Under Waters', co-written with Breit and Sansone – that stand up best to repeated listens. There's a diffuseness to much of the playing that suggests a live concert rendition of this material would be more convincing. Inevitably, much of the jazz interest is supplied by Bunnett herself and by Redman, who's blowing with stately power. The earlier Blue Note Chamalongo might still be available in some territories, but it isn't terrifically good.

Also, in brief:

(*) Rendez-Vous Brazil/Cuba Justin Time JUST 74. 6/95.
Dominated by Filo Machado (g, v, perc) compositions but also a testament to Bunnett's skills and to Cramer's fine playing.

* Ritmo & Soul Blue Note 24456. 99.
Jane's Blue Notes are obviously well funded but fail to deliver the performance one might expect.

Greg Burk

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Grew up in Michigan in a musical family. Studied in Massachusetts with Yusef Lateef and Archie Shepp and then moved to Bratislava, from where he gigged extensively in Europe before returning to the US. He's now in Rome.

(*) Checking In Soul Note 121373 Burk; Jonathan Robinson (b); Bob Moses (d). 1/01.
* The Ivy Trio 482 Music 1038 Burk; Jonathan Robinson (b); Luther Gray (d). 7/03.
(*) Nothing, Knowing 482 Music 1037 Burk; Steve Swallow (b); Bob Moses (d). 8/03.
 Carpe Momentum Soul Note 121393 Burk; Jerry Bergonzi (ss, ts); Jonathan Robinson (b); Gerald Cleaver (d). 04.
(*) Berlin Bright Soul Note 121403 Burk; Ignaz Dinné (ss, as); Jonathan Robinson (b); Andrea Marcelli (d, perc). 5/05.
There were a couple of self-released earlier records, but Checking In bounced out the speakers with a lush authority reminiscent in places of Chick Corea at his most romantic. What's striking about Burk, though, is the extent to which he likes to work round the drummer, sometimes in measured versions of Latin metres, sometimes bordering on free. Moses is an able teacher in this area and seems to revel in Burk's themes, from the delightful opening 'Sun Up' to the warmly elegiac 'Ascent To The Strawberry Patch'.

Fine as Robinson has proved to be, Swallow's class is written all over Nothing, Knowing and Steve's experience playing with drummerless trios (most obviously Giuffre's, with Paul Bley, who is an obvious influence) means he gives Moses all the room he might want to develop ideas, while holding the pulse himself. 'Truth Be Told' is a tour de force, at almost 20 minutes by far the longest thing on the set. It offers a glimpse of how arresting a player Burk must be in a live setting.

The third Italian release was disappointing, muddied by Bergonzi's contribution. Piano trio is an over-subscribed field, but Burk has found his idiosyncratic way through it and it's his most effective context.

Burk must have been formidably busy in the summer of 2003 and The Ivy Trio was made while preparing for the session with Swallow and Moses. Burk was swimming in Walden Pond every day and something of that organic, transcendental quality one associates with Thoreau makes its way into the music. It remains something of a mystery why these tapes, and the solo recital below, should have been held back for more than four years before release. The title-image – ivy's voracious, every-which-way growth as a symbol of creative development – makes a lot of sense. He opens with 'Look To The Neutrino' (also on Nothing, Knowing and a typical Burk title; he often references scientific concepts and the natural world) and startlingly adds lots of electronics, handled buoyantly and with real flair. The parallels with Bley are ever more obvious on 'Hupid Stumid' and 'Blink To Be'. 'Ducks And Gulls' starts with another palette of curious sounds. The penultimate cut, 'Operetta', is also on the Swallow/Moses date for comparison, and they play out with a long, fine version of 'Billie's Bounce', just to show he can cut it on bebop staples as well as on post-bop abstraction. Robinson is stunning as ever, and in Gray the pianist seems to have found another simpatico. One of the best piano trio records of recent years.

And nice to see him back on Soul Note with a new quartet and a richly varied group of themes, written by all four members. Dinné's 'Tiny Tune' is deceptively packed with detail, while Robinson's two songs, 'Life Without Annette' and 'Ausländerlied', point to a yet to be discovered compositional talent. Nice sound, too, that reflects the democracy of this group.

Also, in brief:

() The Way In 482 Music 1048. 7/03.
A solo debut, and less than satisfactory.

Raymond Burke (1904–86)

CLARINET

Played home-made instruments as a boy, and worked in New Orleans for most of his life, through revivalism and beyond.

(*) Raymond Burke's Speakeasy Boys 1937–1949 American Music AMCD 47 Burke; Wooden Joe Nicholas, Vincent Cass (t); Joe Avery (tb); Louis Gallaud, Woodrow Rousell (p); Johnny St Cyr (g); Austin Young (b); Bob Matthews (d); George Hartman Band; Vincent Cass Band. 37–5/49.
Burke's clarinet-playing stands squarely in the line of the New Orleans masters: he had the sweet-toned delivery of Willie Humphrey but could be as elaborate and blues-inflected as Johnny Dodds when he wished. Most of the tracks here come from 1949 acetates by a band from which Burke stands out; Nicholas is weak and Avery's trombone is so inept even the liner-notes describe his sound as 'ratty'. The loudest person in these terrible transfers is St Cyr! The other tracks are even more obscure: a couple of duets with Rousell, and a few things with the Hartman and Cass bands (personnels unknown). Two of the acetates turned up in a New Orleans flea market in 1993. For scholars only.

(*) Raymond Burke And Cie Frazier With Butch Thompson In New Orleans 504 CDS 27 Burke; Butch Thompson (p); Cie Frazier (d). 8/79.
This is more like the way Burke should be remembered. Though 75, he was still playing very well, his understated delivery the mark of a man whose unassuming approach to his art has helped it endure. The music is nothing much: a battery of tunes, played at more or less the same tempo, with Frazier marking out a steady pulse and Thompson comping and taking easy-going solos. Some are New Orleans rarities like A. J. Piron's 'I Want Somebody To Love', 'Gypsy Love Song' and 'Oh Daddy'. On a hot day, with a julep to hand, this can sound like the very heart of jazz.

Gene Burkert

REEDS

Raised and based in California, he has been prodigiously active in all branches of music, though jazz remains the default setting.

 The Jazz Palette Sea Breeze Burkert; Christian Jacob (p); Larry Koonse (g); Trey Henry (b); David Tull (d). Celena Veres (v). 1 & 10/04.
He's a clever fellow, is Gene Burkert, but never clever merely for the sake of it. 'Palette' is exactly the right word for a player who deploys such an array of horns – soprano, alto, tenor, flutes and clarinets – with just a nice judgement of sound-colour. He opens the programme with Stanley Turrentine's soulful 'Sugar', played on alto. Then, a couple of originals, 'Our Pleasure' and 'Rogue March', that give a broader impression of his sound-world. Then it gets really interesting. Burkert's arrangement of 'Yesterdays' is right out of leftfield, almost abstract in the opening section, but opening up into a more effusive and swinging approach than the song usually gets. 'Alikeness' is a fine idea and a showcase for Burkert's very exact soprano work. 'Rasa And Her Moods' and 'Wind In Time' are by regular partner Smolens, a considerable talent in his own right. 'The Very Thought Of You' is not so much a vehicle for singer Veres, who has a lovely voice, as for Burkert's overdubbed horns, which sound great together. The closer, 'Relative Material', is another original and great teaser for the next album. This one lay in the tape library for two years before release. Hope they won't make that mistake again.

Chris Burn

PIANO, PERCUSSION, TRUMPET

British improviser, basically working from the piano, with a big-scale idea of setting free playing alongside detailed compositional references.

 Music For Three Rivers Victo CD 050 Burn (p, perc). 95–97.
Poised on the edge of some giant, funky blues, 'Storyfall' and the long title-track that follows are masterpieces of improvised pianism, large-scale works of awesome technical and imaginative range. Questions of how sounds are produced may be interesting but are ultimately irrelevant. This is concentrated music-making which demands evenly suspended attention. The later, shorter tracks are interesting and adept, but add very little to the majestic sweep of the opening pair.

 The Place 1991 Emanem 4056 Burn; Jim Denley (pic, f, bf); Evan Parker (ts); Phil Durrant (vn); Stevie Wishart (vn, hurdy-gurdy); John Russell (g); Marcio Mattos (b); Matt Hutchinson (syn, elec). 10/91.

A fascinating insight into the evolution of the Chris Burn Ensemble. The set, recorded at the Place theatre, consists of three Burn compositions (including the brilliant 'The Piano Ate Card' which features Wishart's hurdy-gurdy), one by Butcher (misleadingly titled 'Southern Samba A Go-Go'), one by Keith Rowe (unusual, since he isn't a member of the ensemble) and one free improvisation. Tracing the differences in philosophy and approach between these is slightly redundant other than that the contrast between the improvised 'Hammer Hint' and the rest of the album should be glaringly obvious; it's by far the weakest track. Burn moves between piano, toy piano and percussion, working inside the soundbox and frequently producing sounds which are not so much unidiomatic as anti-idiomatic. Parker guests on 'Blocks And Echoes', the fine closing piece.

(*) The First Two Gigs Emanem 4063 Burn; John Butcher (ss, ts); Rhodri Davis (hp); John Edwards (b). 5 & 9/00.
These were the first encounters of these musicians as a quartet, but they have considerable mileage together in other combinations, so the chemistry is already assured. Butcher always seems to play slightly differently when in Burn's company, a more expansive if not more conventional saxophone sound, and that is the case here, certainly on the earlier date. Burn himself moves restlessly about, not so much experimenting with sound as seeming to find the exact registration for something he has already considered, an approach that doesn't in any way dent the improvisational ethos of the group. It's tempting to overlook or dismiss Davis's contributions, simply because they are quieter and often have to be chased through the mix. He is a formidable musician, who would attract considerable excitement if he were playing any other instrument. Check out his work on 'Scharlachglut' and 'Souvenir De Docteur'.

(*) Mopomoso Solos 2002 Emanem 4100 Burn; Lol Coxhill (ss); John Russell (g); John Edwards (b); Phil Minton (v). 11/02.
Burn founded the Mopomoso concert series, under the refreshing rubric 'Modernism, post-modernism, so what?' These solos, duo and one quintet piece were recorded at one such occasion. Burn's own contribution on 'Traps' is influenced to some extent by his experiments around the work of maverick piano composer Henry Cowell. It's a fine piece, but upstaged by wonderful contributions from the others, Minton and Coxhill in particular. The closing 'Quintet 'Til The End Of Time' is a bit gestural and routine.

Also, in brief:

(*) Horizontals Emanem 4080. 1 & 5/01.
A sextet – and smaller – version of the Ensemble and very little notated preparation from Burn. Fascinating results.

(*) At Musica Genera Musica Genera mg06. 02.
Live in Poland, with John Butcher (as,ts) in strikingly good form.

Ralph Burns (1922–2001)

PIANO, ARRANGER

Contributed substantially to the band-books of Charlie Barnet and Woody Herman, with whom he worked into the '50s. He then did studio arranging and film work but continued working on charts to the end.

(*) Free Forms And Winter Sequence Fresh Sound FSRCD 2215 Burns; Sonny Berman, Conrad Gozzo, Joe Wilder (t); Bill Harris, Ollie Wilson, Kai Winding (tb); Jimmy Buffington, Vince DeRosa (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Herbie Mann (f, ts); Harry Klee (f, cl); Hal McKusick, Lee Konitz (as); Vinnie Dean (as, picc); Herbie Steward, Lucky Thompson (ts); Chuck Gentry (bs); Danny Bank (bs, f); Dodo Marmarosa (p); Billy Bauer, Arvin Garrison (g); Ray Brown, Red Callender (b); Oscar Pettiford (b, clo); Osie Johnson, Joe Jones, Don Lamond (d). 10/46, 8/51, 9/54.
 Bijou Original Jazz Classics OJC 1917 Burns; Tal Farlow (g); Clyde Lombardi (b); Osie Johnson (d). 55.
In October 1946, Norman Granz recorded Burns's 'Introspection' as a one-off mood-piece, rhythmically complex and emotionally subtle. Five years later, Granz recorded him again. Free Forms is a curious sketch-book, some of the pieces cast in a 'modern' classical vein, but full of intelligent writing. Three years further on, he created arrangements of Winter Sequence, a group of instrumental features named after Santa's reindeer and intended to catch the character of the individual soloists. These are fascinating tracks and offer a clear view of Burns the composer-arranger at work.

His piano-playing was unremarkable but capable. The main point of this set is to hear some of his most renowned pieces – 'Spring Sequence', 'Bijou', 'Autobahn Blues' – in a quartet setting. He points up how the harmonies work, and with Farlow taking a back-seat role it's good dinner music. 'Perpetual Motion' might be the most interesting piece, since he overdubs a second piano part to give a Tristanoesque feel.

Also, in brief:

(*) Perpetual Motion Fresh Sound FSRCD 2216. 55.
Brings together the Norgran LP Among The JATPs and a slightly later Decca session called Jazz Studio 5. Some exciting things.

 In Percussion – Where There's Burns There's Fire Fresh Sound FSRCD 1619. 60.
Gimmicky but good. Too many (then) new-fangled stereo effects, but some great players (Zoot Sims (ts), Urbie Green (tb)) and a fine remake of 'Bijou'.

Dave Burrell (born 1944)

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

Grew up in Hawaii and studied at Berklee, before joining the New York free-jazz movement in the late '60s. Most frequently encountered of late as a David Murray sideman.

 Echo Sunspots 525 Burrell; Clifford Thornton (t); Grachan Moncur III (tb); Arthur Jones (as); Archie Shepp (ts); Alan Silva (b); Sunny Murray (d). 8/69.
(*) After Love Universal International 087867 Burrell; Roscoe Mitchell (reeds); Alan Silva (vn, clo); Ron Miller (b, mand); Michel Gladieux (b); Bertrand Gauthier, Don Moye (d). 70.
Recorded during free jazz's Parisian diaspora at the end of the '60s and formerly on BYG, Echo is a curiously schizophrenic set. The title-tune is a swirling, all-in blast that palls very quickly. The other theme, 'Peace', is a little more structured, largely thanks to Burrell's rippling whorls of sound. Shepp has some effective moments in his Fire Music incarnation, Thornton serves up some reminders of his long sojourn in the 'Neglected' box, and the inclusion of Moncur will attract those who seek out the trombonist's scattered discography. For the most part, though, this is a historical document, hard to listen to now.

First released on America Records in France, After Love very much repeats the formula, in that the first piece is fierce and intense, while the second majors on atmospherics. The instrumentation is fascinating and there is a remarkable interplay between piano, strings and Roscoe Mitchell's typically focused and provocative reeds. Moye and Gauthier don't appear together, which is an advantage acoustically. The doubling of instruments was probably a bit too subtle for 1970 studio techniques and there are passages on the first and noisier part of the title-track where the registration is muddied. Burrell's piano rarely comes through strongly. A more spacious arrangement suits the music well. 'My March' is probably more recognizable as a Burrell idea from the point of view of his later, rootsier work, and it's a significant pointer to the future here.

* The Jelly Roll Joys Gazell 4003 Burrell (p solo). 90.
* In Concert Victo 016 Burrell; David Murray (ts). 10/91.
Recorded live at the Victoriaville festival, In Concert is a perfect representation of the almost telepathic relationship that existed between Murray and the pianist, who is listed first on the sleeve. His eclectic theme 'Punaluu Peter' receives a definitive workout, while Burrell contributes 'Hope Scope'. Sadly, there's nothing quite like the Jelly Roll Morton interpretations that appear on a later Gazell disc, Brother To Brother, but there's plenty of that on the earlier solo programme of tunes ('The Crave', 'The Pearls', 'New Orleans Blues', 'Freakish' and 'Spanish Swat'), which is equally recommended as a showcase of Burrell's eclectic vision and technique. Coltrane's 'Giant Steps' and 'Moment's Notice' are also sensitively covered.

(*) Recital CIMP 230 Burrell; Tyrone Brown (b). 8/00.
Probably best heard after the Morton/Parker/Coltrane tribute record on Gazell (now deleted), this simply recorded session works yet more variations on 'Giant Steps', finessing that astonishing performance with even greater authority. Brown is an able partner, though he sounds a bit lost on the free-form 'Samba Rondo'. Already known as an eclectic's eclectic, Burrell this time puts Trane upsides with Louis Armstrong's 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue' and makes the switch of source seem the most logical thing in the world, which to a degree it is.

(*) Consequences Amulet 022 Burrell; Billy Martin (perc). 10/05.
And as if to prove that Burrell hasn't left behind his avant-garde sensibilities, here he is in one of the most unfettered and challenging dates of his recorded career. His only partner is the mainstay of Medeski, Martin & Wood, himself obviously enjoying the chance to cut loose in an outside idiom. Recorded live at the University of Pennsylvania, the set consists of five long pieces, opening in stormy mode with 'Monsoon' and incorporating what appear to be two spontaneously composed numbers. The sound isn't always as good as one might hope, but the fire and sophistication of the music more than makes up for any (slight) technical insufficiencies.

* Momentum High Two 008 Burrell; Michael Formanek (b); Guillermo E. Brown (perc). 11/05.
The late autumn of 2005 was a purple patch for the pianist and this new trio offers the best earnest of his desire to keep pushing into new territory. It seems that much of the music was written for a live realization of a restored French silent film, which may explain an occasional recall of that devoted cinephile Ran Blake. Burrell, though, entirely avoids Blake's wistful minimalism and delivers a full-ahead attack on most of the numbers. Formanek and Brown are both generously featured in the middle of the set, but for the most part offer solid and stirring support. 'Fade To Black' and 'Cool Reception' are the highlights.

Also, in brief:

 Expansion High Two 01. 10/03.
The Full-Blown Trio, with William Parker (b, kora) and Andrew Cyrille (d), gel perfectly on a programme of short pieces, though the best single cut is a solo version of Irving Berlin's 'They Say It's Wonderful'.

 Margy Pargy Splasc(h) 074. 3/05.
A quality solo set, recorded in Italy. The best things are standards, including a long, troublous 'Lush Life'.

Duke Burrell (1920–93)

PIANO

A New Orleans man who stretched the revivalist premiss more than a little.

 Louisiana Shakers GHB 368 Burrell; Sammy Rimington (cl); Sam Lee (ts); McNeal Breaux (b); Teddy Edwards (d). 74.
A thoroughly enjoyable, though scarcely epoch-making or rigorously authentic NO date. Burrell spent his last years on the West Coast and there's a hint of that in these cuts, which occasionally sound as if they've been got up for the tourists. 'Goin' To Kansas City' and 'Back Home In Indiana' offer sufficient warning of that right at the start, so by the time you get to 'At The Mardi Gras' and 'Saints' you've stopped worrying about the provenance and sit back to enjoy some crisp and jolly jazz.

Kenny Burrell (born 1931)

GUITAR, VOCAL

Born in Detroit, he'd already played with Dizzy Gillespie and Oscar Peterson before moving to NY in 1956. A dependable sideman and quietly inspiring leader, mixing blues and bebop in a style which remains conservative but genuine and direct.

(*) Introducing – First Blue Note Sessions Blue Note 2456 2CD Burrell; Frank Foster, Hank Mobley (ts); Tommy Flanagan, Horace Silver (p); Oscar Pettiford, Paul Chambers, Doug Watkins (b); Shadow Wilson, Kenny Clarke, Louis Hayes (d); Candido Camero (perc). 3/56–2/57.
 All Night Long Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 427 Burrell; Donald Byrd (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Jerome Richardson (ts, f); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/56.
 All Day Long Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 456 Burrell; Donald Byrd (t); Frank Foster (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 1/57.
 Blue Moods Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 019 Burrell; Cecil Payne (bs); Tommy Flanagan (p); Doug Watkins (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2/57.
 The Cats Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 079 Burrell; Idrees Sulieman (t); John Coltrane (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Doug Watkins (b); Louis Hayes (d). 4/57.
 Kenny Burrell & John Coltrane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 300 Burrell; John Coltrane (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 3/58.

An enduring light in modern jazz, Burrell has a seemingly inexhaustible supply of licks and a tone as lulling as Joe Pass's, though without Joe's rococo extravagances. The career is very much of a piece, the early dates as securely formed as the later ones, and he seems to fit seamlessly into any context. In the '50s he was popular on blowing dates and the early work for Prestige is mostly in that mould. The sessions designated all day and all night didn't go on that long, but some of the solos seem to. Blue Moods canters through blues and standards. The last of the group finds Coltrane in his restless early period, but Burrell is a calming influence and they have a beautifully shaded duet on 'Why Was I Born?'. The Cats benefits from Flanagan's leadership and his piano adds a lustre to the music.

Burrell was also working at Blue Note. Introducing gathers in his first two albums plus a session that yielded a couple of singles. Regular buddies Flanagan (another Detroiter) and Watkins plus the signature label sound put these a notch ahead.

(*) Blue Lights Blue Note 57184 2CD Burrell; Louis Smith (t); Tina Brooks, Junior Cook (ts); Duke Jordan, Bobby Timmons (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Blakey (d). 5/58.

Two blowing dates that have the edge on the Prestige sessions – just that bit sharper and more swinging, and with Smith, Cook and the star-crossed Brooks in attendance, the horns are more interesting too. Blakey lets nobody coast, and even though the material is routine it doesn't much matter. A long look at 'I Never Knew' is the CD bonus.

* Bluesy Burrell Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 926 Burrell; Leo Wright (as); Coleman Hawkins (ts); Tommy Flanagan, Gildo Mahones (p); Major Holley, George Tucker (b); Eddie Locke, Jimmie Smith (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 9/62–8/63.

A marvellous session. Burrell sounds at his most seductive on 'I Thought About You', at his most suavely blue on 'Montono Blues'; but it's his interplay with the imperious Hawkins that makes the record special. 'Tres Palabras' is a classic performance, given extra weight by Flanagan's economical solo, though it's the great tenorman who carries all before him.

(*) Midnight Blue Blue Note 95335 Burrell; Stanley Turrentine (ts); Major Holley (b); Bill English (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 1/63.

Many a copy of this was worn smooth on vinyl, and the two CD extras 'Kenny's Sound' and 'K Twist' are a welcome bonus, especially in the handsome sound of the RVG Edition. Somewhat atypically low-flame for a Blue Note date, even if Burrell had already visited these climes on the Night Lights sessions, they take the soul-food licks of 'Chitlins Con Carne' some way towards ferocity, but the implacable beat refuses to get nasty. Ideal music for the time and mood of the title.

(*) Blue Bash! Verve 557453 Burrell; Jimmy Smith (org); George Duvivier, Milt Hinton (b); Bill English, Mel Lewis (d). 7/63.

Three days of spare studio time while Smith was at work on a big-band date led to this highly enjoyable blowing session. The principals' interplay on the title-track sums up their whole musical relationship: punchy, bluesy but soaked in the good humour of playing for kicks.

 Soul Call Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 846-2 Burrell; Will Davis (p); Martin Rivera (b); Bill English (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 4/64.

Burrell's reluctance to assert any kind of leadership tells against him when the supporting players have little to say themselves. The title-piece and 'Mark One' are solid slow blues, and all the licks are smoothly if unmemorably executed.

(*) Guitar Forms Verve 521403 Burrell; Johnny Coles, Louis Mucci (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Jimmy Knepper (tb); Ray Alonge, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Andy Fitzgerald, George Marge (f, cor); Steve Lacy (ss); Ray Beckenstein (as, f); Lee Konitz (as); Richie Kamuca (ts, ob); Bob Tricarico (bsn, f); Roger Kellaway (p); Joe Benjamin, Ron Carter (b); Elvin Jones, Grady Tate, Charli Persip (d); Willie Rodriguez (perc). 12/64–4/65.

This is a success, largely thanks to Gil Evans, who arranged it. Burrell's sanguine approach might make him a less characterful soloist than those who've handled other of Gil's concerto set-pieces, but in some ways that works to the music's advantage. Without the misleading emotional resonances of, say, Miles Davis's cracked notes, the purity of Evans's veils of sound emerges the more clearly in the likes of 'Lotus Land'. Too many 'bonus' tracks; best programmed out.

CORE COLLECTION

* Ellington Is Forever Volume 1

Fantasy FCD 79005 Burrell; Jon Faddis, Snooky Young (t); Thad Jones (c, flhn); Jerome Richardson (ss, ts); Joe Henderson (ts); Jimmy Jones (p); Jimmy Smith (org); Jimmie Smith (d); Mel Lewis, Richie Goldberg (perc); Ernie Andrews (v). 2/75.

Burrell's greatest album looks unpromising from a distance, but this salute to Ellington remains one of the finest examples of a now-overworked genre. Cut at a couple of loose-knit sessions, the cast is a shifting one, from twelve men on a hard-hitting 'Caravan' to a Burrell solo in 'Jump For Joy' and Jimmy Jones's moving soliloquy on 'Take The "A" Train'. 'C Jam Blues' sets Faddis and Thad Jones against the rhythm section, a blues medley allows a rare glimpse of Young as a soloist, and Henderson is splendid on 'I Didn't Know About You'. Most effective of all is the definitive treatment of 'My Little Brown Book' by Andrews and Jimmy Jones. Burrell may be a bystander at times, but he presided over a magnificent session.

 Ellington Is Forever Volume 2 Fantasy FCD 79008 As above, except omit Jimmie Smith, Lewis, Goldberg; add Nat Adderley (c); Gary Bartz (cl, as); Sir Roland Hanna (p); Stanley Gilbert, George Mraz, Monk Montgomery (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 11–12/75.

The return match was a disappointment, despite some delightful moments: Smith's lovely glide through 'Solitude' and Thad Jones and Young together on 'Come Sunday'. Too many of the other pieces sound merely routine.

 Stolen Moments Concord CCD2 2128 2CD Burrell; Reggie Johnson (b); John Heard (b); Carl Burnett, Roy McCurdy (d); Kenneth Nash (perc). 3/77–12/79.

(*) When Lights Are Low Concord CCD 4083 Burrell; Larry Gates (b); Carl Burnett (d). 9/78.

Burrell's unflappability and Concord's smooth, welcoming presentation tend to anaesthetize rather than stimulate and there's little to make one sit up and take notice on these discs. But Burrell was in his prime as an improviser and the solos on 'Tin Tin Deo' or 'It Shouldn't Happen To A Dream' are evidence of his mettle. The first of these brings together Tin Tin Deo and Moon And Sand; the latter is decidedly underpowered.

 Togethering Blue Note 25651 Burrell; Grover Washington Jr (ss, ts); Ron Carter, Reggie Workman (b); Jack DeJohnette, Grady Tate (d); Ralph McDonald (perc). 4/84–2/85.

Five producers are credited, so there wasn't much danger of things getting out of hand. This was Burrell's only appearance with Washington (two tracks from the 1985 Blue Note Town Hall concert are a bonus) and it's a friendly encounter. The slightly unkempt feel is largely down to DeJohnette, who isn't the kind of drummer content to keep time. The live tracks with Workman and Tate are 'Summertime' and 'I'm Glad There Is You', with Washington unusually energetic.

(*) Sunup To Sundown Contemporary CCD14065 Burrell; Cedar Walton (p); Rufus Reid (b); Lewis Nash (d); Ray Mantilla (perc). 6/91.
A good one. 'Out There' hits a fine groove from the outset, and it's quickly apparent that the group are bringing the best out of the nominal leader, whose solos find an extra pinch of energy and grit.

* Lotus Blossom Concord CCD 4668 Burrell; Ray Drummond (b); Yoron Israel (d). 10/95.
The personnel is slightly misleading, in that there are only three trio tracks, four duets with Drummond and six guitar solos. It's all a bit polite and smoothed out, though 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes' has character and charm.

 Love Is The Answer Concord CCD 42053 Burrell; James Williams (p, ky); Ray Drummond (b); Ben Riley (d); Boys Choir of Harlem. 6/97.
But what was the question?, it's tempting to ask. This attempt to fuse jazz with sacred music isn't without precedent, though the instrumental forces are relatively unusual. Impossible to question the sincerity of Burrell's multi-part 'Love Suite' and the boys' singing is often very affecting, but this will have limited appeal and the three tack-on tracks don't make much sense, either.

 Lucky So And So Concord CCD 4951 Burrell; Onaje Allan Gumbs (ky); Rufus Reid (b); Akira Tana (d). 9/00.
Kenny sings! Only on four tracks, and they pass painlessly enough. Most of the record is too nice to stir the listener much, though 'The Feeling Of Jazz' is a neatly turned way to start. The pick is probably 'Bluescope', which finds him going at his favourite form with familiar assurance.

 Blue Muse Concord CCD 2191 Burrell; Herman Riley (ts, f); Gerry Wiggins (p); Tom Ranier (p, ky); Roberto Miguel Miranda (b); Sherman Ferguson (d). 12/02.
More singing on this, and he seems to have growing confidence in his vocal prowess, since half the cuts feature him. It's as mild and pleasant as the guitar-playing, though without the quiet virtuosity, but it further blunts the impact of these mainly easy-going cuts – the opening 'Mark 1' is the only real exception – and it confirms the long-standing impression that Kenny is fated to be upstaged by his sidemen, in this case Riley and Wiggins.

 75th Birthday Bash Live! Blue Note 74906 Burrell; Ron Barrows, Steve Huffsteter, Snooky Young (t); Les Benedict, Garnett Brown, Maurice Spears (tb); Michael Wimbely (btb); Jeff Clayton (as); Randall Willis (as, f); Carl Randall Jr, Herman Riley (ts); Jack Nimitz (bs); Hubert Laws (f); Joey DeFrancesco (org); Brian O'Rourke (p); Trey Henry (b); Roberto Miguel Miranda (b, perc); Clayton Cameron, Mel Lee (d). 7 & 8/06.
One can hardly grudge the old boy his celebration, but it makes for extremely dull listening. Gerald Wilson arranged, which gives the occasion an extra air of gravitas, and while there is some lovely stuff on 'Blues For The Count' and 'Romance', both Wilson themes, and some excellent choices later – 'Footprints', 'All Blues', '"A" Train' – there is a slight sense that the whole thing revolves round Kenny but doesn't really involve him.

Also, in brief:

 Kenny Burrell And The Jazz Giants Prestige 60-028. 56–64.
A solid, if bitty, compilation from the Prestige albums.

(*) The Artist Selects Blue Note 31436. 3/56–10/64.
Kenny's own pick includes stuff for other leaders; typically modest, but also realistic.

 Kenny Burrell: Jazz Masters 45 Verve 527652. 64–69.
Tracks from Guitar Forms, A Generation Ago Today, Blues: The Common Ground, For Charlie Christian And Benny Goodman, Asphalt Canyon Suite and Night Song, much of which is otherwise unavailable.

 Have Yourself A Soulful Little Christmas Verve 986041. 66.
We like jazz Christmas records, but this one's a stretcher.

 Blues: The Common Ground Verve 589101. 12/67–2/68.
Relatively slight stuff. Don Sebesky's charts certainly don't match up to Gil Evans's on Guitar Forms, but Burrell, bless him, makes the best of it.

 God Bless The Child CTI/Epic 505164. 4–11/71.
Kenny fights his way past Don Sebesky's arrangements and Creed Taylor's production.

(*) Round Midnight Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 988. 72.
A mostly ballad album from a fairly thin period.

(*) Stormy Monday Blues Fantasy 24767. 6/74, 12/75.
Teamed on CD with Sky Street, which added soupy electric piano. Not a vintage period.

() Midnight At The Village Vanguard / () Then Along Came Kenny Evidence ECD 22124 / 22160. 8/93.
Poorly recorded and particularly hard on Burrell, though James Williams (p) has some exceptional moments. Not worthy of the follow-up disc, though.

Roy Burrowes (1930–98)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Born in Jamaica, but based in London, he played in Duke Ellington's brass section during the early '60s, but despite leading his own group recorded very little as leader.

 Live At The Dreher Marge 151992 Burrowes; Richard Raux (ss, ts); Mal Waldron (p); Patrice Caratini (b); George 'Funky' Brown (d); Roger Raspail (perc). 3/80.
Burrowes has exactly the kind of tone and delivery you'd expect from a man with Ducal associations: bright, burnished, precise in articulation but with an ability to bend notes and compress phrases. His writing points in the same direction: crisp, fairly minimal lines with a great deal of scope for improvisation, but with a sense of underlying order. That's in evidence right from the top of 'Old Compton Street' and on the lovely 'Jamaica', which might remind some listeners of a Harry Beckett theme (wrong island, but the same mixture of warm lyricism and tense energy).

This was a fallow period for Waldron, as far as recording went. Over the past year, he had only recorded one brief solo session and a couple of dates with drummer Klaus Weiss. Though he plays strongly on this Paris session, and contributes a couple of strong themes, including 'The Seagulls', there is something occluded and remote about his tone which can't entirely be explained by a questionably tuned piano. Though the group seems to have been co-led, the album is attributed to Burrowes alone. It's a solitary remnant of an interesting career that never gathered momentum.

George Burt and Raymond MacDonald

GUITAR / SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES

Leading partnership on the modern/free scene in Scotland, making impressive international associations. Emphasis is on thoughtful composition and improv rather than standards or blowing situations. Also stalwarts of the Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra.

 Oh Hello BMacRec CD001 Burt; MacDonald; George Lyle (b); Allan Pendreigh (d); Nicola MacDonald (v, melod); Allon Beauvoisin (f); Bill Wells (p); Andy Shanks (v). 10/98.
 Big Brothers BMacRec CD002 As above, except omit Shanks; add Graeme Wilson (f); Allon Beauvoisin (cl); Rick Bamford (perc). 4/00.

Burt's technique and range of reference, anything from straight jazz comping to Derek Bailey-influenced free is the group's mainstay. MacDonald is a freer and at first hearing a more undisciplined presence, but there is an iron discipline in this playing as well. The basic group, with Lyle and Pendreigh, has from the beginning been augmented by other voices. Beauvoisin is, with MacDonald, a member of the all-saxophone Hung Drawn Quartet; here he provides colour more than anything, as does Wells, who is more impressive on the later Great Shark Hunt. Of this early pair, Oh Hello is probably the better, but there isn't much in it.

(*) Popcorn FMR CD 136 Burt; MacDonald; Christoph Reiserer (ss); George Lyle (b); Nicola MacDonald (v, melod); Aileen Campbell (v, popcorn machine, hairdryer). 4/03.

The instrumentation includes a couple of eye-popping, not to say hair-raising, extras, but Campbell's remarkable vocal contribution is well integrated with what is now a well-seasoned sound. It's typical of the partnership that conceptualism of this sort doesn't in any way sound alien. It would be more surprising to hear them working with a visiting NY bopper on a cover of 'Out Of Nowhere', though doubtless they'd pull that off as well.

 Tsunami FMR CD 82 Burt; MacDonald; Lol Coxhill (ss); George Lyle (b); Allan Pendreigh (d). 8/01.
 Coxhill Street FMR CD 92 As above, except add Nicola MacDonald (v, melod). 6/02.
 Hotel Dilettante Textile TCD6 As above, except add Sushil K. Dade (b, theremin). 2/05.
* The Great Shark Hunt FMR CD165 As above, except add Daniel Padden (cl, perc, v); Bill Wells (p). 6/05.

Coxhill's one-off tour with the Quartet/Quintet has turned into a regular partnership, which seems to evolve from one project to the next with the addition of new and highly creative musicians. That's most evident on the recent Great Shark Hunt (Dr Hunter Thompson, RIP), when the astonishing Padden and the ever-inventive Wells add a new dimension. This one also includes the only recorded duet between front men Burt and MacDonald, which given the length and intensity of the creative relationship seems extraordinary; 'Memo From The Sports Desk' is a highlight. The addition of Dade (Future Pilot AKA) on the previous album pushes some tracks in an initially unfamiliar direction, but Burt's guitar and MacDonald's hard-to-pin-down saxophone approach keep the basic language familiarly mobile.

Coxhill seems more of a guest player on the very first of the records, recorded during a biblically wet spell in Scotland, hence the title. By the time of Coxhill Street (there is such an address in Glasgow), he's a fully integrated member of the unit, treading his familiar line between free playing and more orthodox changes.

 A Day For A Reason Tob Records TRCD020 Burt; MacDonald; Keith Tippett (p); George Lyle (b); Alyn Cosker (d); Nicola MacDonald (v, mca). 7/05.

Written to mark the centenary of the Tobermory Clock on the island of Mull, which is associated with the explorer Isabella Bird, this represents one of the quintet's most fruitful associations. Keith Tippett's piano-playing is both utterly distinctive – lush, lyrical but with a percussive edge – and also responsive to context. The set also marks an evolution in the group sound with the semi-retirement of the inspirational Pendreigh and the recruitment of Cosker, who has a busier and more emphatic presence at the kit, but not the same infallible sense of pulse and motion.

Gary Burton (born 1943)

VIBRAPHONE

Unusually for a musician of his stature, he has mostly preferred to play the compositions of others, notably Carla Bley. A distinguished educator, and his groups have long been a proving ground for young talent, while his four-mallet approach and distinctive approach to arrangement create an instantly recognizable sound.

 Who Is Gary Burton? RCA Victor SP 2665 Burton; Clark Terry (t); Chris Swansen (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Phil Woods (as); Tommy Flanagan (p); John Neves, Gene Cherico (b); Joe Morello (d). 9/62.

The question in the title is a good one, for this is one of the more elusive of modern jazz greats. This impressive record affords Burton ample solo space and a chance to show off his skills as a composer, but the real action is devolved to the group. Morello and Cherico are still there from Gary's debut as leader the year before, New Vibe Man In Town. 'Fly Time Fly' and 'Storm' are impressive, and Gary is recorded crisply and forcefully enough, but it isn't yet a distinctive statement.

 Tennessee Firebird Bear Family 14458 Burton; Chet Atkins, Jim Colvard, Ray Edenton (g); Buddy Emmons (steel g); Charlie McCoy (hca, b); Bobby Osborne (mandola); Sonny Osborne (bj); Norman Spicher (vn); Henry Strzelecki, Steve Swallow (b); Grady Martin (b, g); Kenneth A. Buttrey, Roy Haynes (d). 9/66.
* Duster Koch Jazz 7846 Burton; Larry Coryell (g); Steve Swallow (b); Roy Haynes (d). 4/67.
(*) Lofty Fake Anagram / A Genuine Tong Funeral BGO 723 Burton; Michael Mantler (t); Jimmy Knepper (tb, btb); Howard Johnson (tba, bs); Steve Lacy (ss); Gato Barbieri (ts); Carla Bley (p, org); Larry Coryell (g); Steve Swallow (b); Lonesome Dragon, Bob Moses (d). 8/67; 67–68.
(*) Country Roads And Other Places Koch Jazz 7854 Burton; Jerry Hahn (g); Steve Swallow (b); Roy Haynes (d). 9/68.

Burton's early recordings were driven by an ambition to synthesize jazz, rock and country music. The early Tennessee Firebird is almost a country set, as the personnel must suggest, though Burton's own playing points in other directions. The mix of up-tempo tunes like 'Panhandle Rag' with gentler-paced ballads (notably 'Black Is The Color Of My True Love's Hair') prevents the album from settling into a monotonous groove. Perhaps too Nashville for some tastes, but think what Bill Frisell was doing to great critical acclaim three decades later, and most jazz purists will swallow their disdain for a record featuring Chet Atkins and Charlie McCoy.

By contrast, Duster was one of the first jazz-rock records, and though it seems rather tame compared to later examples of the genre, it undoubtedly had an impact, even if only as permission to mix rock beats and distorted guitar into a jazz performance. Mike Gibbs's 'Sweet Rain' is the outstanding track, a modern classic, but Carla Bley's 'Sing Me Softly Of The Blues' runs a close second. One of his most striking recordings, though, was a performance of Carla Bley's 'dark opera without words', A Genuine Tong Funeral. This was intended for full staging with costumes and lights but is really known only as a recorded piece. Bley intended no connection whatsoever with actual Chinese music, and the basic provenance of the album is that same synthesis of modern styles which Burton himself was pursuing at the time. The work has a brooding, processional quality, using suspended harmonies and minor variants to create an atmosphere of loss and, on occasion, inexplicable dread. 'Mother Of The Dead Man' is perhaps the best-known single component, but it's the centrepiece, 'Silent Spring' – originally written for Swallow but now dominated by Barbieri, Coryell and Burton – which stands out. Burton's playing is more open and abstract than at any other point in his career. The CD reissue is augmented by Lofty Fake Anagram, which was long out of circulation, and while it lacks the energy and grace of Country Roads, it's a tremendous showcase for Coryell.

Country Roads is also still a joy after more than 30 years. The playing is as fresh and unfettered as ever, and themes like 'Family Joy', 'And On The Third Day' and 'Country Roads' (also favourites with Gibbs) are delightfully nostalgic. The album marked the debut of guitarist Hahn, who keeps his occasional excesses well under control and plays smooth lines with a lot of rhythmic pace. Burton is in excellent form, dancing on the bars, and then suddenly changing pace to accommodate the gracious sweep of 'My Foolish Heart' and 'Wichita Breakdown'. There is even a small Ravel arrangement.

* Gary Burton And Keith Jarrett Rhino 8122 71594 Burton; Keith Jarrett (p, ss); Sam Brown, Jerry Hahn (g); Richard Greene (vn); Steve Swallow (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 6/69, 7/70.
(*) Good Vibes Koch Jazz 8515 Burton; Richard Tee (p); Eric Gale, Jerry Hahn (g); Chuck Rainey, Steve Swallow (b); Bill Lavorgna (d, perc). 9/69.
(*) Paris Encounter Atlantic 112783 Burton; Stéphane Grappelli (vn); Steve Swallow (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 11/69.
In 1969 and 1970 Burton co-led a group with Keith Jarrett and recorded the magnificent Throb, which is also included on the Rhino compilation and is still one of the most evocative records produced at the time. Mike Gibbs's title-track is a zeitgeist moment, wry and innocent by turns.

Good Vibes is another intriguing Atlantic date. There is no avoiding the impression of a musician and label trying to rise to the challenge of rock. There is too much guitar and too much heavy backbeat, and Burton's own playing dissolves into shapelessness, even on his own material. 'Vibrafinger', 'Boston Marathon' and 'Leroy The Magician' are originals.

The 35-year age gap did nothing to dim Burton's meeting with Hot Club veteran Grappelli. Paris Encounter is a delicious set, opening with Django's 'Daphne' and including Mike Gibbs's 'Sweet Rain' (a dedication to Burton) and Steve Swallow's 'Eiderdown'. Grappelli seems to enjoy the pitch and pace of the vibes and the rhythm section, laying out bright, buoyant chords even as he develops a melody line.

* Alone At Last WEA International 80762 Burton (vib solo; p, org overdubbed). 6–9/71.
This fantastic set has had a chequered reissue history, and has even appeared on Collectables. The opening cuts are Burton solo and live at the Montreux Jazz Festival, playing brilliantly on a sequence of Steve Swallow and Keith Jarrett themes. The rest of the album finds him overdubbed with piano and organ, including Mike D'Abo's 'Handbags And Gladrags', but the best cut of all is an unaccompanied 'Chega De Saudade', a beautiful version of the Jobim 'blues'. A great vibes record, and a great jazz record.

 Ring ECM 829191-2 Burton; Mick Goodrick, Pat Metheny (g); Eberhard Weber (b); Bob Moses (d). 7/74.
(*) Dreams So Real ECM 833329-2 As above, except Steve Swallow replaces Weber (b). 12/75.
 Passengers ECM 835016-2 Burton; Pat Metheny (g); Steve Swallow, Eberhard Weber (b); Danny Gottlieb (d). 11/76.
Burton's mid-'70s albums with rising star Metheny and the distinctive Weber now sound a little tarnished and dry, but their blend of country softness and Weber's eldritch melody-lines still make for interesting listening. The three ECMs are pretty much of a piece, but Passengers – co-credited to Weber – is the one to go for.

Burton makes a considerable virtue out of what might otherwise be clutter. The themes are open and clearly stated, even when they are relatively complex, as on 'The Whopper', and Weber's forceful, wailing sound is strongly contrasted to those of the two guitarists; Swallow as usual plays bass guitar with a pick, getting a clean, exact sound, the coloration of which contrasts with Metheny's rock-influenced sustains. Weber's own composition 'Yellow Fields' undergoes an attractive variation.

[redacted]

* Hotel Hello

ECM 835586-2 Burton; Steve Swallow (b). 5/74.
Hotel Hello is the most impressive of Burton's two-handers and an ideal opportunity to examine the vibist in close-up. The overture and vamp to 'Hotel Hello' are worthy of Carla Bley, and the detailed interplay between the co-leaders is often revelatory. This is one of the high-points of ECM's distinguished catalogue.

 Matchbook ECM 835014-2 Burton; Ralph Towner (g). 7/74.
(*) Duet ECM 829941-2 Burton; Chick Corea (p). 10/78.
On record, an outwardly ideal partnership fell foul of the acoustic closeness of piano and vibes. The earlier Crystal Silence is more properly credited to Corea, since he is the chief writer. On Duet the pianist never seems far from whimsicality, and it is interesting to see how much more positively and forcefully Burton responds to Towner's light but well-anchored style. Matchbook is surprisingly disciplined and coherent for all its lacy textures and delicate, almost directionless transitions; Burton's and Towner's other collaboration, Slide Show, put the guitarist's name first.

 Real Life Hits ECM 825235-2 Burton; Makoto Ozone (p); Steve Swallow (b); Mike Hyman (d). 1/82, 11/84.
Real Life Hits is understated and rather inward-looking, but renewed acquaintance reveals a record of unsuspected depth and dimension. As so often, the compositions are from other hands – Carla Bley, John Scofield, Ozone, Swallow, Duke Ellington – but Burton has the gift of personalizing them. The interpretation of Duke's 'Fleurette Africaine' is exquisite, and Carla's 'Syndrome' and 'Real Life Hits' give the band something to chew on.

(*) Whiz Kids ECM 831110-2 Burton; Tommy Smith (ts); Makoto Ozone (p); Steve Swallow (b); Martin Richards (d). 6/86.
Though Ozone resurfaced to great effect on Whiz Kids, all the buzz was about the Scottish wunderkind Smith, another pupil of Burton's at Berklee, and just at this time beginning to receive serious critical attention. The results fall short of the hype. Burton has never sounded comfortable with saxophone-players, and the lead voices clutter and compete furiously, without any logic or drama. Ozone keeps things more or less tidy, but it's a missable set.

 Departure Concord CCD 4749 Burton; Fred Hersch (p); John Scofield (g); John Patitucci (b); Peter Erskine (d). 96.
Despite a line-up to die for, this set never manages to ignite and remains stalled in its own good taste and elegance. Burton's playing has reached a level where he no longer thinks instrumentally but musically, using the vibes as a resource. Because Hersch is more deliberate and ironic, and Scofield more pressingly emphatic, the expected revelation never quite happens, and though 'Chick's Japanese Waltz' and 'Poinciana' are lovely, neither track is able to lift the set as a whole.

(*) Like Minds Concord CCD 4803 Burton; Chick Corea (p); Pat Metheny (g); Dave Holland (b); Roy Haynes (d). 11/98.
While their paths had crossed many times over the years, they'd never worked together in the same group. Burton is very much the lead voice, and although both Corea and Metheny are accorded plenty of solo space, they indulge it sparingly. The choice of tunes could hardly have been happier, with Metheny getting the lion's share of credits, outstandingly on 'Tears Of Rain'. Chick's 'Windows' is a well-established modern classic and receives a wonderful interpretation from the group. Gary's own solos on 'Country Roads' and 'Like Minds' are models of structure and form. Supergroup albums are hit-and-miss, but this one can be heartily recommended. The individual elements cohere splendidly round a rhythm section to die for.

(*) For Hamp, Red, Bags And Cal Concord CCD 4941 Burton; Mulgrew Miller, Makoto Ozone, Danilo Perez (p); Russell Malone (g); Christian McBride, John Patitucci (b); Lewis Nash (d); Luis Quintero (perc). 5–6/00.
This is Gary's most explicit tribute to his great ancestors on the vibraphone. Each is represented by two or three tunes, and while no special effort is made to reproduce their style, the spirit of these four great ancestors imbues the record. 'Flying Home' is maybe the best example, a breezy, swinging performance that recalls Hamp's classic years. 'Django' and 'Bags' Groove' are for Jackson, of course, and are wonderfully adept, but it is the sheer strangeness of Red Norvo's 'Dance Of The Octopus' at the end of the record that is likely to send even uncommitted listeners back to the start. Gary can rarely have been recorded so well, and the different groups are bedded in round him intimately but with enough space to keep the voices individual and strong.

 Generations Concord CCD 2217 Burton; Julian Lage (g); Makoto Ozone (p); James Genus (b); Clarence Penn (d). 9/03.
 Next Generation Concord CCD 2277 Burton; Julian Lage (g); Luque Curtis (b); James Williams (d). 11/04.
A new generation, indeed. Guitarist Julian Lage was still only in his second high-school year when the first of these was made; Burton spotted him at the age of 12, playing at the Grammy awards. Not only is his guitar-playing impressive, a hybrid of Jim Hall and Pat Metheny, but he's also a decent composer, with three credits on the set, all of them given a youthful spin: 'First Impression', 'Early' and 'The Title Will Follow'. Added to that, a Metheny tune and a lovely reworking of Oscar Peterson's 'Wheatland'. Burton doesn't stretch himself any more, but takes a few effective if unstartling solos.

Julian was still only 16 when Next Generation was recorded. What's impressive about him is the restraint with which he plays, rather than the formidable technique. He's again credited with two compositions here, the attractive 'Walkin' In Music' and the closing 'Clarity', a vivid duet with the boss. Burton again keeps himself pretty much in bounds, but his solos have a wisdom that is impossible not to admire and the flow of ideas is unstaunched.

Also, in brief:

 The New Quartet ECM 835002-2. 3/73.
Pieces from the New Quartet by Carla Bley, Gordon Beck and Mike Gibbs.

(*) :rarum: Selected Recordings ECM 8004. 73–86.
Selected by Burton, and a brilliant portrayal of a working musician's evolution over a dozen years. One of the best of the :rarums.

 Astor Piazzolla Reunion: A Tango Excursion / (*) Libertango Concord CCD 4793 / 4938. 97; 1/99.
There's a curious 'virtual' duet at the end of the first of these between Burton and the late Piazzolla. For the most part, though, the great bandeonist's presence is in the writing, and any hint of pastiche is avoided. The second reunites Burton with some of the key members of the Piazzolla group.

(*) Virtuosi Concord CCD 2105. 8–10/01.
A set of classical themes used as the basis for duo improvisations: Ravel, Delibes, Gershwin, Rachmaninov, one piece by partner Makoto Ozone (p).

Joe Bushkin (1916–2004)

PIANO

A New Yorker, he got a good classical grounding and later brought a bouncing, almost delicate sound to Tommy Dorsey's band. Also worked with Bunny Berigan, Eddie Condon, the Armstrong All-Stars and, in later years, a new generation of young swing players.

 Joe Bushkin 1940–1946 Classics 1434 Bushkin; Ernie Thomas Figueroa, Hot Lips Page (t); Bill Harris (tb); Zoot Sims (ts); Barney Kessel (g); Harry Babasin, Al Morgan, Sid Weiss (b); Specs Powell (d). 5/40–46.
The keyboard touch is reminiscent in places of Nat Cole, light, springy, effortlessly melodic. These are a mixture of piano solos and dates with Bushkin's Blue Boys. The first dates were made for Commodore in May 1940 and there were other sessions with the Blue Boys for the label the following year and in 1944 (including a spot for the teenage Zoot Sims), with four Savoys in the first post-war year. 'Serenade In Thirds' is a delightful conception, a Bushkin original and a lovely way to kick off this compilation of a little-known star. It's mostly easy on the ear, with no romantic agonies and no aggressively virtuosic playing, but there's enough here to guarantee him a place in the history of swing and jazz.

* Piano Moods / After Hours Collectables COL 7402 Bushkin; Buck Clayton (t); Eddie Safranski, Sid Weiss (b); Jo Jones (d). 50, 52.

A pleasing pairing of old dates for Capitol. It's not revolutionary stuff, but Bushkin had some effective harmonic ideas and listening to his work in some quantity one becomes aware of a distinct performing personality. Clayton makes an agreeable intervention and the rhythm guys seem to enjoy working within Bushkin's untroubled bounce.

 In Concert – Town Hall Collectables COL 6157 Bushkin; Chuck Wayne (g); Milt Hinton (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). 63.

A fairly lightweight set, reflecting Bushkin's years in commercial studios and on Broadway, but the playing is immaculate and the 'Porgy And Bess' and Cole Porter medleys are full of attractive ideas.

John Butcher (born 1954)

TENOR, SOPRANO AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

A London-based improviser whose interest in extending saxophone technique has led to experiments with electronics and site-specific performance.

* Thirteen Friendly Numbers Unsounds 07 Butcher (ss, ts, bs solo). 3–12/91.

This recital is quite unlike any other solo saxophone record. Nine of the 13 tracks are real-time solos on either tenor or soprano, while the other four create some unprecedented sounds and textures through overdubbing. 'Bells And Clappers', for instance, piles up four tenors into a brittle choir of humming overtones that has a chilling, sheet-metal sound, while the amplification introduced into the brief 'Mackle Music' is peculiarly disturbing. On the more conventional tracks, Butcher's mastery of the instrument creates a vocabulary which can accommodate pieces as disparate as 'Notelet', which is like a single flow of melody, as well as explorations of single aspects of performing technique. A masterful record, now reissued with excellent sound by the Dutch label.

(*) Concert Moves Random Acoustics RA 011 Butcher; Phil Durrant (vn); John Russell (g). 11/91–9/92.

If this were Braxton, it would be on three CDs and this group is easily good enough to merit that level of coverage. Lyrical when you expect frenzy, light and airy when darkness seems about to fall, the trio doesn't so much confound expectations so much as create freshness from moment to moment. Russell almost always plays quietly, and Durrant prefers a lexicon of small, scratchy gestures, so it's left to Butcher to use the largest range of techniques, songful high motifs, circular riffs, blatted notes, slap-tonguing, all sorts. It is as fine a set of free playing as one might find in recent times, with 'Playfair's Axiom' a model performance, though it might not convert anyone to this aesthetic. Docked a half-star all the same for a poor sound-mix.

(*) London And Cologne Rastascan BRD 026 Butcher (ss, ts solo). 10/94–4/96.

Butcher's soliloquizing has a palpable humanity; one can almost feel the grain of his playing as he essays it. He gets a vocalized tone out of the tenor which is nevertheless under stringent control; there's little abandon in the playing, and the rather explosive soprano piece 'Our Man In Acton' is a surprise after the rigours of the tenor solos. Though less absorbing than Thirteen Friendly Numbers, it does have in 'Shrinkdown' a quite amazing treatment for four sopranos which opens another new sound-world.

 Secret Measures Wobbly Rail WOB 006 Butcher; Phil Durrant (elec). 11/97.

(*) The Scenic Route Emanem 4029 Butcher; Phil Durrant (vn); John Russell (g). 3–5/98.

(*) Music On Seven Occasions Meniscus MNSCS 004 Butcher; Jeb Bishop (tb); Veryan Weston (p); Thomas Lehn (syn); John Corbett (g); Terri Kapsalis (vn); Fred Lonberg-Holm (clo); Alexander Frangenheim (b); Gino Robair, Michael Zerang (perc). 6/96–2/98.

(*) Light's View Nuscope 004 Butcher; Georg Graewe (p). 4/98.

Secret Measures consists entirely of Durrant's real-time manipulation of Butcher's playing and the results often sound like randomized electronic music. The Scenic Route is equally hard-core, a repeat for the trio which finds them in the same resilient form at two concerts a week apart in London and Paris. 'Heavy Merge' offers 20 minutes of severely attractive interplay and says just about all they have to, though there is another half-hour of material in addition.

Seven Occasions offers 14 duets and four solos from various (mostly brief) encounters in England and America, and stretches from the melodious three minutes with Bishop to the frosty shape-making with Lehn. Light's View is a surprise encounter with new-music polymath Graewe. With no residual jazz thinking evident from either man, the playing has a chilly rigour, though Butcher at least isn't averse to deploying the odd melodic motif.

(*) Intentions Nuscope CD 1011 Butcher; Phil Durrant (vn); Peggy Lee (clo). 6/00.

 The Contest Of Pleasures Potlatch P201 Butcher; Axel Dörner (t); Xavier Charles (cl). 8/00.

Butcher became increasingly interested in playing with rather than merely in spaces. Recorded in a French chapel, Pleasures is almost an ambient work, more concerned with texture than most. Better is the fine Intentions, quick, agile, intense explorations that teeter towards outliving useful life but are quickly called to a halt when they do.

(*) Vortices And Angels Emanem 4049 Butcher; Derek Bailey (g); Rhodri Davies (hp). 3 & 5/00.

Not a trio – it's Bailey and Butcher for the first two, Davies and Butcher for the other three. While we still miss the Parker/Bailey duets of old, this pairing is a match made up in spirited high jinks, as well as striking notes of proper intensity when necessary. With Davies, John's less involved in yin and yang and they look for atmospherics as well as dialogue. A very entertaining disc.

* Fixations (14) Emanem 4045 Butcher (ss, ts solo). 6/97–9/00.

'For improvisation to make sense, sounds must be put to work,' says John in his sleeve-note. In these gentle, fierce, unstintingly thoughtful explorations of the saxophone in its various spaces, he finds a multiplicity of worthwhile tasks for them.

* Optic Emanem 4089 Butcher; John Edwards (b). 1/01–7/02.

A classic. Though this instrumentation might seem puny next to some of the adventures with electronics and the like, Edwards's intense physicality gives the music huge weight, and Butcher responds with his most forceful and detailed playing. 'Cocktail Bar' is a single, 27-minute piece, recorded (headlong) in Brussels, while four pieces from the following year were set down (more elliptically) in Barcelona.

(*) Cavern With Nightlife Weight Of Wax WOW 01 Butcher; Toshimaru Nakamura (no-input mixing board). 11/02.
The first release on John's own label finds him in a Japanese museum set in a grand underground space. His solo tracks use the acoustics to create a music which seems to exist in and of itself as something shaped – via the echo, and other characteristics of the setting – as an independent creation by the environment, running in tandem with the performer's own work. A unique part of the Butcher discography, with an addendum of an encounter with Nakamura whose 'instrument' seems to process whatever noise finds its way in.

* Interworks Matchless MRCD66 Butcher; Eddie Prévost (tam-tam, perc). 7/05.
A meeting with one of the masters of British free. A Zen master, almost, since Prévost's recent work with tam-tam has taken on a stilled, meditative aspect which does not entirely lose the implicit jazz elements of his work at the drum kit. All the titles involve 'work' in some familiar form, and the strong impression here is of two serious but arcane craftsmen working absorbedly together. There is no need to mine the music for significance; it's the interaction of skills, avoidance of dead spots and air of untroubled but challenging communication that make it all sing.

* The Geometry Of Sentiment Emanem 4142 Butcher (ss, ts, feedback solo). 11/04, 5–11/06.
He is becoming as prolific as Evan Parker, and with each new release establishes still more of a distinctive improvisational voice. A couple of these tracks involve feedback processes. Others, and significantly the first two cuts from the Ova Stone Museum at Utsunonimaya in Japan, seem part of Butcher's ongoing effort to make his playing environment into an improvising partner. It's arresting stuff. There's a small tribute to the late Derek Bailey and a scattering of club and festival performances, but, as ever, put together with great care and logic. A hugely satisfying package.

Also, in brief:

 12 Milagritos Spool LINE 9. 6/98.
Closer to free-jazz frenzy with Matthew Sperry (b) and Gino Robair (d).

(*) Apples Of Gomorrah Grob 429. 2–8/99.
In company with that spellbinding maverick Phil Minton (v). Bizarre and delightful.

 Requests And Antisongs Erstwhile 007. 1–2/00.
Somewhat dominated by Durrant's manipulations, but it's all tactile, very approachable stuff.

 Equation Spool/Field 3. 5/02.
With Mike Hansen (record players) and Tomasz Krakowiak (perc), and rather long-winded.

 The Big Misunderstanding Between Hertz And Megahertz Potlatch P106. 9/02, 4 & 9/03.
Encounters with Christof Kurzmann's loops and pick-up. Less compelling than similar work with Durrant.

Billy Butterfield (1917–88)

TRUMPET, VOCAL

Worked in Bob Crosby's brass section, late '30s, and went on to lead bands, but spent a lot of time doing studio work.

 Pandora's Box 1946–47 Hep CD 49 Butterfield; Fern Caron, Archie Johnston, Jack Stametz, Bob Peck (t); Jack Green, Marshall Hawk, Earl Mahan, Sam Moore, Ken Schrudder, Ray Jenkins (tb); Bill Stegmeyer (cl, as); Lenny Hambro, Earl Pearson (as); Bill Cervantes, Bob Levine, Jimmy Hudgins (ts); Bob Horner, Norman Elvin (bas); Mickey Crane (p); Cliff Wiley, Dave Reiser (g); George Ryan (b); Bob Dickenson (d); Pat O'Connor (v). 8/46–5/47.

 Soft Strut Fresh Sound FRSCD 316 Butterfield; Hal McCusick (cl); Abe Richman (ts, bcl); Moe Wechsler (p); Milt Hinton (b); Don Lamond (d). 56.

(*) Take Me To The Land Of Jazz Delmark DE 243 Butterfield; Andy Bartha (c); Ed Hubble (tb, bs); Ray Brooks (tb); Larry Wilson (cl); John Dengler (bsx); Bob Warren, Billy 'Fats' Hagen (p); Red Rasele (g); Larry Schram (bj); Chuck Karle (b); Chuck Damanti, Carl Peticca (d). 11/69–70s.

Butterfield's big band didn't last long. It was one of many formed and as quickly dissolved as musicians came back to civilian life after the war. The Hep gathers in music from three sessions of transcription recordings, and shows a professional outfit that perhaps leaned more effectively towards sweet rather than hot playing. Features for the leader include 'I Only Have Eyes For You' and hint at the way his studio career would move later, as a soloist with Ray Conniff. Stegmeyer has a solid feature on 'Out Of Nowhere', but the other soloists don't add much value and the solitary interesting chart is 'Pandora, Close That Box', which has a lick of bebop about it. The pleasure of the disc is Billy's big horn sound, which comes through even on average transcription fidelity.

Butterfield only rarely got his name on the marquee during the LP era. The Fresh Sound date features his Modern Dixieland Stompers in a good-natured 1956 date, with two interesting Manny Albam covers and some nicely executed standards, all featuring Billy's rounded sound. The Delmark brings together a live album cut with Andy Bartha's band in the early '70s and some older tracks with a similar line-up. The best solos come not from Billy but from Hubble, who does a surprise double on baritone saxophone.

Jaki Byard (1922–99)

PIANO, TENOR SAXOPHONE, VIBRAPHONE, DRUMS

Born in Worcester, Massachusetts, he started out as a brass-player but preferred to double on tenor saxophone. He worked with Earl Bostic, with Maynard Ferguson and, later, with Charles Mingus. With a powerful left hand and a free approach to harmony, Jaki was able to work in almost any context, from gospelly blues to the avant-garde. His murder in 1999 remains unsolved.

* Out Front! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1842 Byard; Richard Williams (t); Booker Ervin (ts); Ron Carter, Bob Cranshaw, Walter Perkins (b); Roy Haynes (d). 61.

(*) Blues For Smoke Candid CCD 79018 Byard (p solo). 12/60.

(*) Here's Jaki Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1874 Byard; Ron Carter (b); Roy Haynes (d). 61.

(*) Hi-Fly Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1879 Byard; Ron Carter (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 63.

Byard's enormous power and versatility are grounded on a thorough knowledge of brass, reeds, drums and guitar, as well as piano, and there are definite horn influences in his soloing. Later, Byard did play more pianistically, though the distinctive left- and right-hand articulation of themes – based on a highly personal synthesis of ragtime and stride, bop and free jazz – was still strongly evident in later years.

The early Prestige and New Jazz sets reissued on OJC are uniformly excellent. Out Front! remains our favourite, largely because it shows off Byard's infallible instinct for horn voicings. Tracks like 'European Episode' and a melting 'Lush Life' are well worth studying in some detail. The idiom is much the same, though obviously simplified, on the trio albums, two thoroughly original selections which challenge many of the existing clichés imposed by precedent on this type of group. Byard allows melody-lines to swing round the band, exploiting Carter's tremendous fingering on 'Giant Steps' (Here's Jaki) and 'Round Midnight' from Hi-Fly, which also includes the fascinating 'Excerpts' from Yamecraw. LaRoca is a much undervalued drummer, only recently returned to the recording studio; like Haynes, he has a delicate, pattering touch that always makes the beat sound mobile.

Blues For Smoke is a minor classic, with the wonderful 'Aluminum Baby', originally written for trumpeter/bandleader Herb Pomeroy, and 'Diane's Melody'.

 On The Spot! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1031 2 Byard; Jimmy Owens (t, flhn, perc); Paul Chambers, George Tucker (b); Alan Dawson, Billy Higgins (d). 4/65, 2/67.

The most distinctive track on this rather brief session is the live version of 'Spanish Tinge', which adds Morton to Tatum and Powell in Jaki's personal pantheon. The chemistry with the undervalued Owens is riveting on most of the tracks, and the other members of the studio rhythm section, Chambers and Higgins, are in crackling form. Jaki's two forays on alto saxophone won't have scared any ghosts, but they're effective enough.

(*) The Jaki Byard Experience Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1913-2 Byard; Roland Rahsaan Kirk (sax, cl); Richard Davis (b); Alan Dawson (d). 9/68.

 Solo/Strings Prestige 24246 Byard; George Benson (g); Ray Nance (vn); Ron Carter (clo); Richard Davis (b); Alan Dawson (d, vib). 68, 69.

Jaki knew Roland Kirk from the Mingus band and had always found much in common with him, musically and temperamentally. However quirky the two men were, they shared a deep and insightful awareness of the music's history, and Jaki's playing here is a primer of jazz piano styles from the dawn of jazz to the bop revolution. Kirk adds distinctive clarinet, on which he sounds a generation older than his chronological or stylistic age, and Davis and Dawson add their usual intelligent contributions. Too quirky and casual to be entirely satisfactory.

Solo/Strings brings together a couple of albums from the end of the '60s; one track from the two original LPs has been dumped for reasons of length. The 'with strings' title of the earlier set was slightly – perhaps deliberately – misleading, because Jaki hadn't convened a full orchestra, but a hand-picked quartet of string-players. The result is compellingly original.

Jaki's solo performances are an object lesson in jazz piano history as well, everything from the Morton references of 'The Spanish Tinge' to the borders of atonal freedom. For sheer joie de vivre, 'The Hollis Stomp' would be hard to beat, but 'New Orleans Stomp' is the test-piece.

(*) Sunshine Of My Soul: Live At The Keystone Korner High Note 7169 Byard (p solo). 6/78.

Not to be confused with the earlier Prestige date, this San Francisco solo gig benefits from a good piano and a relaxed ambience; Jaki sounds in great form, opening (as he used to for Charles Mingus) with a salute to the greats of the piano literature, 'Tribute To The Ticklers', followed by a medley of Mingus tunes. Much of the rest of the programme is original material with excerpts from 'Songs Of Proverbs', a beautifully inflected 'Sunshine' and 'European Episodes'. The big number, though, is a long 'Besame Mucho', which brims with fiery intelligence.

 Phantasies / (*) Phantasies II Soul Note 121075 / 121175 Byard; The Apollo Stompers; Denyce Byard, Diane Byard (perc, v). 9/84; 8/88.

Byard is inclined to swamp sidemen with weather-changes of idiom or mood. Working with Maynard Ferguson and then with Mingus gave Byard some insight into how to steer at high speed. Without any doubt, his excellence as a section player fed into his solo and small-group playing as well. Phantasies is an uncomfortable big-band excursion with vocals from Denyce and Diane; though well produced and more than adequately executed, the album drifts towards pastiche and pointless eclecticism. That said, it contains some great ensemble work on the Ellington material, and some of the modernist things – 'Lonely Woman', 'Impressions' – are excitingly done. Phantasies II is an altogether better-structured exercise in nostalgia. Byard's comping and bandleading skills are seen nowhere better than on 'Concerto Grosso', a playful look at a Baroque form within the context of a jazz band. Vincent Lewis does a convincing job as an Apollo crooner, with a rich baritone that owes something to Eckstine. Musically, though, the most interesting thing is 'II IV I', a title which refers to the cadence minor/dominant/major which dominates the piece. It takes Byard back to the great days of the Harlem stride pianists.

 The Changes Of Life Meldac 20103 Byard; Ralph Hamperian (b); Richard Allen (d). 1/96.

Recorded not long before his death and released in Japan, this finds Byard in mostly thoughtful mood, but capable of bringing some relaxed stride to his Ellington reading. A stilled 'Giant Steps' is the highlight, but there's only good stuff here.

Also, in brief:

 Live! At Lennie's On The Turnpike /  The Last From Lennie's Prestige PRCD 24121 / 11029. 4/65.

Haunted by memories of Eric Dolphy, who'd died the year before, these live sets with Joe Farrell are moving and thoughtful.

 Freedom Together! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1898-2. 1/66.

An eclectic quartet date with Richard Davis, Alan Dawson and Junior Parker vocals. Effortless virtuosity from Byard on all his instruments.

 Sunshine Of My Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1946. 10/67.

A strong-voiced trio with David Izenzon (b) and Elvin Jones (d). Jaki shines on 'St Louis Blues'.

(*) To Them, To Us Soul Note 121025. 4/81.

Fine solo set, gracefully produced by Giovanni Bonandrini.

 Foolin' Myself Soul Note 121125. 8/88.

Hamperian and Allen provide sterling support on a beautifully produced trio set.

Don Byas (1912–72)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born Carlos Wesley Don Byas in Muskogee, Oklahoma, he served his apprenticeship in a variety of big bands. A bridge between the swing and bebop generations, he often anticipates Charlie Parker's solo development. In later life he was a fine ballad player.

 Midnight At Minton's High Note HCD 7044 Byas; Joe Guy (t); Thelonious Monk (p); Kenny Clarke (d); Helen Humes (v); other personnel unknown. 41.

 Don Byas, 1944–1945 Classics 882 Byas; Charlie Shavers, Joe Thomas (t); Rudy Williams (as); Johnny Guarnieri, Kenny Watts (p); Clyde Hart (p, cel); John Levy, Slam Stewart, Billy Taylor (b); Cozy Cole, Slick Jones, Jack 'The Bear' Parker (d); Big Bill Broonzy (v). 7/44–3/45.

 Don Byas 1945 Classics 910 Byas; Buck Clayton, Dizzy Gillespie (t); Gene Sedric (cl); Jimmy Powell (as); Hal Singer (ts); Johnny Guarnieri, Sammy Price (p); Leonard Ware (g); Al Hall, Eddie Safranski, Oscar Smith (b); Denzil Best, Big Sid Catlett, J. C. Heard, Harold 'Doc' West (d); Rubel Blakey, Albinia Jones (v); other personnel unknown. 4–9/45.

 Don Byas 1945: Volume 2 Classics 959 Byas; Emmett Berry, Benny Harris, Dick Vance (t); Erroll Garner, Johnny Guarnieri, Cyril Haynes, Jimmy Jones, Dave Rivera (p); Al Casey, Milt Hinton, John Levy, Eddie Safranski, Slam Stewart (b); J. C. Heard, Fred Radcliffe, Harold 'Doc' West (d). 8/44–11/45.

Don Byas dominates the strip of turf between Coleman Hawkins and Charlie Parker, combining the old man's vibrato and grouchy tone with Bird's limber solo style and fresh, open diction. Hard these days to recognize just how highly regarded Byas once was, until one actually hears him.

The earliest of these recordings was made by a young student at Columbia University, Jerry Newman, who trawled the clubs and taped hours of music for his own satisfaction. These cuts were originally released on Onyx Records in the early '70s, but no one seems able to cast light on who was playing. Monk is already pretty unmistakable on four of the tracks, including a magnificent 'Stardust' and 'Exactly Like You'. Inevitably, the sound is less than professional, but Byas's tenor cuts through the fog and Malcolm Addey's remastering sharpens the focus considerably.

Byas left the Basie band in 1943 and became one of the unsung heroes of early bebop, matched only by Lucky Thompson. Byas was always hugely flattered by the microphones of the time. The early material for Savoy, documented on the earlier Classics compilation, captures a polished and vibrant stylist with a thoroughly coherent solo approach. Shavers is abrupt and pugnacious. The July tracks are better than the later session, largely because they are simpler and concentrate on straight major-key exchanges between the two horns.

In January 1945 Byas cut four sides for Jamboree, disappointing because they seem to slip back half a generation to the old jump and swing styles. 'Jamboree Jump' is also known as 'Byas-A-Drink', a neat feature for saxophone and Joe Thomas's Eldridge-like trumpet. Later material for Hub is dominated by Broonzy vocals and officially credited to Little Sam And Orchestra. Later in 1945 Byas recorded for National (backing singer Albinia Jones), Jamboree again (with Buck Clayton), Super Disc with the marvellous group that numbered Garner, Stewart and West, and for American and Hub, the last an oddly plaintive session with singer Rubel Blakey and an instrumental version of 'Poor Butterfly' with Powell and Singer. Pianist Guarnieri is a much-underrated performer and an ideal accompanist for Byas on three of these dates, matching the saxophonist's smooth transitions between keys with an effortless charm. The September 1945 encounter with Stewart and Heard, which included lovely versions of 'Laura' and 'Stardust', is vintage Byas. The second Classics volume for 1945 also includes some material recorded under the leadership of Emmett Berry and Cyril Haynes, but there is some wonderful material from Don's quartet and quintet, including the variation on 'How High The Moon' that would shortly be transformed by Benny Harris into 'Ornithology'. These are the birth pangs of bebop.

 Don Byas, 1946 Classics 1009 Byas; Peanuts Holland (t, v); Tyree Glenn (tb); Hubert Rostaing (cl); Beryl Booker, Humphrey Brannon, Sanford Gold, Billy Taylor (p); Leonard Gaskin, John Simmons, Frank Skeete, Ted Sturgis (b); Buford Oliver, Fred Radcliffe, Max Roach (d). 5–12/46.

 Don Byas, 1947 Classics 1073 Byas; Peanuts Holland (t); Tyree Glenn (tb); Hubert Rostaing (as); Jacques Diéval , Gene Schroeder, Billy Taylor (p); Tony Gottuso, Jean-Jacques Tilché (g); Jean Bouchety, Slim Dunham, Lucien Simoens (b); Johnny Blowers, Armand Molinetti, Buford Oliver (d). 45–6/47.

(*) Laura Dreyfus FDM 36714-2 Byas; mostly as discs above. 6/45–1/49.

 Don Byas, 1947–1951 /  Don Byas, 1951–1952 Classics 1107 / 1315 Largely as for discs above. 47–51; 51–52.

 En Ce Temps-Là Universal/Gitanes 16505 Largely as for discs above and 1952, below. 6/47–4/52.

In 1946, Byas joined the Don Redman Orchestra for a European tour and, though he returned during the course of the year and recorded sessions for Gotham and Savoy, he was soon to move to Europe permanently. Some of the 1946 material is less than pristine, but Don's solos are always immaculately judged. The May 1946 session is merely a set of accompaniments for the saxophonist, mostly in ballad form. 'London Donnie' is a curious misreading of 'The Londonderry Air' and Don's solo is flat and unimaginative; but the rest of the set, notably 'Cherokee', points to the bebop revolution that was fomenting elsewhere. The August date has a more balanced and responsive band. The following month saw him recording for Gotham with Beryl Booker on piano, and then at the end of the year Don was in Paris recording under his own, Peanuts Holland's and Tyree Glenn's leadership.

The 1947 recordings were all made in Paris, and mostly for Blue Star. The key track, almost worth the price of the disc on its own, is a magnificent 'Laura', which marks an exception to the concentration on bebop. The groups are good but lack the bounce of the Redman alumni who came to France with him. The latest Classics volume is rounded out with a version of 'Annie Laurie', made in New York in 1945 and previously overlooked.

The Dreyfus compilation pulls together Byas appearances from various situations, including some of his Paris dates. If you want only a single example of Byas from this period, this is attractive, and avoids some of the longueurs of the Classics sequence. The Gitanes compilation is nicely packaged and offers superior sound.

 Don Byas, 1952 Classics 1372 Byas; Christian Chevalier, Art Simmons (p); Marcel Bianchi (g); Georges Daly (vib); Joe Benjamin, Pierre Michelot (b); Benny Bennett, Bill Clark, Richie Frost (d). 4–7/52.

 Don Byas, 1952–1953 Classics 1414 As above, except add Martial Solal (p); Pierre Lemarchand (d); Tony Proteau Et Son Orchestre. 7/52–12/53.

An exceptionally busy couple of years for small-group recording with no fewer than 23 sides cut between mid-April and mid-July, with yet more in the next volume. The first date was a fairly straightforward standards gig for Blue Star with a team of American expats. Later in the spring, though, Byas teamed up with guitarist Marcel Bianchi and recorded a set of French chansons ('I Hear A Rhapsody' was the exception) for Vogue. However unusual the material, Don's playing was absolutely first rate. The final date covered here had him teamed with vibist 'Geo' Daly, who's flashy and superficial, but Don seems to like the room and the challenge. This stuff falls outwith Definitive's capacious programme (below), so collectors may well want these.

 Anthropology DA Black Lion 160 Byas; Bent Axen (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); William Schiøpffe (d). 1/63.

A strong bop club date with a very decent rhythm section. 'Moonlight In Vermont' is the only non-warhorse in a fairly predictable set-list, but you'd have to pick the opening 'Anthropology' (warts and all) as the outstanding number.

 Autumn Leaves Ronnie Scott's Jazz House JHAS 613 Byas; Stan Tracey (p); Rick Laird (b); Tony Crombie (d). 9/65.

Recorded at Ronnie Scott's club with the house rhythm section and running down a weel-kent programme of standards and jazz tunes. Byas's deceptively but harmonically exact tone is spot-on for 'Autumn Leaves' itself, a taut and wise reading of one of his favourite standbys. 'I Remember Clifford' and 'All The Things You Are' are sharper and more boppish, full of oblique references to other tunes and unpredictable harmonic shifts, many of them driven by Tracey's percussive attack and lateral imagination. Recording quality isn't of the very best, straight to a machine in the club, but it communicates a lot of presence and the quiet intensity of Byas's well-worked routine.

 Live In Switzerland Storyville STCD 346 Byas; Sir Charles Thompson (p); Isla Eckinger (b); Peter Schmidlin (d). 67.

One wonders how many more Byas tapes like this are sitting gathering dust. He sounds older and a little flatter in intonation, but something of the same charisma still shows through here and there, though he doesn't stretch himself for a moment on this nicely recorded though slightly cavernous recording.

Also, in brief:

* Complete American Small Group Recordings Definitive DRCD 11213 4CD. 44–9/46.

A whopping 95 tracks, packaged without fuss, and so a very good alternative to anything above.

(*) Complete 1946–1951 European Small Group Master Takes Definitive DRCD 11214 3CD. 46–51.

'Only' 56 tracks on this one. Put the two Definitives together, add the 1952–3 Classics sets and you have pretty much all the Byas you need.

Taylor Ho Bynum (born 1975)

TRUMPET, CORNET

He studied with Anthony Braxton at Wesleyan and subsequently joined the saxophonist's group. Has also worked with Cecil Taylor.

 Cenote Cadence CJR 1141 Bynum; Eric Rosenthal (perc). 11/00–2/01.

 Other Stories (Three Suites) 482 Music 1041 Bynum; Jay Hoggard (vib); Jason Hao Kwang, Jean Cook (vn); Tomas Ulrich, Okkyung Lee (clo); Pete Fitzpatrick (g); Joe Daley (tba); Luther Gray (d). 4/03–2/05.

Bynum has a vivid sound on both horns. The trumpet/percussion dates with Rosenthal (there is a rare earlier disc by the duo, called And Only Life My Lush Lament) are reminiscent of Lester Bowie's work, except Bynum is more precise, less cartoon-like and probably more astute in technique. The duo disc features four improvisations, but is largely given over to standards and jazz tunes, gently deconstructed in the main. Sometimes all Bynum does is carry the melody over Rosenthal's glistening cymbals and bells.

The later record, featuring SpiderMonkeyStrings, is more ambitious. 'The First Three Lives Of Stuart Hornsley' is for sextet, with Hoggard and Daley in for 'Super Eno' and 'SpiderMonkey Stories'. The tubist is positively voluptuous in a rich acoustic. 'Hornsley' is a brief interlude that sounds like chamber music. The unusual timbres work well, but some of the juxtapositions seem wilful and the logic of the writing can be hard to follow. Bynum doesn't give himself much to do until the closing piece, where his cornet is fully featured.

(*) True Events 482 Music 1052 Bynum; Tomas Fujiwara (perc). 3/06.

This is the product of a long-standing relationship and the result of long hours woodshedding ideas. Some of Braxton's musical philosophies are brought to bear and very effectively realized. It's an unforgiving format, this, and testimony to both players that it sustains interest for so long. Most tracks are relatively (or very) short, but 'The Emperor Of Ice Cream' (a title taken from Wallace Stevens) is almost a quarter of an hour of vivid interaction.

* The Middle Picture Firehouse 12 40100 Bynum; Matt Bauder (cl, bcl); Mary Halvorson, Evan O'Reilly (g); Jessica Pavone (vla, b); Tomas Fujiwara (d). 10/05, 12/06.

Bynum shows every sign of creative application and patience. Nothing seems hurried or overly spontaneous. Here, again, he includes a couple of repertory pieces, performed live. 'In A Silent Way' is close enough to the original to seem all the more strikingly original, with the twinned guitars playing a dominant role. Duke's 'Bluebird Of Delhi' is an unusual and arresting choice, and hugely entertaining. Of the original pieces, 'mm(pf)' is quietly compelling, while '3V2' has a dance feel. Bynum may well have been listening to Miles Davis with some attention, for the call-and-response approach is insistently Milesian, even if the brass tones are not. Again, he doesn't give himself too much spotlight, which is perhaps a pity. A measured, highly intelligent project that points the way forward for jazz as the decade wanes.

Charlie Byrd (1925–2000)

GUITAR

Uneventful career until he settled in Washington in the '50s, where he cemented a reputation that eventually led to the hugely successful bossa nova albums with Stan Getz. A gently effective if unremarkable stylist.

 Jazz Recital Savoy 12095 Byrd; Tom Newsom (ts, f); Al Lucas (b); Bobby Donaldson (d). 2/57.

Interesting to hear Byrd before the bossa nova bug bit. One suspects that Jelly Roll Morton meant something a little stronger when he talked about the 'Spanish tinge' in jazz. Certainly, 'Spanish Guitar Blues' here is almost too lightweight and studied to count as jazz at all, though Charlie does turn in lovely versions of 'My Funny Valentine' and 'Spring Is Here'. The group doesn't really balance well with his acoustic sound and one feels the session might have gone better as a series of guitar/bass duets.

 Byrd's Word /  Byrd On The Wind Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1054 / 1086 Byrd; Bobby Felden (vtb); Buck Hill (ts); Rev. Richard White (ob on Byrd on the Wind only); Kenneth Pasmanick (bsn); Joe Carson (p); Keter Betts (b); Bertell Knox, Eddie Phyfe (d); Ginny Byrd (v). 58; 59.

Byrd still sounds like a man looking for his niche. Word features some of his fieriest playing on record. The best thing on an album somewhat overstocked with guest spots is a duet, 'Conversation Piece', with the redoubtable Betts, who was to be a loyal exponent of Charlie's music in these years. Also available on OJC is On The Wind, which teamed him up with woodwind players from the Atlanta Symphony. The results are attractive enough, but one consistently hopes for more jazz guitar and less orchestral tableau.

 Mr Guitar Original Jazz Classics OJC 998 Byrd; Keter Betts (b); Bertell Knox (d). 59.
 The Guitar Artistry Of /  At The Village Vanguard Original Jazz Classics OJC 945 / 669 Byrd; Keter Betts (b); Buddy Deppenschmidt (d). 60; 1/61.
 Latin Byrd Milestone 47005 Byrd; Hal Posey (t); Tommy Gwaltney (vib); Gene Byrd (b, g); Keter Betts (b); Bill Reichenbach (d, perc); additional woodwind and strings. 61–63.
 Bossa Nova Pelos Passaros Original Jazz Classics OJC 107 Byrd; Keter Betts (b); Bill Reichenbach (d). 4/62.
(*) Byrd At The Gate Original Jazz Classics OJC 262 As above, except add Clark Terry (t); Seldon Powell (ts). 5/63.

The release in 1962 of the evergreen Jazz Samba with Stan Getz, and the legal kerfuffle that followed, put Charlie Byrd firmly on the map. Like all hugely successful products, there was an element of ersatz about it, and Byrd's Latin stylings have never sounded entirely authentic. Here, though, is a historically valuable selection of albums, the Village Vanguard set in particular full of vim. Byrd sounds full-toned and quick-fingered, and the themes still have a bloom they were to lose in the years ahead. There's very little to choose between what is now a pretty comprehensive run of Byrd's early Riverside albums. Betts and the various drummers keep tabs on the leader, who's always musical but only rarely doing something to really make one listen hard. The horns don't add much to the Gate set.

Latin Byrd shares some material and a cover picture with Bossa Nova Pelos Passaros, the one on which Charlie poses nervously in front of a perch of exotic avifauna. The music inside, which brings together Latin Impressions and Charlie Byrd's Bossa Nova, could hardly be more relaxed and laid back. Charlie fits in some solos, some quartet tracks and some more elaborate arrangements that include woodwind and string accompaniment. There's quite a bit of folk-derived material, which means that the melodic profile is pretty straightforward.

 Solo Flight Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1093 Byrd (g solo). 65.

Keter Betts, Bill Reichenbach and Bertell Knox aside, Byrd hasn't always been best served by his supporting groups. This unaccompanied record somewhat confirms that. Byrd's softly struck chords, occasional dynamic surprises and sure-fingered picking mean that there is plenty of interest throughout. 'Mood Indigo' and an unexpected 'House Of The Rising Sun' are outstanding.

 Byrd By The Sea Fantasy 24252 Byrd; Joe Byrd (b); Bertell Knox (d). 3/74.

The original release was very run of the mill, but the 2000 reissue added almost as much material again, including a wholly unexpected reading of 'It Don't Mean A Thing ...' which is enough to convince anyone who's previously dismissed Charlie on the premiss of that very song. Here, he swings confidently, backed by the redoubtable Knox and by Joe seemingly on an electric instrument. In addition to the rather dull cod-classical 'Fantasy In B Minor', there is a piece of genuine Vivaldi, played with precision and feeling, and a previously overlooked Jobim reading, 'Meditation'. With this to hand, it's easier to forgive the lame versions of contemporary pop tunes.

 Three Guitars Concord 6004 Byrd; Barney Kessel, Herb Ellis (g); Joe Byrd (b); Johnny Rae (d). 7/74.

There's always an audience for guitar specials like this. Musically, it's polished and shiny and ever so polite. Kessel and Ellis play a duo, Byrd plays with his own trio, rents it out to the other pair for 'Slow Burn', and then they all get together for 'Undecided', 'Topsy' and 'Benny's Bugle'. Honours just about even.

 The Bossa Nova Years Concord CCD 4468 Byrd; Ken Peplowski (ts, cl); Dennis Irwin (b); Chuck Redd (d); Michael Spiro (perc). 4/91.

One of the astonishing things about Byrd's career is his relentless conservatism in the choice of material. One would hardly expect an artist of his inclinations or stature to desert an established audience by adopting Jimi Hendrix songs, but one might reasonably expect him to challenge that audience a little more often than he does. The Bossa Nova Years contains precisely the roster of soft-centred Jobim/Gilberto themes you probably began whistling as you read the title. What makes it more galling is that they're all played superbly, in the sense that there isn't a hair out of place on any of them. Peplowski can usually be relied on for a bit more than he offers here. As a performance, this is brushed and pomaded to the point of anonymity.

 Homage To Jobim Concord CCD 2280 Byrd; Ken Peplowski (cl); Hendrik Meurkens (vib); Allen Farnham (p); Bill Douglass (b); Chuck Redd (d); Michael Spiro (perc). 8/94.

A great line-up for a gala festival appearance in Japan. It's a Jobim set, for sure, but one senses a lot of lines in Byrd's own creative life coming together here. He's in great form, and Peplowski and Farnham are able supporters. A long 'Chega De Saudade' is the highlight of a thoroughly attractive disc.

 Moments Like This Concord CCD 4627 Byrd; Ken Peplowski (cl); Bill Douglass (b); Chuck Redd (d, vib). 94.

Immediately and wholly better. The blend of guitar, bass, clarinet and (mostly) vibraphone is very appealing, and Byrd exploits the possibilities to the maximum. His chording on 'Rose Of The Rio Grande' is highly distinctive, often moving outside the natural sequence, and Douglass is a willing assistant in keeping many of the pieces from becoming predictable. A fine record by a musician whose career has taken some odd turns over the years.

(*) Du Hot Club De Concord Concord CCD 4674 Byrd; Johnny Frigo (vn); Hendrik Meurkens (hca); Frank Vignola (g); Michael Moore (b). 6/95.

Better than it might have been, and largely because the Hot Club parallel isn't pushed too far or too long. The sound is very much more Latin, less straightforwardly swinging and melodically more varied. Byrd himself seems to enjoy this line-up and plays with great ease on 'Besame Mucho', 'Old New Orleans Blues' and 'Cottontail', to pick just three outstanding tracks. Delightful in every way.

 Au Courant Concord 4479 Byrd; Joe Byrd (b); Chuck Redd (vib). 97.

A most unusual instrumentation, but a very effective set, dominated by Hart/Rodgers themes. It isn't in the first rank of Byrd discs, but it is more than appealing and not just to guitar aficionados. Chuck Redd's switch to vibes widens the idiom considerably. There are a few Latin inflections here and there but this doesn't feel like an out-and-out samba/bossa record, and Charlie's ability to swing standard material has rarely been heard more clearly.

 My Inspiration: Music Of Brazil Concord CCD 4850-2 Byrd; Scott Hamilton (ts); Romero Lubambo (g); Chuck Redd (vib); Nilson Matta (b) Duduka Fonseca (d); Maúcha Adnét (v). 1/99.
As so often in the past, Charlie manages to combine a boppish vigour of line with the easy swing of Brazilian jazz. And, as ever, he keeps the material fresh and unhackneyed, juxtaposing Brazilian folk melodies with show tunes (specifically 'My Inspiration') and even a Chopin arrangement. Scott Hamilton guests on half the numbers, and with Chuck Redd favouring vibes rather than kit these days the range of harmonic options is pretty considerable. Byrd's other partners on the set are the Trio Da Paz, who work very confidently in the idiom. Vocalist Maúcha Adnét adds some attractive colours.

 For Louis Concord CCD 4879-2 Byrd; Joe Wilder (t); Steve Wilson (ss, as); Robert Redd (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Chuck Redd (d). 9/99.
Recorded at the end of Byrd's life, this doesn't, though, have any kind of valedictory feel about it. The tracks (except Bechet's 'Petite Fleur') are all Armstrong associations. Wilder and Wilson drop in and out of the picture, but it remains Byrd's album, and he sounds in pretty good fettle on the improbable likes of 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue' and 'Indian Summer', even if the Pops and bossa nova feel sometimes go awkwardly together.

Also, in brief:

(*) Brazilian Byrd Columbia 52923. 64.
There were better Jobim sets to come.

(*) Byrd Song Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1092. 65.
Billed as 'with voices', but apart from a few tacked-on yodels from an unidentified and wordless chorus, there is nothing much to appeal to a singing fan.

 Christmas Carols For Solo Guitar /  The Charlie Byrd Christmas Album Koch 9923 & Concord CCD 42004. 67; 6/82.
These are fine for those who like this sort of thing, as Jean Brodie might say. Nice stuff on the earlier one – originally Columbia – includes 'O Holy Night' and 'What Child Is This? (Greensleeves)'.

(*) Blue Byrd /  Isn't It Romantic Concord CCD 4082 & 4252. 8/78; 8/79.
Byrd had a dull time for much of the '70s. These discs find him less becalmed than usual and, on Blue Byrd, just occasionally inspired.

(*) Concord Jazz Heritage Series /  Plays Jobim Concord Jazz CCD 4816 & 2135. 80–97; 79–99.
Two good, if predictable, compilations. The Heritage set was issued while Charlie was still alive, so missing out the last few records.

 Charlie Byrd / The Washington Guitar Quintet Concord CCD 42014. 4/92.
A numbingly obvious programme. With a little more imagination this could have been a masterpiece.

Donald Byrd (born 1932)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Born in Detroit, Donaldson Toussaint L'Ouverture Byrd II joined the Jazz Messengers and by the end of the '50s had already recorded prolifically, as the most heavily documented of the hard-bop trumpeters. A crossover period yielded the hit album Blackbyrd. Later studied law but made a few further forays in the '80s and '90s.

 First Flight Delmark DE 407 Byrd; Yusef Lateef (ts); Barry Harris (p); Bernard McKinney (euph); Alvin Jackson (b); Frank Grans (d). 8/55.
The debut release was recorded in concert in Detroit. It offered every earnest of promise but it's Lateef's more commanding solos that take the attention. Harris, perhaps the quintessential Detroit pianist, is also imposing, although he has to contend with a poor piano and the location sound is muddy.

 The Transition Sessions Blue Note 40528 Byrd; Joe Gordon (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Duke Jordan, Ray Santisi, Horace Silver (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Doug Watkins (b); Art Blakey, Art Taylor, Jimmy Zitano (d). 12/55, 5 & 12/56.
This is probably the only significant Byrd release of recent times, and it takes him right back to the start of the story and a series of dates made with Watkins as co-leader for Transition. He'd already recorded for Savoy, but these are crisp and effective hard-bop sessions with some seasoned players on board. All the same, one doesn't get much sense of Byrd as a charismatic soloist and, ironically, the most impressive session of the three documented here is the third – the first two were called Byrd's Eye View and Byrd Blows On Beacon Hill, which was recorded at the engineer's Detroit home with local musicians – which was released under the bassist's name as Watkins At Large. Blue Note later optioned some of this material, but it hasn't been available for some time.

(*) Jazz Lab / Modern Jazz Perspective Collectables Col 5674 Byrd; Jimmy Cleveland, Benny Powell (tb); Julius Watkins (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba); Gigi Gryce (as); Sahib Shihab (bs); Tommy Flanagan, Wade Legge, Wynton Kelly (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Art Taylor (d); Jackie Paris (v). 1–8/57.
The easy-going feel of these dates, co-credited to Gryce, did the trumpeter's work a power of good in finding him a persuasive context. Gryce's charts create thoughtful but not overly demanding settings, and with the tempos mostly swinging rather than burning (the other horns are used for background only) Byrd's lyricism is utilized as much as his power steering. With Gryce also playing deftly and some wordless vocals from Paris on a couple of tracks, these unassuming but well-focused tracks are definitive of the new hard-bop grammar. Awesomely busy at this period – he appeared on 36 separate dates in 1957 – much of his best work has to be found on other leaders' records, and even there he is capable rather than striking.

(*) Fuego Blue Note 46534 Byrd; Jackie McLean (as); Duke Pearson (p); Sam Jones (b); Lex Humphries (d). 10/59.
 At The Half Note Café, Volumes 1 & 2 Blue Note 95959 Byrd; Pepper Adams (bs); Duke Pearson (p); Laymon Jackson (b); Lex Humphries (d). 11/60.
 Out Of This World: The Complete Warwick Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 338 As above, except omit Humphries; add Jimmy Cobb (d). 61.
 Motor City Scene JVC Victor 61474 Byrd; Pepper Adams (bs); Tommy Flanagan (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Paul Chambers (b); Louis Hayes (d). 60.

 Free Form Blue Note 84118 Byrd; Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/61.

By the time he signed to Blue Note, Byrd had already recorded for Transition and Savoy, more than any of the other up-and-coming horn-players of his day. It was his easy-going proficiency that made him sought-after: like Freddie Hubbard a decade later, he could sound good under any contemporary leader without entirely dominating the situation. His solos were valuable but not disconcertingly personal, dependably elegant but not strikingly memorable. His records as leader emerged in much the same way: refined and crisp hard bop which seemed to look neither forward nor backwards. Given his neutral quality, it's often the other players who'll clinch the choice of these. Fuego has some nice McLean, but the tunes are dull. The Half Note date is impeccably played and (as the new RVG Edition attests) recorded, but they show him off at best and worst, peeling off chorus after chorus on 'My Girl Shirl', right at the top of volume 1, and then repeating the formula throughout. One is impressed but dissatisfied. The Fresh Sound restores studio work with essentially the same band – though Cobb is an improvement on the inconsistent Humphries – and some nice ensemble playing, though again Byrd is upstaged by his front-line colleague. Motor City Scene is one of a group of records from around this time featuring all or largely Detroit players, testimony perhaps to strong local market loyalty. It's a fine group and the date, originally for Bethlehem, is anchored by a superb rhythm section, with Hayes appearing as 'Hey' Lewis, which can't have fooled anyone. Free Form puts Byrd in more difficult company than some, and there's an unflattering contrast between his prim solo on the gospelly 'Pentecostal Feeling' and Shorter's bluff intensity. But he plays prettily on Hancock's 'Night Flower' and the more severe leanings of the title-track suit his punctilious manner well.

 A New Perspective Blue Note 99006 Byrd; Hank Mobley (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Donald Best (vib); Kenny Burrell (g); Butch Warren (b); Lex Humphries (d); choir. 12/63.

Byrd started branching out. A New Perspective contains the seeds of his '70s success. His own playing is set against large-scale scoring and the use of a choir, and while there was talk at the time of gospel-inspired fusions, it seems clear that the music is aimed at an easy-listening crevice between soul-jazz and mood music.

 Kofi Blue Note 31875 Byrd; William Campbell (tb); Lew Tabackin (ts, f); Frank Foster (ts); Duke Pearson (p); Ron Carter, Bob Cranshaw (b); Mickey Roker (d); Airto Moreira, Dom Um Romão (perc). 12/69–12/70.

 Blackbyrd Blue Note 84466 Byrd; Alan Barnes (ts, ob, f); Kevin Toney (p); Barney Perry (g); Joe Hill (b); Keith Kilgo (d). 74.

The previously unreleased Kofi fares better than some of Byrd's other music from the period, cut at two sessions a year apart, but with essentially the same band. Byrd's four pieces are vague stabs at modal/African impressionism, but it's the pragmatic Tabackin and Foster who come off best. It sounds as if Byrd has been listening to Miles rather more than to the musicologists he mentions in the self-serving sleeve-notes, though to no terrific effect. Somehow, the innate bustle of these tracks led towards the shinier, mediated soul-grooves of Blackbyrd (check the contrast in personnel; this is a Blue Note record, remember), which was modishly arranged round a concept that struck a chord at the time and sold more than a million copies, outdoing all previous Blue Note records. Twenty years on, it sounds exactly the same: simple, lightweight crossover, with Byrd masking his declining powers as an improviser with a busy group. To paraphrase Swamp Dogg, he wasn't selling out, he was buying in.

We have previously listed many more of Byrd's records from this period – Electric Byrd, Street Lady, Caricatures, Places And Spaces and the later Elektra Thank You ... For F.U.M.L. – but they really belong in a different place to this. The curious can check them out, and will find odd flashes of power, though mostly from Byrd's sidemen. Unfortunately, Byrd's mainstream comeback on Landmark at the end of the '80s is also deleted. Most jazz fans can rest satisfied with the earlier period.

Also, in brief:

(*) With Strings Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10225. 5/56, 57.

Arranged by Clare Fischer and originally done for Warners, though only released (briefly) on the corporation's Discovery imprint. Also includes the Transition quartet material from the recent Blue Note reissue above.

(*) Parisian Thoroughfare /  Au Chat Qui Pêche Emarcy 833395 / Fresh Sound FSRCD 388. 10/58.

At the Paris Olympia and at the eponymous jazz club, with Bobby Jaspar (ts).

 The Best Of Donald Byrd Blue Note 798638. 69–76.

The dates tell it all: the funky popster rather than the jazzman.

Don Byron (born 1958)

CLARINET, BASS CLARINET, BARITONE SAXOPHONE

A passionate, articulate and engaged artist, he has also been associated with a revival in jazz clarinet. He has dabbled in klezmer and other musics, sometimes to the detriment of focus in his work.

 Romance With The Unseen Blue Note 4 99545 2 Byron; Bill Frisell (g); Drew Gress (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 1–3/99.

Don Byron's emergence was almost as great a sensation as that of his poetic namesake. The sight of a young black man in dreadlocks playing Duke Ellington tunes on clarinet of all instruments was, even in 1990, astonishing enough; to then find Byron fronting a klezmer band was a little like discovering that fellow clarinettist Woody Allen had joined the Art Ensemble Of Chicago.

The fine debut Tuskegee Experiments and its two Elektra sequels, Plays The Music Of Mickey Katz and Bug Music, are currently unavailable in most territories. Also gone is the aggressively category-busting Nu Blaxploitation. This inevitably sounds like a reaction to all that, but if you haven't encountered Byron before, you might find him the weak link here. His slightly sharp, very linear clarinet-playing (and he sticks with clarinet throughout) rarely catches the attention in the way that his colleagues almost routinely do. Frisell's subtle comping and solo statements are as arresting as ever; DeJohnette creates a swirly but unflagging pulse and even Gress, not previously thought of as a virtuosic soloist, has some fine moments. The opening meditation on Duke's 'Mural From Two Perspectives' is significant, because it catches Byron out so comprehensively; a lame fragmentary solo, studded with tags from bebop themes and even 'Coming Through The Rye'.

The more impressionistic themes, like Byron's own 'Sad Twilight' and 'Basquiat' (a tribute to the talented, self-destructive artist who grew up in Warhol's shadow), are more effective but still sound like special pleading. 'Bernhard Goetz, James Ramseur

And Me' has the usual touch of the soapbox; but then, with typical perversity, Byron throws in a reading of the Beatles' 'Here Comes The Sun' which catches the breath and lifts the heart.

The album ends with 'Closer To Home', another touch of beauty, though here again it's hard to judge how much of the credit goes to Bill Frisell. The talent is undoubted, the commitment unquestionable, but it is difficult to foretell in which direction Byron will go in future.

 A Fine Line: Arias And Lieder Blue Note 26801 Byron; Uri Caine (p); Jerome Harris (g); Paulo Braga (perc, d); Dean Bowman, Mark Ledford, Cassandra Wilson, Patricia O'Callaghan (v). 00.

The premiss here smacks a little of 'jazz is black classical music' or 'if Shakespeare were alive today he'd be writing for Coronation Street'. A category error is a category error, though not always a fundamental obstacle to creativity. In keeping with his genre-vaulting instincts, Byron advances the idea that 'Nessun Dorma' and the Four Tops' 'Reach Out (I'll Be There)' are divided only by chronological distance. The new lieder writers are Henry Mancini, Stephen Sondheim, Roy Orbison and Stevie Wonder, who are asked to take their place alongside Robert Schumann and Frédéric Chopin. Offering a little frisson to 'The Ladies Who Lunch' (the Sondheim song is one of the outstanding tracks) is a slightly bewildered Ornette, whose 'Check Up' kicks off the set.

As before, Byron does some of his classical schtick solo, playing an unaccompanied version of the Chopin 'Largetto' to close out the album. Elsewhere, he duets with the similarly minded Caine. The vocal contributions are unusual to say the least. Mark Ledford makes the Coleman song sound very airy-fairy indeed, but opts to do the Big O's 'It's Over' very much in the manner of the original. Patricia O'Callaghan brings a hectic energy to Bernstein's 'Glitter And Be Gay'; Cassandra Wilson makes Sondheim funkier than he usually sounds; and the vocalists team up for a wonderful interpretation of 'Soldier In The Rain'. A bold and occasionally illuminating experiment, though Don's own 'Basquiat' is tellingly the most effective single track. More in that vein might have been advisable, and a bit more weight on the clarinet, please.

(*) You Are #6 Blue Note 32231 Byron; Ralph Alessi (t); James Zollar (t, flhn); Curtis Fowlkes, Josh Roseman (tb); Bob DeBellis (as, ts, f, af); J. D. Parran (f, af); Edsel Gomez (p); Hector Martignon (ky); David Gilmore (g); Don Byron Sr (b); Ben Wittman (d, perc); Leo Traversa (b, v); Milton Cardona (perc, v); Johnny Almendra (perc); Designer, Julie Patton, Gwen Snyder (v); DJ Spooky (remix). 10/01.

Subtitled More Music For Six Musicians, this is a welcome follow-up to the now-deleted album on which Byron began to define his cross-disciplinary approach as a composer. Significantly, the clarinet is again well to the front, pungent on 'Klang', wispier and more wistful elsewhere. A heavy admixture of guest percussion and the rolling swing of Edsel Gomez's accompaniment give the album a strong Latin feel which is slightly unexpected. 'You Are #6' (is this a reference to cult TV series The Prisoner?) is reprised as '#6.5' and there is a DJ Spooky remix of 'Belmondo's Lip', the latter, like 'Klang', derived from a soundtrack project. Apart from these, the writing is much more straight-ahead than usual. Old man Byron takes a turn on 'Shake 'Em Up', a theme that would go down well at a Havana or Tijuana wedding. Vocalist Designer does a little turn to introduce the players; we are a long way from the engaged fury of Tuskegee Experiments, but there is no mistaking the common source and Byron's eventual break-out on the next track is as dark as anything he has recorded. As a foil, 'No Whine' is as delicate as filigree, with just piano accompaniment.The clarinettist's grasp of musical order is formidable, and this is his most sheerly entertaining record to date.

(*) Ivey-Divey Blue Note 78215 2 Byron; Ralph Alessi (t); Jason Moran (p); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 5/04.

The line-up might mislead. Alessi is only around briefly, and scarcely enough to make an impact, while Plaxico is only in for the sequence of klezmer-tinged compositions that come in the final third of the record. Much of the rest is made up of old songs and repertory pieces. 'I Want To Be Happy' is played with suppressed venom, an astonishing opening that, coupled with Moran's Tatum-flavoured playing and DeJohnette's blistering accompaniment, guarantees an attentive listen. 'Somebody Loves Me' isn't any gentler, though there is a lighter-toned alternate tucked away at the end of the set; but it isn't hard to see why the first version was preferred. Byron's opening cadenza on 'I Cover The Waterfront' takes him closer and closer to the melody as he moves down the scale.

The original stuff is the usual mixture of good humour and raw caricature, neat tunes that sit idiomatically for the clarinet. 'Freddie Freeloader' is wry and quirky but 'In A Silent Way' is plain magnificent and squeezes expression out of the theme simply by playing it straight.

DeJohnette can't be faulted. He veers between march-band precision and near-freedom, often within a couple of measures. Fine as Moran is, you wonder what difference it would have made if he'd dropped out for a number or two. Byron has spread his net wide since his precocious debut, but this confirms that his real talent is as a jazz composer and performer.

(*) Do The Boomerang: The Music Of Junior Walker Blue Note 094 Byron; Curtis Fowlkes (tb); George Colligan (org); David Gilmore (g); Chris Thomas King, Brad Jones (b); Rodney Jones (d); Dean Bowman (v). 12/05.

The unwary might be puzzled that Junior Walker didn't seem to write any of the songs on this sweet, wild, gently subversive record, but in a pre-Motown life Walker was Autry DeWalt Jr, and as such claims credit (or co-credit) for five of the tunes here, including the peerless 'Shotgun' and the opening 'Cleo's Mood'. The latter was an ideal starting-point, with a nicotine-stained Hammond sound. 'What Does It Take?' is another collectable item, with the original saxophone intro arranged for bass clarinet and the melody and chords pushed to the very limit in Byron's own statement. There are times when this sounds anything but a Byron project. It's also unusual to hear him on tenor saxophone, though the phrasing is a giveaway. The presence of King and Bowman, and some prominently featured guitar work from Gilmore, almost pushes the clarinettist into the background, but one is always conscious of how thoughtfully (as well as joyfully) he shapes a project like this.

Also, in brief:

 A Ballad For Many Cantaloupe 21036. 6/06.

The Bang On A Can All Stars sextet plays Byron, with the man himself on hand. Material from his soundtrack to a (silent) episode of the Ernie Kovacs Show and for a documentary about the Tuskegee airmen. Interesting stuff, confidently performed.

George Cables (born 1944)

PIANO

Gained small-group experience with Art Blakey and Max Roach in the '60s, then backed horn-players, notably Freddie Hubbard and Art Pepper. Something of a journeyman, but his stature has been enhanced by the fine solo and trio albums of the '80s and '90s.

 Circles Contemporary C 14105 Cables; Joe Farrell (f); Ernie Watts (ts); Tony Dumas, Rufus Reid (b); Peter Erskine, Eddie Gladden (d). 3/79.

 Cables Vision Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 725 Cables; Freddie Hubbard (t, flhn); Ernie Watts (ts, ss); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Tony Dumas (b); Peter Erskine (d); Vince Charles (perc). 12/79.

Cables is a great accompanist, an essentially modest man who likes to service the song. He's still probably best known for his duo performances with Art Pepper on a marvellous Galaxy, Goin' Home. Cables has a slightly sharp touch that adds an unexpected measure of tension. He plays an electric instrument with great taste and economy throughout Cables Vision, with the exception of a companionable acoustic duo with Bobby Hutcherson called 'The Stroll'.

Circles is very fine, a richly textured and often very sophisticated set to which Farrell's rapid light-winged flute and Watts's mature, unemphatic tenor contribute strongly. These are somewhat different from later sets in that Cables is not the only – or even the main – focus of attention but an ensemble player.

* Phantom Of The City Contemporary C 14014 Cables; John Heard (b); Tony Williams (d). 5/85.

A beautifully balanced piano trio record, and one of the very best recorded appearances by Tony Williams in the '80s. It's the drummer who gives the set much of its character, and on the Cables composition 'Dark Side, Light Side' he brings a jaw-dropping musicality, playing the melody as if working on a tuned instrument. Heard never lets the pace drop, even nudging at Williams on occasion when the drummer seems content to let the tempo ease.

Cables is completely in command, opposing long, rippling melody-lines with a firm chordal pattern and working a whole spectrum of harmonic variations on the basic tune. His touch is still lighter than one would expect from a self-confident front-man, but it is hugely attractive and this is an unmissable record.

(*) By George Original Jazz Classics OJC 1056 Cables; John Heard (b); Ralph Penland (d). 2/87.

(*) Cables Fables Steeplechase SCCD 31287 Cables; Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 3/91.

The 1987 Gershwin set is richly sophisticated, and the solo performances of 'Embraceable You' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me' are excellent examples of his innate rhythmic sense. The new OJC edition has a bonus track in 'Summertime'. Cables Fables is a tribute to the understanding that exists between the (unrelated) Washingtons, but retrospect suggests that this is a less-confident set than those on either side of it.

(*) Beyond Forever Steeplechase SCCD 31305 Cables; Joe Locke (vib); Santi Debriano (b); Victor Lewis (d). 12/91.

This was the first time on record that Cables had tried this kind of instrumentation since the gig with Hutcherson in 1979. The absence of horns is the key difference, allowing the two keyboard/percussion instruments to interact and interweave in long, winding, horn-like passages. 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' is moving and intense, and 'Little B's Poem', written by Hutcherson and featuring Locke, obviously enough, is flawlessly executed, packed with those ladder scales the older vibist bequeathed to his successors.

* Person To Person Steeplechase SCCD 31369 Cables (p solo). 4/95.

A seemingly unimaginative programme of material – starts with 'My Funny Valentine', ends with 'Body And Soul' – but an immaculate solo performance that has melody at a premium and never for a moment drifts off into chordal side-roads. The only weak link is the slight original 'Sweet Rita Suite'. The piano sounds great and George is in expansive but disciplined form. 'I Remember Clifford' is the outstanding track.

 Skylark Steeplechase SCCD 31381 Cables; Jay Anderson (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 4/95.

(*) Dark Side, Light Side Steeplechase SCCD 31405 Cables; Jay Anderson (b); Billy Hart (d). 10/96.

Skylark seems to have been an attempt to find a new, Latin-influenced groove. It's an appealing enough record, but it lacks the sheer grace of the 1996 trio, offering bravado rather than imagination. With Hart at the helm, Cables obviously feels he can do anything, and his playing on 'In A Sentimental Mood' is stretched out to ten minutes, and on the closing tribute to George Adams, Don Pullen's 'Ah George, We Hardly Knew You', is as close to piano heaven as you're entitled to expect. The later session opens on a version of Herbie Hancock's 'Dolphin Dance' that should be transcribed and passed on to all young piano-players. The original 'Dark Side, Light Side' is exquisitely idiomatic, and thereafter the mix of Herbie, Monk and Duke (with Pullen to come) suggests how carefully Cables is looking back into the jazz piano tradition.

* A Letter To Dexter Kind Of Blue 10006 Cables; Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (b). 5/04.

Cables spent enough time comping for Dexter Gordon to make the personal tribute legitimate. One wonders, though, if the laid-back saxophonist would be entirely happy with the way the 'section' plays on some of these tracks. There's a sloppiness to some of the accompaniment, though Reid redeems himself with a great solo on 'Polkadots And Moonbeams', one of his best on record and a highlight here. Cables is in patchy form himself, sounding very good on his own 'I Told You So' but less than confident on Dexter's 'LTD' and 'Fried Bananas'.

Also, in brief:

 I Mean You Steeplechase SCCD 31334. 4/93.

Not the best of the crop, sounding flat and under-rehearsed. Even the Monk title-tune is played with drab literalness.

(*) Quiet Fire Steeplechase SCCD 31357. 4/94.

'Quiet fire' would do very nicely as a characterization of Cables's qualities as a player. Ron McClure (b) and Billy Hart (d) are the trio partners, John Hicks's 'Naima's Love Song' and Freddie Hubbard's 'The Decrepit Fox' the highlights.

 One For My Baby Steeplechase SCCD 31487. 4/00.

'My Foolish Heart' is taken at a rare old clip and Billy Taylor's 'Capricious' was an inspired choice. Otherwise, this trio date fails to catch fire.

* Alone Together Groove Jazz 110. 00.

Virtually unknown rhythm section, but George pulls it out of the hat. The title-track defies its warhorse status, 'Body And Soul' is wonderful and there are new wrinkles to 'Phantom Of The City'.

Michael Cain (born 1966)

PIANO

Contemporary stylist who's worked with Jack DeJohnette.

(*) Strange Omen Candid CCD 79505 Cain; Bruce Saunders (g); Glen Velez (perc). 11/90.
 What Means This? Candid CCD 79529 Cain; Anthony Cox (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d); Paul Hannah (perc). 3/91.
(*) Evidence Of Things Unseen M.A. Recordings 31 Cain (p solo). 94.
* Circa / (*) Phfew ECM 537047-2 / M.A. Recordings 30 Cain; Ralph Alessi (t, flhn); Peter Epstein (ss, ts). 8/96; 00.

If we had opened a stud book in 1990, it would have suggested that Mike Cain be picked up by ECM. From the very start, he sounded like a latter-day version of Chick Corea, not a copyist, but someone who was developing a concept very like Chick's. The album with Saunders and Velez is interesting enough, though it's the guitarist who provides the two most interesting pieces. Cain's 'Piano Sketch' sequence is quintessentially Corean.

The 1991 set with Cox and Smith was an attempt to create a more mainstream jazz sound. The problem is that Cain is again upstaged by his playing partners. The piano often seems to be adding an accompaniment to what is going on with the bass and drums. It's still all very imprecise and indefinite, though; why invite trouble by calling a piece 'Meander'?

The solo album lay on the shelves for nearly five years before release, which seems odd given that several score duller sessions must have appeared during that time. Recorded in the fine acoustic of Harmony Hall in the Japanese Alps and on a palpably superior instrument, it is a beautifully constructed package of thoughtful compositions. The touch is distinctive, but with no reliance on gesture, and the set has a compelling freshness.

Circa came as a hugely refreshing change. Cain conceives of the piece as a rite of passage, inspired by the landscapes of Nevada and the curious cultural environment (think of Mailer's Desert D'Or in The Deer Park) of Las Vegas, where he spent part of his childhood. Cain's own writing is superb, with 'Red Rock Rain', 'And Their White Tigers' and 'Top O' The Dunes' standing out. The instrumentation is as effective as it is unusual. Lacking a rhythm player and someone to anchor the chords means that the pianist has to work very differently. Cain almost plays as if he is accompanying singers, shadowing a line, shading in its contours, ironizing and reinforcing by turns.

ECM seems not to have taken up an option on a second album, which is a shame. Inevitably, the second trio record is less expertly engineered and something of the rich texture of Circa is lost on Phfew. There are, though, some wonderful things here. In a set which includes longer and shorter pieces, it is the developed themes which work best. 'Strange Omen' is terrific and Cain himself is particularly good; 'Egg' and the curiously titled 'Can't Stir Shoes With Spoons' are equally impressive in their way. At this stage, Cain probably needs the patronage of a major label more than ever.

Uri Caine (born 1956)

PIANO

The son of academics, he studied with Bernard Peiffer and acquired an eclectic approach to composition and arrangement. Though there is a Herbie Hancock influence, much of his recorded work consists of bold reworkings of classical material.

(*) Sphere Music Winter & Winter 919 064 Caine; Graham Haynes (c); Don Byron (cl); Gary Thomas (ts, f); Anthony Cox, Kenny Davis (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 4 & 5/92.
* Toys Winter & Winter 919 077 Caine; Dave Douglas (t); Joshua Roseman (tb); Don Byron (cl); Dave Holland (b); Ralph Peterson (d); Don Alias (perc). 2 & 3/95.

We might wish that Caine had stayed in the same fierce eclectically open-ended style as his debut, but this is exactly the course he has taken since, merely on a much larger canvas. Mixing the free jazz of 'Jelly' and other original themes with classical and Jewish elements, he creates a vivid and wholly individual patchwork of sounds that works as well here, we'd contend, as in any of the more ambitious work to follow. Toys is better because the band is. Caine can be heard nudging already at his Mahler idea, quoting the 'Titan' Symphony on the opening 'Time Will Tell' and suggesting throughout that his real interests lie in larger-group conceptions than in ensemble jazz.

(*) Urlicht / Primal Light Winter & Winter 910 004 Caine; Dave Douglas (t); Josh Roseman (tb); Dave Binney (ss); Don Byron (cl); Danny Blume (g, elec); Mark Feldman (vn); Larry Gold (clo); Michael Formanek (b); Joey Baron (d); DJ Olive (turntables); Aaron Bensoussan (v, perc); Dean Bowman, Arto Lindsay (v). 6/96.
 Wagner In Venezia / Wagner In Venice Winter & Winter 910 013 Caine; Mark Feldman (vn); Erik Friedlander (clo); Drew Gress (b); Dominic Cortese (acc). 96.
* Gustav Mahler In Toblach: I Went Out This Morning Over The Countryside Winter & Winter 910 046 2 Caine; Ralph Alessi (t); David Binney (as); Mark Feldman (vn); Aaron Bensoussan (oud, v); Michael Formanek (b); Jim Black (d); DJ Olive (elec, turntables). 7/98.
* Dark Flame Winter & Winter 910 095 Caine; Ralph Alessi (t); Don Byron (cl); David Gilmore (g); Mark Feldman (vn); Michael Formanek (b); Jim Black (d); Sisi Chen (yangqin); Tao Chen (dizi); Bao Li Zhang (erhu); DJ Olive (turntables); Aaron Bensoussan, Sadiq Bey, Sepp Bierbichler, Ton Qiang Chen, Julie Patton, Barbara Walker, Kettwiger Bach Choir (v). 7/99–5/03.

Chosen to kick off Winter & Winter's 'New Edition' imprint, Urlicht is an extraordinary feat of imaginative projection, and it almost succeeds. The basic concept for the label is clearly modelled on ECM's swing towards new music, though perhaps Stefan Winter is more interested in fusion and crossover experimentation than is Manfred Eicher. The notion that Mahler's music, for much of the last two decades (and certainly before the popular advent of Górecki, Pärt, et al.) the only classical composer to appeal to a rock generation, might be adaptable to a jazz aesthetic is a pretty startling one. For the most part, the studio album works very well. Caine takes themes from the first and second symphonies (including the 'primal light' theme from the 'Resurrection' Symphony), as well as songs from Kindertotenlieder and Des Knaben Wunderhorn, and turns them into open-ended, loose-woven melodic shapes that invite not so much harmonic improvisation as retexturing. This is what Caine does best; it is also the limiting factor on both these records.

The live recording of the same material is a revelation, however. From the tightly reined-in piano introduction to the funeral march from the Fifth Symphony, with its wry Beethoven reference and high harmonics from Feldman and the DJ, to the sweeping romanticism of 'The Farewell' from Das Lied von der Erde, the audience is taken on a journey that has little to do with musicological orthodoxy, but everything to do with thoughtful deconstruction. Caine intuits how much of Mahler's music comes from folk sources and he hands over these famously sonorous themes to a wailing village band. The strange swoops of live electronics are a convincingly alien presence, hinting at birdcalls, spirit-possession, or merely creaking wheels and axles..

The two selections from Kindertotenlieder are exquisitely done. 'Oft denk' ich, sie sind nur ausgegangen' is recast as a mournful duet for violin and trumpet, ever more distant and desolated; children call in the background. There are fresh interpretations of 'Urlicht', the Adagietto from the Fifth Symphony and songs from Des Knaben Wunderhorn and Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen. A remarkable conception.

The Wagner project was recorded live in the Piazza San Marco, but these immensely sophisticated themes, with their indistinct architecture, really do not lend themselves to this sort of manipulation. Ironically, a harder-edged approach, with guitars and electronics very much to the fore, might have worked better.

There are, of course, things to admire but they are episodic, and Caine has not managed to carry over his intuitive understanding of Mahler's small- and large-scale structures into this superficially similar project. The recording is very hard and dry for a live taping.

(*) Blue Wail Winter & Winter 910 034 2 Caine; James Genus (b); Ralph Peterson Jr (d). 2/98.

Bookended by unexpected, jaggy interpretations of 'Honeysuckle Rose', Caine's return to jazz has more continuities with previous projects than might appear. His own writing is very much in an American song tradition, which in turn drew heavily on European classicism. 'Bones Don't Cry' and the title-track are closest to the feel of the blues, but in 'Digature Of The Line' and 'The Face Of Space' Uri explores tonalities which don't normally play much part in jazz. The trio opens out on 'Blue Wail' and 'Sweet Potato', giving room to Genus and the increasingly impressive Peterson to express themselves, but most of the tracks are terse, tightly structured and sound almost fully written out. Winter & Winter are juggling jazz with other styles and genres, so far successfully. Caine may yet prove to be the label's signature artist.

(*) Solitaire Winter & Winter 910 075 Caine (p solo). 11/00.

The solo debut is remarkable. Uri plays like a latter-day Bill Evans who has been touched by some skittish technological sprite. Even on acoustic piano one somehow expects him to conjure up exotic FX. In point of fact, the piano-playing is enough in itself, especially when applied to these mostly original themes, which include swinging upbeat numbers, modal ideas, bop and even ballads. Sammy Cahn's 'All The Way' and Lennon/McCartney's 'Blackbird' are the only two standards.

(*) Live At The Village Vanguard Winter & Winter 910 102 2 Caine; Drew Gress (b); Ben Perowsky (d). 5/03.

Caine makes his intentions clear right from the start with a bright, thoughtful reading of Wayne Shorteer's 'Nefertiti', always something of a test-piece and continues with a couple more standards before he starts getting into his own material. After the ambitious and eclectic work of the last few years, this is a clever move. The chops are great, the trio works together beautifully and the results are a delight.

 Bedrock / (*) Shelf-Life Winter & Winter 910 068 / 910112 Caine; Tim Lefebvre (g, b); Zach Danziger (d). 3/01; 9/05.

This is calculatedly different to the orthodox jazz trios of Blue Wail and Live At The Village Vanguard, a bizarrely spun sequence of musical satires and caprices that seems to avoid the familiar jazz grooves of its predecessor with excessive self-consciousness. It may be that Caine is genuinely worried about his market positioning. He has created his own musical style to some extent, but here the keyboard/guitar/drums set-up actually sounds quite derivative and retro and the deliberate eccentricity of things like 'Defenestration' just sounds like sophomoric irony.

 The Book Of Angels: Volume 6 Tzadik 7360 Caine (p solo). 11/06.

Caine plays Zorn: 19 relatively brief piano sketches in the composer's most gnomic and deceptive vein. There isn't much scope for extended interrogation of any of them, but Caine understands this heritage very well and from the inside, so he is an ideal interpreter. A lack of variation – of tone and pace – means that the set palls before the halfway point, so perhaps best sampled a few at a time.

Also, in brief:

 The Sidewalks Of New York / Tin Pan Alley Winter & Winter 910 038 2. 2/99.

A bold and touching attempt to create a montage of songs and tunes that evoke turn-of-the-century New York. Exquisitely done.

 Zohar Keter Knitting Factory KFCD 236. 3/99.

A collaboration with Aaron Bensoussan (v, oud), and thus on the fringes of our concerns here.

 The Goldberg Variations /  The Diabelli Variations Winter & Winter 910 054 / 910 086. 10/99–1/00; 2/02.

If Bach invented jazz, here's the pay-off. A bold idea (cf. Keith Jarrett's by-the-numbers Goldbergs) but for the most part it works triumphantly.

 Love Fugue Winter & Winter 910 049 2. 99.

Don Byron had dabbled with Schumann; Caine takes the idea much further in the company of Italian group La Gaia Scienza, poet Julie Patton and vocalist Mark Ledford. The results are imaginative, attractive and enigmatic.

 Rio Winter & Winter 910079 2. 6/01.

The result of a trip to Brazil, with some material caught on-the-fly outdoors. Caine's eclecticism is becoming almost manic, but he pulls it off every time.

 Pure Affection Alessa 0101004. 8/07.

Curious but intriguing duets with vibes/marimba man Gust Tsilis.

Joe Calderazzo (born 1965)

PIANO

Born in New Rochelle, he studied classical piano but joined Michael Brecker in his early 20s and was quickly signed up by Blue Note. Brother of drummer Gene.

(*) Joey Calderazzo Sony 69886 Calderazzo; John Patitucci (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 1/99.

* Haiku Marsalis Music 613305 Calderazzo (p solo). 8/02.

 Amanecer Marsalis Music /Rounder 052 Calderazzo; Romero Lubambo (g); Claudia Acuna (v). 1 & 2/06.

A deft performer with an utterly distinctive time-feel, Calderazzo seems to favour 3/4 metres; three of the tracks on the 1999 Columbia date, including the lovely 'Catania', are in some variant on waltz-time. The trio has a nice, loosely organic feel. Patitucci is still an underrated master in these small-group situations and here he is in superb form, leaving Watts free to make some interesting colouristic excursions.

'Haiku', another of the three-quarter-time pieces, lends its name to the solo recital on Marsalis Music. It and 'Chopin' are subjected to long examination on this first solo disc. Calderazzo's two-handed style is impressively on view here. There's no sense of right and left working independently, but rather as a unit, and the deft time-shifts on 'Just One Of Those Things', Kenny Kirkland's 'Dienda' and two versions of 'Bri's Dance' bear that out. It's an astoundingly good record.

The final one of the group – several early records, including Blue Notes, are currently deleted – is only a disappointment in that Lubambo's and Acuna's involvement on six tracks (separately) seems like a dilution of a great solo record. 'Waltz For Debbie' and a fine version of Michael Brecker's 'Sea Of Glass', which squeezes out more emotion in eight minutes than the composer did in his whole career, are the highlights.

Red Callender (1916–92)

DOUBLE BASS, TUBA

A first-call player on the West Coast scene, with an experimental streak underneath the reliability.

* Swingin' Suite Fresh Sound FSRCD 458 Callender; Harry 'Parr' Jones, Gerald Wilson (t); John Ewing (tb); William Green, Hymie Gunkler (as); Buddy Collette (f, ts) Clyde Dunn, Marty Berman (bs); Eddie Beal, Gerald Wiggins (p); Bill Pitman, Billy Bean (g); Bill Douglass (d); Frank Bodde (perc). 11/55, 4 & 5/58.

 Speak Low Fresh Sound FSRCD 459 As above, except omit Ewing, Green, Gunkler, Dunn, Berman, Beal, Pitman, Bean, Bodde; add Vince DeRosa, Irving Rosenthal (frhn); Bob Bain (g). 10/56, 4/58.

Callender's octets were palpably influenced by Duke Ellington's ensemble writing and distribution of solo space. Apart from Collette, who is excellent throughout these sides, the groups are largely anonymous, but these were professional players who were able to deliver Collette's ideas with a modicum of swing. The 12 cuts from November 1955 are all Callender originals, mostly quite dry ideas, though 'Dancers' and 'Sleigh Ride' are more bracing (the latter managing to avoid most clichés associated with sleigh-ride music). There follow three further octets, with Gerald Wilson on trumpet and Collette on tenor only; he's back on flute for the sextet and quartet tracks (the former again with Wilson) from April and May 1958. It's scarcely sparkling music, but one senses bands that are fit-for-purpose and quietly adventurous.

Speak Low documents Red's attempt to press the tuba into service as an alternative lead voice. It works beautifully on the Kurt Weill title-tune, which leads off the disc, and there are some nice touches on 'A Foggy Day' as well that anticipate Charles Mingus's San Francisco variant of the Gershwin tune. It's a relatively plodding sound, though, and while Collette, the guitarists, Wiggins and the splendid Mitchell all contribute brightly, a difficult listen at any length.

Cab Calloway (1907–94)

VOICE

He began playing drums in Chicago but switched to singing when he took over The Missourians in 1931. A regular gig at the Cotton Club brought them to prominence. Disbanding in 1948, he worked with a small group but thereafter concentrated on theatre work and showbiz appearances, trading on a larger-than-life personality until well into his 80s.

 Cab Calloway 1930–1931 Classics 516 Calloway; R. Q. Dickerson, Lamar Wright, Ruben Reeves, Wendell Culley (t); De Priest Wheeler (tb); Thornton Blue, Arville Harris (cl, as); Andrew Brown (bcl, ts); Walter Thomas (as, ts, bs, f); Earres Prince, Benny Payne (p); Morris White (bj); Jimmy Smith (bb, b); Leroy Maxey (d). 7/30–6/31.

(*) Cab Calloway 1931–1932 Classics 526 As above, except omit Dickerson, Culley, Prince, Blue; add Edwin Swayzee, Doc Cheatham (t); Harry White (tb); Eddie Barefield (cl, as, bs); Al Morgan (b). 7/31–6/32.

(*) Cab Calloway 1932 Classics 537 As above, except omit Reeves, Smith; add Roy Smeck (g); Chick Bullock (v). 6/32–12/32.

 Cab Calloway 1932–1934 Classics 544 As above, except omit Smeck, Bullock. 12/32–9/34.

(*) The Early Years 1930–1934 JSP CD 908 4CD As above. 7/30–9/34.

At Calloway's very first session, in July 1930 with an astonishingly virtuosic vocal on 'St Louis Blues', he served notice that a major jazz singer was ready to challenge Armstrong with an entirely different style. It didn't take Calloway long to sharpen up the band, even though he did it with comparatively few changes in personnel. Unlike the already tested format of a vocal feature within an instrumental record, Calloway's arrangers varied detail from record to record, Cab appearing throughout some discs, briefly on others, and usually finding space for a fine team of soloists. Some records are eventful to an extraordinary extent: listen, for instance, to the 1935 'I Ain't Got Nobody' or the dazzling 1930 'Some Of These Days'. The lexicon of reefers, Minnie the Moocher and Smokey Joe, kicking gongs around, and the whole fabulous language of hi-de-ho would soon have become tiresome if it hadn't been for the leader's boundless energy and ingenious invention: his vast range, from a convincing bass to a shrieking falsetto, has remained unsurpassed by any male singer and he transforms the emptiest material.

Long residency at the Cotton Club, and good pay and conditions, meant that the personnel remained fixed, and the band made a colossal number of records. The earliest ones were made for Banner and have an uncomfortably booming sound. Classics' reproduction leaves a lot of surface noise, too. JSP offers the same material with vastly better sound, thanks to John R. T. Davies.

(*) Cab Calloway 1934–1937 Classics 554 As above, except add Shad Collins, Irving Randolph (t); Claude Jones, Keg Johnson (tb); Garvin Bushell, Thornton Blue (cl, as); Ben Webster (ts); Milt Hinton (b). 9/34–3/37.

(*) Cab Calloway 1937–1938 Classics 568 As above, except omit Cheatham, Morgan; add Chu Berry (ts); Chauncey Haughton (cl, as); Danny Barker (g). 3/37–3/38.

 Cab Calloway 1938–1939 Classics 576 As above, except omit Webster, White; add Cozy Cole (d); June Richmond (v). 3/38–2/39.

(*) Cab Calloway 1939–1940 Classics 595 As above, except omit Maxey, Bushell, Richmond; add Dizzy Gillespie, Mario Bauza (t); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Quentin Jackson (tb); Jerry Blake (cl, as). 3/39–3/40.

 Cab Calloway 1940 Classics 614 As above, except omit Collins, Randolph, Jones, Blue. 3–8/40.

 Cab Calloway 1940–1941 Classics 625 As above, except add Jonah Jones (t). 3/40–7/41.

 The Chu And Dizzy Years Hep CD 1079 2CD As appropriate discs above. 8/39–3/42.

Calloway progressed through the '30s with unquenchable enthusiasm. He took fewer risks on his vocals and chose to set down some more straightforward ballad interpretations on several of the later sides, but the singing is still exceptional, and there are new points of interest among the soloists: Webster, Berry, Gillespie and others. The 1940 disc features some arrangements by Benny Carter and the bizarre 'Cupid's Nightmare' score by Don Redman, a mystifying mood-piece. Jonah Jones, the last great soloist to arrive in this era, sparks several of the 1941 tracks. Reproduction is mostly good, but the opening tracks on the 1934–1937 volume are buried under a preposterous level of surface noise. Again, sound quality is much better on Hep, though the selection of tracks featuring Berry and Gillespie isn't any better than on Classics.

 Cab Calloway 1942–1947 Classics 996 Calloway; Russell Smith, Shad Collins, Jonah Jones, Lamar Wright, Paul Webster, Roger Jones, Johnny Letman (t); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Quentin Jackson, Keg Johnson, Fred Robinson, John 'Shorty' Haughton, Earl Gibson (as); Rudy Powell, Andrew Brown (as, bs); Ted McRae, Walter 'Foots' Thomas, Skinny Brown, Ike Quebec, Bob Dorsey, Sam Taylor (ts); Greely Walton (bs); Bennie Payne, Dave Rivera (p); Danny Barker, John Smith (g); Milt Hinton (b); Cozy Cole, Panama Francis, J. C. Heard, Buford Oliver (d); Dotty Salters (v). 2/42–12/47.

Calloway kept an excellent band together through the '40s, as a look through the personnel suggests, but the records don't give them too many chances to step out and the material had by now fallen into a rut. Even so, Calloway himself was undaunted, though some of the time he sounds as if he's trying to compete with Louis Jordan: see 'Everybody Eats When They Come To My House'. These are mostly Columbia sessions, though there are also three V-Discs. Some of the transfers are dusty, but they clean up towards the end.

John Cameron

PIANO

He was folksinger Donovan's musical director but made one intriguing foray into jazz.

 Off Centre Vocalion SML 1044 Cameron; Harold McNair (f, ts); Danny Thompson (b); Tony Carr (d, perc). 69.

For most fans of British jazz, this is most valuable for a glimpse of the long-eclipsed McNair, a hero of the '60s scene who's scarcely registered in the CD era. The Cameron originals – only 'Dafina Querida' is a collaboration with Thompson – are bright, quirky themes with some interesting rhythmic variations ('Off Centre'), pleasingly individual structure ('Go Away, Come Back Another Day') and lots of atmosphere ('Wenceslas Square'). Nothing deathless here, but an interesting by-way.

Michel Camilo (born 1954)

PIANO

Born to a musical family in the Dominican Republic. His song 'Why Not' was a hit for Manhattan Transfer and other artists took it up. Camilo is a bright and busy player who swings easily.

 Why Not? Evidence ECD 22002 Camilo; Lew Soloff (t); Chris Hunter (as, ts); Anthony Jackson (b); Dave Weckl (d); Guarionex Aquino, Sammy Figueroa (perc). 2/85.

 Suntan Evidence ECD 22030 As above, except omit Soloff, Hunter, Aquino, Figueroa; add Joel Rosenblatt (d). 6/86.

Michel is a smiling musician. Nevertheless, the debut was almost grimly determined to convey that passion for the piano and he plays the hell out of it on a variety of hard-swinging themes, mostly with a strong Latin bent. Unlike Gonzalo Rubalcaba, say, he seems to bypass many elements of bebop and restores a roistering swing element. His soon-to-be hit 'Why Not?' is here, but the best track is the opening 'Just Kiddin''. He picked his band advisedly for the album, which was originally released in Japan only. Soloff sounds as if he just got off a Mexican wedding gig and Hunter, then and now, is one of the most emotive players on the scene.

Suntan was also made for a small Japanese label. Without horns, it's a chance to hear Camilo in full focus. What's immediately evident is how assured his technique is. He's easy in most keys, even the less obviously pianistic ones, and modulates comfortably to the character of a tune. Some of the sheer flash of the debut has gone and there are reflective moments that suit him very nicely indeed.

 Michel Camilo Portrait ORT 44482 Camilo; Lincoln Goines, Marc Johnson (b); Joel Rosenblatt, Dave Weckl (d); Mongo Santamaria (perc). 1 & 2/89.

A highly successful showcase of Camilo's ability to blend jazz and Afro-Cuban elements. Almost all the tunes are his own – 'Caribe' was taken up by Dizzy Gillespie – and the only exception is Kenny Dorham's 'Blue Bossa', which features Santamaria on conga. Something of a breakthrough recording for the then 35-year-old pianist, it has weathered quite well, but the recording sounds a little harsh and one-dimensional now.

(*) On Fire Epic OET45295 Camilo; Michael Bowie, Marc Johnson (b); Joel Rosenblatt, Marvin 'Smitty' Smith, Dave Weckl (d); Sammy Figueroa (perc). 6/89.

The surprise guest is flamenco dancer Raul, who adds a fascinating and authentic dimension to 'Hands & Feet'. Figueroa's contribution is limited to a fine spot on 'And Sammy Walked In'. Again, too, Camilo uses two distinct trios, though it's tougher this time to make meaningful distinctions. Johnson's lyricism has a new, percussive edge and Weckl seems to have developed a more flowing delivery, so it all pans out about even.

 Triangulo Telarc 83549 Camilo; Anthony Jackson (b); Horacio El Negro Hernandez (d). 2/02.

 Live At The Blue Note Telarc 83574 2CD As above, except omit Jackson; add Chuck Flores (b). 3/03.

Once again, Camilo originals come to the fore. Why had they been sidelined? Writer's block? or labels wanting marketable fare? Whatever the case, this is a return to writing form. 'Piece Of Cake' opens the set with a naggingly familiar tune. 'Mr C.I.' is joyous and rhythmic, but the slightly older Camilo also leaves lots of room for quieter and more expressive numbers, like 'Con Alma', which gives the Dizzy tune a more than usually thoughtful angle.

With Peterson and Brubeck on the strength, Telarc have somewhat cornered a market in contemporary piano jazz. Camilo has yet to establish the same market presence as those giants and it's slightly puzzling why he hasn't made a greater splash. The live date puts him in the frame with other Blue Note residents – Keith Jarrett, Chick Corea – though inevitably this is a more modest representation. Anthony Jackson had moved on and what one immediately misses is his muscly tone and simplicity of approach. Flores is closer in spirit to Patitucci and on the 'Blue Bossa' section of the medley he's tight in behind Michel's rhythmically complex solo. There's still something faintly mechanical and foursquare about the piano improvisations; this isn't a soloist who can make the hairs stand up on the back of your neck.

(*) Spain Again Emarcy 07179 Camilo; Tomatito (g). 2/06.
A good example of the sequel exceeding the original. Reconvening the Spain duo with Tomatito six years on (see below, 'in brief'), Camilo mixes in a Piazzolla tribute, some Chick Corea and some original material from both sides of the partnership and it gels beautifully. The rhythms are endlessly fascinating and there are so many deft harmonic touches – on 'Adios Nonino' and the original 'From Within' – one wonders why he often disappoints; perhaps he's still at the mercy of A&R men, pushed in relatively uncreative directions in order to get 'product' out there. This is superb; possibly a little one-dimensional in terms of material and acoustically top-heavy but still a riveting performance.

* Spirit Of The Moment Telarc 63653 Camilo; Dafnis Prieto (b); Charles Flores (d). 10/06.
'Giant Steps' is taken at a sprint, almost as a tailpiece to a central section that finds Camilo exploring a quite specific thread in modern jazz. He delivers a lovely, but too short, 'Nefertiti', and closes with 'Solar', reworked as 'Explorations'. It seems clear that Camilo has been revisiting the modal jazz of the early '60s and integrating some of its challenges into his latest work. 'Trilogy' and 'Hurry Up And Wait' are the most obvious fruits. With this, the records of the last couple of years start to look something like a sabbatical. He's back in strong form and with a terrific trio.

Also, in brief:

 Rendezvous Columbia CT 53754. 1/93.
Brisk, percussive funk-Latin, but a bit processed.

 One More Once Columbia CT 66004. 5/94–5/95.
Biggish band, biggish names (Chris Hunter (ss, as), Paquito d'Rivera (as), but apart from 'Suite Sandrine: Part 3' a bit of an anti-climax.

 Spain Verve 561545. 8/99.
Spanish-tinged duets with guitarist Tomatito: 'Besame Mucho', Corea's 'Spain', and a touch of Rodrigo.

* Solo Telarc 83613. 5/04.
The touch is still bright and exact, but the percussive energy he conjures up with a rhythm section is largely missing and some of these sound suspiciously like rehearsal musings.

 Rhapsody In Blue Telarc 83611. 2/06.
Another Rhapsody. Another Concerto in F. Just what the world needed.

Brun Campbell (1884–1953)

PIANO

Taught by Scott Joplin, he was one of the few genuine first-generation ragtimers to record. Born in Kansas, he played all over the south-west before retiring in 1928 to run a barber's shop.

 Joplin's Disciple Delmark DE 653 Campbell (p solo). 47.
It's miraculous that we can hear a man who was taking lessons from Joplin in 1898. Campbell went back to the piano only in the '40s, when he heard that Joplin's widow was living in poverty; he cut a version of 'Maple Leaf Rag' so that she could earn some royalties. Besides the brief interview which opens the disc and some other speech fragments, there are 31 solos, some of them no more than scraps of music and none very well recorded. Yet the curiously indomitable spirit of original ragtime has kept the music alive, and lively. As Campbell himself said, speaking of his generation of pianists: 'Some played march time, fast time, slow time and some played ragtime blues style, but none of them lost the melody, and if you knew the player and heard him a block away you could name him by his ragtime style.' An authentic survivor of a mostly lost age.

Gary Campbell

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

A highly respected jazz educator (currently at Florida International University), Campbell hasn't had time to record much, but it's impressive when he does.

 Intersection Milestone 9236 Campbell; Mike Orta (p); Nicky Orta (b); Ignacio Berroa (d); Rafael Solano (perc). 12/93.

(*) Thick and Thin Double Time 115 Campbell; John Abercrombie (g); Ron McClure (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 7/96.
Campbell has written on and transcribed Hank Mobley and there may be a minor vein of influence there, though his style is more individual than may be supposed. Harmonically, he is adventurous and in places playfully idiosyncratic. The first record was made largely with colleagues at FIU and it sounds like a regular guys' date with lots of disciplined blowing and not too much wayward stuff. The later quartet with Abercrombie and a stellar rhythm section is rather better, but largely because Campbell loosens his professorial collar and cuts loose a bit. He's a fine composer, whose work has been taken up by Abercrombie, Jeff Palmer and others.

John Campbell (born 1955)

PIANO

An under-recorded modern stylist, who deserves wider recognition.

 Workin' Out Criss Cross 1198 Campbell; Jay Anderson (b); Billy Drummond (d). 01.
The disappearance of Campbell's fine Maybeck set on Concord and his two earlier Contemporary discs means this is all that survives of a pitifully small discography. Campbell plays with command and intelligence, pitting himself against such demanding material as Wayne Shorter's muscular 'Fall' and Freddie Hubbard's 'Sky Dive' as well as other material (Monk, Corea) which seems more obviously suited to piano trio treatment. There's nothing spare or showy, but each theme is interrogated with respectful attention.

Roy Campbell (born 1952)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, CORNET, POCKET-TRUMPET

A New Yorker, Campbell studied with Lee Morgan, Joe Newman and Kenny Dorham; also influenced by Yusef Lateef's world-jazz. Plays in a freely lyrical mode with his Other Dimensions In Music and others. Divides his time between Holland and the USA and collects horror films.

(*) New Kingdom Delmark DE-456 Campbell; Zane Massey (ts); Ricardo Strobert (as, f); Bryan Carrott (vib); William Parker (b); Zen Matsuura (d). 10/91.
 La Tierra Del Fuego Delmark DE-469 Campbell; Alex Lodico (tb); Ricardo Strobert (as, f); Zane Massey (ts); Klaas Hekman (bs); Rahn Burton (p); Hideji Taninaka (b); Reggie Nicholson (d); Talik Abdullah (perc). 12/93.
 Communion Silkheart SHCD 139 Campbell; William Parker (b); Reggie Nicholson (d). 9/94.
Campbell plays like the offspring of his teacher Lee Morgan but imbued with a hankering to go much further outside. He loves lyrical playing and, on Parker's piece dedicated to Cecil Taylor, 'For C.T.', he counters the inspiration by playing some of his sweetest horn. But the idea of New Kingdom is to create 'avant-garde' music that also salutes the tradition. The three trio pieces for Campbell, Parker and Matsuura are an expertly constructed bridge. Massey and Strobert are sound, if relatively unremarkable saxophonists, but Carrott is a fine participant, moving smoothly between roles as colourist, ensemble man and fleet improviser.

La Tierra Del Fuego is an intermittently exciting stew of traditions and new ideas, with nods to Booker Little and various threads of Afro-Cuban jazz and the hottest modal bands of the '60s. Campbell assembles a ragtag cast for this one, with the surprising Hekman a wild card, and as a result it's hit and miss. He empties out the studio for Communion, which spotlights his freest playing, and this time evokes some of Don Cherry's small-group recordings. The record palls a little over the full stretch; inventively though Parker and Nicholson play, one hears graft and perspiration rather than flair.

 It's Krunch Time Thirsty Ear 57107-2 Campbell; Khan Jamal (vib); Wilber Morris (b); Guillermo Brown (d). 4/00.
(*) Ethnic Stew And Brew Delmark DE-528 Campbell; William Parker (b, perc, shaku); Hamid Drake (d). 10/00.
The Thirsty Ear record is patchy, with a closing assault on 'The Star Spangled Banner' that feels like vandalism and other points where Campbell seems to want to pressurize himself out of his normal areas and into inappropriate violence. Brown's mix of rhythms goes from funk to Latin to 4/4, and they work to varying degrees; but in the more thoughtful moments Campbell hits his most effective stride.

Ethnic Stew And Brew is altogether finer, even if Campbell's decision to whip together reggae and West African grooves could have led to modish disaster. He's calling on more than one tradition here – not just ancient black-music threads, but the developed avant-garde of the past 30-odd years. With the masterful Parker and Drake on hand to articulate the fusion the results are mature, considered, but not lacking in passion. Here and there the music misfires, but that's the price one pays for a genuinely innovative try at blending. Campbell's best trumpet commentaries are a bonus.

 Now! AUM Fidelity 006 Campbell; Daniel Carter (as, ts, f, t); William Parker (b); Rashid Bakr (d). 3/97.
 Time Is Of The Essence; The Essence Is Beyond Time AUM Fidelity 013 As above, except add Matthew Shipp (p). 12/97.
Other Dimensions In Music is a collaborative project, but Campbell's soulful presence is every bit as integral as Carter's multi-instrumentalism or, for that matter, Parker's rock-solid foundation. Now! begins with a titanic, half-hour medley of two themes. At first hearing, Campbell's approach is simpler, and more obviously melodic, than that of his colleagues, but there is considerable depth to his conception and underneath Carter's occasional elaborations there is a hard and irreducible core of blues language. A later tune is (in some versions at least) rather charmingly entitled 'Tears For The Boy Wonder (For Winston [sic] Marsalis'! Weeping imagery plays a strong part throughout the album, underlining the conviction that here is music deeply rooted in the sorrow songs and their celebratory other side.

The existing unit became a quintet with the addition of Shipp immediately before the first of these sessions. He in no way unbalances things and indeed the band leap into their opening improvisation with utter confidence and camaraderie. They take the title entirely to heart, seeming to work urgently but with no sense that time – neither in terms of conventional metre nor in simple duration – really matters at all. Parker's throbbing pulse is integral to all the performances, and a word should be said for Bakr, who is consistently underrated.

Royce Campbell

GUITAR

Quiet experimentalist who keeps a day-job foot in mainstream jazz.

 Pitapat Challenge CHR 73126 Campbell; Ray Drummond (b); Akira Tana (d). 11/97.
 Trioing Jardis 20244 Campbell; Paul Langosch (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 11/00.
(*) A Tribute To Charlie Byrd Jardis 20347 Campbell; Gene Bertoncini (g); Keter Betts (b); Chuck Redd (d). 04.
Contrary to appearances here, Campbell is an extremely prolific recording artist. Most of his work, however, is on very small labels. The Challenge disc is a modestly paced standards set in the main. Campbell and his sidemen are in no hurry and certainly don't want to set the studio on fire. It could probably do with a bit more urgency, but he's a harmonically intelligent player and there's plenty to listen to, though nothing quite plays out long enough. Campbell throws Wayne Shorter's 'Fall' into the middle of Trioing, which gives a relatively conventional set a bit more interest. Again, though, the playing is what counts and there are fine, full-length versions of 'You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To' and 'Angel Eyes'. The Byrd date is almost too politely respectful, though no one can complain that the two guitarists (Bertoncini playing acoustic) aren't absolutely in the right spirit and fully equipped for the challenge. It's all just a bit tame.

Candido (Camero) (born 1921)

PERCUSSION

Born in Havana, he became – after Chano Pozo – the best-known Latin percussionist of his day.

(*) Thousand Finger Man /  Beautiful Blue Note 22664 / 80730 Candido; Pat Russo, James Sedlar (t); Alan Raph (btb); Joe Grimm (ss, f, picc); Frank Anderson (org, p); David Spinozza (g); Jerry Jemmott, Chuck Rainey (b); Herb Lovelle (d). 9/69; 10/70.
Though a hugely influential and hyperactive figure through the '50s and '60s, Candido's brilliance on other leaders' dates rarely transferred to his own records. These were formerly released on Solid State. Candido's congas are always infectious, but on Thousand Finger Man they are set against a poppy background that has no real individuality and the effect isn't to spotlight the leader but rather to swamp him. The choice of material is also odd, with music from the movie Lady in Cement out of place, though 'Jump Back', 'Come On Choo-Choo Train' and 'Soul Limbo' are all soulful and quite effective. The material on Beautiful looks less promising – with 'New World In The Morning' rubbing up against things by Richie Havens, Gamble & Huff and, as on the previous record, Stax favourites Booker T And The MGs – but the playing by Candido's regular band is very much better and the sound is far more coherent. The conga man's best work is certainly elsewhere, but these are worth sampling.

Conte Candoli (1927–2001)

TRUMPET

Born in Mishawaka, Indiana, the 'Count' toured with big bands from the late '40s and moved to California in 1954, where he became a fixture (with elder brother Pete, another trumpeter) until his death.

 Modern Sounds From The West Coast Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10166 Candoli; Harry Edison (t); Bob Enevoldsen (btb, ts); John Graas (fr hn); Charlie Mariano, Herb Geller (as); Jimmy Giuffre (cl, ts, bs); Marty Paich, Gerald Wiggins, Lorraine Geller, Hank Jones (p); Howard Roberts, Barry Galbraith (g); Monty Budwig, Curtis Counce, Milt Hinton, Joe Mondragon (b); Stan Levey, Osie Johnson, Larry Bunker (d). 54–56.

* Coast To Coast Fresh Sound FSRCD 384 2CD Candoli; Bob Winn (as); Ira Sullivan, Bill Holman (ts); Gene Esposito, Claude Williamson, Lou Levy, Hank Jones (p); Barry Galbraith (g); Milt Hinton, Leroy Vinnegar, Chubby Jackson, Max Bennett (b); Tony Papa, Stan Levey, Lawrence Marable, Osie Johnson (d). 3/54–6/56.

 Jazz Structures Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD10132 Candoli; Frank Rosolino (tb); Buddy Collette, Bud Shank (as, f); Bob Cooper, Bill Perkins (ts); Dick Shreve, Joe Castro (p); Victor Feldman (vib, p); Larry Bunker (vib); Howard Rumsey, Monty Budwig, Red Callender (b); Max Roach, Stan Levey (d). 57–60.

He was one of the great West Coast brassmen, though he rarely helmed his own dates and some of these have been reattributed to him. Modern Sounds brings together two LPs that were issued without credit as Best From The West, a sort of extension of Leonard Feather's blindfold test concept: good, solid West Coast blowing, with the bonus of four tracks from a Candoli quintet date from 1956. Coast To Coast is the best compilation of his '50s work. It opens with a rare pair of tracks for the obscure Chance label, then includes the complete Bethlehem quartet session of November 1954, and material with Holman and Levy, once issued as West Coast Wailers. Conte's Dizzy influence shows through in powerhouse solos which still keep hold of a cooler elegance. There's a needless duplication of tracks on Modern Sounds but otherwise a fine reissue, with some excellent tenor from Holman.

Jazz Structures also includes an album called Drummin' The Blues, but neither was a Candoli date, even though he plays on every track. The Drummin' tracks have Rosolino, Candoli and either Perkins or Cooper in the front line, with Levey and Roach sharing drum duties. A decent blow, unlike Jazz Structures, which is stiff West Coast–Third Stream, sort of.

 Fascinating Rhythm Fresh Sound FSRCD 311 Candoli; Pete Candoli (t, flhn); Lou Levy (p); Joe Diorio (g); Fred Atwood (b); John Dentz (d). 11/78.

This rescues a couple of sessions made for the Dobre label, one with brother Pete as sole horn, the other with a two-trumpet front line. Pete has been less visible as a soloist than his brother over the years, but it's a real pleasure to hear them go at a bop chestnut like 'Ah-Leu-Cha' and shine it into something special, hard and glowing.

 The Complete Phoenix Recordings Volumes 1–6 Woofy WPCD121/6 Candoli; Carl Fontana (tb); Bill Anderson (p); Warren Jones (b); Robb Wainwright (d). 5/93.

Bob Lorenz recorded this group over three nights at the Royal Palms Inn in Phoenix. Having sat on the tapes for several years and with both horn-players gone in the interim, he decided to release everything played: a preposterous indulgence that's the privilege of the independent-label owner. That said, the music doesn't really benefit from the warts-and-all presentation and the set's claim on the uncommitted listener is slight; discs are available separately. The biggest problem is with the rhythm section, who offer a perfunctory backdrop; Anderson is very ordinary indeed, a bad shortcoming when he gets as much solo space as the leaders. It's a tribute to Candoli and Fontana that they salvage as much as they do. Count tends to wander off-mic, but his playing is full of felicities; Fontana outdoes him, with a huge sound and a rich fund of ideas.

() Portrait Of A Count / () Conte-nuity Fresh Sound FSRCD 5015 / 5028 Candoli; Jan Lundgren (p); Chuck Berghofer (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 9/96; 10/99.

Lundgren made something of a speciality of dates like this; he gives the trumpeter unselfish support on both, while bass and drums have pedigrees considerably longer than their arms. The leader's phrasing is a drop more deliberate and hefty than before, but what a gorgeously clear sound he gets, abetted by producer Dick Bank and engineer Jim Mooney. Conte-nuity salutes 12 different trumpeters: interpretations which are 'not intended to replicate the original recordings', it says rather admonishingly on the sleeve. They're certainly in the spirit: Conte gets the huge weight and pitch of Cootie Williams just right on 'Do Nothin'', as well as Sweets's muted beep on 'Jive At Five'. It's Candoli underneath, though, and he paces himself sweetly, a voice from the glittering age of jazz improvising.

Also, in brief:

(*) Double Or Nothing Fresh Sound FSRCD 197. 2/57.

A Howard Rumsey date (b), co-credited to Conte and Lee Morgan (t), though neither man gets much space to shine.

(*) Live At Capozzoli's Woofy WPCD 85. 10/98.

A disappointing club date from the twilight years.

Pete Candoli (born 1923)

TRUMPET

The elder Candoli brother isn't as well-known and is more sparsely recorded, but early impressions of him in the Herman band suggested he, and not Conte, would be the star.

 From The Top / The Candoli Brothers Progressive 7122 Candoli; Conte Candoli (t); Lou Levy (p); Joe Diorio (g), Fred Atwood (b); John Dentz (d). 77.

Nice to see Pete get his moment in the spotlight. These were made for the Dobre label, the first a trumpet-and-rhythm date on mostly traditional and standard material, the second a sextet with brother Conte and the guitarist added. Inevitably, it's a more appealing and enterprising performance, with nice reads of 'Take The "A" Train', 'Blue'n'Boogie' and 'Ah-Leu-Cha', which mystifyingly is credited to Pete on the sleeve. Hope he stayed out of Miles Davis's way! Stylistically, he's perhaps closer to Miles than to Dizzy, and there's less of Conte's originality in the sound, but some fine features from both.

Ila Cantor

GUITAR

Gifted young player out of Brooklyn who was playing semi-professionally when a high-school junior. Influences range far and wide, from Ornette Coleman and Charlie Haden (she also plays double bass) to Frank Zappa. Her rockier side is expressed in the Trapezoids group.

 Mother Nebula Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 288 Cantor; Fredrik Carlquist (ts); Tom Warburton (b); Joe Smith (d). 3/06.
Perhaps only Bill Frisell sounded this distinctive and different when he first came on the scene. Cantor is a bright new talent who's already making an impact. The shortcomings of her debut CD are those of all debut CDs, a desire to pack in too many ideas at once. The title-track and the following 'Mmm ...' usefully establish the yin–yang of ideas and styles, a rock-derived momentum that seems to depend on energy over content, and then something deeper and more lyrically inflected that, we suspect, will become more evident as the years go by. 'Rock', 'Man vs Robot' and 'Before', 'And After' dip in and out of Ornette's Prime Time idiom, but with great originality. The sound could be cleaner and Carlquist is mixed all wrong for this material, but a very auspicious coming out.

Patrice Caratini (born 1946)

DOUBLE BASS

Hugely experienced player and bandleader, who began his career working with Georges Arvanitas, Martial Solal and Slide Hampton. Also formed a duo with Marc Fosset but is better known for his ambitious large ensembles.

 Onztet Label Bleu LBLC 6509 Caratini; André Villéger (t); Denis Léloup (tb); Patrice Petitdidier (frhn); Juan José Mosalini (p); Gustavo Beytelman (bandoneon); Marc Ducret (g); Michel Delaporte (p); Philippe Mace (d). 3/87.

 Hard Scores Label Bleu LBLC 6602/6603 2CD Caratini; large ensemble. 97.

(*) Darling Nellie Gray Label Bleu LBLC 6625 Caratini; André Villéger , Stéphane Guillaume , Christophe Monniot, Claude Egéa , Pierre Drevet (t); Dennis Léloup (tb); Patrice Petitdidier (frhn); François Thuillier , David Chevallier (reeds); Alain Jean-Marie (p); Thomas Grimmonprez (d). 6/99.
Caratini is something of a buried treasure. Not a name widely known outside France, he has carved a thoroughly impressive career making music that explores the history of jazz in the context of other traditions and sounds. A trio with Argentine musicians Beytelman and Mosalini was a huge step in this direction, but it was the creation of the Onztet in 1980 which helped Caratini carve his distinctive sound.

These are all very fine albums, utterly unlike anything else in their field, with voicings that owe something to Solal and to Stravinsky. They also helped to bring Ducret and Deloup to wider attention. Hard to pick out individual contributions, though Beytelman's writing and playing make an important contribution throughout.

Thomas 'Mutt' Carey (1891–1948)

TRUMPET

He played with Joe Oliver and others in the 1910s, but his main association was with Kid Ory, with whom he worked in California from 1919 and again during the '40s revival.

 Portrait Of A New Orleans Master Upbeat 176 Carey; & His New Yorkers; Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band; Hociel Thomas (p, v). 45–47.

 Mutt Carey And Lee Collins American Music AMCD-72 Carey; Lee Collins (t); Hociel Thomas (p, v); Lovie Austin, J. H. Shayne (p); Johnny Lindsay (b); Baby Dodds (d); Bertha 'Chippie' Hill (v). 2–8/46.
Inevitably, much of Carey's early work went undocumented, but he was still around for the revival and these sides give a reasonable representation of his sound. The Upbeat compilation includes some fine players – Ory, Jimmy Archey, Minor Hall, Joe Darensbourg, Albert Nicholas – but much of the material, as on the American Music selection, is accompaniments to classic blues singer Hociel Thomas, another who had been recently plucked from obscurity. She's in surprisingly good voice, but Carey, unfortunately, sometimes sounds uncomfortable and hesitant. There's nice interplay on 'Go Down Sunshine', but it's the unsung Collins who often sounds better on his eight tracks. Good, rough music.

Mario Caribé

DOUBLE BASS

Born in São Paolo, Caribé played bossa nova guitar before switching to bass. As a member of the Heartbreakers band, he researched Duke Ellington's music for many years. He moved to Scotland and is now a stalwart of the jazz scene there.

 Bacuris Caber 025 Caribé; Martin Kershaw (ss, as); Kari McKenna (f); Brian Kellock (p); Malcolm MacFarlane (g); John Rae (d); Edmundo Carneiro (perc). 4 & 7/02.
The firm bass-figures that lead into 'Time To Be Brave' (one of nine originals on this debut) offer the best evidence of Caribe's qualities as an accompanist. The tune itself is not complicated, but indicative of a clean-limbed, supple approach. The band here produces a light, attractively swinging sound. The leader plays rhythm guitar on the opening cut; otherwise it's MacFarlane on both acoustic and electric guitars. Kellock is his wise, reliable self. The flute/percussion combination offers a distinctive timbre, while Kershaw gives a light blues edge to most of the cuts: a fine version of 'Garota De Ipanema' and two other non-originals, 'Isabel E A Chuva' by Mario's father Alberto and the closing 'Cravo E Canela' by Milton Nascimento.

Rüdiger Carl (born 1944)

CLARINET, TENOR SAXOPHONE, PIANO, CONCERTINA, ACCORDION, PERCUSSION

He became involved in the late-'60s free scene as a saxophonist but increasingly turned his attention to the accordion and sometimes the clarinet. Often duets with Irène Schweizer and Hans Reichel and in the '80s formed the COWWS Quintet.

(*) Buben ... Plus FMP CD 78 Carl; Hans Reichel (vn, daxophone). 5/78–2/94.

(*) Solo FMP CD 86 Carl (acc, cl solo). 1/93–7/95.

 Grooves 'n' Loops FMP CD 59 Carl; Irène Schweizer (p, perc); Philipp Wachsmann (vn, vla, elec); Stephan Wittwer (g); Jay Oliver (b). 1/93.

 Book / Virtual COWWS FMP OWN-90007/9 3CD As above, except add Maarten Altena (c); Lol Coxhill (ss, v); Hans Reichel (vn); Alexander von Schlippenbach (p); Mayo Thompson (g, v); Lars Rudolph, Joe Sachse (g); Matthias Bauer, Johnny Mbizo Dyani, Arjen Gorter (b); Louis Moholo, Paul Lovens, Gunter Sommer, Sven-Ake Johansson, Han Bennink (d); Andrew Unruh (tubing); Lupa Herz (v). 10/77–11/96.

His early appearances were as a typically fraught and scattershot saxman in the FMP roll-call, but he had switched to concertina and clarinet by the time of the splendidly bizarre Buben ... Plus, which reissues a 1978 LP with a dozen later duets. On the latter pieces, he switches to accordion and Reichel drops his violin in favour of the daxophone, which resembles a vocalized fiddle. The improvisations bridge wheezing and scraping with lovely singing tones and minimalist counterpoint, all done with enduring spontaneity.

The solo album may be for specialist tastes, though that might be true of all of Carl's music. There is a 1995 live performance at Frankfurt's Adler-Werke, an enormous, abandoned factory space, and a set of 18 'miniatures' for solo accordion from two years earlier. Carl finds a blend of intimacy and vastness in the huge acoustic and makes his clarinet sound like a foghorn on 'Hungen 609'.

The COWWS Quintet, to which the next one and one-third albums should properly be credited, seems to be Carl's band; the instrumentation and temper suggest a chamber ensemble. There are some surprisingly conventional directions, with a subtext of civilized anarchy, best exemplified by Wittwer's solo 'Gunst I', which starts as a string of funk clichés and ends in sonic mayhem.

If Carl has been neglected by recordings in recent years, the enormous Book/Virtual COWWS made up for it with what amounts to a scrapbook of his progress over 20 years. Jump-cutting between group and solo work, live and studio, private rehearsal tracks, this is the autobiography of a charming extremist. There's nothing else in this book quite like Monk's 'Mysterioso' set to a chess commentary spoken by Thompson (who does follow the melody).

The COWWS disc (number three) is entirely different from what the quintet had done before. Carl says that he has seen the group as something 'combining improvised music with a "cool" head and a certain feeling of distance'. For this recording, he went to extraordinary lengths to crystallize that aim, devising a system of numerical and diagrammatic notation which invited the musicians to play blocks and segments, each with a manner described in no more than three words ('icy', 'very heavy movement', and so on). Each musician worked alone in the studio for some two hours, directed by Carl and a stopwatch. Six pieces were then made out of the overlaid parts, a set of virtual improvisations, hence the title. He has recorded since as part of Blank, but no further releases under his own name, which seems a pity.

Frank Carlberg

PIANO

Born in Finland but more latterly based in the US, where he teaches and performs with the Either/Orchestra, Steve Lacy and others.

 Blind Drive Accurate 4400 Carlberg; Ben Street (b); Michael Sarin, George Schuller (d). 3 & 11/92.

() The Crazy Woman Accurate 4401 Carlberg; Chris Cheek (ts); Ben Street (b); Kenny Wollesen (d); Christine Correa (v). 10/95.

Carlberg often seems to reference Monk, as he does explicitly on the debut trio record, which includes versions of 'Monk's Mood' and 'Trinkle Tinkle'; the inclusion of Herbie Nichols's '23 Skidoo' points to a less obvious influence. Some have likened his playing to Ran Blake's, but it is more abstract and, on occasion, more explosive than that. Blind Drive is disjointed, perhaps because it was recorded with slightly different groups over a period of time, but also because Carlberg's rhythmic sense is so unusual, often playing counter to the beat. The Crazy Woman marks the beginning of a long association with Christine Correa, whose vocals are mannered and sometimes downright strange, though the basic thrust of these downbeat originals is still fascinating.

 Variations On A Summer Day Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 083 As above, except add Curtis Hasselbring (tb); Andrew d'Angelo (as, bcl); Chris Speed (ts, cl). 9/00.

 In The Land Of Art Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD Carlberg; Andrew Rathburn (ss); Chris Cheek (ts); John Hebert (b); Michael Sarin (d); Christine Correa (v). 05.

 State Of The Union Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 274 As above, except add George Garzone, Paul Lichter (v). 06.

Inspired by Wallace Stevens's poem of the same name, and being by Stevens, music is an important part of the imagery on Variations. With Correa on hand to deal with the text, Carlberg and his ensemble aren't required to do much picture-painting, though this is more decorative playing than on previous records. There's also not quite enough of Carlberg himself, who seems to get lost in the mix on occasion. That said, the later sections are excellent, and while the tracks are easily enjoyed on their own, the whole sequence has an attractive logic.

Not everyone would agree that Stevens is an infinitely better poet than the Beats, but at least their work seems to have some natural affinity to jazz and Carlberg capitalizes very effectively on that on the second Fresh Sound. There are poems by Jack Kerouac, Kenneth Rexroth and Robert Creeley, alongside material by Gertrude Stein (not strictly a Beat!) and the more obscure Anselm Hollo and Sébastien Chamfort. Cheek and the leader play well enough to keep interest stoked, but there is something ineffably dated about the concept.

State Of The Union represents another bite at the same range of material. Garzone and Lichter are present as speakers on the title-track only. Otherwise, it's very much the same formula, but steadily refined. Carlberg and Cheek have devised a powerful empathy that seems to make as much of their musical differences – the pianist's dry avant-gardism, the saxophonist's hard-bop roots – as it does their obviously kindred spirits. Correa has settled into the routine nicely and now sounds more natural.

Judy Carmichael (born 1952)

PIANO

Encouraged to play ragtime by her grandfather – she later did so professionally for Disney – she then turned to stride.

 Pearls Jazzology 204 Carmichael; Warren Vaché (c); Howard Alden (g); Red Callender (b). 9/85.

Apparently her grandfather offered $50 to the first of the youngsters who could play 'Maple Leaf Rag'. It's a delightful story, but doesn't quite explain how a young woman turned to such an old form. She's a sparkling technician, not too politely correct for stuff like 'Mule Walk Stomp' but able enough to give the Jelly Roll Morton title-track an air of gravitas, which it deserves. The group obviously enjoys playing with her and she's solidly backed all the way. The Jazzology reissue – it was originally on Statiras – adds a number of alternate takes, which might give the impression of listening to the same album twice, if they weren't so imaginatively varied. She has other records on C&D, but they might be hard to find.

Ian Carr (born 1933)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Perhaps best known as Miles Davis's biographer and thus considered to be a Miles clone on trumpet. In reality, he anticipated some of Miles's electric music with his own group Nucleus. Began his career with brother Mike and made his name in a group co-led with saxophonist Don Rendell.

 Elastic Rock / We'll Talk About It Later BGO BGOCD47 2CD Carr; Brian Smith (ss, ts, f); Karl Jenkins (ob, bs, p); Chris Spedding (g, bouzouki); Jeff Clyne (b); John Marshall (d). 1 & 9/70.

 Solar Plexus / Belladonna BGO BGOCD64 2CD Carr; Harry Beckett, Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Brian Smith (ss, ts, f); Tony Roberts (ts, bcl): Karl Jenkins (ob, bs, p); Gordon Beck, Dave Macrae (ky); Keith Winter (syn); Allan Holdsworth, Chris Spedding (g); Roy Babbington, Jeff Clyne, Ron Mathewson (b); Clive Thacker (d); Chris Karan, Trevor Tomkins (perc). 12/70, 7/72.

 Live in Bremen Cuneiform RUNE 173/174 Carr; Brian Smith (ss, ts, f, perc); Karl Jenkins (ob, p); Ray Russell (g); Roy Babbington (b); John Marshall (d). 5/71.

 Labyrinth / Roots BGO BGOCD567 2CD Carr; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Brian Smith (ss, ts); Tony Coe (ts, cl); Gordon Beck, Dave Macrae (p); Jocelyn Pitchen (g); Paddy Kingsland (syn); Roger Sutton (b); Tony Levin, Clive Thacker (d); Aureo de Souza, Trevor Tomkins (perc); Norma Winstone, Joy Yates (v). 3 & 8/73.

 Under The Sun / Snakeships Etcetera BGO BGOCD568 2CD Carr; Bob Bertles (as, bs, bcl, f); Gordon Beck, Geoff Castle (p, ky); Jocelyn Pitchen, Ken Shaw (g); Roger Sutton (b); Roger Sellers, Bryan Spring (d); Kieran White (v). 3/74, 75.

Having recorded widely with Michael Garrick and Neil Ardley and as co-leader of the warmly remembered Rendell–Carr Quintet, Carr began to carve his own style and reputation with Nucleus. Recorded on the cusp of the '70s, Elastic Rock was a perfect description of what evolved over the next ten years. Still jazz-based in essence but borrowing the energy of progressive rock, Nucleus produced a string of admired records that varied surprisingly little in quality or in basic conception despite the changing personnel. Jenkins, now a classical composer, contributed much material to the first two albums, including 'Torrid Zone' on Elastic Rock and 'Song For The Bearded Lady' and 'Lullaby For A Lonely Child' on the sequel. 'Earth Mother' was collectively created. Much of this material appears on the well-recorded live German set. Solar Plexus introduced other horns, including fellow trumpeters Harry Beckett and Kenny Wheeler, and heard alongside Belladonna makes it clear that Carr was never tempted to move over to rock playing in any way. The Miles-like touches (soft harmonic slurs, dramatic stabs and out-of-tempo fills) are ever more evident and possibly now do owe some influence to what was happening on the other side of the Atlantic, but the conception is still rigorously Carr's own. The strong presence of Beckett and Wheeler, and Beck on Belladonna, can't be overlooked, but Carr seems to have had the strength of mind to allow other imaginations loose on his canvas.

The swirling electric piano sound of Beck and Macrae (the latter more of a colourist) on Labyrinth could have been intrusive but Carr, with engineer Roger Wake, seemed to be taking more of a hand at the controls and the production on the two 1973 albums is much crisper and more spacious. The writing was also pretty much Carr's responsibility now. Roots was the weaker of the pair.

The 1974 albums showed some slackening of pace, though Nucleus had been in the studios on average every six months. The addition of vocals on the earlier dates, with the magnificent Winstone acting as an extra horn, was not so successful on Under The Sun and the group as a whole seemed to lack the elastic coherence of the earlier line-ups. Snakeships Etcetera is undoubtedly exciting, but it has lost some of the subtlety of earlier discs.

 Out Of The Long Dark / Old Heartland BGO BGOCD420 2CD Carr; Brian Smith (ss, ts, bcl, f, af, perc); Phil Todd (ss, bcl); Mark Wood (g); Neil Ardley, Geoff Castle (ky); Steve Berry, Mo Foster, Dill Katz, Billy Kristian (b); John Marshall, Roger Sellers (d); Richard Burgess, Chris Fletcher (perc); Kreisler String Orchestra. 11/78, 4–5/88.

Nucleus seemed to be in abeyance towards the end of the decade; Alleycat and In Flagrante Delicto are noted below. Carr was working the pan-European United Jazz + Rock Ensemble and began releasing albums under his own name. Out Of The Long Dark has a meditative seriousness that was not new to his playing, but had certainly not been foregrounded quite this prominently before. The second album of the pair raised some worries of dwindling resolve, but the integration of the Kreisler String Orchestra is absolute and the playing is as taut and tense as ever, even on a rather muzzy recording.

Later, health problems, combined with writing and broadcast work, restricted his activities, though his appearances for other leaders were always revelatory.

Also, in brief:

 Alleycat / Direct Hits BGO BGOCD 565. 75, 76.
An average studio album plus a compilation; odd combo.

 In Flagrante Delicto BGO BGOCD 599. 2/77.
Recorded live in Düren, Germany. Nice playing, decent recording.

 The Pretty Redhead: BBC Sessions 71/82 Hux 038. 3/71, 10/82.
Recorded for overseas transmission (71) and for Charles Fox's BBC Radio 3 programme (82): two generations of Nucleus.

 Sounds And Sweet Airs (That Give Delight And Hurt Not) Celestial Harmonies 13064. 5/92.

Atmospheric Shakespeare-inspired duos recorded with John Taylor (org) in Southwark Cathedral, where the poet's brother is buried.

Mike Carr (born 1937)

ORGAN, PIANO, VIBES

Born in South Shields, Carr was playing jazz in the Newcastle area from 1960. He moved to London and led several trios, eventually backing Ronnie Scott in the early '70s, and still plays in many small-group situations. A renowned expert on Hammond organs.

 Bebop From The East Coast 1960/1962 Birdland MC596 Carr; Ian Carr (t); Gary Cox (ts); John McLaughlin (g); Midge Pike, John O'Carroll, Spike Heatley (b); Johnny Butts, Ronnie Stephenson, Jackie Denton (d). 60–62.

A faded but lively memento of the Newcastle scene in the early '60s: monochrome hard bop of surprisingly vivid integrity, Cox's tenor the outstanding voice in a number of Carr groups, often with brother Ian on trumpet. The notes suggest a comparison with the Brown–Roach group, which isn't so far-fetched. They must have been even better live – although a few live tracks (one stray one from 1967 with young man McLaughlin on guitar) are actually no stronger than the studio ones.

 The Incredible Two-Man Orchestra MacJazz 010 Carr; Benny Waters (as, ts, cl, v). 80.

Waters was a spring chicken of 78 when this live session was taped and he romps through a familiar standards programme like someone half his age. The vocals are attractively throaty and the clarinet-playing sounds like a discovery from a past age, but it's really Carr who dominates with swirling chases on the faster numbers and a slow, emphysemic totter when the pace drops.

 Good Times And The Blues Cargogold CGCD 191 Carr; Dick Morrissey (ts); Jim Mullen (g); Mark Taylor (d). 3/93.

Three British venerables (Taylor isn't quite as senior) having fun on blues and bop lines and getting a good record out of it. While the writing is merely functional, the solos work up a rare head of steam, with Morrissey and Mullen eschewing the politely funky licks of their jazz-funk past. Carr likes to put the Hammond on a rasping, trebly setting and it gives some of his lightning runs an agreeably spine-tingling quality. An outside producer might have given Taylor a superior drum sound.

 Do It! Birdland MC 598 Carr; Guy Barker (t); Peter King (as); Dick Morrissey, Danny Moss, Ronnie Scott, Don Weller (ts); Victor Feldman (vib); Robert Ahwai, Tim Cansfield, Jim Mullen (g); Dave Collins, Marva Hicks, Janet Powell, Janice Harrison, Billy Mitchell (v). 98.

Rollicking good stuff from arguably the best and most swinging organ player outside the United States (Oscar Peterson agreed) and some cuts that made it onto black radio Stateside, a rare accolade. As delivered by Canadian actor Billy Mitchel, 'Jazz Rap' is hysterical, every jazz nickname you ever heard squeezed into one song. Great work from Morrissey and some typically good stuff from Ronnie Scott, who thought Mike was the greatest, 'stoned or sober'.

 Stevenson's Rocket Birdland MC502 Carr; Steve Fishwick (t); Steve Kaldestad (ts); Robert Ahwai (g); Matt Fishwick (d); Simon Morton (perc). 8/02.

A fan's notes on hard bop. Carr wrote ten of the 11 tunes and you can see why he calls this the Blue Note Band. Young Steve Fishwick cops licks off Lee and Freddie while twin brother Matt stokes the traps. Kaldestad is a cooler head. Carr does his usual but adds piano and vibes too. Ahwai adds a few guitar parts late in. Feeling the spirit!

Richard Carr

VIOLIN, VIOLA

Fine swing fiddler with a noticeable Stuff Smith influence but also a modernist side.

 Just The Two Of Us Audiophile 263 Carr; Howard Alden (g). 88–89.

 String Things Savant 2010 Carr; Bucky Pizzarelli (g). 7/97.

Oddly attributed to Carr alone, the Audiophile reissue is a set of pleasant, well-mannered standards performances, with Bud Powell's 'Parisian Thoroughfare' somewhat unexpected in amongst the show tunes. One looks for a bit more fire than this, something along the lines of Stuff Smith or Joe Venuti with Eddie Lang, but there's more on subsequent listens than a cursory audition might reveal. The Savant is just as oddly presented, with a lipsticked mouth pouting at guitar frets, like some Ohio Players record. The pace is perhaps a bit warmer with Pizzarelli, and Carr puts in a couple of original themes, 'Strictly Business' and 'St Elsewhere', that suggest he might do better airing his own material.

 In Walked Art /  Biosphere Leo CD LR 401 / 456 Carr; Randy Kem (sax on Walked only); Mike Nord (g, elec); Art Maddox (p); Georg Hoffman (d, perc). 04; 06.

We remain unsure whether this Richard Carr is the same guy as the one above. The style is definitely now much more radical, exploring some boundary between jazz and free improvisation. There are other discs by the Carr/Nord/Hoffman trio, but they are on small-circulation labels. The music here, with Carr doubling on viola and getting a rich, vocalized sound from it, is curiously affecting. Though Maddox and Kem are guests, the former is more securely integrated into the group. However, on this showing, and the evidence of other trio dates, Nord's electronics provide sufficient soundscape to support this curiously uplifting music without other participants. If it is the same guy, a remarkable change of direction.

Terri Lyne Carrington (born 1965)

DRUMS

A prodigy who played professionally in her early teens, she is infrequently sighted as a leader, but still gets calls from today's principals.

 Jazz Is A Spirit ACT 9408 Carrington; Wallace Roney, Terence Blanchard (t); Katisse Buckingham (ss); Gary Thomas (ss, ts, f); Greg Kurstin (ky); Herbie Hancock (p); Kevin Eubanks, Paul Bollenback, Jeff Richman, Danny Robinson (g); Malcolm-Jamal Warner (b, v); Bob Hurst (b); Darryl Jackson, Ed Barguiarena (perc). 2/01.

* Structure ACT 9427 Carrington; Greg Osby (as); Adam Rogers (g); Jimmy Haslip (b). 11/03.

Real Life Story, made for Verve in 1988, disappeared quickly. The belated follow-up was made quickly and rather ad hoc and if the writing is sometimes chilly and thin on melody, the playing is of a very high calibre. Hancock is on three straight-ahead tracks and proves that he remains an immense creative force when he's set a decent challenge. Thomas walks his usual line between gothic and extravagant and things like 'Journey Of Now' and the disarmingly sweet 'Princess' work as composition as well as food for improvisers. A taped conversation between Carrington and Jo Jones is set to a drum fusillade.

If it wasn't the classic she has in her, Structure comes close. Stronger material all round: Haslip, Osby and Rogers all contribute good tunes, with some typically inscrutable Osbyisms balancing the guitarist's unabashed lyricism. Carrington puts in three pieces and the slow 'Fire' is a terrific set-piece for the band. No waste, nothing crowded – an outstanding example of modern jazz.

Bill Carrothers (born 1965)

PIANO

Raised in Minneapolis, he worked locally as a teenager but moved to NY in 1988.

(*) Swing Sing Songs Birdology 8573-86401 Carrothers; Nicolas Thys (b); Dre Pallemaerts (d). 5/00.

Carrothers is a class act, endowed with a formidable breadth of experience, and able to fit in with most contemporary jazz situations. That's often a problem when helming your own dates, but these records aren't short on confidence or ideas. There are a couple of earlier things, but it all hits its stride with this one. Carrothers seeks out material which even the likes of Mehldau hasn't thought about – 'Call Me Irresponsible'? Gordon Jenkins's 'Blue Evening'? Keith Jarrett is a spectre at this feast, in part because Carrothers has picked up the older pianist's annoying singalong habit, but it's Jarrett's acute melodic focus and concentration on line which Bill follows. When he does 'Donna Lee', it's tremulously slow, whereas Barry Harris's 'Reets And I' is fast bebop done teasingly straight. The music works a truce between rough-and-ready (nice 'live' studio sound) and absolute finesse, and it feels like a real trio at work.

(*) Ghost Ships Sketch SKE 333030 Carrothers; Anton Denner (ss, as, ts); Bill Stewart (d). 9/02.

Another remarkable trio and record, with Carrothers helming material that seems to speak of mysterious past times, the sea and those who sail on her. There are three tracks here titled 'Ghost Ship' and there's also 'God Bless America' and 'The Navy Hymn'. Carrothers unearths another tune that everyone but him has forgotten in 'Your Hit Parade', and their version of Shorter's 'Water Babies', all cool lines and spartan dialogue, clinches a concept that feels both very present and attractively elusive. Denner gets into the spirit on his three horns, baleful at times, wistful at others.

 Armistice 1918 Sketch SKE 333043 2CD Carrothers; Mark Henderson (cbcl); Matt Turner (clo); Drew Gress (b); Bill Stewart (d); Jay Epstein (perc); Peg Carrothers, Knob St Choir (v). 6/03.

One can't fault Carrothers for ambition or originality. Here he creates a panorama of music from the First World War, everything from music hall songs such as 'I'm Afraid To Come Home In The Dark' to the made-to-measure patriotism of 'America I Love You' and 'The Rose Of No Man's Land'. Bill's wife Peg handles principal vocal duties, while the unusual choice of cello and contrabass clarinet play the music respectfully, imbued perhaps with Carrothers's own passion for history. Improvisatory material fills in the remaining spaces. Initially, we were in no-man's-land as far as final judgement is concerned, but it improves with knowing.

(*) Shine Ball Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 242 Carrothers; Gordon Johnson (b); Dave King (d, waterphone). 12/03–12/04.

This is a complete contrast to the above, 14 improvisations, pure and unadorned. Carrothers's sense of form prevents the threesome from getting into the remotest kind of free playing, and several of the pieces sound as if themes have emerged and blossomed within the space of three or four minutes. But this is some of the hardest kind of 'freedom' to achieve. King, a thrilling drummer in any situation, delivers some witty and accomplished playing, as does Johnson.

 I Love Paris Pirouet PIT3012 Carrothers; Nicolas Thys (b); Dre Pallemaerts (d). 5/04.

 Keep Your Sunny Side Up Pirouet PIT3021 Carrothers; Ben Street (b); Ari Hoenig (d). 2/06.

Though they appeared as a pair, these were actually recorded some way apart and, as is equally obvious above, with different groups. Not so obvious when you listen to the records. Carrothers has an exceptionally strong presence, and while there's a certain democracy in these line-ups, it's him you listen to. Take 'I Love Paris' itself, a slowed-down, almost brooding thing that seems to derive a certain bitter melancholy from the preceding 'Stars Fell On Alabama'. So commanding is the mood that one might almost grudge Thys his brief solo. At moments, Carrothers might be mistaken for Paul Bley, except those brown-edged chords sound like no one but himself and the little harmonic slippages are nicely individual.

You notice the latter most when he plays Monk, a cheeky 'Evidence' on the later record, wedged between the originals 'Salty Peanuts' and 'Church Of The Open Air'. The time-feel is very relaxed, but springy and capable of rapid transition into more abrasive tempos. The choice of material is intriguing. Though there's a nod to more recent pop in Joni Mitchell's 'Roses Blue', Carrothers clearly loves the old songs. His approach to 'Keep Your Sunny Side Up' is playfully abstract, sounding the tune but plucking at its edges until it falls apart in a lovely shimmer; the reprise is even better. 'Brother, Can You Spare A Dime?' on the other record has real poignancy and a sting of anger. I Love Paris is perhaps the more satisfyingly coherent of the two. Also maybe the more autumnal. Both are lovely, though.

Also, in brief:

 After Hours: Volume 4 Go Jazz 6037. N.D.

These trios with Billy Peterson (b) and Kenny Horst (d) are nice but one-paced.

 Duets With Bill Stewart Birdology FDM 37002. 6/99.

A long-standing association that sounds too much like a private conversation.

Benny Carter (1907–2003)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, TRUMPET, CLARINET, VOICE

By 1928 he was already arranging for various NY bands, and leading his own groups. In 1936, he was staff arranger for the BBC Dance Orchestra in London. Back in the USA, he led his own big band, 1939–41, but cut back to a sextet before moving to Hollywood in 1945, where he wrote for film and TV, while continuing to make jazz records. A dapper saxophonist, excellent trumpeter and an arranger with few peers, he was a last link to a jazz age now gone.

(*) Benny Carter 1929–1933 Classics 522 Carter; Louis Bacon, Shad Collins, Leonard Davis, Bill Dillard, Frankie Newton, Howard Scott, Bobby Stark, Rex Stewart (t); J. C. Higginbotham, Wilbur De Paris, George Washington, Dicky Wells (tb); Jimmy Harrison (tb, v); Howard Johnson (as); Don Redman (as, v); Wayman Carver (as, f); Chu Berry, Coleman Hawkins (ts); Horace Henderson, Red Rodriguez, Luis Russell, Fats Waller, Teddy Wilson (p); Benny Jackson, Lawrence Lucie (g); Richard Fulbright, Ernest 'Bass' Hill (b); John Kirby (b, bb); Cyrus St Clair (bb); Big Sid Catlett (d, vib); Kaiser Marshall, George Stafford (d); other personnel unidentified. 9/29–5/33.

(*) Benny Carter 1933–1936 Classics 530 Carter; Henry 'Red' Allen (t, v); Dick Clark, Leonard Davis, Bill Dillard, Max Goldberg, Otis Johnson, Max Kaminsky, Eddie Mallory, Tommy McQuater, Irving Randolph, Howard Scott, Russell Smith, Duncan Whyte (t); Ted Heath, Keg Johnson, Benny Morton, Bill Mulraney, Floyd O'Brien, Wilbur De Paris, Fred Robinson, George Washington, Dicky Wells (tb); Howard Johnson, Andy McDevitt (cl, as); Wayman Carver (cl, as, f); Glyn Pacque, E. O. Pogson, Russell Procope, Ben Smith (as); Coleman Hawkins (cl, ts); Chu Berry, Buddy Featherstonehaugh, Johnny Russell, Ben Webster (ts); Pat Dodd, Red Rodriguez, Teddy Wilson (p); George Elliott, Clarence Holiday, Lawrence Lucie (g); Al Burke, Ernest 'Bass' Hill, Elmer James (b); Big Sid Catlett, Ronnie Gubertini, Walter Johnson (d); Charles Holland (v). 5/33–4/36.

(*) Benny Carter 1936 Classics 541 Carter; Max Goldberg, Tommy McQuater, Duncan Whyte (t); Leslie Thompson (t, tb); Lew Davis, Ted Heath, Bill Mulraney (tb); Freddie Gardner, Andy McDevitt (cl, as); E. O. Pogson (as); Buddy Featherstonehaugh (ts); Pat Dodd, Billy Munn, Gene Rodgers (p); George Elliott, Albert Harris, Ivor Mairants (g); Al Burke, Wally Morris (b); George Elrick, Ronnie Gubertini (d). 4–10/36.

(*) Benny Carter 1937–1939 Classics 552 Carter; Jack Bulterman, Sam Dasberg, Rolf Goldstein, Tommy McQuater, Lincoln Mills, Joe Thomas, Leslie Thompson, George Van Helvoirt, George Woodlen, Cliff Woodridge (t); Jimmy Archey, Lew Davis, George Chisholm, Vic Dickenson, Bill Mulraney, Harry Van Oven, Marcel Thielemans (tb); Tyree Glenn (tb, vib); Freddy Gardner, Andy McDevitt, Andre Van der Ouderaa, Wim Poppink, Jimmy Williams (cl, as); Fletcher Allen, Carl Frye, James Powell, Louis Stephenson (as); Alix Combelle, Sal Doof, George Evans, Buddy Featherstonehaugh, Coleman Hawkins, Bertie King, Castor McCord, Ernie Powell, Jimmy Williams (ts); Eddie Heywood Jr, Freddy Johnson, Eddie Macaulay, Nich De Roy, York De Souza (p); Albert Harris, Ulysses Livingston, Django Reinhardt, Ray Webb (g); Len Harrison, Alvis Hayes, Wally Morris, Jack Pet (b); Al Craig, Kees Kranenburg, Robert Montmarche, Henry Morrison (d). 1/37–6/39.

* Benny Carter 1940–1941 Classics 631 Carter; Emmett Berry, Doc Cheatham, Bill Coleman, Roy Eldridge, Jonah Jones, Lincoln Mills, Sidney De Paris, Rostelle Reese, Russell Smith, Nathaniel Williams (t); Jimmy Archey, Joe Britton, Vic Dickenson, John McConnell, Benny Morton, Milton Robinson, Madison Vaughan (tb); Eddie Barefield, George Dorsey, Chauncey Haughton, Ernie Purce, Bill White (as); George James (as, bs); Georgie Auld, Alfred Gibson, Coleman Hawkins, George Irish, Fred Mitchell, Ernie Powell, Stafford Simon, Fred Williams (ts); Sonny White (p); Bernard Addison, Everett Barksdale, William Lewis, Ulysses Livingston, Herb Thomas (g); Hayes Alvis, Charles Drayton, John Kirby, Wilson Myers, Ted Sturgis (b); Big Sid Catlett, J. C. Heard, Yank Porter, Keg Purnell, Berisford Shepherd, Al Taylor (d); Roy Felton, Maxine Sullivan, Joe Turner, The Mills Brothers (v). 5/40–10/41.

Carter's charts, like his playing, are characteristically open-textured and softly bouncing, but seldom lightweight; though he had a particular feel for the saxophone section, and he pioneered a more modern approach to big-band reeds, his gifts extend throughout the orchestra. As a soloist, he developed in a direction rather different from that of Johnny Hodges. Carter's earliest recordings with the Chocolate Dandies and with McKinney's Cotton Pickers put considerable emphasis on his multi-instrumentalism. Set against trombonist Quentin Jackson's surprisingly effective vocals, he sounds poised and elegant – the essential Carter qualities – whatever his horn; and two takes each of 'Do You Believe In Love At First Sight' and 'Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams' demonstrate how beautifully crafted and custom-made his choruses habitually were.

None of these performances are included on the Classics format, which is surprising, since the first two sets include sides Carter recorded with Spike Hughes's Negro Orchestra. In the early '30s Carter's band was known as a proving ground for young talent, and the number of subsequently eminent names appearing in Carter sections increases as the decade advances. The London period under Henry Hall at the BBC saw some excellent recording with the local talent, including 'Swingin' At Maida Vale', and there are two separate Vocalion sessions with Elisabeth Welch, the first yielding the classic 'When Lights Are Low', the second superb arrangements of 'Poor Butterfly' and 'The Man I Love'. Later sets with Kai Ewans's orchestra and a variety of European bands are less striking; after five well-filled discs Carter's particular mastery does pall. There is little tension in a Carter solo, which is presented bright and fresh like a polished apple, and his seemingly effortless approach is rather hard to square with the values inherent in bebop.

(*) Benny Carter, 1943–1946 Classics 923 Carter; Felix Barboza, John Carroll, Paul Cohen, Claude Dunson, Emmett Berry, Lewis Botton, Neal Hefti, Idrees Sulieman, Karl George, Louis Gray, Wallace Jones, William Johnson, Joe Newman, Shorty Rogers, Irving Lewis, Fred Trainer, Talib Daawud, Edwin Davis, Milton Fletcher, Jake Porter, Ted Buckner, Loyal Walker, Freddy Webster, Gerald Wilson (t); Alton Moore, J. J. Johnson, Charlie Johnson, Al Grey, John Morris, Henry Coker, John 'Shorty' Haughton, Bart Varsalona, George Washington, Dicky Wells, Andy Williams, Trummy Young (tb); Joe Epps, Jewell Grant, Porter Kilbert, Russell Procope (as); Willard Brown (as, bs); Tony Scott (as, cl); Don Byas, Harold Clark, Dexter Gordon, Eugene Porter, Bumps Myers, Flip Phillips (ts); Humphrey Bannon, Rufus Webster, Sonny White, Gerald Wiggins (p); James Cannady, Al Casey, W. J. Edwards, Freddie Green, Ulysses Livingston, Herman Mitchell (g); Charles Drayton, Thomas Moultrie, Curley Russell, John Simmons (b); Oscar Bradley, Percy Brice, J. C. Heard, Max Roach (d); Savannah Churchill, Dick Gracy, Bixie Harris, Timmie Rogers, Maxine Sullivan (v). 10/43–1/46.

A good vintage, as witness all the rising stars in the ranks. The session of 21 May 1944 marked the recording debut of 18-year-old Max Roach, but it is also special for a superb Carter alto solo on 'I Can't Get Started', switching to trumpet for 'I Surrender Dear'. A couple of 1945 dates are under the nominal leadership of singers Savannah Churchill and Timmie Rogers, but they are very much in the line of Carter's own style of the time, and the vocals are not much more than a pleasant distraction. In 1945, Carter moved to California but he continued to work and record on the East Coast. A session for Capitol in December yielded 'Prelude To A Kiss' and 'Just You, Just Me', again on alto and trumpet respectively, with some strong soloing from the underrated Bumps Myers. Neal Hefti joined as arranger, but made no radical changes, and the early 1946 material for De Luxe sounds like a refinement of what Carter had been doing for a decade and more, with just a tiny acknowledgement here and there that bebop was happening. The disc closes with a couple of tracks featuring Maxine Sullivan, still in very good voice.

 They All Had Rhythm Hep CD 28 Carter; Jimmy Mundy Orchestra; Gerald Wilson Orchestra. 45–46.
A nice sampling of a fruitful period in Carter's life, with glimpses of the Mundy and Wilson operations as well. These are nicely transferred and very faithful versions, certainly streets ahead in sound terms of the Classics equivalent.

 Groovin' High In LA, 1946 Hep CD 15 Carter; Miles Davis, Fred Trainer, Calvin Strickland, Walter Williams (t); Ira Pettiford (t); Al Grey, Charlie Johnson, Johnny Morris, Candy Ross (tb); Willard Brown, Joe Epps (as); Harold Clark, Bumps Myers (ts); Bob Graettinger (bs); Sonny White (g); James Cannady, Thomas Moultrie (b); Percy Brice (d). 7/46.
Carter returned to the US in 1938, by which time the big-band era was well under way. His sterling talents seem to have appealed more to other musicians than to the public at large. From the point of view of the dance floor, he offered little enough, but his arrangements sparkle and there is some astonishing musicianship. Miles Davis appears on the Hep compilation of Armed Forces Radio Service Jubilee transcriptions, a disc shared with the West Coast bands of Wilbert Branco, Gerald Wilson and Jimmy Mundy. These capture the final flowering of the big swing bands before economic constraints began to bite and bop took over the running.

 3, 4, 5: The Verve Small Group Sessions Verve 849395 Carter; Don Abney, Oscar Peterson, Teddy Wilson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown, George Duvivier (b); Louie Bellson, Jo Jones, Bobby White (d). N.D.
(*) Cosmopolite: The Oscar Peterson Sessions Verve 521673 Carter; Bill Harris (tb); Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis, Barney Kessel (g); Ray Brown (b); J. C. Heard, Buddy Rich, Bobby White (d). 9/52–11/54.
No exact dates are provided for the sterling 3, 4, 5 sessions for Norman Granz's label. The trios with Wilson and Jones saw the light of day only after 40 years in the vaults, though a similar session with Art Tatum and Louie Bellson was released. Far from wondering at the absence of a bass-player, one might almost wish that Jones had been left out altogether, so bright is the interplay between alto and piano. Wilson is supreme on 'June In January' and 'This Love Of Mine', a perfect vehicle for Carter's sinuous phrasing. An 'audio disclaimer' pointing out 22 seconds of 'slight wow and warbling' on 'Moonglow' is a touch disingenuous, since none of the quartet music is up to the rest of the album. Originally released as Moonglow: Love Songs By Benny Carter And His Orchestra, the material is lame, but beautifully played. The final three tracks, also unreleased, come from a super-session with rising star Peterson. Again, the drummer makes very little mark. Stuff Smith's 'Don't You Think' is intriguingly done. Despite some reservations, this makes a superb introduction to Carter at a fine stage in his playing career. Cosmopolite brings together material from the LPs Benny Carter Plays Pretty, Alto Saxes and New Jazz Sounds, as well as the one whose title has been recycled. There are, inevitably, some precious moments – a delightful quintet 'The Song Is You' – but really only the first of these records is essential.

 Take The 'A' Train /  Love Songs In A Swingin' Affair Fresh Sound FSRCD 306 / Blue Moon BMCD 3079 Carter; Pete Jolly, Maurice Vander (p); Pierre Michelot, Howard Roberts (g); Bob Bertaux (b); Christian Garros, Bob Neel (d). 56, 63; 63.
Oddly set out in this useful reissue, with the 1963 Paris date dropped into the middle of the Hollywood material. There's some nice blowing with the West Coasters, and the French band (who also appear on the Blue Moon disc) do manfully, as well, but they're relatively minor moments.

 Jazz Giant Original Jazz Classics OJC 167 Carter; Frank Rosolino (tb); Ben Webster (ts); André Previn , Jimmy Rowles (p); Barney Kessel (g); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Shelly Manne (d). 6/57–4/58.
 Swingin' The Twenties Original Jazz Classics OJC 339 Carter; Earl Hines (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Shelly Manne (d). 11/58.
Carter's trumpet-playing was still sounding remarkably adept at this stage; it tailed off a bit in later years, though he maintained the difficult 'double' right into the '90s. The augmented Swingin' is generally pretty bland, though 'A Monday Date' and 'Laugh, Clown, Laugh' uncover some interesting harmonic wrinkles. The rhythm section was one of the best money could buy at the time, nicely balancing old and new. Jazz Giant is a terrific small-group record, full of imagination and invention, and the interchanges with Webster are classic..

 Sax Ala Carter Capitol 93513 Carter; Jimmy Rowles (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Mel Lewis (d). 2/60.
Recorded almost in real time with a professional swinging rhythm section and a set of recognizable standards, this was meant to showcase Carter's blowing prowess in a fairly easy-going context. The album's one curiosity is one of the extra tracks, 'Ennui', on which Benny makes a rare, some say his first, appearance on soprano saxophone. Rowles is in great form and Vinnegar and Lewis keep the pace crackling.

[illegible]

 Further Definitions
Impulse! 051229-2 Carter; Bud Shank, Phil Woods (as); Buddy Collette, Teddy Edwards, Coleman Hawkins, Bill Perkins, Charlie Rouse (ts); Bill Hood (bs); John Collins, Barney Kessel, Mundell Lowe (g); Dick Katz (p); Ray Brown, Jimmy Garrison (b); Jo Jones, Alvin Stoller (d). 11/61–3/66.
This is the best-known of all Carter's albums. Economics may have enjoined smaller ensembles, but Carter's feel for reed voicing is such that loss is turned to gain. The added profit is a spacious but intimate sound. Carter and Hawkins had recorded together in Paris before the war in exactly the same configuration as these sides: four saxophones, piano, bass, drums and guitar (Django Reinhardt!). Collins isn't quite up to that standard, but he has a sure and subtle touch. All the saxophones solo on 'Cotton Tail', with Benny leading off and Bean bringing things to a magisterial, slyly witty close. 'Crazy Rhythm' is an echo of the first meeting and both the senior men quote from each other's past solo. 'Blue Star' is intriguing: a complex, deceptive theme with another effective saxophone interchange.

The later session (originally AdditionsTo Further Definitions) came after a two-year film and TV hiatus in Carter's jazz activities. If the intention was to reduplicate the sound and success of Further Definitions, it pretty much worked. Mundell Lowe and Barney Kessel are in a different league from Collins, and the guitar part has a prominence far beyond the earlier date. Shank and Edwards are both in strong, individual form, and Bill Perkins is splendid on a remake of 'Doozy'. Having the two dates together and in modern 20-bit sound is a huge plus; at more than 70 minutes, it's a good-value purchase.

 BBB & Co Original Jazz Classics OJC 758 Carter; Shorty Sherock (t); Ben Webster (ts); Barney Bigard (cl); Jimmy Rowles (p); Dave Barbour, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Mel Lewis (d). 4/62.
A supergroup with lots of miles on the clock and not a terrific amount to say for itself. The combination of Carter, Webster and Bigard may sound inviting, but it turns into a dry and unforthcoming jam and the fires don't start until the later choruses of 'When The Sun Goes Down Blues'. Carter plays well within himself, elegant as ever but almost diffident in his approach to solos. Interesting for the personnel only.

(*) The Three C's Sackville SKCD2-2058 Carter; Bill Coleman (t, v); Henry Chaix Orchestra. 12/57–11/68.
Shared with a couple of radio sessions headed by Bill Coleman, this finds Carter in congenial Swiss company on a visit to Baden in 1968 (eager Swiss fans persuaded him to do a handful of shows with Chaix's band). As so often, the locals play above themselves, inspired by their famous guest, and the music is quite delightful, with Carter originals such as 'Easy Money' and 'Titmouse' getting space alongside his ballad features on 'I Can't Get Started' and 'Body And Soul'. The Coleman material is from a decade earlier and is scarcely less enjoyable, the trumpeter taking a few laid-back vocals and enjoying the limelight.

(*) The King Original Jazz Classics OJC 883 Carter; Milt Jackson (vib); Joe Pass (g); Tommy Flanagan (p); John B. Williams (b); Jake Hanna (d). 2/76.
Jackson was another brilliant improviser whose mellifluous approach led detractors to suspect him of giving short weight. Here again, he underlines his genius with a dozen blues choruses of immense sophistication. The closing D-flat blues opens up the kind of harmonic territory on which Carter and Flanagan both thrive, and the set ends with a ringing affirmation. Williams is rather anonymous and Pass seems to miscue slightly on a couple of faster ensembles. Otherwise hard to fault.

 Carter Gillespie Inc Original Jazz Classics OJC 682 Carter; Dizzy Gillespie (t); Joe Pass (g); Tommy Flanagan (p); Al McKibbon (b); Mickey Roker (d). 4/76.
(*) Wonderland Original Jazz Classics OJC 967 Carter; Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Ray Bryant (p); Milt Hinton (b); Grady Tate (d). 11/76.
Remarkable to think that as long ago as 1976 Carter was approaching his 70th birthday. There's an aldermanic quality to the AGM with Diz, much polite deference, some cheerful banter but not a great deal of classic music. He sounds in better form on the relaxed Wonderland, ably accompanied by Edison (Carter let others handle the brass duties by this stage) and an uncharacteristically cool Lockjaw Davis. 'Misty' was to remain a favourite, played with curious emphases and a wry unsentimentality.

(*) Live And Well In Japan Original Jazz Classics OJC 736 Carter; Cat Anderson, Joe Newman (t); Britt Woodman (tb); Budd Johnson (ts); Cecil Payne (bs); Nat Pierce (p); Mundell Lowe (g); George Duvivier (b); Harold Jones (d). 4/77.

(*) Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJC 374 Carter; Ray Bryant (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 7/77.
1977 was a monster year at Montreux, and the Carter set was a highlight in Pablo's mass taping; he played better with Basie the following day, but 'Three Little Words', 'Body And Soul' and 'On Green Dolphin Street' here are absolutely sterling. Turning 70, Carter seemed to be playing like a man half his age. Carter loved Japan and they treated him like a minor deity. The April visit saw him trading superbly crafted licks with all and sundry.

 All Stars Sonet SNTF947 Carter; Nat Adderley (t, v); Red Norvo (vib); Horace Parlan (p); Red Mitchell (b); Ronnie Gardiner (d). 7/85.
One of the best of the later sessions, recorded in the relaxed atmosphere of Sonet's studio, but with three bonus tracks recorded at Restaurant Strombsborg in Stockholm. The solo space is nicely varied, with 'Here's That Rainy Day' a feature for Norvo and 'Work Song' (with a vocal from Adderley) featuring Parlan prominently and no horns. Benny is on hand for seven of the nine cuts, sounding quietly magisterial and never missing a note.

 Meets Oscar Peterson Pablo 2310926 Carter; Oscar Peterson (p); Joe Pass (g); Dave Young (b); Martin Drew (d). 86.
How much more interesting this might have been as a duo. Even allowing for some melodic breaks from Pass, the rhythm backings often seem superfluous. 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads' moves at the gentle lope both men seemed to prefer by then, and Peterson's statement of the theme is about as straightforward as he's ever been. There were a few more, all deleted, but the gentleman himself enjoyed a quiet retirement until he finally left us in his 96th year.

Also, in brief:

 When Lights Are Low Conifer/Happy Days CDHD 131. 4–10/36.
A useful abstract of the London sessions Carter made for Vocalion. Conifer have even managed to unearth one track – a rejected take of 'Gin And Jive' – not covered by Classics' completism.

(*) The Alternative Takes Vol. 1 1936–1940 / More Alternative Takes 1936–1937 / The Alternative Takes Vol. 2 1940–1946 Neatwork RP 2019 / 2063 / 2030. 4/36–5/40; 4/36–8/37; 5/50–4/46.
Given that Carter's arrangements were so smooth and his solos hardly examples of tortured expressionism, these will only appeal to very serious collectors.

 Benny Carter, 1946–1948 /  ... 1948–1952 Classics 1048 / 1297. 46–48; 48–52 .
Includes fine sessions for Keynote and Blue Note; a well-oiled machine running on the smoothest tracks in America.

 Benny Carter, 1952–1954 Classics 1400. 7/52–1/54.
Classics reach the Granz years: both the Peterson dates and a later orchestra session which deploys just trombones with Carter's alto, rhythm and strings; also some nice Victor big-band cuts from earlier in the same year.

 Benny Carter And The Jazz Giants Pablo OJCCD 1084. 54–88.
Name a major jazz figure of the last three or four decades who isn't there. Slightly overpowering personnel list but undoubtedly fine music.

(*) Tickle Toe Vee Jay VJ-024. 7/64.
All sax and no brass makes for a curious interlude in what was otherwise a busy time in Hollywood. Six of the ten charts are by Lalo Schifrin, and at less than 30 minutes this is strictly for Carter completists.

 Summer Serenade Storyville STCD 4047. 8/80.
In Scandinavia, with locals. It takes a certain genius to make 'Back Home In Indiana' and 'When Lights Are Low' sound quite as freshly minted as Carter does here.

(*) The Music Master Proper PROPERBOX68 4CD. 12/30–8/52.
As good an introduction as you might wish, with appearances from Django Reinhardt, Teddy Wilson, Coleman Hawkins, Oscar Peterson and many more.

() The Best Of Benny Carter Pablo PACD 2405
Odd and uninspired choice of material. Better to stick to the original Pablos.

Betty Carter (1930–98)

VOICE

'Betty Bebop' sang with Lionel Hampton in the '40s, then broke off to raise a family. Returning in 1969 she became the most demanding and virtuosic of jazz singers, her touring groups little academies for young players, and until her unexpected death she maintained a ferocious appetite for performing.

 Let's Fall In Love Gambit 32047 Carter; Conte Candoli, Joe Ferrante, Bernie Glow, Nick Travis (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Urbie Green (tb); Danny Bank, Al Cohn, Sam Markowitz, Seldon Powell (reeds); Jerome Richardson (f); Ray Bryant, Hank Jones (p); Milt Hinton, Wendell Marshall (b); Osie Johnson, Philly Joe Jones (d); Gigi Gryce (cond); a.o. 5 & 6/55–8/60.
 Out There Blue Moon 1622 Carter; Ray Copeland, Kenny Dorham (t); Melba Liston (tb); Benny Golson (ts); Jerome Richardson (ts, f, bcl); Sahib Shihab (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Specs Wright. 2/58.
(*) Inside Betty Carter Capitol 89702 Carter; Harold Mabern (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Bob Cranshaw (b); Roy McCurdy (d); others unknown. 4/64, 5/65.
 Finally Roulette Jazz 53332 Carter; Norman Simmons (p); Lisle Atkinson (b); Al Harewood (d). 12/69.
Betty Carter quickly transcended the 'bop vocalist' tag and created a style that combined the fluent, improvisational grace of an alto saxophone with an uncanny accuracy of diction. Even when her weighting of a lyric is almost surreal, its significance is utterly explicit and sarcastically subversive. The latter quality has allowed her to skate on the thin ice of quite banal standard material, much of which has acquired a veneer of seriousness from nowadays being heard only as instrumentals; 'Body And Soul' on Finally is the obvious example, medleyed with 'Heart And Soul' on the 1969 live album, taped at New York's Judson Hall.

Some of the pieces on Finally are left deliberately raw. 'Girl Talk' is wild, but what is she thinking about as she sings 'The Sun Died' or 'You're A Sweetheart'? With Carter the charge of emotion isn't always obvious. What these sides consistently demonstrate is a stock-in-trade ability to reshape a song so radically that it becomes something quite new which retains only a few subtle reminders of its original. A process similar, in other words, to the contrefacts on standard material made by the bebop pioneers, but with the added complication of words which overturn expectations of what female jazz singers might be expected to say.

The surviving discography is still thin. A couple of posthumous releases revealed Carter once again as a formidable improviser from the first. The Gambit record brings together early material formerly on Meet Betty Carter & Ray Bryant (noted below), Social Call and Modern Sound. The other one, Inside, augments a brief studio album with some tracks from the following year with Kenny Burrell and an unidentified group. The set is treasured for a tiny version of 'My Favorite Things', about 57 minutes shorter than the later Coltrane versions, and a lovely 'New England'.

♛  The Audience With Betty Carter Verve 835684 2CD Carter; John Hicks (p); Curtis Lundy (b); Kenny Washington (d). 12/79.
Carter could sound becalmed in a studio. The title here is double-edged, because she needed a crowd to bounce off. She works the room here with consummate skill, sliding from the slightly squeaky faux naïf mannerisms that prompted Hampton to call her 'Betty Bebop' (after cartoon character Betty Boop) to soaring climbs up off the bottom that wouldn't disgrace Sarah Vaughan. It's a long album and one that requires a bit of time spent on it. The opening piece, 'Sound (Movin' On)', is a staggering 25 minutes in length. 'The Trolley Song' is an orthodox swinger, but who else would have thought of handling Carlos Garnett's 'Caribbean Sun' in this way, and who else is capable of giving 'Everything I Have Is Yours' a drench of irony? The pace changes on disc two and one's first instinct might be that Carter has run out of steam. Emphatically not so. 'Can't We Talk It Over?' medleyed with 'Either It's Over Or It Isn't' and later 'Spring Can Really Hang You Up The Most' are remarkable (re)inventions, subtle and deeply coded. Put it this way: Billie Holiday doesn't have a 'crowned' album.

Also, in brief:

 Meet Betty Carter & Ray Bryant Collectables 5676. 5/55.
Already reviewed under Ray Bryant's entry, this was an important showcase for Betty, originally on Columbia.

 Round Midnight Atlantic 80453. 8/62, 1/63.
Carter recorded little in the '60s, but there are some great cuts here, backed by Claus Ogerman and Oliver Nelson. 'Two Cigarettes In The Dark' stands out.

 I'm Yours, You're Mine Verve 533182. 96.
Officially a Verve/Bet-Car co-release, this late release was a frank disappointment, staccato and strained.

Daniel Carter

SAXOPHONES, FLUTES, CLARINET, TRUMPET, PIANO

A strangely uncelebrated figure on the NY free scene, he honed his multi-instrumentalism with Gunter Hampel and Bob Moses and has been a member of Other Dimensions in Music.

 Principle Hope Sublingual 012 Carter; Jonathan LaMaster (vn, bowed metal); Peter Kowald (b); Laurence Cook (d, perc). 3/01.
 Luminescence / (*) Language Aum Fidelity 25 / Origin 82400 Carter; Reuben Radding (b); Gregg Keplinger (d on Language only). 10/01; 5/02.
(*) The Dream 577 Records 577-6 Carter; William Parker (b, tba, shakuhachi); Federico Ughi (d). 7/05.
Carter seems to have no appetite for the spotlight. All of these are collaborative ventures and collectively attributed, but time, surely, for fuller recognition for a figure who brings a quiet authority to all his projects. The quartet with LaMaster, Kowald and Cook stands aside in being one of the great bassist's last appointments before his untimely death. Carter seems drawn to powerful bass players, as the trio with Parker and long-term associate Ughi testifies, but it's his own buzzy, resonant lines which catch the attention. He's more assertive than usual on the Sublingual date, which was recorded live at the Tramont Theatre in Boston, often increasing his dynamics to cope with an unresponsive acoustic. Kowald is masterly, of course, but it's the interplay of the other three, with LaMaster producing a unique string sound and some intriguing harmonics with his bow on other surfaces, that really makes the record crack along.

The trio date is terrific. Carter opens with a torrent of sound on piano, before switching to flute and then gradually working his way through his other horns. Parker switches to his tuba for 'The Truth In The Core'. Ughi keeps the pulse light and fast in most cases, perhaps a little busy on his cymbals but with lots of texture. Carter himself sometimes sounds like Joe McPhee in philosophical mode, though that is partly an impression imported from more obviously multi-instrumental situations. He's still identifiable even when he settles on just one horn in the duo date with Radding, recorded in Seattle in the sombre weeks just after 9/11. The bassist's relatively conventional approach is deceptive in the extreme. Both men are in cracking form on the long 'Refracted Light and Grace', more successful than the opening improvisations where they just seem to be getting used to each other. On alto, Carter sounds uncommonly like Dewey Redman.

The trio disc has more of Radding's effective arco work and finds Carter concentrating on his default smaller horn. 'Aphasia' and the title track blister along, but the big surprise is 'Never 3 Saturday', a long quasi-ballad, packed with feeling.

James Carter (born 1969)

SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, BARITONE AND F-MEZZO SAXOPHONES, BASS AND CONTRABASS CLARINETS, FLUTE

From Detroit and via the Tough Young Tenors, he has made an immediate and sustained impact, blending traditionalism with a near-avant-garde sensibility.

(*) JC On The Set /  Jurassic Classics Columbia CK 66149 / 67058 Carter; Craig Taborn (p); Jaribu Shahid (b); Tani Tabbal (d). 4/93; 4/94.

From those initials much was expected; not miracles perhaps, but certainly something special. The debut album delivered in trumps. Delving into unexpected corners of the repertoire – Sun Ra's 'Hour Of Parting', the obscure Texan John Hardee's 'Lunatic' – alongside 'Caravan' and 'Sophisticated Lady', Carter sounds like a Detroit player through and through: metallic, brisk and heated. He quickly demonstrated that he had things of his own to say, whether down in baritone range or squealing and testifying as on the original 'Blues For A Nomadic Princess'; the story was that he kept a bunch of old horns in his practice room, in order to explore all the sonorities. Choosing a Don Byas tune, 'Worried And Blue', pointed to a more than fashionable interest in classic jazz and its forgotten warriors. The phrasing is immaculate, the tone youthfully wayward here and there but still authentic.

Jurassic Classics probably came too soon on top of a tough and busy year. Second time out, the burnish wasn't quite bright enough to blot out some of the weaknesses: a tendency to barge through a tune, shake it painfully by the hand in a mistaken outflow of respect, fail to do it justice. The second album put him ever more clearly in touch with the jazz mainstream, but it found him flailing a bit.

 The Real Quietstorm Atlantic 782742 As above, except add Dave Holland (b); Leon Parker (d). 10–11.94.

Signing for Atlantic was salutary for an artist who had previously seemed to be going in umpteen directions at once. To some extent, it's a showcase, a chance to try out paces on six different horns, including bass flute on the extraordinary 'Ballad For A Doll', which also features Holland. But it's also an album which demonstrates that Carter is not just a flash multi-instrumentalist but a musician who chooses his persona carefully. The tenor monologue 'The Stevedore's Serenade' is still one of the most startling saxophone performances of the '90s, and, though the title is dismal, 'Intimacy Of My Woman's Beautiful Eyes' is alto-playing that invites comparison with Dolphy's on 'Tenderly'. It's the two baritone duets, with Taborn on 'Round Midnight' and Shahid on 'Eventide', that stand out.

 Conversin' With The Elders Atlantic 7567 82908 As above, except omit Holland, Parker; add Lester Bowie, Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Larry Smith (as); Buddy Tate (ts); Hamiet Bluiett (bs). 10/95–2/96.

An inspired idea: to throw Carter up against the very ancestral voices that haunt and propel him. Both guests and material come from out of a past not always so very distant, but certainly very different from the scene the young man inherited. Carter's loyalty to Shahid, Tabal and Taborn is exemplary, and they form a unified background for the guest spots.

The most venerable, chronologically speaking, are Edison and Tate, and 'Lester Leaps In' and 'Centrepiece' with Sweets and 'Moten Swing' and 'Blue Creek', the latter with Buddy on clarinet, are convincingly, supremely authentic. The paired altos on 'Parker's Mood' almost cancel each other out, so rigorously do they observe the master's cadence, and Smith – heard, as all the guests are, through the left channel – doesn't seem to want to bust loose. The set kicks off, wonderfully but rather deceptively, with Bowie's 'Freereggaehibop', on which his entire armoury of rips, snorts, smears and impossibly low-register vocalizations are used. Appropriately, he comes back to round off the album with 'Atitled Valse', but by then the honours have already been secured by Bluiett and by two fantastic baritone duets, on Coltrane's 'Naima' and, more boldly, on Anthony Braxton's 'Composition 40Q', one of the more approachable themes in the Braxton canon, but still a startling piece to cover.

Carter is playing with dazzling confidence and restrained power. His early tendency to over-emphasize the attack has given way to a breathily intimate sound which can be scaled up or down in keeping with the material.

(*) In Carterian Fashion Atlantic 83082-2 Carter; Dwight Adams (t); Cassius Richmond (as); Henry Butler, Cyrus Chestnut, Craig Taborn (org); Kevin Carter (g); Steve Kirby, Jaribu Shahid (b); Alvester Garnett, Leonard King, Tani Tabbal (d). 98.

A swirling, raucous album, centred on the blues and marked by a choppy, rhythmically agitated organ sound. Oddly, despite featuring three such different players as Taborn, Chestnut and Butler on the Hammond, the sound is rather uniform. The young saxophonist is still conversing with elder spirits, including two arrangements of traditional material, 'Down To The River' and 'Trouble In The World', the latter emerging out of free-form chaos and into one of the most orderly and plain-spoken things on any of the records. 'Skull Grabbin'' is restless and fractured, an uneasy piece that sounds too much like a grab for shock value.

Carter's bass clarinet work on 'Odyssey' weaves an illuminating counterpoint with trumpet and alto over a softer than usual Hammond track. 'Frisco Follies' is the somewhat token workout on the other horns, baritone and soprano. Increasingly, though, Carter sounds like a genuine tenorman. The tribute to Lockjaw Davis builds an idiosyncratic solo round two almost subliminal Jaws licks. Yves Beauvais's production is crisp and deliberately unresonant, leaving the horns floating in free space.

 Out Of Nowhere Half Note 4520 Carter; Hamiet Bluiett (bs); Gerard Gibbs (org); James Blood Ulmer (g); Leonard King (d). 5/04.
This picks ups where Live At Baker's (see below) left off, a high-energy jam recorded at the Blue Note in New York with patchy walk-ons from Bluiett (who takes part in a baritone duet on 'Song For Camille') and a lusty but directionless Ulmer, who tears into 'Little Red Rooster' before drifting into soul territory on 'I Believe I Can Fly'. The best of the record is in the opening stages, with an interesting, if unorthodox, trio version of the title-tune and a fine take on Benny Golson's 'Along Came Betty'. Good sound and bags of energy, but the wheels seem to have come off Carter's inexorable rush.

Also, in brief:

 Layin' In The Cut Atlantic 83305. 11/99.
This was again intended to demonstrate eclecticism, but Carter's take on Django Reinhardt is wholly unsuccessful. He falls back on outlandish horns: bass and F-mezzo saxophones.

(*) Chasin' The Gypsy Atlantic 83310. 2/00.
An abrasive funk project that veers towards Ulmer-school harmolodics. Most of the tracks are credited collectively.

 Gardenias For Lady Day Columbia 514879. N.D.
Reopening his Columbia account with a notably restrained Billie Holiday tribute.

 Live At Baker's Keyboard Lounge Warners 9362-48449-2. 6/01.
This adieu to Warners was cut over three days at the Detroit club, with David Murray and Johnny Griffin (ts) sitting in. Carter gets almost absurdly far out on the jam staple 'Tricotism' and then it's a parade of showbiz cameos.

 Gold Sounds Brown Brothers 1. 9/04.
A tribute to pop band Pavement; makes sense if you know the originals; otherwise a bit thin.

John Carter (1928–91)

CLARINET, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Born in Fort Worth, where he played with Ornette Coleman in the '40s, he moved West in 1961 and joined up with Bobby Bradford later in the decade. A dedicated teacher, he brought his own studies of clarinet and Afro-American lore together in a rich and detailed jazz.

(*) Seeking hatOLOGY 620 Carter; Bobby Bradford (c); Tom Williamson (b); Bruz Freeman (d). 1/69.
 Tandem 1 /  Tandem 2 Emanem 4011 / 4012 Carter; Bobby Bradford (c). 79; 4/82.
In 1964, Carter founded the New Art Jazz Ensemble with Bradford, one of a number of quietly influential groups that give the lie to received notions about 'West Coast jazz'. They made Seeking, now reissued on hatOLOGY, and then Secrets, the latter for Revelation in 1971 and 1972, one of whose tracks, 'Circle', was a cornet/clarinet duo. Seeking was almost all Carter material, of which the title-track is the best, though almost eclipsed by Bradford's closing 'Song For The Unsung', his only writing credit. The other members don't seem entirely at ease with the music, but that uncertainty, if such it be, makes them play spaciously and with due deference to the leaders, which actually enhances the performances.

'Circle' resurfaces in live form on the first volume of Tandem. It should be said that the sound on these live recordings is pretty deplorable. The April 1982 concert tape, from Worcester, Mass., is marred by print-through (the trick was to store music tape tail-out) and traffic noise, while the remaining three pieces, recorded earlier in San Francisco, were captured on cassette. 'Tandem' kicks off both sessions, a warm-up piece with enough self-conscious showmanship to win over the flintiest sceptic. Carter often plays the normative role, bringing the music back to a more logical and discursive position, tempering Bradford's fieriness. Both men take solos: Bradford's forcefully romantic 'Woman' on Tandem 2 and 'Portrait Of JBG' on the first disc, Carter's 'Angles', two versions of 'Echoes From Rudolph's' (one on each CD) and the startling 'Les Masses Jigaboos', which anticipates his ambitious Afro-suite of later years. Important music.

 Dauwhe Black Saint 120057 Carter; Bobby Bradford (c); Charles Owens (ss, cl, ob); James Newton (f); Red Callender (tba); Roberto Miguel Miranda (b); William Jeffrey (d); Luis Peralta (perc). 2 & 3/82.
In the decade before his death, Carter worked at a multi-part sequence of suites called Roots And Folklore: Episodes In The Development Of American Folk Music. Unfortunately, little remains in print. Dauwhe, which represents African origins, is strongly articulate and marked by some excellent playing, from Newton in particular, but sadly it isn't as strong a date as Castles Of Ghana (formerly on Gramavision) and, out of context with other chapters like Dance Of The Love Ghosts and Fields And Shadows On A Wall, it can only be heard as an intriguing but isolated experiment.

Kent Carter (born 1939)

DOUBLE BASS, CELLO, VIOLIN, KEYBOARDS

Born in New Hampshire, he often gravitates to quieter locations; nevertheless he was part of the free revolution in jazz and worked with Paul Bley, Steve Lacy and the Jazz Composers Orchestra.

 Beauvais Cathedral Emanem 4061 Carter; Michala Marcus (f); Richard Marechin (p); Carlos Zingaro (vn). 3–12/74.
(*) The Willisau Suites Emanem 4105 Carter; Albrecht Maurer, Carlos Zingaro (vn); François Dreno , Emmanuelle Roch (vla). 3/84, 7/97.
 The Juillaguet Collection Emanem 4033 Carter; Albrecht Maurer (vn). 8/96.
 Intersections Emanem 4130 As above, except add Katrin Mickiewicz (vla). 1 & 8/04, 6/05.
Carter lives somewhat out of the way, in a tiny village in the south of France, where he and his partner run a music, arts and dance studio (MAD). Beauvais Cathedral was his first album. It isn't quite a solo project, though what sounds like a string quartet on 'Steps' is the result of careful overdubbing. Carter worked closely with Emanem's Martin Davidson, using fairly archaic equipment; nevertheless, the results are warm, resonant, 'live' in feel and consistently fascinating. There are three short double-bass solos, a virtuosic cello solo which uses rhythm and dynamics to create an illusion of overdubbing (or two players) and a number of 'ensemble' pieces. Some of these are created with other players, some as tape collages, and 'Play Time', dedicated to Steve Lacy, is a cello dialogue with a radio receiver.

Carter convened his String Trio in 1979 and has returned to the form on a number of occasions since. The reissue of Willisau Suites, with Zingaro, is doubly welcome for the inclusion of two tracks from a later group with Maurer and Roch. It's stirring, slightly mysterious music. Carter is involved on every track except for a brief dialogue between Zingaro and Dreno.

A much later string collaboration, The Juillaguet Collection was recorded at the Carters' dance centre. Maurer is the bassist's junior by two decades, but their musical understanding is complete and the ten full-length performances and final fragment are each and all worthy of prolonged attention. The most recent of the group, Intersections, is delightful in every way. The long opening 'March 17' is a composed piece with a light folkish quality reminiscent of Jánaček, or perhaps Delius in his American mode. Some episodes call for unconventional articulations: scraped harmonics, jazzy strums on the bass. A 'Blithe' improvisation follows and immediately reveals how close the Trio's written and improvised languages actually are. Maurer's 'Eigens For Eidens' is another substantial composition, and Mickiewicz also contributes the mournful 'Pupalka', but the remainder is divided between further Carter compositions and three more improvs, of which 'Exuberance' is the major statement. Some will find the instrumentation insufficiently 'jazz' (even when deployed in a 'Blues Suite'), but it's hard to find fault with music as finely executed as this.

Regina Carter

VIOLIN

Came out of Detroit and formerly a member of the String Trio Of New York.

 I'll Be Seeing You: A Sentimental Journey Verve 62260 Carter; Xavier Davis (p); Matthew Parrish (b); Alvester Garnett (d); Dee Dee Bridgewater (v). 1/06.

Carter's work for Atlantic and Verve hasn't stayed around long. There are another half-dozen albums in the back catalogue, so this solo current survivor picks up the story some way down the trail. Her technique is striking and original but she seems to lack a conceptual focus. The fine 2000 Motor City Moments, albeit an album where she had to compete for space with guests James Carter, Marcus Belgrave and Barry Harris, seemed to point a way forward. But then Carter made Paganini: After A Dream, which seemed a bit hung up on classicism and her use of a violin once owned by the great maestro. This one is more personal, a set of old songs and themes loved by her late mother. They range from swing-era favourites like 'A-Tisket A-Tasket' and 'Bei Mir Bist Du Schön' (featuring Bridgewater) to Greig's 'Anitra's Dance', all of which sits slightly oddly alongside 'St Louis Blues'. The group is fine, Carter's playing has reached a new plateau of excellence, but the project feels contrived and the materials incoherent.

Ron Carter (born 1937)

DOUBLE BASS, CELLO, PICCOLO BASS

Joined Chico Hamilton in 1962, then was with Miles Davis, 1963–8. Hugely in demand as session-man and teacher, although his own records have had mixed success, flirting with jazz-rock and chamber music rather than straight-ahead playing.

 Where? Original Jazz Classics OJC 432 Carter; Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f); Mal Waldron (p); George Duvivier (b); Charli Persip (d). 6/61.

Doubts that a young black boy could possibly play convincing cello led to the pre-teen Carter switching to bass, and launching a remarkable career. Perhaps only Ray Brown has recorded more on the instrument, but whereas Brown's solo career was rather late in starting, Carter has such innate musicality that he has always been able to sustain progress as a leader in his own right. With Where? he is unfortunate in that the record will always be seen as an item in the Eric Dolphy discography rather than Carter's own. It's dominated by a brilliant bass/clarinet duo of the sort Dolphy created many times with Charles Mingus, and by a fine, unsentimental reading of 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise'. Carter plays cello on 'Really' and 'Saucer Eyes' as he had done on Dolphy's second album, Out There, also originally released on New Jazz. Waldron and (on the two cello tracks) Duvivier give firm support, and Persip once again displays high skill.

 Peg Leg Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 621 Carter; Jerry Dodgion, Walter Kane, George Marge (reeds); Jay Berliner (g); Kenny Barron (p); Buster Williams (b); Ben Riley (d). 11/77.

Carter's Blue Notes are mostly unavailable outside Japan, which leaves the legacy rather slight. Peg Leg is very good indeed, with a first-rate version of Monk's 'Epistrophy', featuring the light, fast sound of piccolo bass. There remain some doubts about the recording, even on CD, and the band is interesting rather than involving. Dodgion is in good form, but he never quite gets on top of challenging themes and arrangements, and too often seems to go for obvious ideas and merely quirky sound.

* Third Plane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 754 Carter; Herbie Hancock (p); Tony Williams (d). 7/77.

A killer band, and easily Carter's most impressive showing under his own name. There is a good deal of solo bass material, as one would expect, but all of it makes sense in context and is so well constructed and executed that it never palls. Commercial pressures being what they were, it wasn't easy for players of Hancock's and Williams's generation to make an acoustic piano record in 1978. Williams doesn't quite get the point and he thrashes about at inopportune moments, but Carter's big gloopy fills on 'Stella By Starlight' and Hancock's 'Dolphin Dance' are absolutely perfect for the job.

 New York Slick Original Jazz Classics OJC 916 Carter; Art Farmer (flhn); J. J. Johnson (tb); Hubert Laws (f); Kenny Barron (p); Jay Berliner (g); Billy Cobham (d); Ralph McDonald (perc). 12/79.

 Patrão Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 778 Carter; Chet Baker (t); Amaury Tristao (g); Aloisio Aguiar, Kenny Barron (p); Jack DeJohnette, Edison Machado (d); Nana Vasconcelos (perc). 5/80.

Smooth, sweet, but not cloying, and not really all that 'slick', either: the 1979 session doesn't exactly have the constituents breaking sweat, but the pleasure of having such a line-up is something that Carter clearly delighted in, and if the results are still on the predictable side it's a handsome effort.

Three tracks featuring just Baker, Carter, Kenny Barron and Jack DeJohnette stand out head and shoulders from the rest on the slightly wet and uninspired Patrão. Only Barron of the norteamericanos sounds at ease with the basic idiom and the scene-setting is discursive and flat. The trumpeter was playing well around this time and turns in a couple of beautifully weighted and crafted solos. Barron is rock steady and never less than convincing, but he has been mixed very oddly, with a lot of compression.

(*) Telepathy Concord CCD 4963 2CD Carter; Jim Hall (g). 11/82, 8/84.
These fine duos with guitarist Hall were originally released as two albums, Live At Village West and Telephone. The sound on the live disc leaves something to be desired, but there are excellent performances of 'All The Things You Are', 'Embraceable You', 'Bags' Groove', 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads' and Sonny Rollins's calypso 'St Thomas'. Carter's statement on 'Bags' Groove' is one of his best on record, a beautifully shaped and meltingly expressive solo that avoids all the clichés that have attached to the tune. Hall is perhaps heard to better advantage on the studio album, which highlights his unobtrusive and pitch-perfect accompaniment. The mix is pristine and so are the performances, and no surprise that the key track is that old duo standard, 'Alone Together'.

 The Bass And I Blue Note 59698 Carter; Stephen Scott (p); Lewis Nash (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 97.
Back with Blue Note. It's standards-based, which somehow restricts any individuality. On 'You And The Night And The Music', 'Someday My Prince Will Come' and 'The Shadow Of Your Smile' one might be listening to A. N. Other and his All Stars, but then comes a flash of real insight and originality, as in the three subtly multidimensional originals which lift the record out of the ordinary. Scott was still finding his feet and there were to be other drummers over the next couple of years, but Steve Kroon booked his place in Ron's working outfit and delivered from the off.

 Orfeu Blue Note 22490 Carter; Houston Person (ts); Stephen Scott (p); Bill Frisell (g); Payton Crossley (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 99.
 When Skies Are Grey Blue Note 30754 Carter; Stephen Scott (p); Harvey Mason Sr (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 5/00.
Carter's affection for Latin rhythms has never been more clearly expressed than on these two Blue Notes. Orfeu offered up a slightly unexpected personnel, but Person and Frisell meld beautifully. One of the highlights is Carter's arrangement of Dvořák's 'New World' largo, here known as 'Goin' Home'. It and the preceding 'Por-Do-Sol' are the key to an elegantly crafted record.

The later set is no less gentle and unassuming, but its occasionally soporific mood camouflages some formidable playing from all concerned. Mason and Kroon mesh beautifully on 'Besame Mucho' and Jobim's 'Corcovado', but the real star of the session is Stephen Scott, whose recording career seemed briefly eclipsed when he left Verve. He's found a niche with Carter. The big man's material clearly appeals and Stephen contributes strong, lyrical choruses to 'Loose Change', 'Caminando' and the formidable closer, 'Mi Tiempo'. Lovely sound.

(*) Stardust Blue Note 37813 Carter; Benny Golson (ts); Sir Roland Hanna (p); Joe Locke (vib); Lenny White (d). 4/01.
The title-track is a duet with Roland Hanna, who is in exceptional form throughout this delightful set. The main theme seems to be the legacy of fellow bassist Oscar Pettiford. Three of OP's tunes are included, the lazily swinging, latinized 'Tamalpais', the boppish 'Bohemia After Dark' and the simple, endlessly reworkable 'Blues In The Closet'. Golson enjoys the straightforward lines and driving rhythm and Lenny White's drumming has a fresh contemporary feel.

Carter's writing skills are as good as ever, though the best idea on the set is 'That's Deep', a contrefact on 'How Deep Is The Ocean?' He reaches for memories of Eric Dolphy on the blues-based 'Nearly' and swings easily through 'Tail Feathers'. Joe Locke is a vivid presence and when he drops out on 'The Man I Love', one immediately misses his bright, ringing lines.

(*) The Golden Striker Blue Note 90832 Carter; Mulgrew Miller (p); Russell Malone (g). 7/02.
Another very drab record, full of very serious writing and thoughtfully quiet playing, but with very little dramatic action to leaven it. Miller and Malone are both remarkable players in their different ways, but you'd struggle to see that here. A Rodrigo arrangement might have sounded better taken up a notch or two rhythmically and given to a bigger band. Here it falls flat.

 Dear Miles Blue Note 92547 Carter; Stephen Scott (p); Peyton Crossley (d); Roger Squitero ( perc*).* 1/06.
Carter was part of the Miles legacy band VSOP but has mostly avoided capitalizing on his most famous association. Interestingly, none of the material here was composed by the trumpeter, perhaps because when Carter was in the quintet Miles mainly relied on other composers. However, most of the songs have some strong connection – 'Seven Steps To Heaven', 'Someday My Prince Will Come', 'Blue In Green' – while a couple of others are Carter originals that relate to the concept only peripherally. It was smart to record with no horn, which would have invited all sorts of unwelcome comparison. There is a great deal of front-line bass-playing and most of the action happens between Carter and Scott, but it's an interesting enough record in small doses.

Also, in brief:

 Uptown Conversation Embryo/Rhino 7567 81955. 10/69.
An odd one, alternating cheesy jazz funk with some brilliant (but untitled) solo bass interludes.

 Blues Farm Sony 12786. 1/73.
CTI gave this a high gloss and brought the bass even further forward in the mix; attractive, but now dated.

 Pastels Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 665. 10/76.
A competent and uninspired jazz record, over which syrupy strings have been poured. The title says it all.

 Songs For You Milestone MCD 47099. 6/78.
One understands the concept, balancing strong melodic bass-lines against a quartet of his beloved cellos, but the music has no pace or presence.

 Pick 'Em / Super Strings Milestone MCD 9092. 78, 81.
The titles(s) give it away. Ron continues his exploration of string sounds in jazz. The world continues to turn, largely unmoved.

 Carnaval Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1070. 7/78.
Not really a Carter date but a collective quartet with Japanese saxophonist Sadao Watanabe (it's recorded live in Japan), Tony Williams (d) and Hank Jones (p). Five nice standards, nicely played.

 Panamanhattan Evidence ECD 22100. 7/90.
Carter and accordionist Richard Galliano in duet. Mostly lovely but a touch soporific.

(*) Eight Plus Dreyfus 36705. 02.
A string project that sees Carter again concentrate on piccolo bass, but strings with a jazz rhythm section doesn't come off.

Michael Carvin (born 1944)

DRUMS

Out of Houston, TX, and arguably the most underrated drummer of his generation.

 The Camel Steeplechase SCCD 31038 Carvin; Cecil Bridgewater (t); Sonny Fortune (ss, as, f); Ron Burton (b); Calvin Hill (d). 75.
(*) Explorations: Drum Concerto At Dawn Mapleshade 3732 Carvin (d solo). 1/95.
(*) Marsalis Music Series Honors Michael Carvin Marsalis Music 460001 Carvin; Marcus Strickland (ts); Branford Marsalis (ss, ts); Carlton Holmes (p); Dezron Douglas (b). 3/05.
Carvin has been a tireless sideman down the years, without ever garnering much attention, other than from fellow-musicians. He has played notably with Jackie McLean (on Antiquity), Dexter Gordon, Cecil Taylor and many others. He steps out of the shadows somewhat with Explorations. Though unpromisingly subtitled, this is an absolutely riveting and coherent solo recital (with nothing much of the concerto about it) that takes in a couple of repertory pieces, Monk's 'Rhythm a Ning' and an Andrew Cyrille arrangement of Coltrane's 'One Up, One Down', interspersing his own compositions. The sound he gets from Mapleshade (producer Hamiet Bluiett) is immaculate and apart from a tacked-on free improvisation that doesn't add much to the set, it's a wonderful listen.

The Marsalis Honors series has been notably imaginative in its choice of recipients and this one is exceptional. A decade on from his last recording, Carvin blows through an extraordinary reading of 'I'll Remember April', which securely establishes him as leader and reinforces his reputation as a superbly melodic player as well as time-keeper. The remaining tunes are all standards, with Charles Lloyd's 'Forest Flower' a surprise inclusion and the longest single cut, fine versions of 'A Night In Tunisia' and 'You Go To My Head', both Dizzy tunes, and a guest spot for producer Branford Marsalis on 'Body and Soul', which is medleyed with 'Prisoner of Love'. A remarkable date.

It comes three decades after The Camel, which has survived the critical desert like the beast of the title. It's a slightly dry, brooding disc, but Carvin leads a fine 'Naima' and a remarkable reading of the traditional 'Billy Boy'. His own 'Osun' opens and closes the session. Thirty years of music-making and selfless teaching.

Dick Cary (1916–94)

PIANO, TRUMPET

Worked in NY from early '40s, with the Armstrong All-Stars, Jimmy Dorsey, Eddie Condon and Bobby Hackett. Moved to LA in 1959 and freelanced thereafter.

(*) Amazing Dick Cary / California Doings Progressive PRCD 7125 Cary; Bob Haven (tb); Dick Hafer, Tommy Newsom (ts); Ross Tompkins (p); John Heard (b); Nick Fatool (d). 6/81.
A gloriously swinging set, with just a hint of Lighthouse All-Stars cool about it. Cary cedes the piano stool to Tompkins on this occasion, to play some nice tight trumpet and alto horn, the latter a favourite sound in his arrangements. The group's a strong one, with an easy cohesion and a rock-solid rhythmic foundation, and these sides make for a warmly entertaining hour of music.

 Dick Cary And His Tuesday Night Friends Arbors ARCD 19132 Cary; Dick Forrest, Betty O'Hara, Bob Summers (t); Dick Hamilton, Barrett O'Hara, Ernie Tack (tb); Lee Collett, Fred Cooper, Terry Harrington, Abe Most, Tommy Newsom (reeds); Dave Koonse (g); Herb Mickman (b); Gene Estes, Jerry McKenzie (d). 5–8/93.
A charming discovery. Cary wrote a vast number of arrangements and his house in Sunland, California, was in his final years a favourite haunt for this rehearsal band. These informal sessions include 14 Cary arrangements, dedicated to friends, dogs and streets; they're a wryly ingenious lot, not so much quirky as full of unexpected turns, shafts of light, surprising chords. Though every cut is a first take and not intended for posterity, there's barely a fluff or wrong step. The sound is home-made, too, but that doesn't stop the beauty of 'Bud', 'Henry' or 'Vallen's Waltz' coming through.

* Got Swing? Arbors ARCD 19253 Dick Hamilton (t, alto hn, p); Jack Trott (t); Dave Ryan (tb); Ernie Tack (btb); Abe Most (cl); Phil Feather (ss, ts, cl); Terry Harrington (ts); Fred Cooper (bs, f); Dave Koonse, Barry Copper (g); Herb Mickman (b); Jerry White (d). 4/00.
The man is gone, but the band lives on. The Tuesday Night Gang was rounded up for a studio re-creation of those home jams. They played another 19 Cary charts, mixing originals with covers, including plenty of Ellington. The whole thing is absolutely delightful, unpretentiously swinging, peppered with hot solos from the likes of Most and Feather and this time caught in beautiful sound.

Also, in brief:

 Catching Up Klavier 77024. 2/97.
Another fine studio showing by the 'ghost' band.

Casa Loma Orchestra

GROUP

Formed by Glen Gray out of the Orange Blossoms, they played in NY from 1929. Touring ceased around 1950, but Gray continued to record the group.

(*) Casa Loma Stomp Hep 1010 Bobby Jones, Dub Shoffner, Joe Hostetter, Frankie Martinez (t); Pee Wee Hunt (tb, v); Billy Rauch (tb); Glen Gray (as); Pat Davis (as, ts); Les Arquette (cl, ts); Ray Eberle (as, cl); Howard Hall (p); Mel Jenssen (vn); Gene Gifford (g, bj); Stanley Dennis (b, tba); Tony Briglia (d); Jack Richmond (v). 10/29–12/30.
 Maniac's Ball Hep 1051 As above, except omit Martinez, Arquette; add Grady Watts, Sonny Dunham, Frank Zullo (t); Fritz Hummel (tb); Art Ralston (as, ob, bsn); Clarence Hutchenrider (cl, as); Kenny Sargent (as, v); Jack Blanchette (g). 3/31–2/37.
Casa Loma has a strange place in the music's history. The early stuff is competent dance band fare, although something peculiar happens halfway through a very stodgy 'Happy Days Are Here Again' (on the first disc), when it suddenly bursts into a hot performance fired by Hunt's trombone. Similarly, 'San Sue Strut' seems to be twice as fast as anything else here and the title-track is a fair display of early white swing. It's the second CD which has all the famous Casa Loma music: Gifford's charts for 'White Jazz', 'Black Jazz' and 'Maniac's Ball' has the orchestra as a precision-driven locomotive, riffs piling on one another, tempos mercurial if uncomfortably stiff. Aside from Hunt, a genuine personality, the soloists lacked much individuality and the reed-players seem especially unremarkable. The assault on 'Put On Your Old Grey Bonnet' is exhilarating, but by the second version of 'Royal Garden Blues' the band sounds anonymous. Larry Clinton took over from Gifford and his 'A Study In Brown' is the farewell track here: it led nowhere. Scholars will welcome these handsome compilations.

Also, in brief:

 Stompin' Around /  Boneyard Shuffle Hep CD 1062 / 1056. 32–39; 35–41.
Two good selections that pretty much cover the waterfront.

Frank Catalano (born 1978)

TENOR & SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Prodigious young talent, who started out with Charles Earland, and overcame the near-loss of a finger.

 Cut It Out Delmark DE 501 Catalano; Ira Sullivan (t, f); Willie Pickens (p); Brian Sandstrom (b); Robert Shy, Rusty Jones (d). 8 & 12/97.

 Live At The Green Mill Delmark DE 536 Catalano; Randy Brecker (t); Larry Novak (p); Eric Hochberg (b); Paul Wertico (d). 01.

Intriguingly, Catalano is a very young player – only 19 when the first of these made – who is most impressive when he doesn't try to burn up the studio. He actually has something to say, and if that doesn't seem too hopeful on the basis of his tenor-and-drums rip through 'Confirmation' at the top of Cut It Out (they do the same with 'Tenor Madness' at the end), he very quickly settles with Horace Silver's 'Love Vibrations', his own 'Those Wacky Ways' and then a lovely 'Willow Weep For Me'. He likes to explore unusual harmonic territory, abetted by his soprano saxophone, and Sullivan is both hip to that and wise enough to keep things grounded: a great trumpet part on the Monk 'I Mean You', touches of flute elsewhere.

Catalano benefits from another, very different but equally wise, old trumpet head on the live date. It's an interesting programme, taking 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', material by Coltrane, Benny Golson, Miles Davis and Medeski, Martin & Wood. As before, Frank's more convincing when he takes his foot off the gas a bit, but there isn't a dull spot on the entire album and with the overblown stuff kept in proportion, he's endlessly listenable.

Philip Catherine (born 1942)

GUITAR, ELECTRIC GUITAR, GUITAR-SYNTHESIZER

Of mixed English/Belgian parentage, his first influence, apart from Django, was compatriot René Thomas, but he was quick to respond to the jazz-rock techniques of John McLaughlin and Larry Coryell. He has a limpid but by no means languid style.

 Trio JMS 031 Catherine; Christian Escoudé (g); Didier Lockwood (vn, violectra). 10 & 11/83.

An elegant guitar/fiddle summit in which Catherine seems to take the most prominent role, providing the arrangements even for the others' compositions. His own opening 'Changement D'Avis' is the longest and in some respects the best thing on the set, but Lockwood's cutting tone on his own brief 'Paint Pot' and on the more romantic 'Like An Angel' is very effective. Escoudé was less formulaic in later years, when he learned not to fetishize technique and simply to express himself.

(*) I Remember You Criss Cross 1048 Catherine; Tom Harrell (flhn); Hein Van de Geyn (b). 10/90.

(*) Moods: Volume 1 /  ... Volume 2 Criss Cross 1060 / 1061 As above, except add Michael Herr (ky). 5/92.

Recorded as a tribute to Chet Baker, I Remember You reunites the line-up that made Chet's Choice for Criss Cross in 1985, with Tom Harrell's floating melancholic flugelhorn steering teasingly close to Baker's weary, self-denying diction. Harrell contributes two fine originals – the softly swinging 'From This Time, From That Time' and 'Songflower' – Van de Geyn one and Catherine two. The opening 'Nardis' serves as an unintended farewell to Miles. Hank Mobley's 'Funk In Deep Freeze' and the closing 'Blues For G.T.' are slightly unexpected in this context but, drummerless, take on the same slightly enervated quality that is raised only by Catherine's astonishingly accurate rhythm guitar. 'My Funny Valentine'? Well, they could hardly have got away without it; Harrell's statement and subsequent solo are in the Baker vein, Catherine uses his pedals with imagination.

One wonders whether the Moods sessions really yielded enough for two full-length discs. As the title hints, there is just a suspicion that Catherine is drifting towards sophisticated easy listening. The three interesting tracks on Volume 2, significantly, are the Tom Harrell compositions, whose rather deprecating titles, 'The Waltz' and 'Twenty Bar Tune', disguise a considerable expenditure of imaginative effort.

 Live Dreyfus 36587 Catherine; Bert Van den Brink (p, ky); Hein Van de Geyn (b); Hans Van Oosterhout (d). 3/96.

A long and delightfully uncomplicated set from the guitarist and his Dutch quartet, Live almost feels like a career summation, with superb versions of 'René Thomas', 'Mingus In The Sky', Hermeto Pascoal's 'Nem Um Talvez', Miles's blues 'Freddie Freeloader' and 'Stella By Starlight'. Catherine's guitar sound has changed little over the years, but outside the studio it inevitably has a more spiny and percussive quality, though the solos are immaculately shaped.

(*) Blue Prince Dreyfus 36614 Catherine; Bert Joris (t, bugle); Hein Van de Geyn (b); Hans Van Oosterhout (d). 6/00.

After occasional longueurs of some of the recent albums, this one goes off a storm, kicking in with 'Coffee Groove' and an unexpectedly progressive/fusion sound to the leader's guitar. Much of the set is bop-influenced, as one might expect, but there is little Django in evidence. On 'Global Warming', which comes second in the running order and really defines the shape of the album, Catherine seems to be looking for a much darker and more sombre coloration. Joris and Van de Geyn are extremely able accompanists, but Van Oosterhout simply sounds square.

 Summer Night Dreyfus Jazz FDM 36637 2 Catherine; Bert Joris (t); Philippe Aerts (b); Joost Van Schaik (d). 5/02.

Again, Joris is an important part of the formula and he and Catherine exchange some interesting ideas on 'Time After Time'. There are moments, as on 'Janet', when Philip returns to something like a jazz-rock idiom, while some of his straight jazz playing, on 'Round About Midnight' for instance, is rather flat and uninflected. On a single track, 'Gilles Et Mirona', he explores double-tracking in a 'solo' outing and it's odd – though possibly encouraging for the guitarist – that this is the most compelling thing on the album. Despite the resolutely unswinging Schaik, the jazz component seems higher than of late.

Also, in brief:

 Guitar Groove Dreyfus 36599. 99.
An unusually straight-ahead trio with Alphonso Johnson (b) and Rodney Holmes (d).

(*) Meeting Colours Dreyfus 36675. 1/05.
Despite the professionalism of the Brussels Jazz Orchestra, this is perversely rather colourless.

Sid Catlett (1910–51)

DRUMS

Born in Evansville, Indiana, he worked with Henderson, Goodman, Redman and Armstrong, joining the All-Stars in 1947, and then taking bebop in his stride. Much loved and long mourned after he collapsed and died at a Chicago concert.

(*) Sid Catlett 1944–1946 Classics 974 Catlett; Charlie Shavers, Joe Guy, Gerald Wilson (t); Barney Bigard, Edmond Hall (cl); Bull Moose Jackson, Willie Smith (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Illinois Jacquet, Frank Socolow, Ben Webster (ts); Art Tatum, Marlowe Morris, Eddie Heywood, Horace Henderson, Pete Johnson (p); Bill Gooden (org); Al Casey, Jimmy Shirley (g); Oscar Pettiford, John Simmons, Gene Ramey (b). 1/44–46.
Dead at 41, so his legacy is comparatively small, but he was a complete master of drums and cymbals whose virtuoso technique was unflashy and seldom drew attention to itself, though he could dominate most group settings. This hotchpotch of small group dates – for Commodore, Session, Delta, Regis, Capitol, Manor and V-Disc – is fascinating. The extraordinary opening 'Rose Room' is virtually a duet with Bigard. Six quarter-tracks with Webster and Morris are similarly electric, and five more with horns include some splendid moments, though indifferently recorded. The next five sessions have less of interest but for its first half the CD is close to indispensable. Sid's mercurial style, with glistening cymbal work, unexpected rimshot fusillades and detailed snare rhythms, was among the very few swing-based methods that didn't sound passé in the bop era.

André Ceccarelli

DRUMS

Highly regarded figure on the European scene who's occasionally stepped out of the shadows to make a statement. An eclectic CV includes a spell with Sting.

 Avenue Des Diables Blues Dreyfus 366832 Ceccarelli; Joey DeFrancesco (org); Biréli Lagrène (g). 2/05.

(*) Golden Land Camjazz 5024 Ceccarelli; David El-Malek (ts); Enrico Pieranunzi (p); Hein Van de Geyn (b); Elisabeth Kontomanou (v). 11/06.
Thirty years have passed since Ceccarelli's first, eponymous outing as a leader, and there haven't been too many records along the way. He's fairly reticent on Avenue (the title isn't a misprint), allowing the songs to find their own level rather than driving them along. 'Summertime' is pretty generic, but the opening sequence of 'Nardis' and 'Sophisticated Lady' finds the drummer at his best, creating the most elegant of backgrounds for his partners. He's featured only on 'Prelude', a filler track that only works because it's kept short. There are a couple more standards, a nice 'La Vie En Rose', Jaco's 'Three Views Of A Secret' and, mystifyingly, a Norah Jones song.

The later album has a richer palette. El-Malek is something of a discovery, an uncloned and individual player who finds a sympathetic partner in Pieranunzi. He is every bit as simpatico with the bassist, who provides the album's highlight, 'Though Dreamers Die', on which El-Malek plays a glorious solo. There are two versions of the title-track, one instrumental and one – actually better – with co-writer Kontomanou. No standards apart from an average 'I'm Through With Love'. These days, André seems to be concentrating on his own writing, and it's worth checking out.

Also, in brief:

 Dansez Sur Moi Universal 8466572. 06.
Elegant, lyrical and oddly moving.

Oscar 'Papa' Celestin (1884–1954)

CORNET, VOICE

He led the Tuxedo Brass Band in New Orleans in the 1910s, did a few recordings in the '20s, retired for a decade, and then came back with the great revival.

♛ * Papa Celestin & Sam Morgan Azure AZ-CD-12 Celestin; Louis 'Kid Shots' Madison, Ricard Alexis, George McCullum, Guy Kelly (c); William Ridgley, August Rousseau, William Matthews, Ernest Kelly (tb); Willard Thoumy, Paul 'Polo' Barnes, Earl Pierson, Sid Carriere, Clarence Hall, Oliver Alcorn (reeds); Manual Manetta, Jeanette Salvant (p); John Marrero, Narvin Kimball (bj); Simon Marrero (b, bb); Abby Foster, Josiah Frazier (d); Charles Gills, Ferdinand Joseph (v). 1/25–12/28.
Little enough music was recorded in New Orleans in the '20s to make any survivals valuable, but the sessions led by Celestin and Morgan (who's reviewed separately but clinches the five-star rating) would be remarkable anyway. Despite devices imported from dance band trends, particularly in the later tracks, they really sound like no other jazz of the period. The first three tracks are by the Original Tuxedo Jazz Orchestra, with Madison and Celestin in the front line, and the deliriously exciting 'Original Tuxedo Rag' is a blazing fusion of ragtime, jazz and dance music that makes one ache to have seen this band in the flesh. The 13 subsequent titles from 1926–8 are less frantic and are occasionally troubled by the mannerisms of the day, weak vocals in particular. But the reed sections manage their curious blend of sentimentality and shrewd, hot playing with surprising finesse; the ensembles are consistently driving; and the two-cornet leads are frequently as subtle and as well-ordered as those of Oliver's band. An undervalued soloist, Celestin is fine on 'My Josephine' and the superb slow piece 'It's Jam Up'. Outstanding clear and powerful remastering.

Also, in brief:

 The 1950s Radio Broadcasts Arhoolie CD 7024. 7/50–6/51.
A useful reminder that despite ill-health and a car crash, Celestin continued to make music after the war when his style of jazz was recognized anew.

Sila Cevikce (born 1970)

PIANO

Ankara-born and now based in Oregon, where she teaches at the State University.

(*) A New Abode Steeplechase SCCD 31565 Cevikce; Kim Bock, Rich Perry (ts); Adam Armstrong (b); Ari Hoenig (d). 4/04.
A sparkling debut. The title-piece, with its march-like opening and steady loosening of metre and harmonics, is not just implicitly autobiographical, an exile's self-portrait, but also an ideal introduction to the work of a composer who seems to rely on flexible time-signatures and abrupt or more subtle shifts between quite different metres. Hoenig is a major player in this department and it would be good to hear some more of this material arranged for trio only. 'Phasing Out' is the most subtle exercise in this form, and 'No Train' may well be a look into Coltrane's rhythmic exercises (Marilyn Crispell could be an inspiration here) rather than his more familiar harmonics. A fine album by any measure. The follow-up already seems overdue.

Henri Chaix (born 1925)

PIANO

A leading member of the Swiss jazz movement in post-war years, Chaix is a dedicated mainstream pianist whose homegrown recordings have rarely reached a wider audience. He occasionally plays trombone.

 Jumpin' Punkins /  Jive At Five /  Just Friends Sackville SKCD2-2020 / 2035 / 2048 Chaix; Alain Du Bois (b); Romano Cavicchiolo (d). 10/90; 8/93; 4/98.
'A listener could close his eyes and never believe that this is a Swiss playing in Geneva' – thus did Rex Stewart commend Henri Chaix's playing in 1967. Chaix became Switzerland's mainstream leader in the '40s, and he backed many American visitors. But his own circumstances have seldom taken him to international audiences. Jumpin' Punkins finds him in vigorous form, touching few intensities but taking a satisfyingly personal route through jazz-piano tradition. His favourite manner is a medium-tempo stride, a variation which is faithful to James P. Johnson's methods, and he makes 'Yesterdays' and 'All God's Chillun Got Rhythm' into believable stride vehicles. Yet his unassumingly romantic treatment of 'Ruby My Dear' suggests that more-demanding jazz material holds few terrors for him. Du Bois and Cavicchiolo stay out of his way, and the recording pays handsome regard to the Bösendorfer piano.

Jive At Five is no more and no less than a second helping, three years on. The material is more mainstream than ever, and one could wish that Chaix would look around for one or two more interesting tunes. But this is his style and he's right at home in it. The trio lasted for 30 years and was brought to an end only when Du Bois died shortly after Just Friends was recorded. It's another attractive set, though by no means an advance on the previous two. Chaix had his style of playing and had presumably no career ambitions left to exercise.

Serge Chaloff (1923–57)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE

Worked with several big bands before an important spell with Woody Herman, 1947–9. Based himself in his home town of Boston in the '50s, but contracted spinal paralysis, which eventually killed him. One of the few baritone men to make a go of bop.

(*) The Complete Small Group Bop Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD 22807 Chaloff; Sonny Berman, Miles Davis, Gait Preddy, Red Rodney (t); Ernie Royal (t, v); Mert Goodspeed, Bennie Green, Bill Harris, Earl Swope (tb); Woody Herman (cl, v); Charlie Mariano (as); Al Cohn, Allen Eager, Flip Phillips, Sonny Stitt (ts); Al Haig, Ralph Burns, Barbara Carroll, Lou Levy, Bud Powell, George Wallington (p); Terry Gibbs (vib); Artie Bernstein, Chubby Jackson, Oscar Pettiford, Curley Russell, Frank Vaccaro, Chuck Wayne (b); Denzil Best, Tiny Khan, Don Lamond, Max Roach, Pete DeRosa (d). 11/46–12/49.

 The Fable Of Mabel 1201 Records 9003 Chaloff; Nick Capazuto, Herb Pomeroy (t); Gene DiStachio (tb); Charlie Mariano, Boots Mussulli (as); Varty Haritounian (ts); Russ Freeman, Richard Twardzik (p); Ray Oliver, Jimmy Woode (b); Buzzy Drootin, Jimmy Zitano (d). 6 & 9/54.
Hugely talented, but the career was riven by personal problems, and the end was dreadful. Chaloff's approach to the unwieldy baritone was restrained rather than virtuosic and concentrated on the distinctive timbre of the instrument rather than outpacing all opposition. Nevertheless, he was an agile improviser who could transform a sleepy-sounding phrase with a single overblown note.

Chaloff's work has never been easy to find, although those who invested in Mosaic's edition can permit themselves a self-satisfied smile. The Jazz Factory set is a fair and affordable compromise: two versions of 'Blue Serge', 'The Goof and I', 'King Edward The Flatted Fifth', 'Woodchopper's Holiday', in fact all the Chaloff you'd want from this period.

The Fable Of Mabel has been in and out of circulation. Hearing these tracks afresh prompts no fresh assessment of Chaloff's position but confirms what a fine player he could be. There are two sessions here, one under the leadership of Mussulli, with Russ Freeman in the band and a later nonet session led by Serge himself. The latter includes no fewer than five alternate takes, including three takes of the title-tune, which was written by eccentric pianist Richard Twardzik, who's usually described as the composer of 'Yellow Waltz', as if that were the only thing of note he ever did.

CORE COLLECTION

* Blue Serge
Capitol 94505 Chaloff; Sonny Clark (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/56.

* Blue Serge / Boston Blow Up
Definitive DRCD 11261 As above; add Herb Pomeroy (t); Boots Mussulli (as). 4/55, 3/56.

Happily, this classic is still around. Chaloff's masterpiece is both vigorous and moving, not for the knowledge that he was so near to his own death but for the unsentimental rigour of the playing. 'Thanks For The Memory' is overpoweringly beautiful as Chaloff creates a series of melodic variations which match the improviser's ideal of fashioning an entirely new song. 'Stairway To The Stars' is almost as fine, and the thoughtful 'The Goof And I' and 'Susie's Blues' show that Chaloff still had plenty of ideas about what could be done with a bebopper's basic materials. This important session has retained all its power.

The Definitive option is worth considering as well, not least with the inclusion of the earlier (albeit less exciting) Boston Blow-Up. 'Body And Soul' is scorching.

Also, in brief:

* The Baritone Sax Master Proper CD233. 46–50.
A very proper introduction to a not very proper guy. Valuable set.

 Boston 1950 Uptown 2378. 11/46, 10/50.
Worth tracking down. The date's misleading because the better stuff comes from '46, four duos with pianist Rollins Griffith. The rest is airshots (including a brief interview) with a variety of groups.

Dennis Chambers

DRUMS

Versatile contemporary, with an interest in fusion as well as straight-ahead jazz.

 Outbreak ESC 03682 Chambers; Randy Brecker, Jim Hynes (t); Michael Davis (tb); Aaron Heick (as, ts); Michael Brecker (ts); Bob Malach (ts, bsx); Jim Beard (ky); John Herington, Nick Moroch (g); Dean Brown (g, b); Rodney Skeet Curtis, Matthew Garrison, Will Lee, Gary Willis (b); Danny Sadownick, Arto Tunçboyaciyan (perc). 2–4/02.
 Planet Earth BHM 1005 Chambers; Kenny Garrett (as); Bob Malach (as, ts, bsx, f); Dean Brown, Adam Rogers (g); Borneo Horns. 10/04.
Misleadingly described as Chambers's debut, Outbreak actually comes a decade after his first effort as leader, Getting Even. Beard was on hand then, too, to help with the charts. Chambers isn't either a confident composer or indeed a soloist of Billy Cobham's quality; his role is to drive the music along, whether it's a Sly Stone tune (or Wilson Pickett on the second of these) or the Cobham-like 'Groovus Interruptus', which contains some of the most imaginative drumming on the earlier set. Beard mixes in small-group tracks with larger arrangements, opening with a roar on 'Roll Call', which is dominated by the Breckers.

The later date is more imaginative, with Sun Ra material mixed in with pop staples and imaginative interludes for the Borneo Horns.

Joe Chambers (born 1942)

DRUMS, VIBRAPHONE, MARIMBA

Studied and played in DC in early '60s, then moved to NY to play and write for a number of Blue Note and post-bop sessions.

(*) Phantom Of The City Candid CCD 79517 Chambers; Philip Harper (t); Bob Berg (ts); George Cables (p); Santi Debriano (b). 3/91.
Chambers wrote four great tunes for Bobby Hutcherson's Blue Note Components. He numbers Jimmy Giuffre as a crucial writing influence and there's certainly a parallel in the thinking of both men regarding free and formal structures. That said, only two themes on this date are by the leader: 'For Miles Davis', a serene yet vaguely ominous tribute, and the brighter 'Nuevo Mundo'. Chambers the drummer is a thoughtful, interactive performer, seldom taking the driving seat and preferring to balance tonal weights and measures. He has an ideal band here: Berg's tenor is habitually analytical, Cables is a romantic with a terse streak of intelligence and Harper's Berigan-like low notes and dryly spun lyricism – see 'You've Changed' – add further spice. The live recording, from Birdland, is clear and full-bodied.

 Urban Grooves 441 FFO-0003 Chambers; Gary Bartz (ss, as); Eric Reed (p, ky); Rufus Reid (b); Bobby Sanabria (perc). 3/02.
A fine 1998 Blue Note is no longer around, but this is equally pleasing and enigmatic. For a record of its title, the music is surprisingly dreamy, even pastoral. The leader contributes three originals, of which the ballad 'Irina' is the pick, and there are some curious pieces of repertory: Miles's 'Sid's Ahead', remodelled with marimba, congas and synthesizer strokes, 'In A Sentimental Mood', set to a slow shuffle. Bartz seems subdued and some of the best music is in the trio tracks, especially a swinging 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top', where Eric Reed shines.

(*) The Outlaw Savant 2069 Chambers; Logan Richardson (sax); Misha Tsiganov (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Bobby Sanabria (d, perc); Nicole Guilland (v). 8 & 9/05.
His Hutcherson influence is evident throughout this vibes-driven set. On the closing 'Poinciana', Joe plays everything you hear, but for the rest, he's supported by a relatively unknown band, who give him pretty much what he wants without intruding too flagrantly on his starring role. Even Nicole Guilland's vocals, particularly fine on 'Come Back To Me', have their place. It's a curious record in many ways and Chambers's front-and-centre stance sometimes renders the accompaniments redundant, though presumably it was felt too much solo vibraphone wasn't going to sell. On the contrary, we might have been more sold on that concept. Even so, this is a strong and effective date.

Paul Chambers (1935–69)

BASS

Raised in Detroit, 'Mr P.C.' became a prominent small-group sideman, working with Miles Davis, 1954–62, then with Wynton Kelly, Coltrane and others, leading dates of his own. Narcotics and other problems led to his early death.

 Whims Of Chambers Blue Note 37647-2 Chambers; Donald Byrd (t); John Coltrane (ts); Horace Silver (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/56.
(*) Bass On Top Blue Note 93182 Chambers; Hank Jones (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Art Taylor (d). 7/57.
 Go Vee Jay CD 17 / Collectables 7255 Chambers; Freddie Hubbard (t); Cannonball Adderley (as); Wynton Kelly (p); Jimmy Cobb (d). 2/59.
(*) Motor City Scene Lone Hill Jazz 10134 Chambers; Donald Byrd (t); Thad Jones (flhn); Billy Mitchell (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Tommy Flanagan (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Louis Hayes, Elvin Jones (d). 59–60.
 1st Bassman Vee Jay CD 04 Chambers; Tommy Turrentine (t); Yusef Lateef (ts); Lex Humphries (d). 2/61.

Chambers led only a handful of record dates. These were early days to feature the bass in a spotlight role, and Whims feels artificially showcased around his solo work. The arco passages may have been groundbreaking, but the tone still grates at times. That aside, it's a solid and sometimes sparky hard-bop date; Trane charges at both 'Nita' and 'We Six' in his best 1956 form. But the star soloist overall, here and On Top, is Burrell. There's more moody arco stuff on the 1957 record, but Chambers's best moment is the long plucked solo on 'Chasin' The Bird'. Available once again under the RVG marque.

Go is nicely balanced. The bass isn't so artificially foregrounded and Adderley (Hubbard added on four tracks) is better integrated into the group sound. The reissue has a number of alternates, which reveal the evolution of Chambers's solos, usually better when they're simpler. 'I Heard That' (three takes) is probably the highlight, but there are a couple of nice versions of 'I Got Rhythm' that exploit bop language without being in thrall to it. 1st Bassman was almost entirely written by Lateef, who tends to dominate the solos, though by this stage Chambers's last record as leader, his solo approach is highly refined.

Motor City Scene changed a long-prevailing picture. For these dates, Chambers assembled two formidable bands (on this evidence Mitchell should be better known), who provided perfect foils for those thick, rolling bass-lines. (Hayes played the later date under the nom de session 'Hey' Lewis.) 'Like Old Times' and 'Stardust' are great ensemble performances, and the solos develop organically. Decent transfers, too.

Thomas Chapin (1958–98)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, OTHER REEDS

A body of music that now seems definitive of the NY downtown scene of the '90s, though his adventurous sound seemed to be becoming more lyrical and personal in latter years; he succumbed to leukaemia and is greatly missed.

* Night Bird Song / * Sky Piece Knitting Factory KFRCD 240 / 208 Chapin; Mario Pavone (b); Michael Sarin (d). 8–9/92; 7/96.

(*) Ride Playscape 071595 As above. 7/95.

The surviving legacy is small, but the music is unremittingly powerful and often very beautiful. Towards the end of his life, Chapin turned to a more meditative style, but there is energy aplenty on these. Night Bird Song was only released posthumously, having been recorded, mastered and even designed during Tom's lifetime. The album is as tightly woven as the Panamanian mola cloth on the cover art. Three of the tunes – the title-track, 'Alphaville' and 'Changes Two Tires' – also appeared on Sky Piece, which suggests how assiduously Chapin rethought and reworked his relatively small body of composition. The former pair are welded together with a dark, almost chordal tonality on saxophone, supported by Pavone's bass. 'Cliff Island' is played on sopranino, as is the cartoonish 'Tweety's Last Adventure'. Ever searching for new sounds, he blows a reedless alto on 'The Roaring S', but most moving of all is the flute track 'Aeolus', a soaring, anchored, paradoxical duet with Pavone, which half a decade later was to be the last piece he played in public.

Made later, but released first, Sky Piece stood as a kind of epitaph. Its dominant sounds aren't his ever-widening array of saxophones and flutes – sopranino, bass flute and the wooden pinkullo – but the sounds of nature and the ominous tick of an alarm clock on 'Just Now', ringing shrilly on 'Alphaville'. He had no idea how long he had left when these were recorded and seemed to be experimenting with expanded – or as in Dalí – melted time. His explorations yielded the title-piece, inspired by a trip to Namibia and introducing the sombre bass flute; then there is 'Essaouira', evoking the Moroccan coastal town with a shawm-like tone; and 'Night Bird Song', the longest piece, which documents some of the sounds – nightjar? whippoorwill? – heard on a nature trek in Connecticut. Unusually, he includes a repertory piece; Monk's 'Ask Me Now' is the second present-tense reference on an album which even a decade later feels like a succession of joyous moments, declining to look beyond the end of the song.

Ride wasn't issued until eight years after Chapin's death. It's a decent enough recording, made at the mostly cheerless North Sea Jazz Festival. The trio plays some familiar stuff – 'Anima' from way back, 'Night Bird Song', 'Changes Two Tires', 'Aeolus' – and the impression one comes away with is how important Pavone and Sarin were to the overall impact of Chapin's music. An eight-CD Knitting Factory box Alive contained more concert material, but it's unlikely to be found now and Ride is a decent souvenir of a prematurely snuffed-out talent.

Bill Charlap (born 1966)

PIANO

The son of songwriter Moose Charlap and singer Sandy Stewart, he's an imaginative mainstreamer.

 Along With Me Chiaroscuro CRD 326 Charlap; Sean Smith, Andy Eulau (b); Ron Vincent (d). 6/91–8/93.

 Souvenir Criss Cross 1108 Charlap; Scott Colley (b); Dennis Mackrel (d). 6/95.

The early records had plenty of skill and confidence. Along With Me is sweetly handled, from Sean Smith's pretty ballad 'Has This Song Been Written For You Before?' to an almost rhapsodic reading of 'Donna Lee', but it could have used a little excitement, too. Souvenir is better. The two opening blues, Coleman's 'Turnaround' and (former teacher) Jack Reilly's 'Half Step', are ingenious variations. Colley and Mackrel complete a good team, and while there are a couple of makeweights – 'Alone Together' is overlong and Jim Hall's 'Waltz New' undercooked – it's a good record.

* Written In The Stars Blue Note 27291 Charlap; Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 3/00.

(*) Stardust Blue Note 35985 As above, except add Frank Wess (ts); Jim Hall (g); Shirley Horn, Tony Bennett (v). 01.

Charlap's background more and more seems like an enormous assist. He did not come to the standard repertoire as someone who grew up on pop and rock; rather, this kind of material is very much the family business, and he reads melodies like 'In The Still Of The Night' and 'The Nearness Of You' with intuitive understanding. The Blue Note debut is close to perfection in this idiom, and Charlap plays with the confidence of a man who knows where he wants to go with each song. If it's not the sound of surprise, it's expert craftsmanship.

The lightning gallop through 'Jubilee' which opens Stardust promises equal bounty, but it's a pity that Blue Note felt the need to saddle him with the names, whose seniority is beginning to tell on them and merely distracts from the pianist's impact. Even so, excellent trio work on 'Georgia', 'I Walk With Music' and 'One Morning In May' is worth waiting for.

 Somewhere: The Songs Of Leonard Bernstein Blue Note 94808 As above, except omit Wess, Hall, Horn, Bennett. 10/03.
One-composer recitals are commonplace, but Bernstein is rarely picked. Scarcely any of the tunes the pianist's chosen here are likely to be called, and it's hard to think of many other versions of 'Glitter And Be Gay', 'Jump' or 'A Quiet Girl'. As Charlap remarks, Bernstein was a lot nearer to our own time than Kern or Berlin; he's modern, and though the songs tend to be tougher meat for improvisers used to the familiar terrain of 'Night And Day', there's a case for their greater relevance to players as accomplished and hip as these.

Like his other records, this one is quiet, considered and full of the peculiar clarity he brings to the keyboard; even as he's finding fresh routes across the chorus lines, he rarely sounds as if he's dropped in even a note that might not belong. Listen to the new clothes he puts on 'Lucky To Be Me' and 'America', and on 'Somewhere' itself, played as a serene finale.

 Live At The Village Vanguard Blue Note 7243 5 97044 Charlap; Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 9/03.
He's the kind of musician who should probably always be recorded live. After the weighty plod of The American Soul (see below), there's more immediacy and punch to this, made earlier but only released in late 2007. Washington & Washington deserve a huge slice of the credit for its success: Peter's always absolutely on the chord, when he's not touching in a shadow of the original song during the improvisations; Kenny works his brushes as well as any contemporary player and has a neat attack for the faster tunes. They kick off with Mulligan's 'Rocker' and pick up the pace a few minutes later with 'Godchild', of similar historical provenance, but it's the languid 'Autumn In New York' in between that provides the album's first high-point. The ballads are generally better than the rest, suggesting a new depth of expressiveness underneath the slick. 'It's Only A Paper Moon' is nicely reinvented as a nostalgia piece, while Jim Hall's 'All Across The City' is glorious. The closing sequence of 'While We're Young' and 'Last Night When We Were Young' is as effective as anything Bill has previously committed to record. More live stuff, please.

(*) Love Is Here To Stay Blue Note 60341 Charlap; Sandy Stewart (v). 05.
One achingly slow tempo after another, Stewart's voice exposing every vulnerable tremor, so hardly a record to play through at one sitting. Yet the support Charlap gives his mom is, frankly, a marvel, the harmonic edges softened, the tempos given just enough spring to keep them breathing. Stewart responds with a set of unabashedly charming performances. There aren't many mother-and-son records in jazz, but this one surely heads the list.

Charlap now has many records on the Japanese Venus imprint, which falls outside our purview but is well worth investigating.

Also, in brief:

 The Gerry Mulligan Songbook Chiaroscuro CRD 349. 6/96.
Piano duets (plus rhythm) with fellow Jeru employee Ted Rosenthal.

() Distant Star Criss Cross 1131. 12/96.
Something's amiss here; more becalmed than spirited.

 The American Soul Blue Note 60670. 2/05.
Another grand event with guest stars – Nick Payton (t), Slide Hampton (tb), Phil Woods (as), Frank Wess (ts) again – but it adds up to something stiff and over-serious.

Denis Charles (1933–98)

DRUMS

Born in the Virgin Islands, he moved to NY in the mid-'50s and met Cecil Taylor, Ed Blackwell and Sonny Rollins. Worked with Gil Evans, Jimmy Giuffre and Steve Lacy. Fallow period in the later '60s but returned with a renewed interest in his Caribbean heritage.

() Queen Mary Silkheart 121 Charles; Booker T. (ts); Wilber Morris (b); Huss Charles (perc). 4/89.
 Captain Of The Deep Eremite 9 Charles; Nathan Breedlove (t); Jemeel Moondoc (as); Wilber De Joode (b). 5/91.
 A Scream for Charles Tyler Bleu Regard 1943 Charles; Rémi Charmasson (g); Bernard Santacruz (b). 7/92.
After working with Charles, Jimmy Giuffre determined that rather than working with indifferent drummers, he would prefer to work without one. One doesn't necessarily see why from Queen Mary, except that Charles's sense of time is highly subtle, sometimes too much so to sustain interest. The presence of Huss Charles (brother?) on bongos (Denis's original instrument) makes a difference, but the pace is unhurried and one often listens for Morris rather than the horn and percussion. The title refers not to the great ship but to a legendary cane-cutter.

The other Wilber is on hand for the live Eremite set, recorded at a festival in Holland. If one were primed to listen to the drummer (who's obviously a Blackwell disciple), this might well prompt a guess at some lost Ornette–Cherry date. The trumpeter has something of Don's buoyant lyricism but the saxophone holds the foreground throughout and it's as much Moondoc's date as the ostensible leader's. One might reasonably have expected something similar of the later date if Charles Tyler had lived to play on it, as planned. As it is, there's a hollow air, tinged with loss. Charmasson works manfully to fill the room but the music sounds introverted and uncommunicative.

Also, in brief:

 Drum Talk Wobbly Rail 5. 1/98.
Live date with rising star Susie Ibarra; also noted under her entry.

Teddy Charles (born 1928)

VIBRAPHONE, MARIMBA, PIANO, PERCUSSION

Played in big bands at the end of the swing era, but turned to composition in the '50s and recorded in a mildly experimental form, making associations with Miles Davis and Charles Mingus.

(*) New Directions Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1927 Charles; Hall Overton (p); Don Roberts, Jimmy Raney (g); Kenny O'Brien, Dick Nivison (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). 11/51–1/53.
 & The Westcoasters Fresh Sound FRSCD 413 Charles; Shorty Rogers (t); Frank Morgan (as); Wardell Gray (ts); Jimmy Giuffre (ts, bs); Sonny Clark (p); Curtis Counce, Dick Nivison (b); Shelly Manne, Lawrence Marable (d). 2 & 8/53.
(*) Collaboration: West Original Jazz Classics OJCCD122 As above, except omit Morgan, Gray, Clark, Nivison, Marable. 8/53.
 Evolution Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1731 As above, except add J. R. Monterose (ts); Charles Mingus (b); Jerry Segal (d). 8/53–1/55.
Charles is usually respected as a harbinger of Ornette Coleman's free music; the early records aim for an independence of bebop structure which still sounds remarkably fresh. New Directions collates three extremely rare 10-inch LPs. The first duplicates the Norvo–Farlow–Mingus instrumentation while securing a different result. Here and there Charles throws out a solo steeped in bop virtuosity – and in the incredible flight on 'Ol' Man River' – but for the most part he's looking to have the trio make sense as an ensemble, carefully balanced in its tones and shapes. Roberts and O'Brien, though, are uninspiring partners. Four tracks with Raney, Nivison and O'Shaughnessy are more encouraging, with Raney's perplexing miniature 'Composition For Four Pieces' and a bumpy, almost abstract treatment of 'A Night In Tunisia'. The final date belongs almost as much to Hall Overton – who wrote all four pieces – as to Charles, who also plays marimba, vibes and glockenspiel. Ira Gitler's notes talk about Milhaud, Stravinsky and Bartók and there's a suitably long-haired feel to the music; however, 'Mobiles' and 'Antiphony' retain their head-turning qualities even through the tape-hiss.

The two 1953 sessions explore contrapuntal textures in a way which only Tristano had already tried and there is wonderful interplay between Rogers and Manne. 'Variations On A Theme By Bud' on Collaboration: West is a small classic of anticipatory freedom, the music played round key centres rather than a framework of chords. The same material is also on the Fresh Sound, with an interesting date from earlier in the year with Gray and Morgan. But Charles's interest in harmony and arrangement required larger groups than these, and the quartet session with Mingus, Monterose and Segal is less impressive.

[illegible]

 The Teddy Charles Tentet
Collectables COL 6161 / Fresh Sound FSRCD 2240 Charles; Art Farmer (t); Gigi Gryce (as); J. R. Monterose (ts); Jimmy Raney (g); Jimmy Butterfield (tba); Teddy Kotick (b); Joe Harris (d). 1/56.

This remains Charles's masterpiece, full of pungent writing from various hands. The record is a showcase for some of the sharpest arranging minds of the day: Giuffre, Brookmeyer, Waldron, Evans and especially George Russell, whose 'Lydian M-1' makes an extraordinary climax to the date. Charles's own 'The Emperor' and a transfigured 'Nature Boy' stand as tall as the rest.

 Coolin' /  Vibe-Rant Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1866 / Blue Moon BMCD 1626 Charles; Idrees Sulieman (t); John Jenkins (as on Coolin' only); Mal Waldron (p); Addison (b); Jerry Segal (d). 4/57; 6/57.
 The Prestige Jazz Quartet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1937 As above, except omit Jenkins. 4/57.
Coolin' features some rarely encountered horns in a programme of evenly divided originals. Charles takes a back-seat role, contributing only one tune and taking his turn in the round-robin of solos. This is a more conventional hard-bop session, but the tunes have some piquant interest and Waldron's off-centre 'Staggers' and 'Reiteration', a typical piece of minor-key brooding, are worth reviving. Jenkins plays with splendid intensity, but Sulieman's solos are mere bop convention, quotes and all. Vibe-Rant is a rarity, originally issued on Bethlehem but not seen since then; Charles's 'Blues Becomes Elektra' is a typically 'modern' conception. The other 1957 date starts with a Charles suite written in emulation of John Lewis and the MJQ, follows up with two Waldron pieces and concludes with a thoughtful, sparky read of Monk's 'Friday The 13th'.

Also, in brief:

 On Campus! Ivy League Jazz Concert RS 43. 60.
Live at Yale, complete with the 'Whiffenpoof Song'. Zoot Sims (ts) and Jimmy Raney (g) are in the septet line-up.

Tommy Chase

DRUMS

Veteran British hard-bopper who does it the old-fashioned way.

 One Way Spotlite SPJ 410 Chase; Jon Eardley (t); Ray Warleigh (as); John Bunch (p); Danny Padmore (b). 6 & 10/78.
(*) Hard! Beat Goes Public CDBGPM 181 Chase; Alan Barnes (as); Nick Weldon (p); Andrew Cleyndert (b). 83.
Chase has regularly expressed dismay at the way his beloved music is heading: guys in T-shirts playing synths probably sums it up. His own recorded output hasn't survived its moment by and large, but Hard! is a terrific record that blasts along from start to finish, with some great, bluesy blowing from Barnes. One Way is a fine hard-bop set from the '70s, co-led with Warleigh and featuring Eardley as a guest. It's also a great place to sample Warleigh's now rather overlooked contribution to British jazz. And make sure you put a suit and tie on.

Also, in brief:

 Googa Mooga Blow It Hard BIH002 10/99.
Live. Hard. Acid. Gary Baldwin on Hammond.

Doc Cheatham (1905–97)

TRUMPET, VOICE

Adolphus Cheatham was born in Nashville and started out in burlesque, backing Bessie Smith. A long, long career took in McKinney's Cotton Pickers, Cab Calloway and even Latin bands. There were hiatuses, but he was still playing in his 80s and 90s, with a revered weekly gig in Greenwich Village.

 Hey Doc! Black & Blue 887 Cheatham; Gene Connors (tb); Ted Buckner (as); Sam Price (p); Carl Pruitt (b); J. C. Heard (d). 5/75.
(*) Duets And Solos Sackville SKCD 5002 2CD Cheatham; Sam Price (p). 11/76–11/79.
One of the most enduring jazz musicians of his time – and his time seemed to span much of the history of the music. He was recording in the late '20s and his studio work of 60 years later shows little deterioration. He was rediscovered in the '70s after many years of society band work, and it's not so much that one feels sentimental attachment to such a veteran, but that Doc's sound represents an art which died out in modern jazz: the sweet, lyrically hot sound of a swing-era man.

These were the first records on which he was heard at length as a leader. The Black & Blue is rough and ready, not least because Price's piano is only approximately tuned. However, there's some lovely playing from all concerned and the rising-70 trumpeter blows some lovely solos on 'Ain't Misbehaving' and 'Blues In My Heart', while singing effectively on the ballad 'If I Could Be With You'. His intonation is strong and mostly correct, though there are a few moments when that damned piano throws him off.

Duets And Solos is arguably his most valuable recording, since it both recalls an earlier age – the format recalls Armstrong and Hines, with rags, stomps, blues and whiskery pop – and also sits comfortably in modern sound and with a knowing sagacity. Price is fine, and often better than on his own recordings; twelve piano solos fill out spare space on the second disc.

 Live At The Windsor Jazz Series Jazzology 333 Cheatham; James Dapogny (p); Daniel Jordan (b); Richard 'Pistol' Allen (d). 81.
These tapes lay unreleased for nearly 20 years. Perhaps they were waiting for the youngster to come good. Doc's in fine form, blowing with easy conviction on 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue' and doing a fairly outrageous 'Hello Dolly' in emulation of Pops. The band is nice and tight and Dapogny has some refreshing ideas.

 Swinging Down In New Orleans Jazzology JCD 233 Cheatham; Brian O'Connell (cl); Butch Thompson (p); Les Muscutt (g, bj); Bill Huntington (g, b); Peter Badie (b); Ernest Elly (d). 92.
Doc seems much his usual self here. A seasoned team of modern traditionalists provides a springy, amiable and perfectly appropriate background for the trumpeter's lean, sometimes puffy solos and singing, with Thompson a model of deftness. Plenty of tunes from the old town, all of them sounding good.

Also, in brief:

 At The Bern Jazz Festival Sackville SKCD 2-3045. 4/83, 1/85.
A group co-led with Jim Galloway (ss) and backed by appreciative crowds.

 On A Cold Sunday In January: At The Vineyard Challenge CHR 70072. 85.
But Doc warms things up. Vintage stuff with Dick Katz (p) and Howard Alden (g). Check out 'I Want A Little Girl'.

 Live At Sweet Basil Jazzology JCD 283. 92.
A spirited set from Sammy Rimington (cl, as, ts) and his trio, with Doc as an honoured guest.

 You're A Sweetheart Sackville SKCD2-2038. 3 & 11/92.
With Canadian bassist Rosemary Galloway's Swing Sisters … the old rascal. Some cracking playing from the band.

(*) Meets The Swiss Dixie Stompers Plus Two Jazzology 327. 11/95.
Self-explanatory. A lower marking, but only because the band trails a bit. At 90, Doc sounds in complete command.

Chris Cheek (born 1968)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Inside-to-out player, working the New York scene.

 I Wish I Knew Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 022 Cheek; Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Chris Higgins (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 10/96–1/97.
* A Girl Named Joe Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 032 Cheek; Mark Turner (ts); Ben Monder (g); Marc Johnson (b); Jorge Rossy, Dan Rieser (d). 5/97.
A self-effacing debut from an American who's done some accomplished foot-soldiering elsewhere. A solitary original hides in the middle of a standards programme, quietly thought out at ballad tempos, and although firmly articulated by all hands the music has a melancholy air which seems to crystallize in the tenorman's injured timbre. Rosenwinkel plays limpid lines in counterpoint. An understated success.

Two tenors, guitar, bass and two drummers. Cheek's hardly chosen a conventional sound for his second CD. This one is about the writing – contrapuntal lines, parallel melodies, close-cropped harmony. Johnson, the supreme hired gun, is the perfect bassman for the job, melodious but inquiring; Monder is an unassuming master; Turner, one of the keenest saxophone voices of the moment; and Cheek himself stands as tall as anyone on the date.

() Guilty / () Lazy Afternoon Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 125 / 126 Cheek; Ethan Iverson (p); Ben Street (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 3/00.
On a visit to Barcelona, here's Cheek with the Bad Plus pianist, working patiently through two sets of standards at the Jamboree Club. There's little attempt to disrespect the material: many of the tunes (and particularly the ballads) are played disarmingly straight, and even when there's a striking departure – as on the bruising epic built on 'All Or Nothing At All' on Guilty – each step in the journey is a logical step on from the last one, rather than an abstracted leap into the void. Cheek's idiosyncratic tone gets its fullest exposure on these sets and Iverson's compelling pianism is ideal as both platform and independent voice. He also contributes the title-piece, the only original and subsequently part of the The Bad Plus's book.

(*) Blues Cruise Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 235 Cheek; Brad Mehldau (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 3/05.
Pushing 40, Cheek no longer counts as 'New Talent' and hidden in among the now crowded FSNT roster he sounds odd man out. The vaguely pained timbre of his tenor isn't going to grab the attention of anyone seeking a daredevil voice: instead, measured thinking, unexpected and slippery development, and a taste for the macabre. He's a tougher customer than you'd think; the Mehldau trio sound like sidemen. Ellington flits in and out of the programme, with a genuine Ducal piece, 'Low Key Lightly', followed by a ringer called 'Coo'. By no means your standard tenor-plus-rhythm date.

Also, in brief:

 Vine Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 086. 12/99.
Another fine line-up, with Brad Mehldau in good shape on Fender Rhodes, but Cheek seems to be aiming for a kind of brainy jazz-rock.

Don Cherry (1936–95)

POCKET-TRUMPET, WOODEN FLUTES, DOUSSN'GOUNI, PIANO, KEYBOARDS, MISCELLANEOUS INSTRUMENTS, VOICE

Born in Oklahoma, he played R&B before joining the classic Ornette Coleman quartet in the mid-'50s; then was with John Coltrane and the New York Contemporary Five. Visited Europe and subsequently retained a base there. Inveterate travel and non-stop listening led to extravagantly multicultural projects. He played Coleman's music again in Old & New Dreams and with his former leader and turned up in guest situations, though hampered by various health problems.

 Complete Communion Blue Note 22673 Cherry; Gato Barbieri (ts); Henry Grimes (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 12/65.

(*) Symphony For Improvisers Blue Note 563829 As above, except add Pharoah Sanders (ts, picc); Karl Berger (vib); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b). 9/66.

The 'symphony for improvisers' tag is more than a metaphor. On his first recordings after leaving the Ornette Coleman Quartet, Cherry dabbled with the idea of structuring whole LP sides round two, three or more symphonic subjects which the players could reprise and vary at will, and in real time. There is a raw immediacy to these sets which belies any hint of classical correctness. Barbieri, whom Cherry met during their respective Italian sojourns, is at his most unfettered and Ayler-like, vocalizing intensely through the horn and producing chordal effects when the horns are in unison. Grimes was poorly audible on the original LP but he comes through strongly on the reissues and one tends to listen to him now, knowing how extraordinary his future story was.

The addition of a second bassist, another intense horn (Sanders also doubles on piccolo) and a vibist brings the 'symphonic' approach into focus, though ironically the second album sounds more like a heads-and-solos date than its predecessor. Cherry's playing is again very intense, but with a lovely, fragile quality that unexpectedly allies him to Miles. The basic formula is the same – two large slabs of sound recorded in a piece – but there's a more linear logic to 'Symphony For Improvisers' and 'Manhattan Cry'. Objectively, it's the better album, but it lacks the sense of adventure that surrounds Complete Communion.

 Live At Café Montmartre ESP-Disk 4032 CD/DVD Cherry; Gato Barbieri (ts); Karl Berger (p, vib); Bo Stief (b); Aldo Romano (d). 66.

This was only released in 2007, and while neither the sound quality nor the actual performances are exactly blue-chip, it's a valuable documentation of how the touring group sounded after Complete Communion, whose title-piece is the central performance. The two-part 'Cocktail Piece' is ironically titled. The DVD bonus is a big plus for fans, but here, really, it's Barbieri who steals the honours.

(*) Where Is Brooklyn? Blue Note 11935 Cherry; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Henry Grimes (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 11/66.

Relatively disregarded in comparison to its predecessors and more conventionally structured, Cherry's final record for Blue Note is still a great piece of work. Though it seems to go back to the less adventurous format of Complete Communion and to focus on discrete compositions rather than flowing improvisation, it has enough detail and enough thoughtful energy stashed away in each track – and certainly on the long closing 'Unite' – to create the same feel. Sanders is still a contender, though occasionally his screams seem pointless, and (heresy though this may be) far less interesting than Barbieri's. Grimes again is served well by CD transfer and Blackwell does his usual amazing polyrhythmic thing as if 4/4 were as outmoded as spats.

* Mu: First Part, Second Part Varese 061147 Cherry; Ed Blackwell (d). 8/69.

This one never fails to delight. Don moves between trumpet, piano, various flutes and singing. The diversity of idiom establishes an agenda for later, multicultural projects, both Cherry's own and a whole raft of so-called world music. His range is astonishing, everything from bright New Orleans vamps and marches to African songs, folksy Americana to totally free passages. Blackwell is the most sympathetic of accompanists. He delivers crisp, ringing lines with a minimum of fuss, but it is his musicality that impresses.

There are a couple of nods along the way to Dollar Brand (Abdullah Ibrahim) and the African roots jazz he pioneered. But the conception is essentially Cherry's, a bold, sweeping synthesis that can sound bitty and tentative in places but still delivers an exhilarating musical experience.

 Orient / Blue Lake Charly 513 2CD Cherry; Johnny Mbizo Dyani (b); Han Bennink (d, perc, acc); Okay Temiz (d); Mocqui Cherry (tambura). 3/71.

Over a couple of weeks in 1971, Cherry recorded two live double LPs for the BYG Actuel label, using two different groups. These albums have had intermittent circulation since, including some unauthorized issues and bootlegs. Now they're back together again on this double CD, restoring an important part of the Cherry story.

The first group features Cherry's then wife Mocqui on tambura and Dutch master Han Bennink on percussion and accordion. The language is expansive and indefinable, with elements of as many folk traditions as you can name and both long tracks sustain attention and renewed attention amazingly well. The other group is closer to a jazz aesthetic, but still, as on 'Eagle Eye', makes use of ethnic material and procedures. 'Dollar And Okay's Tunes' is a wonderful example of group improvisation. Dyani's sweeping, thunderous bass and Cherry's singing to himself while at the piano lend the set curious echoes of all sorts of modern jazz precedents, but it's a unique sound all the same and wonderful to have these recordings back in the library in appropriate form.

(*) The Sonet Recordings Verve 533049 2CD Cherry; Irfan Sumer (ts, perc); Bernt Rosengren (tarogato); Christer Bothén (p); Selçuk Sun (b); Okay Temiz (d, perc); Bengt Berger, Agneta Ernström (perc). 11/69–5/73.

The death of Don Cherry in 1995 imposed a more profound silence than most such passings. In a very real sense, Cherry's recorded output is beside the point. He was a musical gypsy, a kind of planetary griot, as someone once put it, who defined his musical art as that of people 'listening and travelling'. He himself never stopped doing either – or, of course, playing. The last time one of the authors met him was at the Jazz Jamboree in Warsaw in 1993. He was as likely to turn up in India, Korea or Latin America. For some time he lived in Scandinavia, and the Sonet compilation brings together two albums, one made in the studio in Stockholm in 1973 and one recorded live in Ankara four years earlier. There is no typical Don Cherry album. Though he adds an unforgettable voice to things like the classic Ornette Coleman Atlantics, he is not primarily an instrumentalist and certainly not a trumpet innovator. The first thing to be registered about these recordings is that Cherry plays no trumpet at all on Eternal Now, the Swedish session, but ranges across a bizarre variety of percussion and stringed instruments, piano and harmonium. Aficionados of the Scandinavian scene will cherish a track featuring the great tenorist Bernt Rosengren on tarogato, a folksy cousin to the soprano saxophone made of rosewood. 'Love Train' is perhaps the most jazz-based piece on the session. The remaining tracks are squarely in the world-music idiom that Cherry was to make his own in years to come. Live Ankara is closer to the work with Ornette: tight, compressed lines on the cheap little Pakistani pocket trumpet Cherry favoured, and two Ornette themes just to cement the connection. Typically, though, much of the material is folk-inspired, arrangements of Turkish tunes by Maffy Falay. Cherry does, though, include two or three of his own pieces and these, 'St John And The Dragon' and 'Man On The Moon' especially, sound more securely within his comfort zone.

 Brown Rice Jazz Heritage 397001 Cherry; Frank Lowe (ts); Ricky Cherry (ky); Charlie Haden (b); Billy Higgins (d); Bunchie Fox (perc); Verna Gillis (v). 75.

Originally released simply as Don Cherry, this probably is one of the best places to sample the trumpeter as both soloist – he blows some stunningly beautiful solos here – and as the shamanic creator of a unique, unearthly sound that makes dull nonsense of most 'fusion' work of the period. Haden's wah-wah bass yaws back and forth on the title-track, which is still a club favourite, but it's the two long cuts, 'Chenrezig' and 'Malkauns', which give the album its unique character and beauty. Cherry's tone seems softer than usual, though no less emphatic, and as it drifts in and out of the foreground, one has a strong sense of going on a journey with the music. Exceptional and recommended.

 El Corazón ECM 829199-2 Cherry; Ed Blackwell (d). 2/82.

Like fellow trumpeter Leo Smith, Cherry had a rather intermittent association with ECM, returning to the label just before the end of his life for the very mixed Dona Nostra. Apart from the records with Codona, his ECM output was limited to the 1993 disc and these duos with Blackwell, who, after Ornette and Collin Walcott, was probably his closest associate from the jazz end of the spectrum. This encounter lacks the rawness of performance one responds to on Mu but gains infinitely in sheer clarity of sound. It also includes what by this stage in his career had become a rare standard item, Thelonious Monk's and Denzil Best's 'Bemsha Swing'. Blackwell is immense, as ever, relishing the space and music which is freed from the vertical hierarchies of harmonic jazz. Those who heard the duo workshopping and gigging report that El Corazón is only a muted version of what they were capable of.

 Nu – Live At The Bracknell Jazz Festival BBC Legends BBCJ7004-2 Cherry; Carlos Ward (as, f); Mark Helias (b); Ed Blackwell (d); Nana Vasconcelos (berimbau, perc, v). 6/86.

Cherry's world music interests haven't quite obscured his deep jazz roots on this live appearance at England's much-missed festival. Ward's reeling, bop-tinged solos, which also appealed to Cecil Taylor, are a major feature, and so too is Vasconcelos's party-piece, 'O Berimbau'. Don squeezes off tight notes and phrases and there is more trumpet-playing than on some occasions. With the disappearance of Cherry's A&M discs, including the special Multi Kulti, there's a significant hiatus here.

 Dona Nostra ECM 521727-2 Cherry; Lennart Åberg (sax, f); Bobo Stenson (p); Anders Jormin (b); Anders Kjellberg (d); Okay Temiz (perc). 3/93.

There are sparks of brilliance here, but they are lost in ashpits of compromise. The wind that stirs the coals, significantly, is Ornette Coleman, two of whose pieces are included. The old pairing was to go on the road later the same year, and Cherry seems keen to pack his strong-voiced solos with tags and phrases remembered from years, even decades, before. Restricting himself to trumpet, he eases through 'Race Face' with less fury than the composer brings to it; for 'Fort Cherry' and 'Prayer' (still the outstanding cut), he injects a warmer-than-usual tone, prompting the question whether he has switched to a more conventional horn. The sound is magnificent, and Stenson demonstrates once again what a superbly responsive player he is, and Åberg amply justifies his shared credit. It is not, overall, much of a showing for such a considerable musician, but Cherry never seemed like a man much concerned with his place in posterity, and his elusiveness on record is in some ways appropriate.

Also, in brief:

(*) Human Music Water 182. 69.

Ahead of its time and inevitably neglected on first (Flying Dutchman) release, electronics man Jon Appleton imaginatively processes Cherry's trumpet and flute sounds.

* Actions Intuition 3606. 10/71.

A collaboration which hasn't aged well. Cherry, Polish composer Krzysztof Penderecki, and the Eternal Rhythm Orchestra in a confrontation between free jazz and the new music.

Cyrus Chestnut (born 1963)

PIANO

He played gospel for church choirs in his native Baltimore, then studied further in Boston and worked with George Adams, Jon Hendricks and Betty Carter.

 Another Direction Evidence ECD 22135 Chestnut; Christian McBride (b); Carl Allen (d). 4/93.

Chestnut's recording career has been slightly curious and, with much of his Atlantic catalogue hard to get, looks patchy these days. This was a cracking set, with the trio positively launching into the opening 'Revol' before settling down to more thoughtful stuff. 'My Funny Valentine' is contrary to most familiar readings and 'Blue Skies' and the hoary 'Alone Together' get new twists.

 Earth Stories Atlantic 82876 Chestnut; Eddie Allen (t); Antonio Hart (as); Steve Kirby (b); Alvester Garnett (d). 11/95.

A lot of Chestnut's Atlantic records – Revelations, Dark Before The Dawn, the gospel Blessed Quietness – seem to be out of circulation at the moment. Previous editions cover them fully. Earth Stories, which wasn't in our last, has been around recently. It's perhaps the first of his discs for the label on which the piano voice is absolutely distinctive. The solo 'In The Garden', which ends the set, is triple-distilled Chestnut, emotive, gospelly, harmonically and rhythmically vigorous, but still instantly accessible. It's a fine record and worth searching out.

(*) Cyrus Chestnut Atlantic 83140 Chestnut, James Carter (as); Joe Lovano (ts); Ron Carter (b); Billy Higgins, Lewis Nash (d); Anita Baker (v). 98.

The plain title gives it away. After a couple of gospel sets, Chestnut is back on the solid ground of post-bop, handling an unfrilly session with implacable assurance. Carter sticks to alto and is, for him, on surprisingly bubbly form, leaving some of his importance at home. His extravagant sound on 'The Journey' is infectiously high-spirited. Lovano strolls in for two tracks and trades jabs with Carter on the closing 'Sharp', but unfortunately the two guest vocals by the queenly Anita Baker, who sings 'Summertime' softly and 'My Favorite Things' delicately, don't sit well with the rest of the date.

(*) Soul Food Atlantic 83490 Chestnut; Marcus Printup (t); Wycliffe Gordon (tb); Gary Bartz (as); James Carter (ts); Stefon Harris (vib); Christian McBride (b); Lewis Nash (d). 6/01.

Chestnut shuffles his options here. Three tracks offer horns and rhythm section, three others have the trio plus Harris, and there are pieces for section and for solo piano, too. The tracks with vibes are in some ways the least convincing, since the meeting seems too politely handled, while those with the horns are a lot ruder. Carter, as usual, ignores barriers of both taste and discretion, and it doesn't half lively up the music. Cyrus returns to familiar ground with a solo 'Swing Low, Sweet Chariot' but for all the major-label politesse, it's a good, strong disc.

(*) You Are My Sunshine Warner Bros 9362 48445 Chestnut; Michael Hawkins (b); Neal Smith (d). 11/02.
He's now well-established as a fine piano entertainer, and on this the familiar mix of gospel and originals works well. The difficult 'Erroling' is carried off nicely, but there's a steady-state quality to the music which suggests no more surprises up the sleeve.

(*) Cyrus Plays Elvis Koch 4238 Chestnut; Dezron Douglas (b); Neal Smith (d). 4/07.
This oughtn't to work, but Chestnut's melodic sense is so strong and fertile that he lifts every one of these 11 cuts, though reserving his best playing for the original 'Graceland', 'In The Ghetto' and the closing 'How Great Thou Art'. Many listeners will wince at the opening measure of 'Hound Dog' but wait for the solo and the whole project immediately makes vivid sense. The trio is strong and capable, the kind of group Elvis might have valued himself. We may be getting soft, but, like the Christmas disc below, this is already a favourite.

Also, in brief:

 A Charlie Brown Christmas Atlantic 83366
We like Christmas records and this one is a cracker, with guest spots from Mike Brecker (ts), Kenny Garrett (as), a boys' choir and much more.

 Genuine Chestnut Telarc CD 83634. 7/05.
A couple of gloopy pop covers – 'If', 'The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face' – but Chestnut finds a way to put a soulful spin on them. Lovely sound.

Buddy Childers (born 1926)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He joined Stan Kenton as lead trumpet while still in his teens and stayed until 1954. Thereafter worked extensively in LA and Las Vegas, usually in big bands, though occasionally as a single at Kenton conventions.

 SAM Songs Fresh Sound Jazz City FSRCD 2205 Childers; Herbie Steward (ts); Bob Harrington, Arnold Ross (p); Harry Babasin (b); Milt Holland, Boone Stines (d). 11/55–3/56.
 Just Buddy's Candid CCD 79761 Childers; Danny Barber, Mark Thompson, Nipper Murphy, Art Davis, Peter Fleming, Warren Kime (t); Scott Belige, Tom Kordus, John Blane, Scott Bentall, Bob Samborski (tb); Mike Smith, John Negus, Peter Ballin, Dave Brandom, Ron Kolber, Jerry Dimusio, Brian Ripp (sax); Bobby Schiff (p); Steve Roberts (g); Larry Gray, Bill Lanphier (b); Joel Spencer (d). 11/83–2/84.
 West Coast Quintet Candid CCD 79722 Childers; Jimmy Zito (vtb); Brian O'Rourke (p); John Leitham (b); Paul Kreibach (d). 6/94.
 It's What's Happening Now! Candid CCD 79749 Childers; Ron King, Ron Stout, Tim Wendt, Gary Halopoff, Jeff Kaye, Brian Schwarz, Dave Trigg, Deborah Bergeron (t, flhn); Andy Martin, Dick Hamilton, Thurman Greene, Charlie Morillas, Randy Alcroft, Jack Redmond (tb); Ken Shroyer, Bryant Byers (btb); Ray Reed, Ann Patterson, Glenn Garrett, George Harper, Charlie Orena, John Stevens, Charles Owens (sax); Brian O'Rourke (p); Paul Murphy, Doug MacDonald (g); Trey Henry, Harvey Newmark (b); Ralph Razze, Jerry White (d); Tierney Sutton (v). 96.
A lead man of huge experience, Childers loved to play in a big, swinging band playing smart charts and unpretentious material. That sums up what happens on both of the big-band sets listed here. Just Buddy's, first issued on Trend, was cobbled together from various sessions but hits the spot from the opening 'Nica's Dream' onwards. It's What's Happening Now! was put together in Dick Hamilton's tiny overdub studio – 18 people in a 20 by 26 foot room. The sound is, in the circumstances, very good. Mostly, these are top session and orchestral guys playing for the fun of it, and while neither date is exactly immortal, there's much pleasure to be had. Some of Buddy's articulation has softened but that means he gets an even sweeter sound out of the flugelhorn, as on Russ Garcia's 'Come Home Again'.

The quintet date is another good blow. There are a few interesting touches, such as the fast clip for 'My Funny Valentine'. Zito has a nice feature on 'Street Of Dreams' and the rhythm section gives the horns a terrific push.

SAM Songs brings back a pair of sessions which were seemingly the only ones Buddy made under his own leadership in the '50s, originally for Liberty. The earlier features a quintet with Steward, working through a dozen pieces with titles like 'Honeysuckle Sam' and 'My Wild Irish Sam', and the second, made three months later, has Childers starring with only a rhythm section on a mix of originals and standards. The earlier session is rather plain, with nothing running over jukebox length, and the second gives the trumpeter more space to stretch. He favours very long, boppish lines which sometimes nearly trip him up, though it's fun to hear how he rights himself too.

Billy Childs (born 1957)

PIANO

LA-born, he worked with Freddie Hubbard and J. J. Johnson before striking out on his own.

(*) Skim Coat Metropolitan 1116 Childs; Buster Williams (b); Carl Allen (d). 3/99.

 Lyric: Jazz Chamber Music – Volume 1 Lunacy mail order Childs; Bob Sheppard (ss, ts); Larry Koonse (g); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade, Marvin Smitty Smith (d); other musicians; string section, etc. 04.
There are earlier albums on Windham Hill and one on Stretch, and anyone who hears the taut, intelligent piano-playing on the fine trio set will want to know more. Unfortunately, there isn't too much opportunity to sample Billy's writing skills. The only originals on the set are the brisk 'Winds Of Change' and the more thoughtful 'Heroes'. Hard to place him as anything other than a West Coaster, but we detect a touch of Phineas Newborn in his quieter pieces. As the title suggests, Lyric represents something of a change of direction, though Childs had already picked up Grammy awards for his orchestral writing. There is enough jazz talent in the core band to ensure that things don't move too far from home base, but it's a slightly ragged and unsettled set, for all its sophistication. There is nothing new about jazz/classical syntheses, but this seems as far removed from the pieties of Third Stream music as can be imagined.

George Chisholm (1915–97)

TROMBONE

Born in Glasgow, he came to London in 1935 to work the dance band/jazz scene. Played with Fats Waller and arranged for the Squadronaires; subsequently became a radio and television personality, which left his trad-to-mainstream credentials unimpaired.

(*) Early Days 1935–1944 Timeless CBC 1-044 Chisholm; Tommy McQuater, Johnny Claes, Dave Wilkins, Kenny Baker, Stan Roderick, Alfie Noakes (t); Eric Breeze, Bruce Campbell, Dave Walters (tb); Jimmy Durant (ss, bs); Dougie Robinson, Harry Hayes (as); Benny Winestone (cl, ts); Danny Polo, Jimmy Williams, Andy McDevitt (cl); Reg Dare, Aubrey Franks, Jimmy Skidmore (ts); Eddie Macauley, Leonard Feather, Jack Penn, Billy Munn (p); Norman Brown, Ivor Mairants, Alan Ferguson, Dick Ball, Jock Reid, Tiny Winters, Charlie Short (b); Dudley Barber, Ben Edwards, Jock Cummings (d). 1/38–5/44.
 Along The Chisholm Trail Progressive 7140 Chisholm; Kenny Baker, Ray Crane (t); Bruce Turner (cl, as); Tommy Whittle (ts); Brian Lemon (p); Lennie Bush (b); Bobby Orr (d). 60s, 12/71.
 In A Mellow Tone Lake LACD 108 Chisholm; Kenny Baker (t); Tony Coe (cl, as, bs); Tommy Whittle (ts, f); Alan Branscombe (p, vib); Brian Lemon (p); Lennie Bush, Kenny Baldock (b); Bobby Orr, John Richardson (d). 8/72–5/73.

A marvellous part of British jazz for decades, the slightness of his legacy on record is to be regretted. The Timeless compilation brings together several dates in which Chisholm featured as a member of various London groups. Four titles by Polo's Swing Stars are fine, but the pick is probably the famous Jive Five session of October 1938, with all known takes included. Besides George proving that he had few peers on the slide horn outside the US at this period, there are glimpses of the admirable McQuater, as well as an acetate made in Leonard Feather's office in 1935, featuring a jam on 'Pardon Me, Pretty Baby' by the 20-year-old trombonist. Aside from its rough sound, transfers are very good.

The Progressive set features a band of obvious pedigree and some surprisingly thoughtful playing from Chisholm, whose more meditative and lyrical side is usually discounted. A great set.

Lake has salvaged an obscure mainstream date for Rediffusion in 1973 which shows the old warrior still in impeccable form. Taken at a fearsome tempo, 'Walk Right Up, Folks' shows what he could do in a hot mainstream situation, and the subsequent 'Star Dust' (ignore the botched sleeve-notes) shows off his finely groomed tone. A couple of live tracks with rhythm section alone are makeweights, but mostly this is unpretentious pleasure.

Also, in brief:

 Chis: The Art Of George Chisholm Vocalion CDLF 8116. 56.
Terrific sound and packed with great playing.

 A Tribute To A Jazz Legend Upbeat 154. 10/99.
An excellent posthumous reworking of some of George's best stuff, with Ray Wordsworth depping for the man himself and Carole Chisholm adding vocals.

Herman Chittison (1909–67)

PIANO, VOICE

Nicknamed 'Ivory', this gifted player from Flemingsburg, Kentucky, had a tendency to perfectionism, which hampered his recording career. Worked in Europe and Egypt till the start of the war, when he returned to launch a radio spot as Ernie the Blue Note Pianist.

(*) Herman Chittison, 1933–1941 Classics 690 Chittison; Ikey Robinson (g, v); Arita Day (v). 7/33–9/41.
 Herman Chittison, 1944–1945 Classics 1024 Chittison; Carl Lynch, Jimmy Shirley (g); Calton Powell, Cedric Wallace (d); Thelma Carpenter (v). 5/34 [SIC] –5/45.

Chittison's great mistake was to take on Tatum and Waller at their own game, trying to accelerate his ragtime and stride approach to such an extent that he was able to play very fast but only rather vapidly. And yet he was capable of playing with astonishing beauty, as on 'Where Or When' from the second Classics volume. He was also drawn to classical material, and 'Schubert's Serenade' is one of the highlights of the January 1944 session for World Transcriptions.

The earlier volume contains some valuable sides, the bulk of them recorded in France. The solo 'Honeysuckle Rose' is unashamedly Walleresque, and it nearly works; the solo stuff is almost always better and the album might receive a higher rating if it wasn't for the dull stuff with Robinson and two tracks with Day, who shouldn't be confused with Anita O'Day (and won't be once you hear her sing).

The later trio underlines Chit's preference for minimal accompaniment; the session-men are accomplished but rarely come to the fore. All of this material was recorded back in New York, except for 'You Gave Me Everything But Love', which was made for Brunswick in Paris a decade earlier, hence the misleading dates above.

Also, in brief:

 P.S. With Love IAJRC 1006. 6/64–67.
Recorded late in life and in some cases only weeks before his death from lung cancer. Weak material and much kitsch, but decently recorded.

Aaron Choulai (born 1982)

PIANO

He has Papuan, Chinese and Jewish ancestry; lives in Australia and sounds very much like Herbie Hancock.

 Place Sunnyside 1131 Choulai; Scott Wendholt (t); Tim Ries (ss, ts); James Genus (b); Clarence Penn (d). 5/03.

Everything except the closing 'You Don't Know What Love Is' is an original composition by the young Australian, who sounds very much as if his musical lineage is late-'50s to mid-'60s New York jazz. The writing is very accomplished indeed, flirting with modality but in a freely expressive rather than doctrinaire way. 'Dreams Of Paper Roses' is the most original conception, with a curiously evanescent quality. Some of the others sound like variations on familiar themes, which they may well be, but sufficiently reworked to put a stamp of individuality on them. Choulai has a couple of Herbie-like mannerisms, mostly at the start of phrases, but he dominates the group and it would have been interesting to hear him launched with just bass and drums. Ries and Wendholt are more distracting than anything, and it's they rather than the leader who tend to point up the similarities with the past.

Ellen Christi

VOICE

Once a student of Jaki Byard, she has studied bel canto techniques and boasts a remarkable vocal palette. Co-founder of the New York Artists' Collective.

 Reconstruction Of Sound Network 100 Christi; Masahiko Kono (tb); Yoko Fujiyama (p); Mauro Orselli (d, elec). 96.
 Instant Reality Network 101 Christi; Tomas Ulrich (clo); William Parker (b); Tom Bruno (d); Lefferts Brown (prepared d loop). 98.
 Alienstalk Sargasso SG104 Christi; Luigi Archetti, Claudio Lodati (g); Jan Schlegel (b). 00.
 Tribute To Paradise Drimala DR 04 347 04 Christi; Gary Hassay (as, v). 04.

Christi is a fearless improviser who has the courage to allow tiny sounds (like the soft plosives that match Hassay's pad-pops on Tribute To Paradise) to carry as much weight and information as her more full-on articulations. The level of detail built into a Christi performance is quite remarkable. On Reconstruction Of Sound she cedes considerable space to her fellow improvisers, solo and otherwise, but one has a strong sense of a group language developing. Kono is a remarkable player, but like the guitarists on Alienstalk (and there's an iconic Christi title) he seems very happy to enter into her oddly displaced and sometimes disorientating world.

She's also brave in that – like Britain's Maggie Nicols – she touches on political and personal-political issues in a way that few other performers on the current scene dare to. That's particularly evident on Instant Reality, with pieces like 'Beam Me Up, Scotty' and 'America America'. It's an astonishing record, and one that deserves the widest exposure. She has been around for some time now, but remains disturbingly unregarded outside a circle of admirers.

Also, in brief:

 Live At Irving Plaza Soul Note 121097. 6/84.

Christi and her group Menage (Lisa Sokolov (v), Rahn Burton (p), William Parker (b)) in an early surviving date that sees her sounding jazzier than in later incarnations.

 Vocal Desires CMC 104. 96.

Another date with the impressive Claudio Lodati (g). Worth seeking out.

Charlie Christian (1916–42)

GUITAR

He was playing an electric instrument by 1937, when he was heard and recruited by Benny Goodman. He was otherwise found jamming at Minton's, an early crucible of bebop. Hospitalized with TB in 1941, he never fully recovered.

* The Genius Of The Electric Guitar Columbia CK 65564 4CD Christian; Alec Fila, Irving Goodman, Cootie Williams (t); Cutty Cutshall, Lou McGarity (tb); Gus Bivona, Skippy Martin (as); Georgie Auld, Pete Mandello (ts); Bob Snyder (bs); Lionel Hampton (vib); Count Basie, Dudley Brooks, Johnny Guarnieri, Fletcher Henderson (p); Artie Bernstein (b); Nick Fatool, Harry Jaeger, Jo Jones, Dave Tough (d). 39–41.

 The Original Guitar Hero Columbia 83864 As above. 39–41.

 The Complete Studio Recordings Definitive 11176 3CD As above. 39–41.

 The Complete Live Recordings Definitive 11233 As above. 39–41.

 Celestial Express Definitive 11122 2CD As above. 39–41.

(*) The Original Guitar Genius Proper PROPERBOX98 4CD As above. 39–41.

 The Quintessence: New York/Los Angeles Frémeaux 104 As above. 39–41.

* Swing To Bop Dreyfus FDM 36715 As above. 11/39–3/41.

 Charlie Christian Jazz Immortal Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1932 Christian; Dizzy Gillespie (t); Thelonious Monk (p); others as above. 5/41.

Who invented bebop? Parker and Gillespie seemed to arrive at near-identical solutions to the blind alley of swing harmony. Monk was never an orthodox bopper, but he had his two cents' worth. And then there was Charlie Christian, who in some accounts was the first to develop the long legato lines and ambitious harmonic progressions that defined bop. His appetite for booze and girls was only ever overtaken by his thirst for music. He once improvised 'Rose Room' for nearly an hour and a half, a feat which prompted Benny Goodman to hire him. Though his greatest contributions, in terms of musical history, were at Minton's (documented on the Jazz Immortal set), his roles in the Goodman and Hampton bands represent the bulk of what is left to us. His first commercial outings were the September 1939 sides with Hampton. A single track from this time ('One Sweet Letter From You') and one from a month later ('Haven't Named It Yet') give a sense of the excitement the bandleader obviously felt at this freshly discovered young voice.

Christian was arguably the first to make completely convincing use of the electric instrument, and though his style blended Texas blues riffing with Lester Young's long-limbed strolls, he was able to steer a path away from the usual saxophone-dominated idiom and towards something that established guitar as an improvising instrument in its own right. Goodman gave him considerable solo space in the sextet; amplification meant that the guitar could be heard clearly and Christian's solos on 'Rose Room' and 'Star Dust' remain models for the instrument.

There is now ample choice for collectors. Are the Definitives and the Columbia worth the outlay? We'd say that for all but the most dedicated listeners, the Columbia is superior; the live Definitive box is certainly too rough and ready in places to merit the shelf-space. The radio material shows just how much Goodman's swing was part of the wider culture of its day and how much Christian contributed to it. These cuts, recorded at Carnegie Hall, Madison Square Garden and elsewhere, are evidence of Charlie's speed of thought and absolute devotion to a sound which is both electric in its embrace of amplification and organic as well.

The Columbia set offers 98 tracks, including 70 master takes. If that's too much, the shorter compilation offers a cheap, single-CD reduction. The sound quality is exquisite, a model for all reissue programmes. A Devil's advocate question lurks, though. How important in the history of the music was Charlie Christian? Is there anything here that merits such extravagant packaging, or was he just another of those artists re-created by a posthumous mythology?

Jodie Christian (born 1932)

PIANO

Despite considerable experience on the Chicago scene, he didn't start recording as a leader until 1992.

(*) Experience Delmark DE-454 Christian; Larry Gray (b); Vincent Davis (d). 5/91–2/92.

 Rain Or Shine Delmark DE-467 As above, except add Paul McKee (tb); Roscoe Mitchell (ss, as, ob); Art Porter (as); Ernie Adams (d); George Hughes (d); Francine Griffin (v). 5/91–12/93.

Christian opens the first record with a Byzantine exploration of the blues, and it gives the impression that, on the cusp of his 60th birthday, he couldn't wait to get stuck into his first date as a leader. A Chicagoan through and through, he can play for anybody – hard bop or avant-garde – yet, unlike many such sidemen, he has a distinction of his own. More than half of the CD is solo piano, with a slow 'Mood Indigo' and a lovely original called 'Faith' as particular standouts. Christian's decisive touch and complex but clear voicings bespeak a talent that has absorbed everything it needs from the tradition. Gray and Davis help out assiduously on the four trio tracks.

The follow-up is disappointing. 'Let's Try' is a fine opener with sterling work by McKee and Porter and the ballad medley works well, with an especially impressive turn by the trombonist on 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams'. But the tracks with an unusually sour and argumentative Roscoe Mitchell don't fit in, no matter how nobly Christian tries to bring them round. Griffin sings on two tracks, and Jodie himself croons one number.

 Blues Holiday Steeplechase 31337 Christian; Eddie de Haas (b); Wilbur Campbell (d). 4/93.

Christian's three originals – the title-tune, 'Chromatically Speaking' and 'If I Could Let You Go' – all breathe Chicago in every bar and there is no mistaking the provenance even on the closing 'Insensatez'. De Haas and Campbell provide strong support throughout, but this might almost have served better as a solo recording.

 Soul Fountain Delmark DE 498 Christian; Odies Williams (t); Roscoe Mitchell (as, f); Art Porter (as); John Whitfield (b); Ernie Adams (d). 8/94.

 Front Line Delmark DE 490 Christian; Sonny Cohn (t); Norris Turney (as); Eddie Johnson (ts); John Whitfield (b); Ernie Adams, Gerryck King (d); Francine Griffin (v). 1/96.

Soul Fountain integrates Mitchell more successfully into Christian's format. However, it's odd to hear him blowing on 'Now's The Time', and the long 'Consequences' doesn't really work, with too many styles jostling together. The piano solos 'Everlasting Life' and 'Blessings' are further evidence of Christian's gifts, and the lovely duet with Porter on 'My One And Only Love' makes a touching farewell to the since-departed altoman.

Front Line assembles a nice group of oldtimers for a set of old-time tunes – Ellington, Basie, standards. Turney still has his Hodges and Willie Smith sound beautifully together, but Cohn sounds shaky, cleverly though he disguises it, and Johnson is merely big and bluff. Christian acts as coach and gets the best out of the team; it's good fun.

(*) Reminiscing Delmark DE-531 Christian; Dennis Carroll (b); Tony Walton (d). 7/00.

Approaching 70, Jodie takes a look back through tunes that mark out some point in his musical past, and it's a delightful session. He likes, as always, to paraphrase melodies, but not so much that you can't tell what they might be, and he has a swinging team behind him; Walton's solo on the opening 'How Insensitive' takes the ear straight away. He makes André Previn's 'It's Good To Have You Near' walk a line between spare and florid, and the blues is played with placid authority on 'Chicago Delta Blues'.

Corey Christiansen

GUITAR

A magazine editor and guitar 'doctor' in St Louis, he practises what he preaches.

* Awakening Mel Bay 20821 Christiansen; Per Danielsson (p); Mark Neuenschwander (b); Danny Gottlieb (d). 04.

A relaxed bop-tinged player, Christiansen also emerges here as a more than competent composer, and if the group isn't a regular working unit, it certainly sounds like one. Tackling Sam Rivers's 'Beatrice' in this context was a bold move, but the best stuff is Corey's own, with the title-track and 'Little Hands, Big Dreams' setting the date off on an intriguing course. It could perhaps have done without the standards, but they also point up Christiansen's quiet originality of purpose.

Ian Christie and Keith Christie (born 1927; 1931–80)

CLARINET; TROMBONE

An explosive combination during the combustible years of British trad. Ian moved to the sideline and became a TV critic, while brother Keith took a nomadic path through trad, dance bands, Tubby Hayes and studio theatre work, the last years clouded by alcoholism.

(*) Christie Brothers Stompers Cadillac SGC/MEL CD 201 Ian Christie; Keith Christie; Ken Colyer (c); Dickie Hawdon (t); Pat Hawes, Charlie Smith (p); Nevil Skrimshire (g); Ben Marshall (bj); Mickey Ashman, Denny Coffee (b); George Hopkinson, Bernard Saward, Pete Appleby (d); Bill Colyer (wbd); Neva Raphaello (v). 6/51–8/52.

This captures the crazed intensity of original British trad better than any of the better known Colyer, Lyttelton and Barber reissues. The Christies originally put together the group from the Lyttelton and Crane River bands, and the CD collects various sessions for Melodisc, along with four live tracks from a rediscovered acetate. Though there are some problems with poor sound, the tracks belt along with bewildering power. Colyer's lead is less self-consciously 'authentic' than it would be later and Keith delivers some hair-raising solos. The later sessions with Hawdon are comparatively steady, but the fierce rhythm sections, Ian's gargling but supple solos, and the queer blend of high spirits and grim determination carry the day. Nicely packaged and annotated.

Pete Christlieb (born 1945)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

An unassuming but valuable figure on the West Coast scene.

 Conversations With Warne: Volumes 1 & 2 Criss Cross 1043 / 1103 Christlieb; Warne Marsh (ts); Jim Hughart (b); Nick Ceroli (d). 9/78.

 Apogee Rhino / Warner Bros 73723 As above, except add Lou Levy (p). 78.

His proficiency as a session-man let his status as soloist slip over the years. Next to Marsh's serpentine, querulous solos, Christlieb's improvisations sound almost simple, but the senior plays with much more attack and a more pinched tone than usual. Whether this dissipates any of the signature Marsh qualities is a moot point, but the playing has a prodigious intensity. Remarkably the Warners set was produced by Donald Fagen and Walter Becker of Steely Dan, which has guaranteed it a certain prominence and survival in the marketplace. It's a terrific jazz record, though more philosophical discussion than tenor 'battle', and while the music is melodic enough, the actual themes don't seem to matter too much.

 Self Portrait Bosco 1 Christlieb; Steve Huffsteter (flhn); Joe Roccisano (as); Warne Marsh (ts); Don Christlieb (bsn); Lou Levy (p); Mike Melvoin (org); Jim Hughart (b) Dick Berk, Nick Ceroli (d). 81.

 Dino's 83 Bosco Christlieb; Mike Melvoin (ky); Jim Hughart (b); Nick Ceroli (d). 83.

An inaugural release for Pete's own label and a relatively familiar roster of sidemen, including Marsh again, Levy and the doughty Hughart, but with a nice cameo spot for Christlieb senior on 'Vu-Ja-Day'. 'I've Never Been In Love Before' and 'Close Enough For Love' end the set on a note of real confidence and authority, which the rest hasn't quite delivered. The live set has some great moments, but mostly those that find the band working in ensemble. Christlieb's solos are patient, measured and logical but often lack excitement and as sole horn he palls quickly.

 Live At Cappozolli's Woofy 83 Christlieb; Andy Martin (tb); Terry Trotter (p); Jim Hughart (b); Dick Berk (d). 4/98.

Christlieb's playing has acquired more edge over the years, but here the material – 'Willow Weep For Me', 'Things Ain't What They Used to Be', 'Speak Low' – doesn't really give him much opportunity to cut loose. Martin's always a huge asset in these situations, but again it's Hughart who gives the set its dynamism and authority; what a professional he is.

 Late Night Jazz Vertical Jazz 5503 Christlieb; Slide Hyde (tb, euph, t); Tom Ranier (p); Jim Hughart (b); Charles Harris (d). 00.

A perfectly pitched after-hours set, with a hint of danger from the maverick and well-named Mr Hyde, who tempers Christlieb's determinedly unromantic approach. Not much has been seen of Pete in the studios since, under his own name at least. Perhaps these are just too subtle and undifferentiated to make the grade in a competitive and often superficial market.

Also, in brief:

 Mosaic Capri 74026. 2/90.

Solid live date with Bob Cooper (ts) and Mike Wofford (p) adding the spice that Christlieb's under-seasoned playing often demands.

(*) Red Kelly's Heroes CARS 10. 98.

With the Bill Ramsay–Milt Kleeb band. A lovely 'Seven Steps To Heaven' and 'A Child Is Born' props it all up.

Günter Christmann (born 1942)

TROMBONE, CELLO

Polish-born, he combated polio in childhood. His evolving project Vario was established in 1979 as a cover name for different improvising groups. Also works extensively in film, and these days plays as much cello as trombone.

(*) Alla Prima Concepts Of Doing 001 Christmann; Alexander Frangenheim (b). 1/97.

* Here Now Concepts Of Doing 003 Christmann; Evan Parker (ss, ts). 1–4/98.

 Water Always Writes In Plural Concepts Of Doing 004 Christmann; Mats Gustafsson (ss); Thomas Lehn (syn); Christian Munthe (g); Alexander Frangenheim (b); Paul Lovens (d). 7/98.

One of the great individualists of the trombone: a vocabulary of gasps, wheezes, smears, but a sensibility that seems to think in long-form as well as in moment-to-moment strangeness. The duets with Frangenheim will evoke memories of his old FMP albums with Detlef Schonenberg, but this is better recorded and more fully achieved. Though most men work very quietly most of the way, Christmann's playing is as unpredictable as ever, punctuated with barking notes. With Parker, there's almost a sing-song quality to the interplay: a perfectly rounded disc which begins with two long soprano solos by Parker in his most magisterial form, followed by three duets ('Here Now 2' is particularly good) and finishing with three nutty Christmann solos. The last one is credited to Vario 34, a surprisingly low-key event, with the players circling respectfully round one another.

(*) One To (Two) Okkadisk 10002 Christmann; Mats Gustafsson (ss, ts, bs). 8/97.

A rare American record for Christmann, whose first models were Kid Ory and the great tailgaters. He has mostly moved over to cello by this stage, and while Gustafsson is the more incendiary player, he invariably bows to Günter's more insidious aesthetic on these pecked-off miniatures, which are taut, concentrated, eccentric and often funny. Christmann's ongoing work (now at Vario 44) can be found on his Edition Explico, in tiny numbers.

June Christy (1926–90)

VOICE

Followed Anita O'Day as Stan Kenton's singer in 1945 but carried on her own recording career with Capitol. Came back briefly in the '70s. Married to Bob Cooper.

 Original Studio Radio Transcriptions Swing Factory SWFCD66601 Christy; Stan Kenton Orchestra. 45–46.

(*) Day Dreams Capitol 832083 Christy; Stan Kenton (p); orchestras directed by Frank DeVol, Bob Cooper, Pete Rugolo, Shorty Rogers. 3/47–5/55.

♛ * Something Cool: The Complete Mono and Stereo Versions Capitol 34069 Christy; Pete Rugolo orchestra. 53–60.

 Duet Capitol 89285 Christy; Stan Kenton (p). 55.

* The Misty Miss Christy Capitol 98452 Christy; Pete Rugolo Orchestra. 56.

(*) Fair And Warmer & Gone For The Day Capitol 95448 Christy; orchestra. 57.

* The Song Is June Capitol 55455 Christy; Pete Rugolo Orchestra. 7/58–8/60.

June Christy's wholesome but peculiarly sensuous voice is both creative and emotive. Her long controlled lines and the shading of a fine vibrato suggest a professional's attention to detail and a tender, solicitous feel for the heart of a song. Her greatest moments are as close to creating definitive interpretations as any singer can come.

She sounds amazingly confident just out of her teens on the early stuff with Kenton, already a swing-era canary with a feel for the cooler, more knowing pulse of the years ahead. Day Dreams collects various singles and a few unreleased pieces, including a rare scat vehicle on 'The Way You Look Tonight', a gorgeous treatment of 'Do It Again', Bob Graettinger's bizarre chart for 'Everything Happens To Me' and a couple of fine Ellington treatments. Two duet tracks with Kenton are leftovers from the Duet session.

Her best work was done with Rugolo (although husband Bob Cooper's charts shouldn't be forgotten). The masterpieces are Something Cool and The Misty Miss Christy, both perfectly programmed and meticulously tailored to June's persona. 'Something Cool' itself is a story that bears endless retelling, but 'Midnight Sun', 'I Should Care' and several others seem like definitive interpretations, a marvel for Christy's perfect breath control and vibrato as well as her emotional colouring. It only took EMI/Capitol 20 years to put out both the original mono version (from 1953–5) with the stereo remake on one CD. The later interpretations are deeper, more considered, but still beautifully fresh after 50-odd years. Misty is almost as good. Her version of 'Round Midnight' goes down as one of the great treatments of that overworked song. Rugolo's inventiveness is unstinting, often using the orchestra in surprising ways but nothing that unsettles or diverts attention from the singer.

The breezy songs on Fair And Warmer and Gone For The Day have a tang of melancholy, but the duets with longtime boss Kenton have him clunking away while June sounds not so much bittersweet as fatalistic: an oddity among her sessions.

The Song Is June (which takes in the later Off Beat) is unmissable. There are some swingers here, including delightful versions of 'A Sleepin' Bee', 'The One I Love (Belongs To Somebody Else)' and 'The Song Is You', but the nocturnal brooding of 'Saturday's Children', 'Nobody's Heart' and 'You Say You Care' is more typical. Rugolo never did a better chart than his astonishing arrangement of 'Remind Me', and Christy's mature style blends the sweetness of her youth with a serene melancholy that can be deeply affecting. These records should be better known.

Also, in brief:

 A Friendly Session Jasmine JASCD 341. 50.
Radio transcriptions with an unknown Johnny Guarnieri (p) group. Shoddy sound.

(*) A Lovely Way To Spend An Evening Jasmine JASMCD 2528. 57–59.
Poorish sound again, but nice cuts with the Shelly Manne (d) group and Jerry Gray's orchestra.

(*) June's Got Rhythm Capitol 77549. 6/58–2/60.
Everything from the '58 album, plus four tracks from the later Cool School. Russ Freeman shines in accompaniment.

(*) Ballads For Night People & The Intimate Miss Christy Capitol 96728. 60–63.
British reissue of the Cooper-arranged Ballads with the Julie Londonish Intimate on which June's 'Ev'ry Time' vies with Chris Connor's classic version.

(*) Big Band Specials Capitol 498319. 62.
A dozen hits from the swing era, so something of a nostalgia exercise when it was made.

* The Best Of The Jazz Sessions Capitol 53922. 9/49–8/68.
Overstretches in trying to include later stuff but, allowing for some unfortunate omissions, pretty good.

Pete Churchill

VOICE, PIANO

British, sounds American. Nice touch at the keyboard, too.

 The Bad And The Beautiful 33 Records 33JAZZ107 Churchill; Bobby Wellins (ts); Steve Watts (b); Dave Wickins (d). 9/01.
No less a jazz giant than Mark Murphy calls for Churchill when he is working in Britain. Churchill knows his American songbook and knows the changes, too, though he isn't the kind of accompanist who will go for flash inversions and transpositions just because they are unusual. Everything serves the song. That's been a Wellins trademark too and the partnership could scarcely be better matched. Pete's voice is slightly rough-edged and resonant. He pulls off the American inflection that trips up so many non-Celtic British jazz singers, but never sounds like he's straining for a Stateside booking. If you feel like sampling one of the more unusual numbers, 'Nancy (With The Laughing Face)' is the one.

Jim Cifelli (born 1961)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Made his name with the Uptown Jazz Orchestra before founding a nonet influenced by his composition teacher Manny Albam and by Gil Evans.

 Bullet Trane /  So You Say /  Tunnel Vision Orchard 3503 / Challenge 73175 / Short Notice SNM 002 Cifelli; Andy Gravish (t, flhn); Pete McGuinness (tb); Cliff Lyons (ss, as); Joel Frahm (ts); Barbara Cifelli (bs, bcl, f); Pete McCann (g); Mary Ann McSweeney (b); Tim Horner (d). 98; 99; N.D.
The real joy of these records is Cifelli's ability to give a small(ish) group the range and power of an orchestra, while giving a substantial line-up the flexibility of a small group. His compositional interests can be gauged from a bold segue of Wayne Shorter's 'Fee Fi Fo Fum' and 'Speak No Evil' on the most recent record, but it is the originals which are most interesting.

Bullet Trane also includes Herbie Hancock's 'Dolphin Dance', but it has to follow the title-piece, which is an inspired variation on Coltrane's 'Countdown'. The line-up of horns suggests Blue Train, and so does the inclusion of Tadd Dameron's 'Lady Bird', which Trane reworked on his Blue Note session. Here, as elsewhere, it is trombonist McGuinness who really catches the ear, a strong but airy player who delivers a lot of atmosphere and strong ideas.

The second album is every bit as good, and underlines the significance of having a guitar-player rather than a pianist as the main harmony instrument. McCann is a driving, propulsive player, but he leaves the harmonic texture wide open. He is particularly good on the unexpected 'Where Is Carmela Going Now?'. The saxophonists come into their own on 'So You Say'. Frahm is magnificent on 'Undercurrent' and Lyons turns in a superb soprano solo on 'Without Changes', which was written by bassist McSweeney. The boss's wife, Barbara, brings a nice range and a much-needed change of texture to some of the charts.

The third album is the most accomplished yet, though oddly characterless. With the exception of the Shorter segment and the delightful Latin 'Cambio De Corazone', there is nothing that surprises. Well-executed modern jazz, though.

Also, in brief:

 Groove Station Short Notice Music 003. 05.
Retro soul and groove sounds from Cifelli, with Joel Frahm (ss) nicely featured on 'Chaotica' and elsewhere.

Circle

GROUP

Short-lived quartet, which came together when Braxton joined an already working trio.

 Paris-Concert ECM 843163 2CD Anthony Braxton (reeds, perc); Chick Corea (p); Dave Holland (b); Barry Altschul (d). 2/71.
Creative tensions guaranteed this would be a brief association. There's a yearning for freedom by all hands, but Corea isn't really interested in following Braxton's approach any more than Braxton is interested in playing 'Nefertiti' and 'There Is No Greater Love'. Their playful 'Duet', though, is an unexpected highlight. Holland and Altschul play a great deal but are poorly served by the sound, which is atypically thin and clattery for an ECM session.

Alan Clare

PIANO

Another once-admired Brit, rescued from the dust.

* Jazz Around The Clock / Alan Clare Trio With Bob Burns Dutton Vocalion CDSML 4269 Clare; Ray Premru (bt); Bob Burns (as, bcl); Bob Efford, Don Rendell (ts); Ike Isaacs (g); Lennie Bush, Kenny Napper (b); Allen Ganley, Bobby Kevin, Tony Kinsey, Eddie Taylor (d). 11/56–59.
The earliest things here are bonus tracks taken from the Royal Festival Hall in November 1956 with Bush, Ganley and the legendary Isaacs. 'Luxury Flat' is absolutely of its moment. The 1957 session has Burns on bass clarinet, unusual for the time and quite effective. He plays alto on 'Yesterdays' on the 1959 session, which is basically a trio date with guest horn spots on a few tracks. As the use of bass clarinet and bass trumpet suggest, Clare was interested in unusual sound, and while the original stuff – 'Luxury Flat' again – is almost affectedly 'modern' and hip, it's on the standards that his individual touch is most effective. Rendell only appears on the opening 'I'm Old Fashioned', which in title and approach suggests the other, perhaps more marketable side of the Clare group. A pretty much forgotten name now, but worth reviving.

Clarinet Summit

GROUP

Counter-thrust to the dominance of Adolphe Sax.

(*) Southern Bells Black Saint 120107 Alvin Batiste, John Carter, Jimmy Hamilton (cl); David Murray (bcl). 3/87.
A one-off convocation was issued on an India Navigation LP and the idea stuck. What made the line-up fascinating was the appearance side-by-side of two mainstream-traditionalists alongside two modernists of markedly individual temperament. Murray, inevitably, seems the most prominent member. The three B-flat clarinets are so closely woven together that only when a trademark device emerges, like Hamilton's softly decelerating phrases towards the end of a chorus, that one picks out individuals. Even so, this is a better recording than the India Navigation record, and textures and timbres come through nicely. Beguiling juxtapositions of material, too, with 'Mbizo' alongside 'Perdido', 'I Want To Talk About You' with 'Beat Box'.

Clarinet Trio

GROUP

Abstract but accessible reed-playing.

 October 1 '98 /  Translucent Tones Leo CD LR 058 / 339 Jürgen Kupke (cl); Theo Nabicht, Gebhard Ullmann (cl, bcl). 9 & 10/98; 8/01.
The first is a delightful set of sketches, miniatures and caprices, with 'Tea For Two' and a Nino Rota tune (two more of them on the sequel) thrown in as melodic milestones in a mostly abstract setting. The mix of sounds, with Nabicht and Ullmann contributing darker sonorities on bass clarinets, is utterly delightful and, while this is challenging music, there's nothing here that will frighten any but the jumpiest horses. Even so, the second disc is much closer in feel to a jazz date, with a warmer sonority and a stiff-shouldered swing. Ullmann's writing is the key element, though the improvised tracks are fine, too.

Curtis Clark (born 1950)

PIANO

Born in Chicago but grew up in LA, where he later met David Murray. Now based in Amsterdam. A prolific composer, best known for Letter To South Africa.

 Dreams Deferred Nimbus 3813 Clark; Felicity Provan (t); Sean Bergin, Tobias Delius (ss, ts); Tristan Honsinger (clo); Wayne Dockery (b); Louis Moholo (d). 93.

* Make Believe BvHaast 0500 Clark; Felicity Provan (c, v); Rob Armus (ts); Jacko Schoonderwoerd (b); Eugen Gondi (d). 9/99.
Though consistently undervalued, Clark has maintained a steady stream of impressive work, though very often his most effective performances are for other leaders. Dreams Deferred consists of two separate sessions: a set of Monk tunes for trio, played with dreamy doggedness; and a wonderfully vivid set of originals for the septet. The fiery Bergin has rarely sounded better and weaves beautifully with Provan and Delius on 'Two Shadows In The Mist'. Honsinger isn't particularly well recorded, but he makes a striking contribution. The quiet centre of the music, as so often, is Clark himself, whose playing easily matches up to his skills as a writer.

The later set doesn't have quite the same punch. Armus's compositions are a bit of an imposition, though there is a splendid, unexpected reading of 'With A Little Help From My Friends', which turns into a strange, revivalist swingalong. Provan proves her worth again with some fine, tight cornet-playing and some effective vocals.

Also, in brief:

* Letter To South Africa Nimbus NS 501. 89.
Probably quite difficult to find now, but this is essential listening for anyone interested in Clark's work. Worth the hunt.

Sonny Clark (1931–63)

PIANO

Recorded on the West Coast from 1953, on the East from 1957, and recorded constantly for the next six years, though alcohol and heroin ruined him.

(*) Dial 'S' For Sonny Blue Note 66469 Clark; Art Farmer (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Hank Mobley (ts); Wilbur Ware (b); Louis Hayes (d). 7/57.
 Sonny's Crib Blue Note 46819 Clark; Donald Byrd (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); John Coltrane (ts); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 10/57.
(*) Sonny Clark Trio Blue Note 51238-2 / Fresh Sound FSRCD 2002 Clark; Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 11/57.
* Cool Struttin' Blue Note 95327-2 As above, except add Art Farmer (t); Jackie McLean (as). 1/58.
 Standards Blue Note 21283-2 Clark; Paul Chambers, Jymie Merritt (b); Wes Landers (d). 11–12/58.
Clark approached music with abandon. A pendulum dependence on either alcohol or narcotics never seems to have impinged on his ability to play; he enjoyed a steady if short-lived tenure as Blue Note's house pianist, though being a junkie was never a disqualification in that set-up. Note-perfect, rhythmically bouncy and always ready with a quirky idea, he was an ideal group player, less convincing in a hornless group like the eponymous 1957 date. Chambers, then approaching his heyday, has a generous share of the spotlight, perhaps because Sonny's interest in soloing was limited.

Dial 'S' was a formidable label debut. The horns clatter into each tune with brio and obvious enjoyment and the solos are crisp and to the point. Clark himself plays with resolve and precision and there is a steady flow of sharp ideas, harmonically interesting and rhythmically already quite daring. Sonny's Crib is more transitional. Its roots are still in orthodox bebop, though there are signs of a shift to a more open approach. Unusually, the set is dominated by standards, from the opening 'With A Song In My Heart' to two versions of 'Speak Low' and 'Come Rain Or Shine'. Byrd is on astonishing form in the opening selection, and though the three-man front line doesn't really work, each of the horns has some effective moments.

Cool Struttin' is one of the key documents of hard bop. The title-piece is a long-form blues, with room for the horns to stretch out. Sonny's own finest moment is his solo on 'Blue Minor', another original. His three-note trills are almost Monkian and the percussive, spacious attack is reminiscent of the bebop giant at his most capacious. Though Clark rarely strays far from the blues, one can hear Farmer itching to break through into other dimensions. The reissue contains two extra tracks unreleased on LP: Clark's own 'Royal Flush' and a wayward interpretation of Rodgers and Hart's 'Lover'.

The standards album, which includes material from Blues In The Night (currently only available in Japan), lacks character. Clark's great strength, like Monk's and Powell's, lay in imposing his own personality on algebraically simple materials. Here he is required to play melodically, and sounds merely workmanlike.

(*) Leapin' And Lopin' Blue Note 84091 Clark; Tommy Turrentine (t); Charlie Rouse (ts); Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins (d). 11/61.
Subject to erratic availability. 'Voodoo' is harmonically clever and rhythmically more challenging than the group seems to recognize. Sonny himself is tautly disciplined, showing no signs of the personal problems that would cut short his life just a couple of years later. There are two versions of 'Melody For C' (not 'in C', as is sometimes written) and the variant is a good indication of how exacting he was even at this stage in his career. Even the initially rejected 'Zellmar's Delight', one of the most obscure items in the Clark discography, is restored. Turrentine contributes 'Midnight Mambo', but the only standard is an introspective 'Deep In A Dream'.

Also, in brief:

 1954 Memorial Album / (*) Oakland 1955 Jazz Factory JFCD 158 / Uptown 2740. 1/54, 55.
Not released until 1975 (on Xanadu) and 1995 respectively, these shaky early recordings of bop-dominated sets by the 24-year-old reveal him to be more competent than genuinely visionary at this stage.

(*) My Conception Blue Note 22674. 3/59.
Always in the shadow of the more individual Cool Struttin', so not so widely recognized. Two fine versions of 'Minor Meeting'.

* Complete Studio Recordings Gambit 69263. 57–61.
Thirty-six tracks, of which only half a dozen are alternates, but not strictly 'complete' and disappearing fast.

Kenny Clarke (1914–85)

DRUMS, XYLOPHONE

Born in Pittsburgh, he came from a musical family and had an early facility on a wide range of instruments. A prime mover in bebop, he remained more swing-orientated than either Blakey or Roach. 'Klook' spent his later years in France, where he was something of a hero.

* Klook's The Man Properbox 120 4CD Clarke; Benny Bailey, Donald Byrd, Dick Collins, Kenny Dorham, Claude Dunson, Henry Goodwin, Roger Guerin, Fats Navarro (t); Nat Adderley (c); Eddie Bert, Billy Byers, Henry Coker, Nat Peck (tb); Rudy Powell (cl, as); Cannonball Adderley, John Brown, Hubert Fol, John LaPorta, Frank Morgan, Hubert Rostaing, Sonny Stitt, Michel de Villers (as); Ernie Wilkins (as, ts, arr); Ray Abrams, Walter Benton, Jean-Claude Fohrenbach (ts); James Moody (ts, arr); Jerome Richardson, Frank Wess (ts, f); George Barrow (ts, bs); Charlie Fowlkes, Armand Migiani, Cecil Payne, Eddie De Verteuil (bs); Ronnie Ball, Jacques Denjean, Tommy Flanagan, Edgar Hayes, Hank Jones, Bernard Peiffer, Bud Powell, Ralph Schecroun, Horace Silver, Martial Solal, René Urtreger , Gerald Wiggins (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Kenny Burrell, John Collins, Eddie Gibbs, Al McKibbon, Charles Montaggioni (g); André Hodeir (vn, arr); Jean Bouchety, Paul Chambers, Frank Coco Darling, Al Hall, Percy Heath, Eddie Jones, Wendell Marshall, Alf Messelier, Pierre Michelot, Jean Warland, James Anderson (v); Walter Fuller (arr). 3/38–11/56.
 Complete 1946–1950 Swing Master Takes Jazz Factory JFCD22845 Largely as above. 9/46–6/50.
 Kenny Clarke, 1946–1948 Classics 1171 As above. 46–48.

 Kenny Clarke, 1948–1950 Classics 1233 As above. 48–50.
'Klook', so called because of the distinctive 'klook-mop' sound of his favourite cadence, is one of the most influential drummers of all time. He made his recording debut at 24 in Sweden with the dire James Anderson on vocals (it's all there on the Properbox), but while working with Dizzy Gillespie in the early '40s Clarke began to depart from normal practice by marking the count on his top cymbal and using his bass drum only for accents. It became the distinctive sound of bebop, imitated and adapted by Blakey and Roach, and it remains essential background work for drummers even today. Clarke had a strong but also quite delicate sound. The cover of Plays André Hodeir (below) shows him wielding the long sticks that enabled him to get around his kit and deliver a highly nuanced sound.

The Properbox picks up the story after military service in 1946 with Klook and his 52nd Street Boys (including Navarro, Dorham, Stitt and Powell) recording 'Epistrophy' (which he co-wrote with Monk) and some other tunes. The rest of disc one was taped in Paris. There's then another big jump to the mid-'50s in Hollywood and New York following Clarke's short tenure with the Modern Jazz Quartet. The best stuff comes at the start of the third disc, and the June 1955 Septet date with Byrd, both Adderleys, Richardson, Silver and Chambers, with cracking reads of ' Willow, Weep For Me', 'Bohemia After Dark' and 'Hear Me Talkin' To Ya'. The fourth begins strongly with the Pittsburgher meeting up with Detroit's finest at Rudy Van Gelder's. Thereafter, though, the selection tails away.

The Jazz Factory set pretty much overlaps with Proper, but like the Classics doesn't offer enticing sound. Apart from the May 1948 date, which is shorn of four average numbers for reasons of duration, Complete includes all of Kenny's recordings under his own name in this period. Paradoxically, some of the sessions were under the nominal leadership of Michel de Villers, though just to make matters even more complicated 'The Man I Love' from 5 May 1948 was originally credited to Jean-Claude Fohrenbach.

As for Kenny's contribution to these, the Luftwaffe had dropped fewer bombs in the preceding years; given the relative anonymity of the settings, it's Clarke one tends to listen to. The September 1946 52nd Street Boys session again stands out strongly.

 Bohemia After Dark Savoy 66811 Clarke; Nat Adderley (c); Donald Byrd (t); Cannonball Adderley (as); Jerome Richardson (as, f); Horace Silver (p); Paul Chambers (b). 6 & 7/55.
This is more usually cited as the first important appearance of the Adderley brothers (and was previously credited to Cannonball), but it is Klook's subtle swing that makes the date. There's just one track from the later date ('We'll Be Together Again'), but the June encounter was good enough without the bonus and 'With Apologies To Oscar' (by the Adderleys) crackles with wit; Pettiford's title-tune kicks off the album. Nicely remastered.

(*) Pieces Of Time Soul Note 121078 Clarke; Andrew Cyrille, Milford Graves, Famoudou Don Moye (d, perc). 9/83.
Though this was hailed on release as a much-needed reminder that Milford Graves was still alive and functioning, Klook was the elder statesman here, and he steals the show with a seemingly effortless display that has the younger guys diving into their bags for ever more exotic wrinkles on the same basic sound.

Also, in brief:

 Americans Swinging In Paris EMI 7243 5396522. 50–57.
Nice compilation of material from Clarke's Gallic apotheosis.

 Plays André Hodeir Polygram 835452. 10–11/56.
The faulty personnel listing doesn't inspire confidence, but there are some lovely things on this compilation of tracks written by the great Frenchman.

Clarke–Boland Big Band

GROUP

Co-led by the American drummer (see above) and the Belgian pianist (born 1929), this all-star band ran intermittently but with a stable personnel from 1961 to 1972.

 Now Hear Our Meanin' Collectables 7497 Kenny Clarke (d); Francy Boland (p); Edmond Arnie, Benny Bailey, Jimmy Deuchar, Maffy Falay, Idrees Sulieman (t); Erich Kleinschuster, Nat Peck, Ake Persson (tb); Karl Drewo, Billy Mitchell, Ronnie Scott (ts); Sahib Shihab (bs, f); Jimmy Woode (b). 1/63.

 Handle With Care Koch 8534 As above. 1/63.
These 1963 recordings were sponsored by producer Gigi Campi and recorded in Germany. The arrangements are spot on, open-ended, relaxed but also germanically precise, and the playing from all the soloists (great stuff from Ronnie Scott) is marvellous. Clarke and Boland never claimed much solo space, preferring to keep the engine-room turning over, but lovers of big-band music will enjoy these latter-day masters of the craft. There are another couple of Clarke–Boland sessions on Collectables, but always paired with other leaders. The twofer with Jimmy Giuffre, Western Suite, is worth looking out for.

 All Blues / Sax No End MPS 523525-2 Clarke; Boland; Benny Bailey, Shake Keane, Idrees Sulieman, Jimmy Deuchar (t); Nat Peck, Ake Persson, Eric Van Lier (tb); Derek Humble (as); Karl Drewo, Ronnie Scott, Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Sahib Shihab (bs, f); Dave Pike (vib); Jimmy Woode (b), Kenny Clare (d). 67–69.

 All Smiles MPS 15624 As above; omit Keane, Davis, Drewo; add Sonny Grey (t); Tony Coe (ts); Dave Pike (vib). 5/68.

 More Smiles MPS 22602 Very similar to above but add Tony Fisher, Dusko Goykovic (t). 5/69.
These are terrific albums from what had become a settled personnel. The section work is electrifying and the soloists, especially on Sax No End, speak for themselves. All Smiles has a classically draped beauty on the cover; the music's pretty classy, too, with some cracking Boland arrangements and great playing right through the ensemble. The cuts are short and punchy, but 'When Your Lover Has Gone' takes on epic status just by dint of the voicings; a great performance. More Smiles offers just that: no rocket science, just first-rate big-band jazz with bite and wit.

Also, in brief:

 Jazz In The Movies – More Jazz Camjazz 1065. 68.
No personnels given, but it's known that Shake Keane (t) was present. The idea is a pretty simple one with Rota and Morricone strongly represented, though the jazz quotient is disappointingly low.

 En Concert Avec Europe 1 Europe 1 710413/14. 10/69.
Terrific radio date, documented at length and with superior sound.

Paul Clarvis

PERCUSSION

Becoming an indispensable figure on the British scene. Played the drum part in Birtwistle's Panic At The Proms.

 For All The Saints Village Life 97123 Clarvis; Stan Sulzmann (ss, ts); Tony Hymas (p). 6/98.

A difficult record to categorize, since the group seems to be synthesizing world-music and classical materials within a basically jazz setting. Sulzmann is a master practitioner, of course, and Hymas is always both thoughtful and beautiful in execution, but one listens to the set largely for Clarvis's delightfully colouristic approach, often pastel-soft, but sometimes intense and even garish in its raw simplicity.

Classical Jazz Quartet

GROUP

Convened in 2001 to do what the name suggests and bring a jazz sensibility to the classics.

 Play Tchaikovsky /  Play Bach /  Play Rachmaninov Kind of Blue 10011/10012 / 10004 Kenny Barron (p); Stefon Harris (vib, mar); Ron Carter (b); Lewis Nash (d). 8/01–11/02.

(*) The Complete Recordings /  Christmas Vertical Jazz/Performing Arts 4281 2CD / Kind Of Blue 10014 As above. 8/01–11/02.

It's not a new idea and, as the line-up suggests, the CJQ was quite explicitly referencing what the recently defunct MJQ had done for decades. The Bach record is full of familiar elements and some plausibly swingable melodies, including the first movement of the F major Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, 'Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring' and the 'Air' from Orchestral Suite No. 3. And swing them they do, with Harris a very plausible successor to the great Milt Jackson and some fine arrangements by Bob Belden. They actually started out with Tchaikovsky, an equally understandable choice given the Russian's gift for memorable melody. The set was originally released as The Nutcracker Suite, because that is exactly what it contains, a complete reworking, played out at just over fifty minutes and full of delights and exhilarating moments; Harris's reworking of 'Dance of the Mirlitons' is a highlight.

They do something similar on the Rachmaninov disc, playing the whole of the second Piano Concerto in C minor, a work that is remarkably well pitched for a group of this cast. Carter is in extra-good form here, for some reason; perhaps Rachmaninov is a special love.

There's a bit of confusion in the discography now, with Christmas reprising the Nutcracker material and a weirdly edited version of the 'Hallelujah Chorus'. All the same stuff is on the complete set, which is probably the one to get, though the Kind Of Blue covers are beautifully designed and nicely collectable.

Claudia Quintet

GROUP

Eclectics' eclectics, working territory that draws much from modern composition. Great fun, too.

 I, Claudia / (*) Semi-Formal / * For Cuneiform 187 / 217 / 247 Chris Speed (cl, ts); Matt Moran (vib); Ted Reichman (acc); Drew Gress (b); John Hollenbeck (d). 1/04; 1/05; 5/07.

One probably shouldn't read too much about the Claudia Quintet, since references to Morton Feldman, Joni Mitchell, minimalism, African music (all on the first Cuneiform record, the group's second) might lead you to think this was catch-all post-modernism, dominated by ironic gesture. In fact, Hollenbeck's compositions are so carefully thought out that the group sound – in some guises reminiscent of European ensembles like Available Jelly or Clusone 3 – is always at the service of the music. Semi-Formal almost plays as if the songs were part of a coherent suite or soundtrack but is dominated by 'They Point ... Glance ... Whisper ... Then Snicker ...' and the jollier 'Guarana'. Speed's clarinet- and saxophone-playing are almost always twinned with Reichman's harmonic complexity, leaving Moran and Hollenbeck to deal with the repetitive elements, often with Gress in unpredictable support. The most recent of the three has taken us longer to absorb than the rest, which may be a positive sign. And yet for the first time one wants to ask the Thurberish question: what are you being enigmatic for? Hollenbeck's writing here isn't so much subtle as hypersubtle, with the point sometimes elusive. Even so, we keep going back to it, so there's no shortage of fascination.

Thomas Clausen (born 1949)

PIANO

Studied at the Copenhagen Academy before establishing himself locally and internationally.

* Psalm Storyville STCD 4185 Clausen; Mads Vinding (b); Alex Riel (d). 6/94.

This exemplary date affirms Clausen's imaginative powers. It was audacious to open the disc with the slow title-piece, and there are more surprises as the session proceeds. 'Dancing In The Dark' hardly refers to its melody at all, and the bare spaces of 'Soft' are beautifully handled. Clausen is at ease at any tempo and refuses to send out too many notes, while Vinding is as much a melodist as a timekeeper. Riel has seldom played better: upfront in the mix and given a terrific sound by engineer Hans Nielsen – his playing on 'Skygger' gives terrific impetus to what might have been a mere mood-piece.

(*) Turn Out The Stars Storyville STCD 4215 Clausen; Severi Pyysalo (vib). 6/97.

For sheer beauty of sound and subtle interaction, this pairing is hard to beat. Pyysalo plays with enough aggression and point to defer suggestions of excess prettiness and his improvising (an astringent solo on 'Turnaround') is similarly tough-minded. The players don't shy away from beauty, though, and of Clausen's three originals 'Green Eyes' lingers in the mind.

(*) My Favorite Things Stunt STUCD 01242 Clausen; Jesper Lundgaard (b); Peter Danemo (d). 10/01.

One day in the studio with the new trio: 12 tunes (whittled down from 20), all first takes, cut live to two-track. This anti-perfectionist stance offers the usual pros and cons. Though Lundgaard is quietly masterful, Danemo is imposing in the mix, and some of the pieces, including a confused 'Over The Rainbow', could have used more work. But Clausen has a knack of getting the best out of these situations and much of the music-making is close to sublime. 'My Favorite Things' itself is alive and characterful. Several rare standards – 'Jasmine', 'Deep In Your Heart', 'If You Are But A Dream' – are performed with uncommon grace.

Also, in brief:

() Follow The Moon /  Prelude To A Kiss / (*) Balacobaco Stunt STUCD 19808 / 00142 / 03112. 9–10/97; 5/00; 3/03.
The Brazilian Quartet: while Clausen is perfectly authentic, some of this comes across as chirpy muzak. The second disc is much better and with the third Clausen is playing in the sunshine, though still at some distance from his most effective idiom.

James Clay (1935–94)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Semi-legendary Dallas man, said to have been a major influence on Ornette Coleman.

 Tenorman / The Kid From Dallas Fresh Sound FSRCD 437 Clay; Sonny Clark, Lorraine Geller, Bobby Timmons (p); Jimmie Bond, Red Mitchell (b); Frank Capp, Billy Higgins, Lawrence Marable (d). 7 & 8/56, 2 & 3/57.
(*) The Sound Of The Wide Open Spaces Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 257 Clay; David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 4/60.
 A Double Dose Of Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1790 Clay; Nat Adderley (c); Victor Feldman (vib); Gene Harris (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 10/60.
Clay's absence from these pages over the last couple of editions isn't untypical of his in- and out-of-focus reputation. Because he's perhaps best known as an associate of Ornette's and a reputed influence on the great man, those who sample his records are often surprised to find them pretty straight-ahead and conventional. As a precocious 20-year-old Clay was playing in Los Angeles. The Fresh Sound disc brings together a single cut from the Forum Theater with Timmons, Bond and Littman, and a much better studio session with Clark and Bond (and including some fine Clark material), as well as 'It's Alright With Me' from a TV show with Lorraine Geller, Mitchell and Capp, and a subsequent studio date with Higgins standing in on drums. The sound is broad, booting jazz, with touches of sophistication in unexpected places; listen, for instance, to how Clay negotiates 'Scrapple From The Apple' and 'Sandu' with the last of these groups, and reshapes the line subtly on every repetition.

The Sound gets into the brawling spirit typical of such two-tenor encounters but offers only a glimpse of Clay as a distinctive force. A Double Dose is marginally more interesting, but remains a generic hard-bop date, lifted out of the ordinary by Feldman's vibes on three numbers; 'Linda Serene' and 'Lost Tears' are interesting originals.

Buck Clayton (1911–91)

TRUMPET

Though he was leading a big band as early as 1934, it was his time with Basie which established him as a soloist of distinction, a player with a warm, brassy tone and a softness of delivery that was well suited to ballad playing. Only towards the end did the standard slip.

 Buck Clayton 1945–1947 Classics 968 Clayton; Dicky Wells, Trummy Young (tb); George Johnson (as); Scoville Browne (as, cl); Ed Hall (cl); Flip Phillips (ts); Lucky Thompson (ts); Sammy Benskin, Johnny Guarnieri, Billy Taylor, Teddy Wilson (p); Brick Fleagle, Freddie Green, Tiny Grimes (g); Al Hall, Milt Hinton, Al McKibbon, Slam Stewart (b); Danny Alvin, Jimmy Crawford, J. C. Heard, Sid Weiss, Shadow Wilson (d); Canada Lee, Sylvia Sims, Kenneth Spencer (v). 5/45–11/47.
 The Classic Swing Of Buck Clayton Original Jazz Classics OJC 1709 Clayton; Dicky Wells, Trummy Young (tb); Buster Bailey, Scoville Brown (cl); George Johnson (as); Jimmy Jones, Billy Taylor (p); Brick Fleagle, Tiny Grimes (g); John Levy, Al McKibbon, Sid Weiss (b); Cozy Cole, Jimmy Crawford (d). 46.
Responsible for no particular stylistic innovation, Buck managed to synthesize much of the history of jazz trumpet up to his time with a bright, brassy tone and an apparently limitless facility for melodic improvisation, which made him ideal for the open-ended jams he recorded for Columbia and, latterly, Chiaroscuro. He played with Basie until 1946, the year of the fine Classic Swing sessions, and after a stint in the army he struck off on his own again, forming a productive association with shouter Jimmy Rushing which survived long enough for the European tour featured on the Steeplechase set below. The OJC set has much to enjoy. 'Harlem Cradle Song', with Young and Wells, has a lovely, easy swing, and there is a fine instrumental version of 'I Want A Little Girl', normally a Jimmy Rushing feature. The record is, however, now basically a duplication of the Classics set, which has other material too.

Most of Classics 968 was recorded under Buck's own name, though the earliest date, from the day the bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, is under Freddie Green's name, and there is a later session for Keynote led by drummer J. C. Heard. Enough of the echt Clayton comes through on the sides for HRS which were recorded in 1946, including classics like 'Harlem Cradle Song' and 'Dawn Dance', tunes which bespeak a gentle artistry and an absolute musical integrity. There is some excellent stuff from Teddy Wilson (originally billed as Theodocius) and from all the reedmen, but the disc could have done without the educational 'Jazz Band', narrated by Canada Lee and sung by Kenneth Spencer, an oddity with a single B-take part for Buck. Clayton was a superb vocal accompanist, and his fills and subtle responses are always tasteful, but he's heard to better effect on the instrumental all-stars tracks from the same occasion, tackling 'Moonglow' with consummate artistry and taste.

 Buck's Bon Voyage Fresh Sound FSR 329 Clayton; Big Chief Russell Moore (tb); Mezz Mezzrow (cl); Gene Cedric (ts, cl); Red Richards (p); Pierre Michelot (b); Kansas Fields (d). 53.
A highly enjoyable and fruitful period in Clayton's life, the '50s saw him become something of a legend in France. Here, on the brink of heading home, he's in company with some of those who helped cement him into the Parisian jazz scene. The recording isn't so very hot, but the playing is pretty good and Buck is in exceptional voice. The set's only marred by the tracks featuring the talentless Mezzrow.

(*) Copenhagen Concert Steeplechase SCCD 36006/7 2CD Clayton; Emmett Berry (t); Dicky Wells (tb); Earl Warren (as, cl); Buddy Tate (ts); Al Williams (p); Gene Ramey (b); Herbie Lovelle (d); Jimmy Rushing (v). 9/59.
Plenty of old friends in this band, from the lubricious Wells to the galvanic Rushing, and Clayton sheriffs the ensemble with his expected panache. Eighty-five minutes of music is ungenerously spread over two CDs, and since it isn't all deathless stuff, it might have been better reduced to a single disc of highlights. But the real problem is the sound, and nobody suffers worse than Buck himself, who is off mic for many of his solos.

(*) Buck & Buddy /  Buck & Buddy Blow The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 757 / 850 Clayton; Buddy Tate (ts); Sir Charles Thompson (p); Gene Ramey (b); Mousie Alexander (d). 12/60; 9/61.
These document a happy association. Buddy Tate was a player of similar lineage to Clayton, and all their recordings together have a warmth of genuine understanding. Much of the music on Buck & Buddy was formerly on the Prestige double-LP Kansas City Nights. Originally recorded for Swingville, it gives a near-perfect sense of where Buck was at the end of his last really productive decade before the trumpeter's curse, persistent lip problems, began to curtail his activity. There's certainly no sign of difficulty here. He trades figures with Tate on 'Birdland Betty' and more romantic shapes on 'When A Woman Loves A Man'. Blow The Blues is pretty much more of the same, but the heat is off, with the sterling exception of 'Don't Mind If I Do'.

(*) Buck Clayton All-Stars, 1961 /  Basel, 1961 Storyville STCD 8231/ TCB 2072 Clayton; Emmett Berry (t); Dicky Wells (tb); Earl Warren (as); Buddy Tate (ts); Sir Charles Thompson (p); Gene Ramey (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 4/61; 5/61.
Over in Europe, Buck's brand of swing didn't seem old-fashioned in 1961, and this touring octet was applauded to the rafters right across the continent. Part of TCB's Swiss Radio Days Jazz Series, the album is a typically well-mastered broadcast session. At rising 50 Buck sounds absolutely in command of tone and articulation, and he phrases effectively from the original 'Swinging At The Copper Rail' onwards. 'Robbins' Nest' and 'Night Train' both receive long readings with the horns trading lonely figures on the Jimmy Forrest classic. State-of-the-art swing from a band of past masters, anxious to demonstrate that, away from America at least, they weren't past it. Recorded just a few weeks earlier, the Storyvillle album comes from a Paris show. A similar set, and the band are in equally good heart, but the sound is nothing like as good, Jackson hugely loud, Sir Charles peeking through the cymbals, and the horns sometimes here, sometimes there.

 Baden, Switzerland, 1966 Sackville 2028 Clayton; Michel Pilet (ts); Henri Chaix (p); Isla Eckinger (b); Wallace Bishop (d). 2/66.
By the mid-'60s Clayton was an international star, and like many jazz musicians of his generation he found Europe a happier hunting-ground than back home in the States. The Swiss air was obviously good for him and on this amiable set he cuts loose on an array of standards, notably 'Stompin' At The Savoy' and 'One O'Clock Jump', with coltish enthusiasm. These weren't the occasions for softer and more expressive performance, but Buck does also perform well on the slower numbers, and he gets sterling assistance from an experienced Swiss band.

 Ben And Buck Sackville SKCD 22037 Clayton; Ben Webster (ts); Henri Chaix (p); Alain Du Bois (g); Isla Eckinger (b); Romano Cavicchiolo (d). 67.
 A Buck Clayton Jam Session Chiaroscuro CRD 132 Clayton; Doc Cheatham, Joe Newman (t); Urbie Green (tb); Earl Warren (as); Budd Johnson, Zoot Sims (ts); Joe Temperley (bs); Earl Hines (p); Milt Hinton (b); Gus Johnson (d). 74.
 A Buck Clayton Jam Session 1975 Chiaroscuro CRD 143 Clayton; Joe Newman, Money Johnson (t); Vic Dickenson, George Masso (tb); Lee Konitz, Earl Warren (as); Budd Johnson, Sal Nistico, Buddy Tate (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Milt Hinton (b); Mel Lewis (d). 6/75.
Buck wasn't playing at all towards the end. He suffered a serious collapse immediately after the Ben And Buck concert and after that was never up to soloing with any sort of attack or pressure. Clayton doesn't play at all on the Chiaroscuro jams, but conducts an all-star band in a selection of originals. His various jam-session dates for Columbia were great successes in their day, but they're all out of print for now (Mosaic have collected them in one of their boxed editions). The first date was something of a late revival of the form. The band is close to matchless as far as swing-to-mainstream line-ups are concerned, and while nothing much happens that deserves immortality, the session gets by on sheer charisma. The 1975 set is doubly valuable for the inclusion of two rehearsal takes of 'The Duke We Knew' and 'Glassboro Blues', two of the best things he did in later years.

Also, in brief:

 A Jumpin' Jubilee – Jam Sessions, 1945, 1946 Jazz Unlimited 1042. 45, 46.
Clayton kept pace with the new thing without for a moment changing his delivery or style. Parker, Pres, Nat Cole, Coleman Hawkins – all drop in.

 Buck Clayton, 1953 Classics 1394. 53.
Lots of great stuff from Paris, with Big Chief Russell Moore (tb) and others.

 Club Session Universal/Gitanes 13032. 53–55.
From the Jazz In Paris series, a pleasant enough amalgam of live dates from the early to mid-'50s. Peanuts Holland (t) and Charlie Singleton (ts) co-star.

 Complete Legendary Jam Sessions Master Takes Lone Hill 1395. 53–56.
Hawkins, Trummy Young, Ruby Braff, Sir Charles Thompson, lots of others.

 Live From Greenwich Village, NYC /  Swings The Village Nagel Heyer 30 / 5004. 2/90.
Buck arranges a 16-piece band with typical verve and finesse. Some great young and not so young names in the ranks.

Jay Clayton

VOICE

She improvises like an instrumentalist and is less convincing as an interpreter of lyrics.

* Sound Songs Winter & Winter 919006 Clayton; Jerry Granelli (d). 12/85.
The title's a perfect description of what Jay does. Apart from a curious reflection on 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat', there's nothing here that comes close to standard 32-bar, AABA popular song. Instead, Clayton and Granelli create what's almost a new genre, more intriguing the more one hears of it. He's a fantastic, intuitive partner and easily deserves equal billing. Originally issued on JMT.

* Beautiful Love Sunnyside SSCD 1066 Clayton; Fred Hersch (p). 96.
Exquisitely beautiful. Hersch is a great vocal accompanist and his playing here is impossible to fault. With delicious perversity, he sticks close to the original song, while Clayton ranges out. Shorter's 'Footprints' and that understated classic 'Blame It On My Youth' are handled with consummate grace and skill, with an unblushingly intimate sound.

(*) Circle Dancing Sunnyside SSCD 1076 Clayton; Jim Knapp (p); Briggan Krauss (as); Randy Halberstadt (p); Phil Sparks (b); Aaron Alexander (d). 97.

All the sounds heard are made in real time. Clayton manipulates digital delay with virtuosic skill and her bluesy, intense delivery is as compelling as ever. The material is largely original and personalized. Catch Jay's first entry on the title-tune and her floating, nippy phrasing on 'Sappho' and 'Ditto'. A real singing star.

Also, in brief:

 The Jazz Alley Tapes Hep CD 2046. 9/88.

Nice variations on 'Mr P.C.', but she sounds too close to Don Lanphere's saxophone for that well-established relationship to work as well as they think it does.

Clayton Brothers

GROUP

Bassist John and his saxophone-playing younger sibling Jeff in a relaxed mainstream situation.

 The Music Capri 74037 Jeff Clayton (as, ts, af); Bill Cunliffe (p); John Clayton (b); Jeff Hamilton (d). 5/91.

(*) Siblingity Warners 47813 As above, except add Terell Stafford (t). 8/00.

In essence, a stripped-down version of the Clayton–Hamilton big band. One senses John's hand at work on the arrangements of 'Skylark', Grofe's 'On The Trail' and 'Misty' on the first disc. It lacks the sophistication and sheer impact of the full orchestra, of course, but this was a flexible and mobile unit that kept the principals working when there was no market for big-band work. The addition of Stafford to the Warners disc is significant, in that it makes the band sound more like some early '60s Blue Note outfit, or perhaps one of Miles's quintets. John takes a spot on 'Tricotism', but there is less of Jeff blowing aimlessly out front, which was something of a problem on earlier dates. Perhaps too homely for real fireworks, these and other Clayton Bros discs are entertaining rather than revelatory.

Clayton–Hamilton Jazz Orchestra

GROUP

Midstream big band, co-led by ex-Basie-ite John Clayton and session-drummer Jeff Hamilton.

 Groove Shop /  Heart And Soul /  Absolutely! Capri 74021 / 74028 / Lake Street LSR 52002 Bobby Bryant, Snooky Young, Oscar Brashear, Clay Jenkins (t, flhn); Chuck Findley (t on Absolutely!); George Bohannon, Ira Nepus, Thurman Green (tb); Maurice Spears (btb); Jeff Clayton (ss, as, ts, ob, f); Bill Green (as, cl, f); Rickey Woodard (ts, cl); Charles Owens (ts, cl); Lee Callett (bs, bcl); Bill Cunliffe (p); Doug MacDonald (g on Groove Shop); Jim Hershman (g on Heart And Soul); John Clayton (b); Jeff Hamilton (d). 4/89; 2/91; 94.

* Live At MCG Manchester Craftsmen's Guild MCG 1017 Sal Caracchiolo, Gilbert Castellanos, Clay Jenkins (t); George Bohannon, Ira Nepus (tb); Maurice Spears (btb); Keith Fiddmont (cl, as); Rickey Woodyard (cl, ts); Charles Owens II (ts); Lee Callett (bs, bcl); Tamir Hendelman (p); John Clayton, Christoph Luty (b); Jeff Hamilton (d). 5/04.

It's Clayton's arranging that gives this blithe orchestra its character: there are some good soloists here, especially Woodard and Young, but the integration and polish of the sections are what make the music come alive. He seeks little more than grooving rhythms and call-and-response measures, and they all figure dutifully enough in the arrangements, though occasionally – as on the very slow and piecemeal variation on 'Take the "A" Train' on Heart And Soul – the band have something more out of the ordinary to play. Detailed and full-blooded recording lets one hear how all the wheels go round. Absolutely!'s opening Basie-like 'Blues For Stephanie' is a grand manifesto which some of the later tracks don't quite carry off.

The live date from MCG in Pittsburgh with a relatively new line-up is marked by a vivid tribute to Horace Silver, a new piece by Clayton with a stirring Hamilton solo and a fine arrangement of 'The Jody Grind'. Clayton plays a beautiful bowed solo on 'Nature Boy', which makes the song sound like a fragment from a classical concerto. There are also things by Sonny Stitt, Johnny Hodges, Duke Ellington and even Monty Alexander (a former employer). It must have been a terrific night.

Gerald Cleaver

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

An immensely thoughtful player, who's made a mark in post-bop, avant-garde and other styles.

(*) Adjust Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 112 Cleaver; Andrew Bishop (ss, ts, cl); Ben Monder (g); Mat Maneri (vla); Reid Anderson (b). 10/00.

This is the group Cleaver knows as Veil Of Dreams. It's an unusual set-up, but Maneri and Bishop have worked out an intriguing dialogue on 'Way Truth Life' and 'Chinese Radio', and Bad Plus man Anderson is a solid presence throughout. Monder's range of articulations makes him one of the most effective and valuable guitarists on the scene and this is one of his best showings on record. Cleaver himself doesn't push himself forward too aggressively, but he's always right in the heart of the action, and since these seven tracks are all his own, the music very much belongs to him.

Jimmy Cleveland (born 1926)

TROMBONE

Came from Tennessee to the West Coast, worked with Lionel Hampton and then freelanced extensively.

 Complete Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10235 2CD Cleveland; Ray Copeland, Art Farmer (t); Ernie Royal (t, flhn); Don Butterfield, Jay McAllister (tba); Benny Golson, Lucky Thompson (ts); Jerome Richardson (ts, bs, f); Cecil Payne (bs); Hank Jones, Wynton Kelly, Wade Legge, Junior Mance, John Williams (p); Bill Crow, Milt Hinton, Eddie Jones (b); Joe Harris, Osie Johnson, Max Roach (d). 55–59.

A terrific technician, Cleveland was one of the first significant trombonists to emerge after J. J. Johnson. Much of his career was spent in the studios, but he did manage to cut some sessions for Emarcy and Mercury – Introducing, Cleveland Style, Map Of Jimmy Cleveland, Rhythm Crazy – and they are included here, with plenty of opportunity to judge Jimmy's dextrous slide technique and singing tone. Hard to pick out highlights, but there's a lovely original called 'Little Beaver' and a fine work-out on Ernie Wilkins's 'Jimmy's Old Funky Blues'. Jimmy's lead-lines are punchy and forthright, always with something to say. Nice to see him spotlit for a moment.

Dave Cliff (born 1944)

GUITAR

Born in Northumberland, he began in rock before studying at Leeds College and switching codes. Works mostly in a mainstream idiom.

 Sippin' At Bells Spotlite SPJ-CD 553 Cliff; Geoff Simkins (as); Simon Woolf (b); Mark Taylor (d). 94.
 Play The Music Of Tadd Dameron Spotlite SPJ-CD 560 Cliff; Geoff Simkins (as); Roy Hilton (p); Simon Woolf (b); Steve Brown, Ron Parry (d). 3/96.
 When Lights Are Low Zephyr ZECD 18 Cliff; Howard Alden (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 11/96–5/97.

Cliff's unassuming approach might be mistaken for British diffidence. He's a thinking player whose cool tone and bop diction make up a voice of experience and, when paired with the similarly minded Simkins, the irresistible comparison is Billy Bauer with Lee Konitz – particularly in the duets on the first Spotlite. The second is all Dameronia (an interesting old interview with Tadd and Benny Golson is stuck on the end) and very persuasively done. The Zephyr is an off-the-cuff meeting with the on-tour Alden, over thistledown rhythms from Green and Ganley. Nothing to find fault with, though it's all a bit enervating.

Alex Cline (born 1956)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

A California-based drummer with an interest in percussive exotica and a freely focused manner that lets him move between post-bop, free playing and a rockier kind of world music.

 The Lamp And The Star ECM 837112-2 Cline; Aina Kemanis, Nels Cline (v); Jeff Gauthier (vn, vla, v); Hank Roberts (clo, v); Wayne Peet (p, org); Eric Von Essen (b); Susan Rawcliffe (didjeridu). 9/87.
 Montsalvat Nine Winds NWCD 0174 As above, except omit Nels Cline, Roberts and Rawcliffe. 5/92.
 Right Of Violet Nine Winds NWCD 0184 Cline; Jeff Gauthier (vn); G. E. Stinson (g etc.). 4/95.

While Nels seeks out rockier terrain, Alex has pursued a music based around lush textures and thick, harmonic swirls – an unusual course for a percussionist, perhaps, although his vast kit of drums, cymbals, bells and percussive devices is as appropriate to melodic needs as much as to rhythmical ones. Both The Lamp And The Star and Montsalvat have a non-specifically devotional programme, characterized by Cline's imagistic titles – 'A Blue Robe In The Distance', 'Emerald Light', 'The Kiss Of Peace' – but there is nothing mushy or New Age about the music, which has a strong and very individual resonance. Kemanis's wordless singing is neither too wispy nor too overpowering but a logical part of the flow. The later disc is preferred, if only because the long pieces such as 'He Hears The Cry' and 'In The Shadow Of The Mountain' come closest to the kind of transcendence Cline is after.

Right Of Violet has ten collective improvisations by the trio, and while this is tougher music, it still moves off the shimmering base which Cline uses as his touchstone. The opening 'An Elegy Of Waves' says it all, Gauthier's lines spiralling off Stinson's battery of effects, and the formula is set here: the violinist carries most of the melodic parts while Stinson and Cline fashion the atmospherics. The record is exhaustingly long but when they get to the eerily beautiful 'Sophia' there's a proper sense of timelessness.

 Sparks Fly Upward Cryptogramophone 102 Cline; Wayne Peet (ky); G. E. Stinson (g); Jeff Gauthier (vn); Aina Kemanis (v). 4/98.

(*) The Other Shore Cryptogramophone 106 As above, except omit Peet, Kemanis. 99.

* The Constant Flame Cryptogramophone 110 As above, except add Vinny Golia (sax); Nels Cline (g); Wayne Peet (ky); Michael Elizondo (b); Brad Dutz (perc); Aina Kemanis (v). N.D.

Sparks Fly Upward begins as beautifully as anything in the drummer's output to date, with ethereal overdubbed violins evoking stained-glass imagery in 'Rose Window'. Kemanis is an important element of the group and the powerful closing track, using the text of one of Rilke's most death-haunted poems, the ninth of the Sonnets to Orpheus, rounds out the set. The long title-piece is more of a showcase for the leader and its lack of structure makes for slightly difficult listening, certainly on second and subsequent exposure. Peter Erskine produces deftly, with due feeling for the textural virtues of Cline's approach.

The middle record of the sequence is rightly attributed to the three players individually. A cursory listen might lead you to conclude that the leader is actually the violinist, since Gauthier is often out front, backed by heavily treated guitar and soft washes of percussion. There is even less rhythmic drive this time, and Cline's percussion devices, which have always included Finnish kantele, autoharp and other exotica, have very little to do with establishing metre and more to do with sustaining an overall mood. 'Froggy's Midnight Cabaret' is something of an exception and stands out a little oddly in this rather ethereal set. The ending is extraordinary, slowing almost to stasis and delivered in a hushed and almost reverential tone: 'Nothing To Teach'.

The addition of saxophone, bass and keyboards and the reintroduction of Kemanis lends The Constant Flame a more familiar profile. The title-piece is dedicated to a former boss, clarinettist John Carter, and shows how thoroughly Cline has learned how to combine organized structure with improvisatory freedom. Other tracks are also personal dedications: 'Bridge' is for the adventurous pop vocalist David Sylvian; 'Evening Bell' is for Toru Takemitsu and rather literally 'Oriental' in its Zen-like spareness. Cline is at his most urgent on the opening 'Paramita', written for Don Cherry; heavyweight drumming gives way to kantele and synthesized backgrounds. Kemanis is used to great and economical effect, ending the set with a delightful 'Benediction', which is spiritual but resolutely unsolemn.

Also, in brief:

(*) Cloud Plate Cryptogramophone 121. 04.
Again collaborative and increasingly distant from jazz language, but utterly compelling and beautiful music with plenty of drama and few New Age longueurs.

Nels Cline (born 1956)

GUITAR

Twin brother of Alex, Cline is a thinking-man's fusion kind of guitar-player.

(*) Instrumentals / * The Giant Pin Cryptogramphone 113 / 120 Cline; Devin Hoff (b); Scott Amendola (d, elec). 3/02.

Like almost every guitar-player of his generation, Cline trades off rock, but he does so with sufficient sophistication and originality, so that it's possible to think he's made the whole thing up. He makes full use of the electric guitar's expanded repertoire of sounds, distortion, fuzz, bent notes and an aggressive, almost percussive attack.

Playfully attributed to the Nels Cline Singers, these are by a working trio, and it's a unit that has acquired a real identity in its short existence. The first record is fine but for some slightly heavy-handed use of electronic treatments on the leader's part. He's such a fine guitarist that sometimes it would be better to hear him cleaner and more direct. 'Harbor Child' is the only place where that is allowed to happen for long, distinct, cleanly articulated lines of real beauty. Compared to what was to follow, a partial sucess.

The Giant Pin is in part a wild and woolly session that finds the guitarist exploring what some might call out-rock, but which still has a solid core of jazz sensibility. There are punkish elements and a decidedly hardcore sensibility. That runs the risk, though, of making a highly varied and thoughtful set sound one-dimensional. It is anything but that, and its climax, 'Watch Over Us', is very profound indeed, with dabs of celeste and harmonium varying the texture. An elegy to a childhood friend, 'Something About David H', has real grandeur. The more immediately ear-grabbing tracks, though, are things like 'Square King', which has a roasting pace, and 'He Still Carries A Torch For Her', which is more measured but no less powerful. Amendola is a strong presence throughout, his gift for delicate gesture sometimes overborne by energy playing, but always in context. The bassist – to whom 'The Ballad of Devin Hoff' is dedicated – continues to surprise with each appearance. Ultimately, though, this is Cline's triumph, a clever, moving record.

(*) Ash And Tabula: Out Trios – Volume 3 Atavistic 148 Cline; Andrea Parkins (sampler); Tom Rainey (d). 8/02.

This is clearly intended as a follow-up to the earlier trios, with the main differences being Rainey's somewhat more reined-in (!) approach and the bulk of electronic responsibilities being ceded to Andrea Parkins. She's a wonderfully receptive partner, seeming to capture Cline's guitar figures in real time and rework them as part of a developing fabric of sound. The guitarist sounds more focused on a narrow range of improvising language than of late, and it suits him very well. The long tracks 'Poem In An Ashtray' and the closing 'Problem Child' are outstanding, but there's barely a dull moment on the set, even if it doesn't go all-out to surprise.

(*) Immolation/Immersion Strange Attractors 39 Cline; Wally Shoup (as); Chris Corsano (d). 4/05.

There's not much room for compromise here. Cline's collaborators go for broke from the very beginning. Shoup has been a recent discovery and he's given ample opportunity to explore the fierier end of his alto while Corsano blatters and hisses in the background (slightly too much in the background for our taste). Cline is mixed up front and to the side and there are moments when the mix seems slightly artificial. The title-piece goes on far too long and there are occasions, particularly when Shoup is given his head, when the music seems to pursue extremity for the sake of it.

(*) New Monastery: The Music of Andrew Hill
Cryptogramophone 130 Cline; Bobby Bradford (c); Ben Goldberg (cl, bcl); Andrea Parkins (acc, elec); Devin Hoff (b); Scott Amendola, Alex Cline (d). 2/06.

With a revival of interest in Hill's music during the last few years of the pianist's life, a repertory project like this seemed inevitable, though Cline wasn't necessarily the obvious man to tackle it. The set consists largely of long medleyed tracks, of which the opening 'McNeil Island/Pumpkin' is among the most effective. 'Not Sa No Sa' which follows includes the most unfettered playing on the album and there are moments where one wonders where Hill has disappeared to in amongst the free playing; 'Yokada Yokada/The Rumproller' is virtually unidentifiable as his, though Cline has wisely taken the liberty of regarding the written material as a starting point only and allowing the musicians to move through some intricate arrangements and into territory of their own. Parkins, as ever, is a strong element, but Bradford's highly distinctive cornet is often the dominant sound. Brother Alex only appears on a couple of tracks and it's a pity he couldn't have been around for more, because Amendola, excellent as he is, doesn't seem to have the requisite touch for this material, too fizzy and decorative.

 Downpour Victo 104 Cline; Andrea Parkins (acc, p, elec); Tom Rainey (d). 5/06.

A most welcome return for this vividly empathetic trio, though the album itself has a curious, almost unwound cast, starting with a massive opening track that lasts nearly 40 minutes, followed by one half that length, followed by a tiny coda. This may well reflect the exigencies of live performance, but it sounds strange on disc. The set begins with loops and droned effect, but then quickly gains momentum, with Rainey again proving to be a superbly supportive partner. Parkins's move to piano some way into the set creates new contexts, while Cline himself seems to be using some kind of octave-shift to explore lower sonorities. Whatever the technique, it's extremely effective. Play it reprogrammed with the short finale placed in the middle as a sonic bridge, and it's even better than the release sequence.

(*) Draw Breath Cryptogramophone 133 Cline; Devin Hoff (b); Scott Amendola (d, elec); Glenn Kotche (perc). 1 & 2/07.

With Cline now lending his talents to maverick rock band Wilco, the emphases here are somewhat more mainstream than on previous Singers albums. 'Caved In Heart Blues' is just that, 'Attempted' is more jazz-based, and 'Confection' has a strong rock feel. 'An Evening At Pops'' is Cline at his most technically astute, but on 'The Angel Of Angels' he allows the emotion to come through. The set loses its way a little towards the end and the two 'Recognize' pieces don't quite justify their inclusion, not both of them at least. Wilco colleague Kotche joins on glock for the final track only.

Also, in brief:

 Interstellar Space Revisited Atavistic 102. 2 & 4/98.

The Trane/Rashied Ali classic rethought by Cline and Gregg Bendian (perc). And very effectively too.

 The Inkling Cryptogramophone 105. 5/99.

The title is spot-on. The music here shifts and morphs restlessly, but constantly holds out some indication of an informing structure. Zeena Parkins (hp), Mark Dresser (b) and Billy Mintz (d) make up the ensemble.

 Destroy All Atavistic 122. 4/01.
Cline, a posse of fellow guitarists and Zeena Parkins (elec, hp) make the strings vibrate in one of his noisiest but also most thoughtful performances on record.

Clown Revisited

GROUP

Members of the up-and-coming F-Ire Collective.

 Flashes Of A Normal World F-Ire 12 Nick Ramm (p, org); Finn Peters (f); Ben Davis (clo); Oren Marshall (tba); Dave Price (d, perc). 6/06.
It's clearly not a hard-bop line-up. The group was put together to play Ramm's highly original and idiosyncratic after he'd toured Scandinavia with a circus band (hence the name). There are elements of music hall, folk song, marching music and much else, but Ramm manages to avoid the twin pitfalls of bland 'eclecticism' and English whimsy. Marshall is extraordinary, as ever, but it also feels like a very coherent band, with no obvious lead voice. Impressive.

Clusone 3

GROUP

Founded at the Clusone festival and then became a decade-long project.

 An Hour With ... hatOLOGY 5 Michael Moore (cl, as); Ernst Reijseger (clo); Han Bennink (d). 98.
A lone survivor of a decade's plentiful recording, but the familiar mix of jazz repertory pieces, traditional themes and classical composition, all thrown together with a solemnly buccaneering air. In a series of medleyed pieces, Irving Berlin, Johnny Mercer, Hoagy Carmichael are juxtaposed with Jimmy Rowles, Saint-Saëns and the traditional 'Turkey In The Straw'. There's an almost elegiac quality to the playing, as if in recognition that this was the final Clusone 3 disc. The earlier stuff on Moore's Ramboy, Gramavision and hat ART is worth searching out.

Arnett Cobb (1918–89)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Replaced Illinois Jacquet in the Hampton band but made his name as a hard-blowing Texas tenor. Having undergone spinal surgery at 30, he was then seriously injured a decade later and bravely played on crutches for the rest of a long career.

(*) Arnett Cobb, 1946–1947 Classics 1071 Cobb; Wendell Culley, Joe Morris, David Page (t); Al King, Booty Wood (tb); Herbie Fields (ts); Charlie Fowlkes (bs); Milt Buckner, George Rhodes (p); Billy Mackel (g); Walter Buchanan, Charles Harris (b); George Jenkins, George Jones (d); Milton Larkins (v). 46–8/47.
 Arnett Blows For 1300 Delmark DE 471 As above, except omit Culley, Fields, Fowlkes, Buckner, Mackel, Harris, Jenkins. 47.
This early stuff was mostly made for Apollo and Hamp-Tone. Unusually for Classics, though, the first item included was actually made under Buckner's leadership. Cobb struck out on his own, but old associations die hard and two tracks on the May 1947 date are intended to recall happy days with Hamp; both 'Still Flyin'' and 'Top Flight' recall his featured solos on 'Flying Home'. While some of Arnett's compositions are no more than generic blowing themes, he seems to have found a niche. The sound is immediately better with Apollo, rich, unmuffled and generous to the saxophone. An even longer standing debt is repaid when Larkins, one of his first employers, steps up to take three songs on the August 1947 recording. This was the session that included the definitive 'Arnett Blows For 1300'; the Delmark of that name basically includes all the Apollo stuff.

 Cobb And His Mob In Concert, Featuring Dinah Washington High Note HNCD 7068 Cobb; Ed Lewis, Cootie Williams (t); Dicky Harris (tb); Johnny Acea (p); Keter Betts, Walter Buchanan (b); Jimmy Cobb (d); Dinah Washington (v). 52.
Any glimpse of Washington in her prime is precious and here she is with a hard-driving bluesy band who're not prepared to nod out while the singer's on. Though he's not well recorded, Cobb sounds in fantastic form, blowing wonderfully dissonant notes and phrases on many of his choruses, shaping them round an idiosyncratic harmonic sense too rarely acknowledged. Great work from Acea–Betts–Cobb, too.

 Blow, Arnett, Blow Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 794 Cobb; Strethen Davis (p); George Duvivier (b); Arthur Edgehill (d). 59.
(*) Party Time Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 219 Cobb; Ray Bryant (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Art Taylor (d). 5/59.
 More Party Time Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 979 Cobb; Tommy Flanagan, Bobby Timmons (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d); Danny Barrajanos, Buick Clarke (perc). 2/60.
 Smooth Sailing Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 323 Cobb; Buster Cooper (tb); Austin Mitchell (as); George Duvivier (b); Osie Johnson (d). 60.
 Blue And Sentimental Prestige PRCD 24122 Cobb; Red Garland (p, cel); George Duvivier, George Tucker (b); J. C. Heard (d). 11/60.
On the first two, he's clearly still suffering the immediate after-effects of his crippling injury, playing awkwardly and doing not much more than going through the motions, however much sheer energy and drive he was able to muster. More wasn't out-takes but a separate session. Flanagan doesn't seem quite the right piano-player at this stage, but the chemistry is pretty good. Timmons was on hand the following day and 'Down By The Riverside' has the soulful, revivalist energy one expects of him.

The Prestige records, now on OJC, are far from sophisticated, but there is a delicacy to Cobb's playing which becomes obvious only over time and there are unexpected similarities between some of his slower tunes and Coltrane's early ballad performances.

 Deep Purple Black & Blue 864 Cobb; Milt Buckner (org); Clarence 'Gatemouth' Brown (g); Michael Silva (d). 7–8/73.
 The Wild Man From Texas Black & Blue 868 Cobb; Wallace Davenport (t); Frank 'Buster' Cooper (tb); Eddie Chamblee (ts); Earl Warren (as); Milt Buckner (org, vib); André Persiany (p); Tiny Grimes, Roland Lobligeois (b); Panama Francis (d). 5/75, 5/76.
 Jumpin' At The Woodside Black & Blue 870 Cobb; Tiny Grimes, Roland Lobligeois (b); Panama Francis (d). 5/75, 5/76.
In the '70s, Cobb found himself a minor star in France, where his injury seemed like a profound existential statement. Buckner was an ideal partner at this stage, though the organist often sounds as if he's trying to clear the studio. The Wild Man is misleading, because there's much more sophistication to these arrangements than one hears at first, and perhaps more than the other players understood. Cobb's phrasing is wonderful and his ability to adjust the dynamic of individual notes in a phrase is worth looking into. The French-based rhythm sections are very strong but unmistakably not Stateside units, with a curious bounce to the rhythm that Francis cheerfully goes along with. Not much point commenting on individual tracks; what counts here is the continuity of these performances. When heard in bulk, Cobb's stature rises exponentially. Too easily dismissed as a honker, he deserves to be considered alongside, say, Paul Gonsalves as an innovator in the blues.

 Arnett Cobb Is Back Progressive PCD 7037 Cobb; Derek Smith (p); George Mraz (b); Billy Hart (d). 6/78.

 Tenor Abrupt Black & Blue 958 Cobb; Guy Lafitte (ts); Sir Roland Hanna (p); Jimmy Woode (b); Eddie Locke (d). 3/80.

He was still in reasonable shape when these were made and his revered status in France is obvious from Lafitte's attempts to sound like the boss, not so much in tone but in phrasing; even so, he completely misses Cobb's asymmetrical but powerfully swinging style. The date with piano and rhythm is more anonymous, but Arnett is out front alone and it's a good place to check out his solo style.

Also, in brief:

 Cobb's Idea Ocium 0478. 47–52.

Useful round-up of material from Apollo and Okeh, with a nice surprise for those who play it through the computer.

 Show Time Fantasy F 9659. 8/87.

Late and frail, sharing a stage with Dizzy Gillespie (t) and singer Jewel Brown.

(*) Tenor Tribute: Volumes 1 & 2 Soul Note 121184 / 121194. 4/88.

God bless Soul Note for giving the veteran this late showcase alongside Jimmy Heath and Joe Henderson. Episodically, it's great and Arnett manages to stay the course with some subtle tenor work.

(*) The Wild Man From Texas: A Proper Introduction Proper 2070.

We'd quibble with the title, but provided you aren't oversold on it, this is the way to listen to Arnett: over 24 tracks his peculiar mastery becomes evident.

Jimmy Cobb (born 1929)

DRUMS

Born in DC, Cobb is mostly self-taught. He spent some time working with Miles Davis, played on the classic Kind Of Blue and hasn't stopped working since.

 Only For The Pure Of Heart Lightyear 54264 Cobb; Richard Wyands (p); Peter Bernstein (g); John Webber (b). 2/98.

(*) Cobb's Groove Milestone 9334 As above, except add Eric Alexander (ts). 2/03.

 Marsalis Music Honours Jimmy Cobb Marsalis Music / Rounder 74946 Cobb; Andrew Speight (as); Ellis Marsalis (p); Orlando LeFleming (b). 3/05.

 Cobb's Corner Chesky 327 Cobb; Roy Hargrove (t); Ronnie Mathews (p); Peter Washington (b). 11/06.

For some reason, Jimmy decided to call his group Cobb's Mob, a name already associated with Arnett Cobb. That's the only remotely secondhand aspect to these dates, though. Cobb has the ability to play with power but also very melodically. He sounds very different to Max Roach, and less obviously polyrhythmic in approach, but there are some similarities and they come out on 'Gingerbread Boy' and 'Smile' from Pure Of Heart. The later record is probably the better of the pair. The addition of Alexander adds some punch and Peter Bernstein's writing improves even on his contribution to the previous record..

Cobb was only the second artist to be honoured in the Marsalis Music series; the first was also a drummer, Michael Carvin. Jimmy kicks off here with a gloriously youthful swing on Henry Mancini's 'Mr Lucky' and keeps the pace varied, though mostly up, throughout, belying his years on every cut. His own 'Eleanor (Sister Cobb)' and 'Composition 101' suggest there's a fertile composer in there that we haven't seen enough of over the years. Marsalis contributes a track but is more prominent for his subtle, blues-laced comping. Speight, an Australian whiz, is in terrific form and relishes his chance; the bassist is better known and well up to form. There's also a tune by organist Richard Tee, whose widow reissued the Expansion disc below.

The old master has never had a better sound than Chesky have given him on the 2006 disc. Rising 80, he's wise enough to concentrate on essentials and allows his younger bandmates to do the pace-running for him. A set of standards allows him to play quite free and melodically in places, though probably the most arresting single performance is the pianist's original, 'John Charles'. Sheer class.

Also, in brief:

 So Nobody Else Can Hear Expansion 6. 12/81.

Strange mix of jazz and other styles, fronted by Bill Cosby and tap dancer and vocalist Gregory Hines, but with Freddie Hubbard (t) providing the other musical interest. Shaky recording, but some very nice music.

Junie C. Cobb (1896–1970)

CLARINET, SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, VIOLIN, PIANO, VOICE

A regular on the Chicago scene of the '20s, and his music is typical of the barrelhouse style of the day.

(*) The Junie Cobb Collection, 1926–29 Collector's Classics COCD 14 Cobb; Jimmy Cobb (c, t); Cicero Thomas (t); Arnett Nelson (cl, ts); Angelo Fernandez, Johnny Dodds, Darnell Howard (cl); Ernie Smith (bs, bsx); George James (as, bs); Tiny Parham, Jimmy Blythe, Frank Melrose, Alex Hill, Earl Frazier (p); Tampa Red (g); Eustern Woodfork (bj); Walter Wright (tba); Bill Johnson (b); Jimmy Bertrand (d, xy, slide-whistle); Clifford Jones (d, kz); Tommy Taylor, Harry Dial (d); W. E. Burton, Georgia Tom Dorsey (v). 6/26–10/29.

(*) Chicago The Living Legends: Junie C. Cobb And His New Hometown Band Original Jazz Classics OJC 1825-2 Cobb; Fip Ricard (t); Harlan Floyd (tb); Leon Washington (cl, ts); Ikey Robinson (bj); Walter Hill (b); Red Saunders (d); Annabelle Calhoun (v). 9/61.

Cobb's groups – The Hometown Band, The Grains of Corn and the Kansas City Tin Roof Stompers – bounce along without ever touching the sophistication of Armstrong or Dodds (who turns up as sparring partner on two early tracks) but create their own peculiar exhilaration. Cobb's saxophone style idiosyncratically mixes slap-tonguing and the more progressive manner of Hawkins;

Blythe, Melrose and Hill keep the music hot in the rhythm section, as does Woodfork's banjo. Among a generous 24 tracks there are three from a hitherto lost 1929 Vocalion date. Respectable masters.

By 1960, he'd given up reeds for piano. The pick-up band is mostly younger hands (Robinson and Saunders are the exceptions) and some of the music sounds like tourist trad, though Cobb's enthusiasm carries the day.

Billy Cobham (born 1944)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, ELECTRONICS, PIANO

Born in Panama and raised in NY, Cobham was early in the jazz-rock field with Miles Davis and with his own group, Dreams, before forming the Mahavishnu Orchestra with John McLaughlin. Technically almost the equal of Elvin Jones and Tony Williams, but often diverted into unimaginative fusion situations.

(*) Spectrum Atlantic 781428 Cobham; Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Joe Farrell (as, ss, f); Jan Hammer (p, ky); Tommy Bolin, John Tropea (g); Ron Carter, Lee Sklar (b); Ray Barretto (perc). 5/73.
 Shabazz Atlantic/Wounded Bird 8139 Cobham; Randy Brecker (t); Glenn Ferris (tb); Michael Brecker (ts); Milcho Leviev (ky); John Abercrombie, John Scofield (g); Alex Blake (b). 7/74.
 Crosswinds Atlantic/Wounded Bird 7300 Cobham; Randy Brecker (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Michael Brecker (ts); George Duke (ky); John Abercrombie (g); John Williams (b); Lee Pastora (perc). 74.
 Total Eclipse Atlantic/Wounded Bird 8121 Cobham; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Glenn Ferris (tb, btb); Michael Brecker (ts, f); Milcho Leviev (p, ky); Sue Evans (mar); Cornell Dupree (g); Alex Blake (b). 74.
Cobham has survived a sharp dip in enthusiasm for '70s fusion and come back with a burgeoning studio and concert schedule. A superb technician of great musical intelligence and resource, he has nevertheless committed to record some awful clunkers. Whereas Spectrum, his debut as leader, was a classic of the jazz-rock era, a record to set alongside Birds Of Fire, Head Hunters and the earlier Return To Forever discs, much of what has followed has been remarkably hazy, and a stint with GRP in the mid- to late-'80s was decidedly ill-advised. The cliché about Cobham – that he is all fire and fury and 20-minute drum solos – has never stood up to scrutiny. In actuality, he is a somewhat introspective drummer whose compositions are often quite abstract. Enjoy Spectrum for its bravado and some fine contributions from the various hands – not least the drummer himself.

Recorded live in Europe, Shabazz turned up the dials to 11. 'Taurian Matador' and 'Red Baron' stand up to punishment pretty well, and there are also a couple of new tracks, 'Tenth Pin' and the title-piece, which were road-tested on tour. The recording is classic '70s 'in concert' fare, cavernous and booming, with the drums mixed well up, but still perfectly listenable.

Crosswinds has less staying power. Billy's solo feature on 'Storm' is the centrepiece of what is virtually a concept album, mood-music and tone-poems cranked up high. Duke is a key element, prefiguring the Billy–George encounters of the later '70s, but here surprisingly deft.

Total Eclipse was the most ambitious of the Atlantics. Again somewhat themed round the moon landings and the space programme generally, it begins with 'Solarization', a suite of pieces distinguished by a remarkable solo from Leviev. Billy does a Jack DeJohnette on 'The Moon Ain't Made Of Green Cheese', coming out from behind the kit to play piano behind Brecker's gorgeous flugelhorn. Abercrombie's ability to switch from limpid purity to pumped-up aerobatics is consistently impressive, and his solo on 'Moon Germs' is one of the best things he recorded in the '70s. The long 'Sea Of Tranquility' is a loose, band jam and a more fitting end to the record than Billy's clattering solo 'Last Frontier'.

 A Funky Thide Of Sings Atlantic 2894/Koch International 8527 Cobham; Walt Fowler (t); Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Bones Malone (tb); Michael Brecker (ts, f); Larry Schneider (sax); Milcho Leviev (p, ky); John Scofield (g); Alex Blake (b). 75.
 Life And Times Wounded Bird 8166 Similar to above. 76.
Funky Thide marks the transition to mostly drab, slugging funk. The line-up was well established by here, but Scofield brings a harder-edged blues quality. Oddly, the most appealing track is the title drum solo, placed just before Leviev's 'Moody Modes', which closes the disc on an unexpected high. Life And Times is a more effective package. Scofield plays brilliantly throughout, but Cobham is revelatory on 'Earthlings' and 'Song For A Friend, Part 2'.

 Inner Conflicts Wounded Bird 9174 Cobham; Randy Brecker (t); Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Julian Priester (tb); Michael Brecker, Ernie Watts (ts); Dawilli Gonga, Don Grolnick (ky); John Scofield (g); Ruth Underwood (mar, xyl); Alphonso Johnson, John Williams (b); Pete Escovedo, Sheila Escovedo (perc). 77.
 Alivemutherforya Sony International 82813 Cobham; Tom Scott (ts); Mark Soskin (ky); Steve Khan (g); Alphonso Johnson (b). 11 & 12/77.
A busy year yielded markedly variable results (see below). Alivemutherforya benefits from being a small-group record. There is still a lot of electronic muddling, most egregiously Johnson's bass synth, but individual lines are clearer and Tom Scott has the astonishing ability to make something ponderous and clunky take wing. Billy's quieter than usual and the subtlety of his cross-figures and fives against fours is hugely impressive.

The other 1977 disc has a star-studded line-up, but it's hard to hear what anyone is doing beyond the odd break. Billy experiments with electronics, which are nicely assimilated on the opening title-track. The album tails off after that, though the Afro-Cuban cast of 'El Barrio' is interesting and there are some nice things on the closing 'Arroyo'.

 Picture This Cleopatra 507 Cobham; Randy Brecker (flhn); Grover Washington Jr (ss, ts); Tom Scott (lyricon); Michael Abene (p, ky); Gerry Etkins (ky); Abe Laboriel (b); Sa Davis (perc). 87.
This was an unexpected return to form. Billy built a modest supergroup round his working band of the period and, with Randy Brecker guesting on 'Taurian Matador', he pulls one out of the hat. Grover Washington is elegance itself on his featured tracks, and the inclusion of Prince's 'Sign 'O' The Times' was a cheeky masterstroke. Good to hear Tom Scott, the butt of jazz purists for a decade and a half, making a lyricon sound more expressive than most players could manage with an original Adolphe Sax instrument.

 Paradox Tiptoe 88836 Cobham; Bill Bickford (g); Wolfgang Schmid (b). 97.
 Focused Cleopatra 482 Cobham; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Gary Husband (ky, perc); Carl Orr (g). 2/99.
Paradox was a short-lived power trio that allowed Billy to revisit some of his earlier compositions. 'Quadrant 4' is less fiery here than the version made famous by the late Tommy Bolin on Spectrum, but it's still quite effective and certainly more appealing than the pig-iron grunge of Bickford's 'Four More Years'. Schmid is a full partner in the trio, contributing some authentically funky tunes and playing in flat-out Jaco/Jack Bruce/Jonas Hellborg mode for most of the set. The group on Focused couldn't be better tailored; Orr's 'Nothing Can Hurt Her Now' is a high-spot, not least for the solo it inspires from Brecker.

 Nordic Cleopatra 506 Cobham; Tore Brunborg (ts); Bugge Wesseltoft (p); Terje Gewelt (b). 96.
The Scandinavian line-up isn't in Billy's usual line of things, but the group finds a great deal of common ground to explore, Cobham himself taking something of a back seat with just four compositions out of ten. He also moderates his dynamics and attack to accommodate the folk-based interaction between Wesseltoft and Gewelt. The talented Brunborg is an intriguing wild card.

 The Art Of Three Blowithard BIH 010 Cobham; Kenny Barron (p); Ron Carter (b). 01.
All polished refinement, sheer class – but no excitement and, with Kenny doing a routine he's modelled to bland perfection by now, this superstar encounter goes by without much interest.

 Art Of Four In + Out 770852 Cobham; Donald Harrison (as); James Williams (b); Ron Carter (b). 01.
A mix of studio tracks and three from Montreux, this group has much more going for it in sheer energy. Again, though, Cobham is an impressive blend of fire and subtlety, subtly modulating his metres while keeping a steady pulse running underneath. He's abetted by the rock-solid Carter, who seems quite happy to mark time and touch in harmonies, without much show. The late Williams is a revelation, only properly recognized now his foreshortened career is over; Harrison typically blows hot and cold.

(*) Art Of Five In + Out 770632 Cobham; Guy Barker (t); Donald Harrison (as); Julian Joseph, Eric Reed (p); Robert Hurst, Orlando LeFleming (b). 92–03.
The British guys certainly aren't left standing here. Indeed, Joseph's accompaniments are blue-chip and Barker has rarely sounded more alert and adventurous, though he seems to be playing to the leader's spec rather than in his own familiar way. Harrison again has good and not-so-good moments, and seems curiously wayward in his pitching; perhaps because of variable room acoustics.

 Meeting Of The Spirits: A Celebration Of The Mahavishnu Orchestra In + Out 770862 Cobham; big band. 06.
One wonders what McLaughlin thinks of this, or indeed of any of the multitude of Mahavishnu-related projects out there. Admittedly, much of what the group did in its heyday was too damn difficult for others to play, so has never entered the repertory. Interestingly it has been drummers – Gregg Bendian in his Mahavishnu Project and original member Cobham here – who have been driving the idea along.

Colin Towns was called in to arrange the music and he does so with a deft and imaginative touch, preserving the complex time-signatures but also spreading the melodic focus around the orchestra and giving generous work to the brasses and woodwinds. The choice of material is relatively predictable – 'You Know, You Know', 'One Word', 'Hope', 'Birds of Fire', the title-track, some things from the second edition of the Orchestra, which was already closer in conception to a big band – but Mahavishnu buffs will lament the omission of 'A Lotus On Irish Streams', which really does call out for a big, Debussyish arrangement. Cobham has a certain prominence but the interest lies mainly in how these well-loved themes have been recast for a substantial, though not outsize, ensemble.

Also, in brief:

(*) Rudiments – The Billy Cobham Anthology Atlantic 8122-742287-2 2CD. 73–78.
All the highlights (and some low-points) from Cobham's Atlantic career, which outclasses its one-disc predecessor from the same stable.

 On Tour In Europe Atlantic 113797. 76.
Hasn't aged at all well. Billy and fellow front man George Duke (ky) obviously had a ball with this project, and there are some mildly entertaining moments, with the young Scofield (g) prominent.

(*) Magic / Simplicity Of Expression: Depth Of Thought Sony International 492526. 77.
The double-header reissue brings together some of the best and some of the worst of Cobham on record. Magic is a fine album; the other 1977 release is as drab as its pretentious title suggests.

 Warning / (*) Power Play Cleopatra 510 / 508. 85, 86.
Testosterone levels dangerously high. Originally on GRP and now reissued on his own imprint. The best measure of the change is a remake of 'Stratus' on the well-named Warning.

(*) By Design Cleopatra 505. 91.
The return to a more jazz-influenced sound was no great surprise at the time. It's still tinged with fusion, but Cobham seems to have overcome his suspicion of common or regular time-signatures.

 Incoming / (*) The Traveler Cleopatra 472 / 509. 92; 11/93.
Overlooked on release, these revealed a new and gentler side to Cobham, which should have quietened some of those who complained about his febrile power-drumming.

Michael Cochrane (born 1948)

PIANO

Experienced post-bopper from Peekskill, NY.

(*) Elements Soul Note 121151 Cochrane; Tom Harrell (t); Bob Malach (ts); Dennis Irwin (b); James Madison (d). 9/85.
 Song Of Change Soul Note 121251 Cochrane; Marcus McLaurine (b); Alan Nelson (d). 11/92.
The ensembles on Elements are keenly pointed, the solos have great contextual power, and Cochrane's tunes are all just slightly out of the ordinary: 'Tone Row Piece No. 2' is a provocative title, and even if he can't quite make it swing convincingly, no minus points for the effort. He plays with terse improvisational flair, tempered by a romantic streak. Harrell and Malach are in good form and the gamut run between the boisterous 'Reunion' and the steadily darkening 'Waltz No. 1' shows the range on offer.

The other Soul Note marks an inevitable retreat, or at least tactical withdrawal. 'No agenda, no ideology, no big ideas,' say the sleeve-notes, but Cochrane goes at even lightweight material like 'Once I Loved' and the more fruitful 'Bemsha Swing' with real determination.

 Footprints Steeplechase SCCD 312476 Cochrane; Ron McLure (b); Yoron Israel (d). 11/98.

The other Soul Note marks an inevitable retreat, or at least tactical withdrawal. 'No agenda, no ideology, no big ideas,' say the sleeve-notes, but Cochrane goes at even lightweight material like 'Once I Loved' and the more fruitful 'Bemsha Swing' with real determination.

(*) Quartet Music / * Pathways Steeplechase SCCD 31513 / 31542 Cochrane; Bob Malach (ts); Calvin Hill (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 11/02.

And a real quartet it is, with Malach's growly but pitch-perfect delivery adding a significant dimension to these ten top-drawer themes, which include credits on the first one for McCoy Tyner, Bill Evans, Mal Waldron, Joe Henderson, Chick Corea, Cedar Walton, Jimmy Rowles and Jerry Bergonzi, as well as a couple of Cochrane compositions which don't come across as scribbled 'lines' got up for the session, but real tunes. Hill has become a prized asset, one of those bass-players who's both unobtrusive and absolutely central to the main drive of the music. He's if anything even more effective on the second disc, which includes Richie Beirach's 'Broken Wing', Ornette's 'When Will The Blues Leave?' and Michel Petrucciani's 'Thinking Of Wayne' among the originals and standards. Cochrane is emerging as a major interpreter of the contemporary piano literature.

 Right Now Steeplechase SCCD 31627 Cochrane; Calvin Hill (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 1/07.

Forget for the moment your E.S.T.s and Bad Pluses, Mehldaus and Charlap, here's a state of the art-piano trio which creates a thoroughly idiomatic sound that still manages to be fresh and unhackneyed. This time – at last! – Cochrane programmes a whole set of originals, some of them presumably long-term inclusions in his book. 'Sit And Wait' is a nice, easy swinger, reminiscent of Kenny Drew. 'The Seeker' is a slightly mournful waltz, which tees up a nice Hill solo. The liner-note writer claims to hear Duke Pearson again in 'Convergence', but to us it's confirmation of a Kenny Drew connection. There are a couple of less successful Latin pieces, a tribute to Bird and a fascinating ballad exercise which is light years from the usual off-the-peg slow tune. A great contemporary record by an artist urgently in need of fresh assessment.

Also, in brief:

 Cutting Edge Steeplechase SCCD 31430. 9/97.

Usually best heard in trio, this one's blunted by David Gross's anonymous alto.

 Gesture Of Faith Steeplechase SCCD 31459. 4/98.

Eddie Gomez (b) and Alan Nelson (d) provide sterling support.

(*) Minor Matrix Steeplechase SCCD 31494. 4/00.

Consummate piano trio playing on a strong repertory programme, beginning and ending with Bud Powell.

Codona

GROUP

Short-lived 'world jazz' supergroup.

(*) Codona /  Codona 2 /  Codona 3 ECM 829371 / 833332 / 827429 Don Cherry (t, f, doussn'gouni, v); Collin Walcott (sitar, tabla, dulcimer, sanza, v); Nana Vasconcelos (berimbau, perc, v). 9/78; 5/80; 9/82.

In September 1978, at Collin Walcott's behest, a trio gathered at Tonstudio Bauer in Ludwigsburg and recorded the first and best of these deceptively lightweight dates. The music is actually deeply infused with Coltrane's harmonies as well as Ornette's melodic primitivism, as well as Latin American influences. The first record is graced by Walcott's long 'New Light', the improvised title-piece and a medley that mixes Ornette with Stevie Wonder ('Sir Duke'). At moments, the group is almost a string trio (doussn'gouni, sitar, berimbau), at others, horn-and-rhythm. It's all good and now, with two members gone, thoroughly nostalgic.

Chris Cody

PIANO

Excellent Australian player and leader, who's worked with many top-drawer Americans.

 Oasis Naxos 86018 Cody; Chris Greening (tb, pocket t); Jon Pease (g); Lloyd Swanton (b); John Bartram (d); Fabian Hevia (perc). 98.

 Midnight Tide Cristal 0303 Cody; Glenn Ferris (tb); Jean-Jacques Avenel (b); John Betsch (d); Epizo Bangoura (perc). 6/01.

Cody wears a Monk influence openly if not ostentatiously. His 'Flooze Blooze' is obviously in the master's idiom and it sits very comfortably alongside 'Monk's Mood'. There's perhaps too much picture-postcard impressionism on this debut set, with Arabic and African ideas opening and closing the set, and 'After The Storm' outstaying its welcome by two or three minutes in the middle, but Cody is a natural and his Coalition, with trombone favoured as main horn, an interesting variant on more generic approaches.

The follow-up was relatively slow to appear, but it's worth the wait. This is a great group, with Avenel and Betsch locked together and Ferris playing with understated brilliance. The brooding quality of Cody's music comes through strongly, almost sinisterly. 'Midnight Tide' is again too long and pictorial, but the shorter things – 'Lack Of Evidence', 'Kill The Pig' (Lord of the Flies-inspired?) and 'That Was It' – are all top-drawer.

Tony Coe (born 1934)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

Born in Canterbury. He's covered most jazz styles from Dixieland to free. Also played 'that' theme on the later Pink Panther movies, and might have figured on the odd Beatles date. Possessed of a glorious sound.

 Some Other Autumn Hep CD 2037 Coe; Brian Lemon (p); Dave Green (b); Phil Seamen (d). 1/71.

The other often-told story about Coe is that he once turned down a place in the Basie Orchestra. He may have followed Plas Johnson into the Pink Panther gig but in no other way has he ever taken second place: arguably Britain's most stylish saxophonist ever.

Some Other Autumn is pure class. Coe negotiates 'Body And Soul' with a grand sweep that's matched by Lemon and Green; Seamen is less called upon here than elsewhere, but throughout the set he shows extraordinary quality, honed by a regular gig backing Americans at Ronnie Scott's. He does some especially interesting stuff on 'Perdido'.

 British-American Blue Between The Lines btl 007 Coe; Roger Kellaway (p). 6/78.

 Coe-Existence Whatmusic CD 004 Coe; John Horler (p, ky); Ron Rubin, Trevor Tomkins (b); Frank Ricotti (perc). 78.

Two valuable recoveries from the archive. Salvaged by Coe fan Franz Koglmann, the duo session came out of a day off in the studio while Kellaway was in London for film work; 11 free pieces, dramatized by Coe's brilliant awareness of musical space and heartwarming clarinet sound. The other date is more conventional, but it fills in a gap in the story.

(*) Captain Coe's Famous Racearound Storyville STCD 4206 Coe; Danish Radio Jazz Orchestra. 3/95.

In 1995, Coe was deservedly awarded the Jazzpar Prize, which brings a big-band performance as part of the award. The title-piece makes a strong and lyrical climax to an album that combines large-scale charts with a small combo that included Bob Brookmeyer, David Hazeltine, Henrik Bolberg Pedersen, Thomas Ovesen and Steve Argüelles. In addition to Coe, there are compositions by Brookmeyer, Argüelles and Maria Schneider. Unusual for a Jazzpar winner to be so retiring about his own work, but Coe won his award primarily as a player, one suspects, and so 'Fools Rush In' and 'How Long Has This Been Going On?' (the latter for full orchestra) are both superb. Coe's tone is as pure as spring water, with none of the quavering 'oboe' sound he so much dislikes in the post-Coltrane players.

(*) Blue Jersey Audio-B AB CD 4 Coe; Dave Horler (vtb); John Horler (p); Malcolm Creese (b); Allan Ganley (d). 4/95.

* In Concert Audio-B AB CD 6 Coe; John Horler (p); Malcolm Creese (b). 3/97.

Two exceptional live albums. The earlier was made at the Jersey Jazz Festival, with the Brookmeyer-influenced Horler on valve trombone. He contributes to an unusual arrangement of 'I Got Rhythm', but it's Coe's clarinet solo that blows the whole thing apart. Nothing that follows quite matches up, though 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream' and 'What Is This Thing Called Love?' run it close, with the trombonist again magnificent on the latter.

The other was recorded in the warm acoustic of St George's, Brandon Hill, in Bristol. Drummerless, and with no second horn, it's an ideal setting for Tony, who responds with near-perfect versions of 'Body And Soul', 'Re: Person I Knew' and 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream'.

* Days Of Wine And Roses Zephyr ZECD 22 Coe; Alan Barnes (as, bs, ss, cl, bcl); Brian Lemon (p); Dave Cliff (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 1 & 2/97.

Exquisite. The blend of Coe's tenor and Barnes's alto on the closing choruses of 'My Old Flame' is a high-point in recent British jazz. Coe's woody clarinet is featured on the title-track, a virtuosic scatter of notes as the melody is reinvented, re-examined and finally restated with heart-stopping simplicity. The rhythm section couldn't be improved upon and the tenor/guitar duet on 'Flamingo' once again highlights Cliff's special gifts. A jewel in Zephyr's crown.

Also, in brief:

(*) Ruby Zah Zah ZZCD 9802. 98.

Dedicated to a new granddaughter, whose REDC initials generate a lovely theme. Otherwise a standards set that surprises more than it lulls.

 Dreams Zephyr ZECD29. 2/00.

Another lovely set, this time with Gerard Presencer (flhn), but too samey and downbeat even for the title concept.

Avishai Cohen (born 1970)

DOUBLE BASS, PIANO, PERCUSSION

Virtuoso bassist, and graduate of the Chick Corea group.

(*) Adama Stretch Records SCD 9015-2 Cohen; Steve Davis (tb); Steve Wilson (ss); Chick Corea, Jason Lindner, Brad Mehldau, Danilo Perez (p); Amos Hoffman (g, oud); Jeff Ballard, Jordy Rossi (d); Don Alias (perc); Claudio Acuña (v). 97.

Cohen was brought forward by Chick Corea, does the job with consummate professionalism but always looked likely to carve his own path. The debut is all the more impressive for the skill of the writing. Everything except 'Besame Mucho' is by Cohen. The tunes range from bright swingers like 'Ora' to a pair of items lifted from a 'Bass Suite'. The first is played by just trombone, soprano saxophone and broodingly eloquent bass and yet what emerges might well be a stripped-down section of a big-band piece. Middle Eastern influences are in evidence here and there: an oud, non-Western scales. Label boss Chick Corea pops up to give his blessing on 'Gadu', playing perfunctory Fender Rhodes alongside Danilo Perez on acoustic piano.

(*) Colors Stretch 9031 Cohen; Steve Davis, Avi Lebovich (tb); Jimmy Greene (ss, f); Jason Lindner (p); Amos Hoffman (g, oud); Jeff Ballard (d, perc); Yagil Baras (b); Antonio Sanchez (d); Claudia Acuña (v); string quartet. 12/00.

This took Cohen's solo career into a new dimension. The writing is bright and thoughtful, the arrangements (with trombones, soprano saxophone and string quartet on the title-track) full-voiced and the improvisation impressively difficult to separate from written passages. The Japanese edition has two extra tracks. Some of the melodies might well be from one of John Zorn's 'radical Jewish culture' projects for Tzadik, though there is nothing ideological about Cohen's work and no special pleading in his own playing, which sounds light and free. Yagil Baras takes over bass-playing duties when Cohen is otherwise engaged. All 13 songs are originals, though 'IB4U' is co-credited to Avi Levobich.

 Unity Stretch 9036 Cohen; Diego Urcola (t, flhn); Avi Lebovich (tb, v); Yosvany Terry (as, ts, shekere); Yagil Baras, Bryan Keelen (b); Antonio Sanchez (d, v). N.D.

The recording debut of Cohen's International Vamp Band has Latin colours in the background. Cohen doubles on piano; Keelen is a pupil getting a break. Avishai seems to be looking for a new approach that recasts him as bandleader and writer rather than bassist. He's modestly successful – 'Etude' and 'Vamp' suggest the expressive limitations of the set – but it isn't quite there.

 At Home Sunnyside 4602 Cohen; Diego Urcola (flhn); Yosvany Terry (sax, shekere); Anne Drummond (f); Sam Barsh (p); Jeff Ballard, Mark Giuliana (d, perc); Tomer Tzur (hand d). 04.

This basically showcases Cohen's new trio of Barsh and Giuliana, with some ensemble tracks. The regular sidemen have an interesting background in rock and funk and Barsh's organ background is evident in some of his piano chording, which is very big and resonant. The ensemble pieces are beautifully written and arranged, adding to Cohen's reputation as a natural and unforced eclectic.

(*) Continuo Sunnyside 4603 Cohen; Sam Barsh (p); Amos Hofmann (oud); Mark Giuliana (d, perc). 12/05.

The trio has settled very comfortably – perhaps too much so on this showing – and delivers another polished, Levantine-tinged set of originals, which bears some resemblance, thanks to Hofmann's occasional interventions on oud, to something by Ahmed Abdul-Malik. This isn't a comparison to set the pulse racing and there's nothing much here that insists on being heard. Pleasant and accomplished.

 As Is ... Live At The Blue Note Half Note 4531 CD/DVD Cohen; Diego Urcola (t); Jimmy Greene (ss, ts); Sam Barsh (p, ky); Mark Giuliana (d). 8–9/06.

Cohen's debt to Jaco Pastorius is evident in some of the longer solos here, though he avoids the late bassist's histrionic excesses. This is a solid group set, clearly designed to highlight the leader as much as possible. A long 'Caravan' is, ironically, the most intriguing number in a programme otherwise made up of originals. The basic trio works together closely and with some sophistication on demanding charts, and the two guest horns add some pepper to a handful of tracks. 'Smash', 'Remembering' and 'Caravan' also appear on a DVD.

Also, in brief:

 Devotion Stretch SCD 9021-2. 98.

The second Stretch album is more of the same: two more fragments of 'Bass Suite', though this increasingly looks like a flag of convenience for otherwise untitled material.

 Lyla Razdaz 4601. 9/03.

A half-step forward, half-step back: closer again to straight post-bop jazz, but also moving out into new, song-based territory.

Avishai E. Cohen

TRUMPET

Also born in Tel Aviv, the trumpeting Avishai Cohen has worked with Dave Liebman, Roy Hargrove and Jeff Ballard and as a member of the Lemon Juice Quartet and Third World Love.

 The Trumpet Player Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 161 Cohen; Joel Frahm (ss); John Sullivan (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 11/01.
 After The Big Rain Anzic 5101 Cohen; Lionel Loueke (g, v); Jason Lindner (ky); Omer Avital (b); Daniel Freedman (d, perc); Yosvany Terry (shekere). 1/06.

What with two Bill Evanses (three if you count Yusef Lateef), and two Hans Kollers, it's all a bit confusing, so the title of this FSNT debut is well chosen. Cohen has a bright, fat sound that sounds very similar in tonality to Fats Navarro and Clifford Brown but is closer in conception to the eclectic contemporary sound of Dave Douglas. Fast, buzzy articulation occasionally suggests a background listening to saxophone-players, but for the most part Cohen is absolutely idiomatic. 'The Trumpet Player' and 'Shablool' are extended originals, but there's a lovely version of Coltrane's 'Dear Lord' and a fine, unusual version of Coleman's 'Giggin''.

The title of the follow-up suggests some post-apocalyptic gathering, and the album's world-music tinge reflects that. Even so, Cohen's trumpet-playing – sometimes redolent of Miles, often of Don Cherry – is still the key element and it's a beautifully put-together record.

Al Cohn (1925–88)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

The consummate jazz professional. His arrangements were foursquare and unpretentious and his saxophone-playing a model of order and accuracy. One of the Four Brothers, the legendary Woody Herman saxophone section. Later, his soloing took on a philosophical authority, unexciting but deeply satisfying.

(*) Complete Original Quintet/Sextet Studio Recordings Lone Hill LHJRCD Cohn; Dick Sherman (t); Kai Winding (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Zoot Sims (ts); Mose Allison, Dave McKenna, George Wallington (p); Percy Heath, Milt Hinton, Major Holley, Teddy Kotick (b); Art Blakey, Osie Johnson, Nick Stabulas (d). 8/52–6/60.
 Broadway Original Jazz Classics OJC 1812 Cohn; Hal Stein (as); Harvey Leonard (p); Red Mitchell (b); Christy Febbo (d). 7/54.
 The Natural Seven Cloud 9 60992 Cohn; Joe Newman (t); Frank Rehak (tb); Nat Pierce (p); Freddie Green (g); Milt Hinton (b); Osie Johnson (d). 2/55.
 The Al Cohn Quintet Coral CR 57118 Cohn; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Mose Allison (p); Teddy Kotick (b); Nick Stabulas (d). 12/56.
(*) You 'n' Me Verve 589318-2 Cohn; Zoot Sims (ts, cl); Mose Allison (p); Major Holley (b) Osie Johnson (d). 6/60.
 Either Way Evidence ECD 22007 Cohn; Zoot Sims (ts); Mose Allison (p); Bill Crow (b); Gus Johnson (d); Cecil 'Kid Haffey' Collier (v). 2/61.

Virtually all one needs to know about Al and Zoot's long-standing association can be found on the sober-sounding 'Improvisation For Two Unaccompanied Saxophones' on You 'n' Me. All the virtues (elegant interplay, silk-smooth textures) and all the vices (inconsequentiality and Sims's tendency to follow his favourite patterns) are firmly in place. A and Z were apt to cover the whole expressive gamut from A to B, as Dorothy Parker once said about Miss Hepburn. The rest of this set is their all-but-patented, cheerfully swinging one-two, bodacious unisons followed by a thumping good solo out of each horn, and maybe a little cameo from Allison too. It may not dig all that deep, but you might wonder why more jazz records don't have this feel-good factor. The remastered sound has a rather fierce edge.

The Lone Hill set brings together a lot of useful early stuff, with quite a number of alternates that reinforce the impression that this was low-impact, untroubled playing with nobody trying to make a big, deep point. The sound transfers are a bit variable, but there are some nice things that aren't otherwise available, though the 1956 quintet session has been reissued as a Verve LPR edition.

The Natural Seven almost sounds like a Basie small group, not least because Pierce can't help sounding like the Count. Cohn gets some firecracker spots from Newman and the underrated Rehak and the rhythm section is spot on as well, with Johnson turning in a good-humoured vocal on 'Osie's Blues'. Excellent sound, too.

The Evidence set is sparky enough, if only because Allison is such an enlivening presence. Still wholly underrated as a pianist and misplaced in the history of the music, Mose brings a touch of acidity to the slightly sweet harmonies Sims for one seems to prefer. Cohn was always a more adventurous player, and he responds well to the pianist's sly, stealthy cues.

The Broadway disc is exceedingly well-behaved, even dull, until Cohn launches into a ballad medley that simply takes the breath away. The impressive Stein is virtually unknown, though he also recorded with Teddy Charles and fellow altoist Phil Woods.

(*) In Concert At East Stroudsberg University IAJRC 1016 Cohn; Harry Leahey (g); Steve Gilmore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 4/86.

 Keeper Of The Flame Jazz House JHCD 022 Cohn; Dick Pearce (t, flhn); Pete Beachill (tb, vtb); Andy Mackintosh (as); Dave Hartley (p); Chris Laurence (b); Quinny Laurence (d). 5/87.
From the fierce Charlie Parker blues which kicks it off, the concert set is sheer delight. Al had lost Zoot, but his own playing was as tough as ever. Leahey was a bop guitarist who didn't record much, and he gets in some pretty momentous licks of his own, while Gilmore and Goodwin are old hands Cohn could entirely rely on. The London recording on Jazz House was made in a studio, but it has the easy flow of a sympathetic gig. The Jazz Seven play 'Keeper Of The Flame' in tribute and Cohn takes a couple of tracks with rhythm only. These are the most effective of all – which is no surprise. He sounds calm, untroubled and completely on top of things. Less than a year later, he was gone.

Also, in brief:

 Motoring Along Sonet SNTCD 1010. 11/74.
A welcome glimpse of Al and Zoot Sims (sax) with a Scandinavian-based rhythm section, during the time he was being recorded by the now defunct Xanadu.

 Tenor Gladness /  We Remember You Gemini CD 53 / 58. 86.
Live in Europe with Totti Bergh (ts), Laila Dalseth (v) and others.

Joe Cohn
GUITAR

Son of Al, and working in a freshly contemporary straight-ahead style.

 Two Funky People Double Time 126 Cohn; Doug Raney (g); Dennis Irwin (b); Barry Ries (d). 11/96.
Cohn doesn't try to avoid the famous-dad issue here, playing four of Al's compositions (including the title-track) and inviting along Doug Raney, whose father Jimmy wrote the elegant 'Motion', which comes last but one. It's a guitar feast, though one might have enjoyed hearing more of Joe's fleet approach without a second guitar. Raney Jr is only sidelined for the Thad Jones 'Quite Sip'.

(*) Restless Arbors ARCD 19329 Cohn; Dmitry Baevsky (as); Harry Allen (ts); Hod O'Brien (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Chuck Riggs (d). 3/06.
Another unapologetically retro set, with Cohn and guest saxophonist Allen avoiding any 'young fogey' labels with a delightfully hip and unaffected line on some very old material. Cohn has to work a bit to be heard over Baevsky's saxophone and O'Brien's piano; Allen seems to give him more space. 'I Wonder Where Our Love Has Gone' and 'Comes Love' are the highlights of a very happy set.

Steve Cohn
PIANO, PERCUSSION, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

An eclectic composer who works with African forms and freer situations.

 Bridge Over The X-Stream Leo CDLR 288 Cohn; Tom Varner (frhn); Jason Hwang (vn); Reggie Workman (b). 1/99.
(*) The Blair Recordings Leo CD LR 335 Cohn; Johnny De Robertis (v). 92–02.
Cohn has a few recordings around. The first of these boasts an intriguing line-up but, as if to confirm the X-ray cover imagery, offers only an abstract picture of the music's inner workings rather than anything more fleshed out. One can simply enjoy the interplay of horn, violin and bass with Cohn's piano, shakuhachi and other things, and best not read the irritating track titles. The other Leo is a mystifying collection of amateurish studio pieces, cobbled together without much logic. No political statement is being made – Blair Hardman was the engineer – but, yes, the Blair years sounded very much like this.

George 'Kid Sheik' Cola (1908–?)
TRUMPET, PIANO, VOICE

Fronting bands in New Orleans by the age of 17, and later with the city's most renowned outfits, the Olympia and the Eureka. In between, a roving ambassador for jazz.

() Kid Sheik's Swingsters 1961 American Music AMCD 91 Cola; Eddie Sommers (tb); Harold Dejean (as); John Smith (p); Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b); Alex Bigard (d). 2/61.
* In Boston And Cleveland American Music AMCD 69 Cola; Louis Nelson, Albert Warner (tb); Captain John Handy (cl, as); James Sing Miller, Louis Gallaud (p); Fred Minor (bj); Chester Zardis, John Joseph (b); Alex Bigard, Cie Frazier (d). 61–69.
 First European Tour GHB BCD 187 Cola; Jack Weddell (tb); Sammy Rimington (cl); Paul Sealy (bj); Barry Richardson (b); Barry Martyn (d). 6/63.
 In The Groove GHB BCD 265 Cola; Cuff Billett (t, v); Pete Dyer (tb); Captain John Handy (as); Richard Simmons (p); Brian Turnock (b); Barry Martyn (d). 3/66.
A much-loved figure, whose CD appearances can be hard going. He plays in the mould of the short-breathed front man: solos tend to be self-effacing. Swingsters was recorded by Barry Martyn (who'd later tour with Kid) and his liner-notes suggest there was all manner of alarums and excursions before the session was done; it sounds a shambles. Cola plays a couple of blues at the piano for a change of pace. In Boston And Cleveland includes two knockabout sessions largely dominated by Handy; poor sound and worse singing. The pick is surely either First European Tour, recorded at Egham Cricket Club and nicely spirited, or the later date with Kid and Handy again. Possibly you had to be there, but these offer a flavour of a genuine jazz personality.

Also, in brief:

* Kid Sheik With Charlie Love And His Cado Jazz Band 504 CDS 21. 8/60.
Enfeebled even as New Orleans music of the kind goes. Kid sits out six tracks.

(*) Kid Sheik & Brother Cornbread In Copenhagen Jazz Crusade JCCD 3002. 11/74.
One of the poorest of a string of European dates. The fraternal/edible co-leader is Joe Thomas (cl).

Cozy Cole (1909–81)
DRUMS

Cole cut his teeth with Cab Calloway and Stuff Smith and enjoyed a hit with 'Topsy', which kickstarted his career as leader. A bright, energetic player with a few trademark touches.

 Cozy Cole 1944 Classics 819 Cole; Shorty Rogers, Charlie Shavers (t); Hal d'Amico, Aaron Sachs (cl); Walter Thomas (as, ts); Don Byas, Coleman Hawkins (ts); Johnny Guarnieri, Clyde Hart, Billy Rowland (p); Billy Taylor (b, p); Tiny Grimes (g); Slam Stewart, Sid Weiss (b); June Hawkins (v). 2–9/44.

 Cozy Cole 1944–1945 Classics 865 Cole; Emmett Berry, Shad Collins, Frankie Newton, Joe Thomas (t); Ray Conniff, Tyree Glenn, Trummy Young (tb); Earl Bostic (as); Walter Thomas (as, ts); Don Byas, Bud Johnson (ts); Ernie Caceres (bs); Johnny Guarnieri, Earl Hines (p); Remo Palmieri (g); Mark Shopnick, Slam Stewart, Billy Taylor, Teddy Walters (b). 11/44–4/45.

(*) And All That Big Band Jazz Orchard 7194 Cole; Bernie Privin, Ernie Royal, Joe Wilder (t); Henderson Chambers, Urbie Green, Frank Rehak, Hale Rood (tb); Barney Bigard, Peanuts Hucko (cl); Pepper Adams (bs); Dick Hyman (org); Don Abney, Hank Jones, Nat Pierce, Mal Waldron, Al Williams (p); Billy Bauer, Kenny Burrell, Al Caiola, Barry Galbraith, Jimmy Raney, Mundell Lowe (g); George Duvivier, Milt Hinton, Jack Lesberg, Wendell Marshall, Wilbur Ware (b); Kenny Clarke (d); other personnel. 58.

Engaging rather than essential, Cole nevertheless managed to pack his band with fine soloists who vie for attention on his sides for Continental, Keynote and later Guild. Little of the Classics material offers more than a glimpse of any of them, the leader included, though 'Strictly Drums' is an attractive feature. A few interesting guest spots do stand out, notably from Don Byas and from Coleman Hawkins, who delivers a brusquely brilliant solo on 'When Day Is Done'. There is also an opportunity to catch the still-teenage Shorty Rogers, making his recording debut on the 1944 sides and, so far as can be judged, sounding very confident. Though essentially swing performances, the frantic pace and bomb-dropping bass accents suggest that bebop really is just round the corner.

Cole's longevity was helped greatly by the surprise 1958 hit 'Topsy', which became a staple of his act. It's included, along with 'Turvy' and 'Topsy-Turvy' on the Orchard compilation, which is shared with torch singer Savina. An unlikely pairing, but a perfectly pleasant package for the enthusiast.

Freddy Cole (born 1931)

PIANO, VOICE

The youngest of the Cole brothers, it took him till the '90s to get much noticed on record. The piano work is modest, but the voice makes the most of a family resemblance.

(*) I'm Not My Brother, I'm Me Sunnyside SSC 1054 Cole; Ed Zad (g); Eddie Edwards (b). 4/90.

Though he is still best known as Nat's brother, Freddy has made a substantial career on his own account. Here, he trades quite heavily on the family connection, with 'He Was The King' and a medley of Nat-related songs. The trio format is a not-disagreeable update of his brother's pioneering work, but the results are patchy.

 Always Fantasy FCD 9670 Cole; Byron Stripling (flhn); Robin Eubanks (tb); Jeff Scott (frhn); Frank Perowsky (ss, ts, f); Grover Washington (ss); William Kerr (as, f); Antonio Hart (as, ts); Javon Jackson (ts); Roger Rosenberg (bs); Mel Martin (af); Cyrus Chestnut (p); Lionel Cole (ky); Joe Locke (vib); Tom Hubbard, George Mraz (b); Yoron Israel, Russ Kunkel (d); Steve Berrios (perc); strings. 12/94.

The Fantasy records were carefully prepared by producer Todd Barkan. The glittering line-up on the first disc sets a precedent, with a programme of meticulously arranged standards; nobody really has any chance to cut loose, but the splendid Chestnut (Nat's real heir at the piano) is magisterial, Washington and Hart take apposite cameos, and the result is laid-back but far from soporific, with just a couple of clinkers – 'The Rose' seems to have strayed in from somewhere else. Cole stays away from the piano in favour of husking through the lyrics.

 This Love Of Mine High Note HNCD 7140 Cole; Eric Alexander, David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); David Hazeltine, John Di Martino (p); Derrick Hodge (b); Mark Taylor (d). 2/05.

After the disappointment of his latter Telarc records, this was a return to form on a real jazz label. Freddy's cover of the Sinatra title-song is magnificent (bettered only by Al Hibbler and the kid from Hoboken himself) and Bob Dorough's 'But For Now' has exactly the right worldly but untroubled air. A beautifully judged programme, and even 'The Continental' has its place. Nice, muscular tenor work from both Alexander and Newman.

(*) Because Of You High Note HNCD 7156 Cole; Houston Person (ts); John DiMartino (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 2/06.

Todd Barkan and exec producer Person are the brains behind this elegant tribute to Tony Bennett (who was influenced in turn by Nat). The accompaniments are consistently excellent, with the two Washingtons in exceptionally good and subtle form. Freddy brings something special to 'Blame It On My Youth' and though there are dead patches, sustains it all the way to the end.

 Music Maestro Please High Note HNCD 7168 Cole; Bill Charlap (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 2/07.

'You Could Hear A Pin Drop' is by Bobby Cole, who isn't one of the clan. By this point, though, one wonders whether Freddy isn't knocking hard on Nat's place in the jazz vocal pantheon. These are immaculate performances, but again it's the strong jazz component that makes them particularly interesting. Freddy's husky delivery disguises a steely musical core. Every song gets just what it needs and no more. Highly impressive.

Also, in brief:

(*) A Circle Of Love Fantasy FCD 9674. 9/93–12/95.

Mixes a session done for Alfa in 1993 with three newer tracks, one of them an immaculate, if unlikely, take on Paul Williams's 'You're Nice To Be Around'.

(*) To The Ends Of The Earth Fantasy FCD 9675. 1/97.

Older standards, new pop tunes, carefully chosen tempos: a hard formula to beat.

 I Want A Smile For Christmas Fantasy FCD 9672. 7/94.

A rather good Christmas album, with Larry Willis (p) in a starring role.

 Le Grand Freddy Fantasy FCD 9863. 12/94–2/99.

Ouch! Awful pun for the title of this collection of Legrand covers. Some new cuts, some lifted from earlier Fantasys.

 Rio De Janeiro Blue Telarc 83525. 9/01.

Arrangements by Chico O'Farrill and some lovely singing, including a Jobim song in Portuguese. Surprising and effective.

 In The Name Of Love Telarc 83545. 8/02.

Starts with a Boz Scaggs song and goes slowly downhill from there. Pop.

Nat Cole (1917–65)

PIANO, VOICE

Born in Alabama. He began leading what became a hugely successful trio in 1939 and his piano style, influenced by Hines and Wilson, suggested a transition from swing to bop, but it was his voice that made him famous, though chain-smoking ended his life early. He didn't play much jazz after 1950.

 Nat King Cole 1936–1940 Classics 757 Cole; Kenneth Roane (t); Tommy Thompson (as); Bill Wright (ts); Oscar Moore (g); Wesley Prince, Eddie Cole (b); Jimmy Adams, Lee Young (d); Bonnie Lake, Juanelda Carter (v). 7/36–2/40.

 Nat King Cole 1940–1941 Classics 773 Cole; Oscar Moore (g); Maxene Johnson (v). 7/40–3/41.

 Nat King Cole 1941–1943 Classics 786 Cole; Lester Young (ts); Oscar Moore (g); Wesley Prince, Red Callender, Johnny Miller (b). 7/41–11/43.

 Nat King Cole 1943–1944 Classics 804 Cole; Shad Collins (t); Illinois Jacquet (ts); Oscar Moore (g); Johnny Miller, Gene Englund (b); J. C. Heard (d). 11/43–3/44.

Cole began with a deceptively lightweight, jiving music (sample titles: 'Scotchin' With The Soda', 'Ode To A Wild Clam') which masked the intensity of his piano style. Smooth, glittering, skating over melodies, Cole's right-hand lines were breaking free of his original Earl Hines influence and looking towards an improvisational freedom which other players – Haig, Marmarosa, Powell – would turn into the language of bebop. Cole was less inclined towards that jagged-edge approach and preferred the hip constrictions of songs. With pulsing interjections from Moore and Prince (subsequently Miller), this was a surprisingly compelling music. Classics start with four obscure 1936 titles by a group led by Eddie Cole, followed in 1939 by the trio proper and 12 titles cut in a single day. Next (Classics 773) came a session of transcriptions, where Cole shares vocal duties with Maxene Johnson for the Davis & Schwegler company which went bankrupt before the discs were issued; Cole got $7.47 for his trouble. The rest of the CD offers Nat's first two sessions for Decca, and while the trio hadn't yet perfected its dapper formula, there's much to enjoy in the likes of 'Sweet Lorraine' and 'Slow Down'. Classics 786 moves on through a session with Lester Young and Red Callender, plus some more trio work. There's a single quintet date with horns on 804, but this disc is probably the best single representation of Cole's early music, with hits such as 'Straighten Up And Fly Right' and some deft interpretations of standards.

(*) Nat King Cole 1944–1945 Classics 861 Cole; Bill Coleman (t); Buster Bailey (cl); Benny Carter (as); Coleman Hawkins (ts); Oscar Moore (g); John Kirby, Johnny Miller (b); Max Roach (d); Kay Starr (v). 11/44–5/45.

(*) Nat King Cole 1945 Classics 893 Cole; Charlie Shavers (t); Herbie Haymer (ts); Oscar Moore (g); Johnny Miller, John Simmons (b); Buddy Rich (d). 5–12/45.

(*) Nat King Cole 1946 Classics 938 Cole; Willie Smith (as); Oscar Moore (g); Johnny Miller, Red Callender (b); Jackie Mills (d). 2–6/46.

() Nat King Cole 1946–1947 / () ... 1947: Volumes 1 & 2 Classics 1005 / 1031 / 1062 As above, except omit Smith, Callender, Mills; add Jack Parker (d) & strings on 1005 only; add Johnny Mercer (v) & strings on 1062 only. 8/46–7/47; 7/47; 8/47.

(*) The Vocal Classics 1942–1946 Capitol 833571 Cole; Oscar Moore (g); Johnny Miller, (b). 42–46.

(*) The Best Of The Trio (Instrumental) Capitol 798288 As above, except add Irving Ashby (g); Joe Comfort (b); Jack Costanza (perc). 43–49.

(*) Live At The Circle Room Capitol 521859 Cole; Oscar Moore (g); Johnny Miller (b). 9/46.

Mosaic's comprehensive survey of the trios (out of print, now) ran to 18 CDs but Classics offers a way of collecting these tracks. The first covers one date for V-Disc and has a session by the Capitol International Jazzmen. Carter and Hawkins have starring roles, but the highlights of the session are the two vocals by the young Kay Starr, who handles 'If I Could Be With You' and 'Stormy Weather' quite beautifully. 893 offers a date with the Herbie Haymer Quintet, the saxophonist shining on four engaging titles. The rest of the disc is solid Cole trio music. 938 starts with a Keynote session where Cole sat in with Willie Smith and rhythm section; the rest is nearly all Capitol material, including the hit 'Route 66'. All the trio sessions maintain an enviable standard, and there are few duds among all the tracks: only occasionally does a song offer too little for Cole and colleagues to work with. Nat's luxuriant swing, dextrous touch and intelligent arrangements all seem inexhaustible and Moore is almost his equal in their dazzling parallel runs.

Classics 1005 has a discouraging preponderance of so-so ballads, but the boppish 'That's What' and a flying 'Honeysuckle Rose' pick matters up towards the end. The 1947 volume points to overwork; 19 titles in a single week. Song quality is up, though, and it's a good representation of the trio's work alone. Mercer comes in August 1947 for four hip titles (one referencing bebop) but matters deteriorate with a string session (it includes Nat's first 'Nature Boy'), a couple of novelties and a few forgotten pieces; 'Lament in Chords' is an attractive mood-piece with good work from Moore.

Capitol usefully split up the vocal and instrumental hits, but on the latter one keeps waiting for Nat to sing. The Circle Room date is a relatively recent discovery, but contains nothing extraordinary.

 Nat King Cole 1947 Vol. 3 Classics 1135 Cole; Irving Ashby (g); Johnny Miller (b). 10–11/47.

 Nat King Cole 1947–1949 Classics 1155 As above, except add Dizzy Gillespie, Buddy Childers, Ken Hanna, Al Porcino, Ray Wetzel (t); Bill Harris, Milt Bernhart, Harry Betts, Harry Forbes (tb); Bart Varsalona (btb); Buddy DeFranco (cl); Art Pepper, George Weidler (as); Flip Phillips, Bob Cooper, Warren Weidler (ts); Bob Gioga (bs); Billy Bauer (g); Joe Comfort, Eddie Safranski (b); Buddy Rich, Shelly Manne (d); strings. 12/47–1/49.

 Nat King Cole 1949 Classics 1196 Cole; Irving Ashby (g); Joe Comfort (b); Jack Costanzo (perc); Maria Cole, Starlighters, Alyce King's Vokettes (v); strings. 3–8/49.

Irving Ashby replaced Oscar Moore towards the end of 1947, and Joe Comfort displaced Johnny Miller the following year; otherwise, business as usual for the KC trio. Capitol set down session after session – 24 titles on 1135 in less than two weeks – partly because of a threatened recording ban. Quality control undergoes the occasional blip, but Cole always had to deal with makeweights as well as good songs, and his own performances are always impeccable. Ashby gets a little solo limelight here and there, and while the general tenor of the music is smoothing out, there's still the occasional R&B tinge in the likes of 'Money Is Honey'. On 1155, along with trio cuts, he's featured with the Metronome All-Stars: 'Leap Here' is a bop snapshot, 'Metronome Riff' puts a 22-strong band through a curious Pete Rugolo chart.

The next year started with a new sound: Costanza became a regular. Strings are also ever more evident. 'Lost April' backed with 'Nature Boy', and 'Portrait Of Jennie' had been hits in 1948 and pointed the way ahead. There are a few small gems: 'Etymology' has Nat explaining how Dizzy Gillespie's bebop language translates for squares, though sadly it wasn't issued at the time. It rings ironically now, since Nat was starting to make jazz accessible to middle-America, supper clubs and lonely hearts.

[illegible]

(*) After Midnight
Capitol 520087 Cole; Harry 'Sweets' Edison (t); Juan Tizol (vtb); Willie Smith (as); Stuff Smith (vn); John Collins (g); Charlie Harris (b); Lee Young (d); Jack Costanzo (perc). 8–9/56.

Cole's one latter-day jazz date has a huge reputation, but there are disappointing aspects to it: he didn't seem to want to stretch out and the tracks are all rather short; Tizol was a strange choice for horn soloist and Sweets tends to stroll through it all. But the music is still an unblemished and beautifully groomed example of small-group swing, and Cole proves that his piano-playing was undiminished by his career switchover.

Also, in brief:

(*) Jazz Encounters Capitol 796693. 12/47–1/50.
Nat as sideman with a stellar cast of leaders and soloists, though you wouldn't know it, since he manages to dominate many of these cuts.

 Nat King Cole 1949–1950 Classics 1305. 9/49–5/50.
Showbiz has almost taken over; too much novelty stuff.

 Cool Cole Proper PROPERBOX 31 4CD. 12/40–8/50.
A thoughtful job: 104 titles from the Capitol trios.

Richie Cole (born 1948)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

A Phil Woods disciple whose '70s–'80s stardom ran aground on personal problems. An impressive comeback since.

 The Man With The Horn Jazz Excursion JEX 111 Cole; Bobby Enriquez (p); Bruce Forman (g); Marshall Hawkins (b); Scott Morris (d). 5/81.
 A Piece Of Jazz History Jazz Excursion JEX 109 Cole; Art Pepper (as); Roger Kellaway (p); Bob Magnusson (b); Billy Higgins (d). 2/82.
 Back On Top Jazz Excursion JEX101 Cole; Nathan Eklund (t); Rick Stepton (tb); Billy Ross (ts); Andrei Riabov (g); Rick Crane (b); Wayne Dunton (d). 6/05.
(*) Rise's Rose Garden Jazz Excursion JEX 103/104 2CD As above, except add Chris Jaudes, Jack Walrath (t); Rick Stepton (tb); Don Friedman (g); Ray Mantilla (perc). 1/06.

With much of his earlier catalogue on Muse and even more recent Milestone dates no longer widely available, he really does seem like a resurrection man. Using the old Alto Madness name for his new orchestra, Cole delivers the usual tricksy bop, a few sentimental edges and the odd note of calculated hysteria. As principal soloist, he sounds in good shape for Back On Top, but has to cede something of the limelight to Walrath (another former wildman), Juris and Friedman on the next one.

Anyone who hadn't experienced Cole in his salad days might find these disconcertingly tame. A taste of The Man With The Horn, taken from tapes Cole found in his garage in 2006, shows how out there the old bands were. Enriquez is a lunatic, and his solo on 'Slaughter On Tenth Avenue' is completely outrageous. It all hovers on the brink of being disturbing, but in small doses Cole delivered an entertaining package. Jazz Excursion has also reissued the 1982 Return To Alto Acres as A Piece Of Jazz History, possibly a smaller piece than Richie fondly imagines (and more because Art Pepper is on it), but it's nice to see him back.

Bill Coleman (1904–81)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VOICE

Born in Kentucky. He switched from clarinet to trumpet after hearing Louis Armstrong. Played in NY, then moved to Paris, where he became a celebrity and remained, but for a spell in the mid- to late '40s, till his death.

(*) Bill Coleman, 1936–1938 Classics 764 Coleman; Christian Wagner (cl, as); Eddie Brunner, Edgar Courance, Frank Goudie (cl, ts); Alix Combelle, Noël Chiboust (ts); Herman Chittison, John Ferrier, Emile Stern (p); Stéphane Grappelli (vn, p); Oscar Aléman , John Mitchell, Django Reinhardt, Joseph Reinhardt (g); Roger Grasset, Eugène D'Hellemmes , Wilson Myers, Lucien Simoëns (b); Tommy Benford, William Diemer, Ted Fields, Jerry Mengo (d). 1/36–9/38.
 Bill Coleman 1951–1952 Classics 1339 Coleman; Bill Tamper, Dicky Wells (tb); Guy Lafitte (cl, ts); Jay Cameron (as); Harry Perret (ts); William Boucaya (bs); Christian Chevalier, Art Simmons, Randy Downes (p); Jean-Pierre Sasson (g); Gabriel Deyrolle, Guy DeFatto, Alvin Banks (b); Dom Garry, Gerard Pochonet, Zutty Singleton (d). 11/51–10/52.
 Bill Coleman 1952–1953 Classics 1381 Coleman; Dicky Wells, Bill Tamper (tb); Benny Waters (cl, ss, as); Guy Lafitte (cl, ts); Randy Downes, Jack Starling (p); Alvin Banks, Eddie de Haas (b); Zutty Singleton, Wallace Bishop (d). 10/52–10/53.
(*) From Boogie To Funk Emarcy 549401 Coleman; Quentin Jackson (tb); Budd Johnson (ts); Patti Brown (p); Les Spann (g); Buddy Catlett (b); Joe Harris (d). 60.

Many listeners only encounter this fine trumpeter through his work with Django. All of the material on the first Classics set was cut in Paris at one time or another. Collectors of 78s have long cherished small-group sides such as 'Bill Coleman Blues' and 'After You've Gone' and the 1937 date with Reinhardt is a minor classic. Coleman's unpressured delivery and melodious shaping of a line, as well as his elegant singing, allow these sessions to survive the years very well.

Classics pick up the story again after he had relocated to Paris after the war. The first postwar Classics begins with a date where Bill is featured in front of Dom Garry's big band in some ordinary charts, then switches to a date where the boppish feel of 'Jumping At Pleyel' is largely bypassed in trumpet-playing which stays faithful to his swing roots. The disc ends with material from a show which is the main feature on the succeeding release, a rowdy live set from Pleyel where Bill is joined by Wells and Lafitte, and Singleton at his noisiest. Every tune is cheered to the echo, and though there's some off-key blowing and general nonsense the three horns do salvage some very pleasing moments. Classics 1381 ends with a less frantic but enjoyably rough-and-ready sextet show made a year later; Waters is at his grittiest on clarinet, and Coleman gets over a few slips, in grand voice.

The Emarcy title is unpromising, but the record delivers well: top-notch mainstream, with Johnson and Jackson abetting Bill's every move.

 Really I Do Black & Blue 969 Coleman; Guy Lafitte (ts); Red Richards (p); Bill Pemberton (b); Panama Francis (d). 5/80.
Coleman died in Toulouse in August 1981, so this recording is one of his last. Black & Blue were loyal supporters of American visitors and Bill must have been grateful for the attention. Lafitte's in good form, clearly enjoying the spacious setting. The opening 'Crazy Rhythm' is about as hectic as it gets. Most of the tracks are of modest duration, with no extended solos and few surprises, though the inclusion of Dicky Wells's seldom-covered 'Hello Babe' stands out. Coleman hits notes cleanly and with less vibrato than on some sessions, but the years have obviously taken a certain toll.

Also, in brief:

 A Smooth One Jasmine 628 2CD. 67.
Live in Manchester, and quite decently recorded, though at this duration, you'd really have to be a fan.

 Plus Four Jazzology 196. 77.
Nice to hear him in a group with just one other brass – François Guin (tb) – and no saxophones. Unfortunately, the set-list and playing are pretty unadventurous.

George Coleman (born 1935)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Greatly admired by other players, including Miles Davis, the Memphis-born saxophonist is a deceptively complex harmonist and challenging improviser.

 Playing Changes / Blues Inside Out Ronnie Scott's Jazz House JHCD 00246 2CD Coleman; Peter King (as); Julian Joseph, Hilton Ruiz (p); Ray Drummond, Dave Green (b); Billy Higgins, Mark Taylor (d). 4/79, 97.
This succeeds a treasured Pye LP, Ronnie Scott Presents George Coleman 'Live'. Recorded during the same 1979 residency at Frith Street, Playing Changes consists of just three – two long, one shorter – numbers. Coleman's attack is typically robust and veined with unexpected harmonic ore. However, anyone whose copy of the original LP survives may feel that they already have the best of the deal. 'Laura' is, at 23 minutes plus, overgenerous to both Ruiz and the still-inexperienced Drummond; 'Moment's Notice' has some shaky transitions as well; by contrast 'Stella By Starlight', which occupied a whole side of the Pye, is a much more coherent performance. The best of the saxophonist's work occurs when he moves sideways of the given changes and into his inventive high harmonic mode.

Blues Inside Out finds him back at Ronnie's with a later version of the house band and a swinging set of standard and repertory tunes. Only the title-track and 'Venus Flytrap' are originals, the latter a tricksy and sinuous theme that brings out the best in the gifted Joseph. Long versions of 'Never Let Me Go', 'Tune Up' and 'Oleo' are more routine blowing numbers, but 'Nancy (With The Laughing Face)' is a reminder of how expressive George can be playing ballads. The recording, presumably done on the club's desk, is boxy but acceptable.

 Manhattan Panorama Evidence ECD 22019 Coleman; Harold Mabern (p); Jamil Nasser (b); Idris Muhammad (d). 85.

 At Yoshi's Evidence ECD 22021 Coleman; Harold Mabern (p); Billy Drummond (b); Alvin Queen (d). 8/87.
Originally on Theresa, Manhattan Panorama is a heartwarming, blues-soaked set, which benefits from Mabern's big chords and finely judged harmonic direction. 'Mayor Koch', 'Subway Ride' and 'El Barrio' are all in their different ways attempts to capture something of the mood of the city. As a suite, it doesn't add up to much, but individually the tracks are strong and the quartet blends together convincingly at all levels.

Mabern is even better on the Yoshi's date but it's Queen who's the real revelation, a consistently overlooked talent who drives things along (notably on 'They Say It's Wonderful' and 'Up Jumped Spring') with a subtle fire; 'Soul Eyes' is better still, but Coleman doesn't put a foot wrong at any point.

 I Could Write A Book: The Music Of Richard Rodgers Telarc 83439 Coleman; Harold Mabern (p); Jamil Nasser (b); Billy Higgins (d). 5/98.
The material is hardly unexpected, but George finds new things to do with 'Lover' and 'My Funny Valentine', roughening up the changes and investing 'Valentine' with a dark sobriety that banishes winsomeness. The band includes two old friends from Memphis, Mabern and Nasser, and the presence of Higgins at the kit guarantees a pungent swing. 'Thou Swell' is a duet for saxophone and drums, and 'People Will Say We're In Love' is just by the rhythm section. Nothing definitive in these interpretations, just very fine standards playing.

 Four Generations Of Miles Chesky JF238 Coleman; Mike Stern (g); Ron Carter (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 5/02.
As Miles Davis tributes go, this one is intriguing in that it showcases guys who worked with the trumpeter at different stages of his long, protean career. The band's quality is self-evident and this is a spontaneous cruise through some of the more obvious Miles repertoire; no 'Time After Time' or 'Human Nature', but lots of stuff from the '50s, like 'There Is No Greater Love', 'On Green Dolphin Street', and 'Freddie Freeloader' and 'All Blues', which Cobb has specially strong memories of creating. Mike Stern is there to add a contemporary spin to the repertoire but he doesn't insist too much on it and is mostly happy to act as accompanist. Coleman sounds in good voice, broad and expansive in his theme statements, but interestingly laconic in his solos, perhaps nursing a certain ambivalence about the dedicatee …

Also, in brief:

(*) My Horns Of Plenty Birdology FDM 37005. 3/91.
'Lush Life' starts musingly and out of tempo, but then plays out at a grand 12 minutes. The brief 'Sheik Of Araby' rushes along; 'Old Folks', a rare alto foray, is all bursting melody.

(*) Danger High Voltage Two And Four TF-003. 3/96.
It's outrageous that most of Coleman's great octet charts have gone unrecorded. Tenor disciple Ned Otter produced this session in 1996 and finally managed to release it in 2000. Some reservations, but the fat, swaggering sound of the band is a delight.

Ornette Coleman (born 1930)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, TRUMPET, VIOLIN

Born in Fort Worth, Texas, he began working in R&B bands, before recruiting Don Cherry and Charlie Haden. Worked with Paul Bley in LA and made his recording debut there.

Sensational NY debut of his quartet in 1959; a string of ground-breaking albums for Atlantic followed. In the '60s he learned trumpet and violin, made trio and small-group records, and performed orchestral music. An enigmatic presence, he developed a theory of 'harmolodics' and played in electric groups in the '70s and '80s. Recording has been infrequent, even after a new contract in the '90s restored his prominence.

 Something Else! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 163 Coleman; Don Cherry (t); Walter Norris (p); Don Payne (b); Billy Higgins (d). 2/58.

 Complete Live At The Hillcrest Club Gambit 69272 Coleman; Don Cherry (t); Paul Bley (p); Charlie Haden (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 10 & 11/58.

 Tomorrow Is The Question Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 342 Coleman; Don Cherry (t); Percy Heath, Red Mitchell (b); Shelly Manne (d). 1, 2 & 3/59.

No jazz musician has so comprehensively and irremediably divided opinion. To some (early supporters included Gunther Schuller) he is a visionary genius who has changed the shape of modern music; to others he is a fraud, innocent or otherwise, whose grasp of musical theory is either shaky or pretentious. Long before anyone had heard of 'harmolodics' it was thought that Coleman represented the third spur of the modernist revolution, a shift in approach to melody and rhythm to match Coltrane's skyscraping harmonics and Cecil Taylor's atonality.

Though the 1958 Hillcrest Club residency with Paul Bley represents a crux in Coleman's development, it is still startling to hear him play with a pianist, a rare occurrence over the next 30 years. Bley was a restless experimenter in his own right and drives the date forward with relentless self-examination. This valuable reissue includes tracks that were subsequently released under the pianist's name on IAI. There's as much material again as on the original Hillcrest issue and it's intriguing to hear 'When Did The Blues Leave?', 'Crossroads', 'Ramblin'' and 'How Deep Is The Ocean' in this context.

Coleman got the first of the Atlantic sessions at Red Mitchell's behest, and it suffers all the drawbacks of haste; problems that were largely ironed out on the more thoughtful Tomorrow Is The Question, a set which includes 'Tears Inside', perhaps the most beautiful single item in the whole Coleman canon. Tomorrow is also notable for Shelly Manne's impeccably hip contribution.

Forty years have softened the original alienating swipe of these discs, but they certainly confound the received view of Coleman as a raucous tent-show turn. The tone is as wayward and raw as could be, but with an intense loneliness at the heart.

♛ * The Shape Of Jazz To Come Atlantic 8122 72398-2 Coleman; Don Cherry (pkt-t); Charlie Haden (b); Billy Higgins (d). 10/59, 7/60.

* Change Of The Century Atlantic 81227 3608-2 As above. 10/59.

(*) This Is Our Music Atlantic 7567 80767-2 As above. 7/60.

* To Whom Who Keeps A Record Water 187 As above, except add Ed Blackwell (d). 10/59, 7/60.

* Free Jazz Atlantic 8122 72397-2 Coleman; Don Cherry (pkt-t); Freddie Hubbard (t); Eric Dolphy (bcl); Charlie Haden, Scott LaFaro (b); Ed Blackwell, Billy Higgins (d). 12/60.

 Ornette! Atlantic 81227 3692-2 Coleman; Don Cherry (t); Scott LaFaro (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 1/61.

(*) Ornette On Tenor Atlantic 781394 Coleman; Don Cherry (pkt-t); Jimmy Garrison (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 3/61.

 Art Of The Improvisers Atlantic 781572 Coleman; Don Cherry (pkt-t); Jimmy Garrison, Charlie Haden, Scott LaFaro (b); Ed Blackwell, Billy Higgins (d). 59–61.

 Twins Atlantic 81227 3684-2 As above. 5/59–1/61.

It's almost impossible to reconstruct the impact – positive and negative – these records had when they first appeared. These are the classic Coleman albums, never bettered since. They are all something of a piece; the first two were released out of chronological sequence, which makes discussion of 'development' or 'progress' rather redundant. CD transfer has brought forward the other members of the group, underlining Cherry's role and bringing Haden out of the shadows. Brash as the titles are, the music is surprisingly introspective and thoughtful. Most of the essential Coleman pieces are to be found here, though interestingly only one of them – 'Lonely Woman' – has ever come close to repertory status. Bubbling under are 'Una Muy Bonita' from Change, 'Congeniality' and 'Focus On Sanity' on Shape, and things like the Freud-inspired alphabetical themes from Ornette!

This Is Our Music includes the single standard of this vintage, 'Embraceable You', which takes the theme as far beyond Charlie Parker as Bird was beyond the Gershwin original.

Of the major statements of jazz modernism, Free Jazz and Coltrane's Ascension are key documents, sharing some personnel. Bassist Jimmy Garrison had walked out of Coleman's group in frustration and disgust and joined Coltrane. Easy to hear the musical difference; Ornette replaces chords with gestural splashes of sound which make sense of the Jackson Pollock cover and the Abstract Expressionist aesthetic of the Double Quartet. Oddly, the music was still locked into theme-and-solos conventions (as was Ascension, to be fair) and doesn't break free of personality. What redeems it is the sheer variety of sound-colours the group conjures up in its paired soloists: Dolphy's fruity, fraught bass clarinet, contrasted to Ornette's thin tone; Hubbard and Cherry sounding like non-zygotic twins; LaFaro's alchemical transformations sitting still while Haden lopes around like Wilbur Ware in jogging pants. Higgins and Blackwell are energetically conjoined.

A 'First Take' of Free Jazz – shorter, less assured, but arguably more coherent – is the main item on the compilation Twins. It also includes 'The Monk And The Nun', an offcut from The Shape Of Jazz To Come, two pieces, 'Little Symphony' and 'Joy Of A Toy', from a July 1960 session and 'Check Up' from January 1961. This was an intensely busy and personally difficult time in Coleman's life. He admitted to exhaustion and disillusionment, and seemed on the verge of giving up. In the event, Higgins fell foul of personal problems of his own and Haden left as well, which is why they are replaced by Blackwell and LaFaro on 'Check Up', a new sound for the group delivered by two equally talented but rather different players.

The 31 January 1961 date yielded Ornette!. The enigmatic titles, 'T & T', 'C & D', 'W.R.U', 'R.P.D.D.', were all taken from Sigmund Freud works: Totem and Taboo, Civilization and Its Discontents, and so on, very much in keeping with the couch-obsessed Zeitgeist of the time; sceptics thought Ornette should be seeing an analyst himself. LaFaro is not especially prominent on the initially rejected 'Check Up', but throughout the session he drives the group, if anything, more forcefully and with more harmonic challenge than Haden, though it has to be said that his most innovative work, including some strange double-stopped chords on 'R.P.D.D.', is ignored by the others. The reissue includes another bonus track, 'Proof Readers'.

Like Bird's one session on tenor, Ornette On Tenor has attained a status out of all proportion to its actual merits. It hooks Ornette back into the raw R&B of his Texas roots, but it never sounds like anything other than himself in a lower register and somewhat diminished in pace.

All of this material was available, plus the then unreleased and untitled music now on To Whom Who Makes A Record, as a magnificent six-CD Rhino box. Sadly, as much material again was lost in a fire. Copies of the Rhino box, called Beauty Is A Rare Thing, may still may be around, and are worth the investment only if you don't have the original.

 Town Hall Concert 1962 Get Back 1006 Coleman; David Izenzon (b); Charles Moffett (d); Selwart Clarke, Peter Goldstein (vn); Julian Barber (vla); Kermit Moore (clo). 62.

The musical philosophy of the Ornette–Izenzon–Moffett trio is already well-known from the classic Golden Circle recordings made in Denmark three years later, but here Coleman showcases two of the compositions that dominated his repertoire at the time. 'Sadness' is one of his most plangent and affecting themes, not quite the dirge of the later 'Broken Shadows', but very much in the same vein and deeply marked by the blues. 'Doughnuts' is more buoyant and catches Ornette in his most demonstrative form, punching out notes like a bar-walking R&B man. The final trio piece was 'The Ark', a seething, troublous, long-form piece that refuses to cohere, but which affords bassist and drummer some important feature opportunities. Disillusioned by 'jazz', Ornette was now dabbling in formal composition. 'Dedication To Poets And Writers' is a terse and schematic string quartet. It has little in common with classical procedures, but the passage work and articulation sound idiomatic. It might have made a more interesting piece had Ornette found a way to integrate his trio into the structure.

* At The Golden Circle, Stockholm: Volumes 1 & 2 Blue Note 35518 / 35519 Coleman; David Izenzon (b); Charles Moffett (d). 12/65.

Blue Note's purchase on the modernist movement was uncomfortably peripheral: a single Coltrane release, a brief skirmish with Cecil Taylor's fierce atonality, and a tentative, but in the event patiently sustained, engagement with Ornette. These sessions from Sweden catch the trio at its peak: densely textured, dark-toned and fierce. Much has been made of Ornette's lack of reliance on pianos, but it's obvious from these sessions that Izenzon fulfils that function. The leader may not lean on chords and progressions, may even 'hear' the changes differently, but, as with Dewey Redman later, he needs an anchor.

Coleman plays superbly throughout. Guess-the-next-note pieces like 'European Echoes' work less well than 'Morning Song' and 'The Riddle', and the obligatory fiddle-and-trumpet feature, 'Snowflakes And Sunshine', is unusually bland. 'Faces And Places' is typical of the way Ornette built a theme out of seemingly unrelated melodic cells, a honeycomb of sound without undue sweetness and without conventional symmetry. The sound is good for a club recording, faithful to the bass and to Moffett's restless overdrive.

The release in 2002 of the new editions of the Gyllene Cirkeln date added five alternative versions from other sets during the residency. In reality, they're not so very different, perhaps a little flabbier; Ornette misfingers a couple of times and Izenzon has a couple of knocks on his fretboard which might easily have been ironed out. As historical documents, though, all these tracks are essential.

 New York Is Now /  Love Call Blue Note 84287 / 84356 Coleman; Dewey Redman (ts); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 4–5/68.

Coltrane was dead a little under a year. Teaming Ornette with Trane's old rhythm section was something of a misalliance, not least given Jimmy Garrison's stated misgivings. Perhaps because they're on hand, Coleman relies on some unwonted vertical improvisation, building on chords that are never quite explicit. Redman, like Izenzon before him, does the foundation work. As he was to do on the magnificent live Crisis, he offers capacious pedal-points and comfortably contoured lower-register figures. Whatever else they do, these reduce the dynamism of Coleman's solos, turning them into long, spun-out noodles.

The two opening tracks ('The Garden Of Souls' on NY Is Now and 'Airborne' on Love Call) might have made a respectable single album. Much of the rest is makeweight. An alternative take of the already tedious R&B 'Broad Way Blues' constitutes an ambiguous 'bonus' and 'We Now Interrupt For A Commercial' (pointlessly stripped of satirical actuality for the CD) is plain silly.

(*) Friends And Neighbors: Live At Prince Street RCA Victor 47795 Coleman; Dewey Redman (ts); Charlie Haden (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 2/70.

Recorded almost a year after the apocalyptic set at New York University's Loeb Center which yielded the still un-reissued Crisis, this catches Ornette in his NY loft. The audience sings along on the opening 'Friends And Neighbours', which finds Ornette sawing joyously on fiddle. An instrumental version of the same track follows, before he switches to alto for the beautiful, subtly crafted 'Long Time No See'. There is a single trumpet track, 'Let's Play', before the set ends with 'Forgotten Songs', which seems to be related to some of the Skies Of America themes, and the long 'Tomorrow', which includes the most substantial Ornette solo of the record.

Friends And Neighbors seems to have been an unofficial release, unauthorized at the time, even though Bob Thiele is listed as co-producer. It catches Ornette in particularly laid-back form, sounding relaxed even in the squalls of violin on the title-track and creating blues progressions of astonishing originality on the alto tracks..

 The Complete Science Fiction Sessions Columbia/Legacy 63569 2CD Coleman; Bobby Bradford, Gerard Schwarz (t); Don Cherry (pkt-t); Dewey Redman (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Jim Hall (g); Charlie Haden (b); Ed Blackwell (d); Billy Higgins (tymp); Webster Armstrong, David Henderson, Asha Puthli (v). 9/71.

This issue more or less rounds out Coleman's often troubled association with Columbia. Science Fiction has never been one of the saxophonist's best-known or best-liked dates. The large ensemble, a basic septet plus guest musicians, has a very different function to the Free Jazz Double Quartet and in some respects anticipates the orchestral experiments of Skies Of America. 'Science Fiction' itself is pure nonsense, as is the ludicrous 'Good Girl Blues' and the bitingly ironic 'Civilization'. The narration by David Henderson doesn't really add much and the real interest of these sessions is the emergence of themes like the dirge 'Broken Shadows' and 'Happy House'. Cedar Walton is there to prove Ornette did occasionally work with piano-players. Even so, 'Rock The Clock' anticipates the electric Prime Time period, though for the most part this is a muddled and patchy set, likely to be of interest only to established Coleman fans who can hear past the sheer oddity of Jim Hall's role and who're able to identify anticipations of future innovations.

* Body Meta Verve/Harmolodic 531916 Coleman; Charles Ellerbee, Bern Nix (g); Jamaaladeen Tacuma (b); Ronald Shannon Jackson (d). 12/75.
* Dancing In Your Head Verve 543519-2 As above, except add Robert Palmer (cl); Master Musicians Of Joujouka. 1/73, 12/75.
It was a shock to the system in 1975, hearing Coleman with what was essentially a rock band, but then Miles Davis had been doing something similar for the past half-decade. Deaf to precedent, purists were appalled by the relentlessly thudding rhythm of the two long 'variations' on 'Theme From A Symphony' from Dancing. The harmolodic method, which applied a radical democracy to every parameter of the music – rhythm, melody, harmony – was by no means new at this point. Only the means of execution were; theoretically, everything here was already in place at Town Hall and probably before.

Ornette's alto-playing is fiercely linear but jumps up and down the levels like some pixilated hero in an arcade game. The 'rock' influence is largely superficial, since the rhythmic approach is the opposite of rock's relentless emphasis on strong beats. The Grateful Dead (with whose guitarist, Jerry Garcia, Ornette was to record towards the end of the '80s) were doing something like this in their long-form jams, but with a blissed-out insouciance which is contrary to Ornette's drivenness and urgency. Rhythmically, almost everything is there: march cadences, rags, swing, stop-time, hints of reggae and long passages in the bass.

There is another track from 1973, with Coleman in the company of the Master Musicians Of Joujouka, who had been 'discovered' by Brian Jones of the Rolling Stones. Pace the liner-note, the main session was taped in 1975, not 1976. The session also included the material released as Body Meta on Ornette's own label, Artist's House, now given corporate distribution as Harmolodic.

The five tracks include a reworking of 'European Echoes'. Its performance here underlines once again the continuity of Coleman's enterprise at this time; what had seemed satirical first time around, this time is played rather straighter. The presence of guitars, and the fibrillating groove set up by Tacuma, is the only real difference, but it's largely a superficial one, and we still maintain that it was Izenzon who pushed Ornette in this direction.

Chronologically earlier in the sessionography, Body Meta is the better record, more concentrated and intense, less rambling. It was also the first time Ornette had been allowed decent rehearsal time before a recording. The ballad 'Fou Amour' is magnificent, and 'Macho Woman' is wincingly powerful, with Shannon Jackson in some sort of overdrive. A key moment in Coleman's progress.

 Virgin Beauty Sony Jazz 4894332 Coleman; Charles Ellerbee, Jerry Garcia, Bern Nix (g); Al McDowell, Chris Walker (b); Denardo Coleman (d, perc, ky); Calvin Weston (d, perc). 88.
A cheerful shambles that degenerates into dull, MOR jazz-funk in which the outlines of tougher material ('3 Wishes', 'Desert Players', 'Healing The Feeling') are smothered in Denardo's keyboard washes and a clotted rock mix. Garcia was a controversial inclusion but does nothing to merit all the fuss, spinning out inoffensively countrified figures that merely take their place in the queue. Only the haunting title-track wakens memories of what Ornette was once capable of as a pure melodist.

* Colors Verve/Harmolodic 537789 Coleman; Joachim Kühn (p). 8/96.
An outwardly unlikely partnership yielded Ornette's most evocative album of recent years. Interesting to compare it with another, almost contemporary Verve release, the 1 + 1 duo by Herbie Hancock and Wayne Shorter, which is pipe-and-slippers compared to this restless, searching set, recorded live in Germany, at the Leipzig Opera. Kühn had recorded in a duo context before, with CMP in-house genius Walter Quintus, and with guitarist Jan Akkerman. Both times he demonstrated a responsive intelligence that thrives on harmonic ambiguity and on a suspension of conventional harmonic resolutions. All the pieces, quite short by live-performance standards, were written specially for the date. 'Refills', 'Story Writing' and 'Night Plans' are the most substantial pieces, though most of the detail comes from Kühn rather than Ornette. A wholly unexpected meeting of minds.

 Sound Museum: Three Women /  Sound Museum: Hidden Man Verve/Harmolodic 531657 / 531914 Coleman; Geri Allen (p); Charnett Moffett (b); Denardo Coleman (d); Lauren Kinhan, Chris Walker (v on Three Women). 96.
A typically perverse undertaking: two albums of almost identical material, performed back to back by the same band. The only real difference in sequence is that Three Women includes a song performed by Kinhan and Walker, while Hidden Man has a variation on 'What A Friend We Have In Jesus' and a slightly altered running order. Ornette's insistence on an absolute democracy of listening and response is carried to extraordinary lengths here; it is often difficult to gauge how these performances actually vary, and to what extent the two albums are supposed to have a consistent identity. To take just the most familiar item, 'European Echoes' is no more than incidentally reworked, while 'Mob Job' and 'Macho Woman' are much of a muchness, tempo changes notwithstanding.

Allen's role is broadly similar to what the guitarists were doing on earlier records. Her M-Base background hasn't been so thoroughly sloughed that she isn't responsive to this kind of thing; that whole project drew much of its inspiration, consciously or otherwise, from Ornette, and she (more than most) responded to the historical antecedents. Denardo's skill as a producer becomes more evident with almost every release. The sound here is immaculate, with lots of space round the piano and drums.

 Sound Grammar Sound Grammar 001/11593 Coleman; Greg Cohen, Tony Falanga (b); Denardo Coleman (d, perc). 10/05.
An event rather than a great record. Given that Ornette hadn't released anything for a decade, this was bound to be hailed as something special. Purely on its own terms – a live set from Germany in the autumn of 2005 – it's a perfectly decent performance, a very collectable souvenir of a great artist in his twilight, and no more.

A settled group plays with great coherence and the twinned basses are superb on 'Turnaround', one of a couple of old favourites. Cohen drives things along manfully, while Falanga bows his instrument, inviting inevitable comparison with David. Denardo has become arguably the key element in this music. His time-sense is still highly individual, some of his devices still slightly crude, but he has a grasp of the overall concept that is unique and rewarding.

Ornette himself is – like Miles Davis later in life – once again ever deeper embroiled in the blues. Most of the new tunes are modal ideas, quirkily interpreted. No mistaking the healthy state of his chops on trumpet, which appears on 'Jordan' and 'Call To Duty', some of the punchiest Ornette on record for years. The violin scribbles away on an encore performance of 'Song X', overlong, crowd-pleasing and somewhat beside the point. If good is the enemy of great, this is a perfect illustration. Though arguably the 'harmolodic' method is now perfected, there's nothing here that would comfortably sit alongside even some of the more routine cuts on the classic Atlantics.

Also, in brief:

 Chappaqua Suite Columbia 480584 2CD. 6/65.
Written for Conrad Rooks's movie but politely rejected. Ornette did not authorize separate release of this, which remains a curious torso, full of great ideas and fiery, boppish playing from the saxophonist, but a curiosity rather than a canonical record.

 The Love Revolution: Complete 1968 Italian Tour Gambit 69224 2CD. 2/68.
These two nights have always been available on small Italian labels, as Live In Milano or Languages, or The Unprecedented Music Of Ornette Coleman. Poor sound.

 Rock The Clock Fruit Tree 857. 11/71.
The quartet with Dewey Redman (ts) on tour in Europe with Science Fiction-era material. Formerly available on Unique, this seems to have been cleaned up a bit.

() Skies Of America Columbia/Legacy 63568. 5/72.
Another grand mess, generously and boldly conceived but stifled at birth by the grim playing of the LSO. Legends abound about the recording, but the music does contain the germ of 'Dancing In Your Head' and other pieces, and 'New Anthem' is intriguingly subversive.

Steve Coleman (born 1956)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, VOICE

The Chicagoan was a co-founder of M-Base. Won his spurs with the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis band, Sam Rivers and Cecil Taylor. Takes a mystical line on jazz, believing that music is a symbolic language expressing both the order and the chaos of the universe.

 Motherland Pulse Winter & Winter 919001 Coleman; Graham Haynes (c); Geri Allen (p); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d); Cassandra Wilson (v). 3/85.
 On The Edge Of Tomorrow Winter & Winter 919005 As above, except omit Plaxico; add Kelvyn Bell (g); Kevin Bruce Harris (b); Mark Johnson (d). 1 & 2/86.
 World Expansion Winter & Winter 919010 As above, except add Robin Eubanks (tb, v); Jimmy Cozier, D. K. Dyson (v). 11/86.
Coleman's debut marked the first broad acceptance of what became known as the M-Base school of music. The immediate impression is of a looser and more harmonically conventional version of his namesake Ornette's earlier years. Steve's alto has a keening insistence that carries a lot of weight and information on these fine cuts. The songs are mostly short and well-structured, if a little too similar in conception. The exceptions are the middle pair, 'Wights Waits For Weights' and 'No Good Time Fairies', on which Cassandra Wilson sings.

On the follow-up record, also originally on JMT, the funk seems a little more programmed, partly because the level of electricity is well up (Allen is on synth throughout and Bell plugs in for the set) but also because the sheer novelty of Coleman's approach wore off quite quickly and it wasn't until his later, denser records that he achieved a proper synthesis between vernacular immediacy and musical sophistication. '(In Order To Form A) More Perfect Union' boils with irony, and if you know where the quote comes from, you'll know why.

The third record seems to mark time, but the introduction of Eubanks brings in a vivid new solo voice who does something of what Haynes had delivered on the earlier disc, but more warmly.

(*) Resistance Is Futile Label Bleu LBLC 6643/4 2CD Coleman; Jonathan Finlayson, Ambrose Campbell-Akinmusire (t); Geoffroy DeMasure (tb); Andy Milne (ky); Anthony Tidd (b); Sean Rickman (d); Jesús Diaz (perc, v). 7/01.
Coleman's progress is such that he can now review some of his own history, hence the presence on this live-in-Montpellier double-CD of old Five Elements favourites such as 'Wheel Of Nature' and 'Change The Guard', which go all the way back to 1986's On The Edge Of Tomorrow. There are new spirits in his fold – scarcely a familiar name in the personnel – and every one of them is quick, precise, unblinkingly assured and able to solo on cryptic materials without a stumble. On long pieces such as 'Wheel Of Nature' and '9 To 5', Coleman is overseeing ensemble performances that personify the sculpted astringency of his own saxophone-playing.

Here and there he touches on 'the tradition'. Parker's 'Ah-Leu-Cha' is barely recognizable, and entirely unbopped. A ballad treatment of 'Easy Living' isn't so much cool as neutral, the saxophonist working it out almost mathematically. Yet Mal Waldron's 'Straight Ahead' emerges as an oddly poignant performance. When they tag 'Straight No Chaser' onto the end of 'Hits', it's like a bizarre echo of another time and place.

* Weaving Symbolics Label Bleu 6692 2CD/DVD Coleman; Jonathan Finlayson (t); Tim Albright (tb); Malik Mezzadri (f); Jason Moran (p); Nelson Veras (g); Sarah Murcia, Eric Revis, Reggie Washington, Anthony Tidd (b); Marcus Gilmore, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Luciano Silva (perc). 4/04, 5/05.
Apart from two very long tracks, which don't seem to have sufficient substance to merit extended treatment, there's nothing much to get the teeth into here. Church music – plainchant identifiably – seems to be a new component and it sits well alongside the Eastern elements. Coleman's playing is as distractedly extraordinary as ever, but more than ever he seems to be locked in a private dialogue. His interchanges with Gilmore are interesting and there is some quite illuminating material on the DVD component, but for the most part this is an enigmatic performance.

* Invisible Paths – First Scattering Tzadik 7621 Coleman (ss, ts solo). 07.
Coleman rightly intuited that this solo 'sonic commentary' would be both more accessible and more obscure than his ensemble work. This is very different to Braxton's solo recordings. However, while the ability to concentrate on a single voice does clarify his intentions to a degree, one sometimes misses a context and only on the best pieces, 'Negative-Secondary' and the climactic 'Individualization', does he sound genuinely communicative. A splendid performance none the less.

Also, in brief:

 Lucidarium Label Bleu 6673. 5/03.
A fairly routine Five Elements record, punctuated with passages of real invention.

 On The Rising Of The 64 Paths Label Bleu 6653. 3–4/02.
Enigmatic is a default position for Coleman, but this is also extraordinarily beautiful, and at its best when one can set aside the nature mysticism and enjoy powerful jazz playing.

Johnny Coles (1926–96)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He started out in R&B but later worked with Charles Mingus. Diminutive but fiery, a greatly underrated voice.

 The Warm Sound Koch 7804 Coles; Kenny Drew, Randy Weston (p); Peck Morrison (b); Charli Persip (d). 4/61.
(*) Little Johnny C Blue Note 64475 Coles; Joe Henderson (ts); Duke Pearson (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Walter Perkins, Pete LaRoca (d). 7 & 8/63.
* New Morning Criss Cross 1005 Coles; Horace Parlan (p); Reggie Johnson (b); Billy Hart (d). 12/82.

Little Johnny C recorded only sparingly under his own name, but they're all good records. Warm Sound establishes an immediately distinctive voice, boppish but lyrical, closer perhaps to Howard McGhee's than anyone else at the time. There are two versions of Weston's classic 'Hi-Fly' on the CD reissue (Drew was in for the other session), but the best playing is on 'If I Should Lose You', a delicately swinging but muscular interpretation that suggests a bigger group is involved.

Little Johnny C was made shortly before joining Mingus. Again, Coles relies on a sideman (in this case, Pearson) for most of the material, though young Henderson, already distinctive as a soloist, chips in 'Hobo Joe'. Coles solos with warmth and vigour, and his ballad playing on 'So Sweet My Little Girl' brings the album to a satisfying close.

Two decades on, Coles was recording for the Blue Note of the '80s. Criss Cross give him a nice, warm sound. Coles plays flugelhorn throughout, which enhances the lyricism, and the choice of material, including 'Duke Ellington's Sound Of Love' by Mingus, Wayne Shorter's 'United' and Charles Davis's obscure 'Super 80', as well as three workmanlike originals, gives the group a perfect grounding for a thoroughly satisfying performance.

Collective 4tet

GROUP

International alliance of improvisers.

() The Ropedancer / * Orca / * Live At Crescent Leo Lab CD 021 / 031 / 043 Jeff Hoyer (tb, p); Mark Hennen (p); William Parker (b, tba); Heinz Geisser (perc). 11/94; 10/96; 5/97.
* Synopsis /  Moving Along Leo Lab CD 380 / 418 As above. 11/02.

The group's catalyst is the Zurich-based Geisser, a self-taught percussionist whose first instrument was classical guitar. Much of the melodic activity, however, emerges in the interplay between Hennen and Parker. Hoyer has worked with Bill Dixon and something of the trumpeter's angular structure and delicate sonics has crept into his playing. His intro to 'Invocation', on Orca, is completely sui generis, owing nothing to Mangelsdorff, Rudd, Lewis or any of the contemporary trombonemen. His duet with Hennen on 'Boa' is exquisite, and a good example of how the group naturally falls into duo and trio settings when required.

It is on the long pieces, 'Invocation' and 'Orca' on the second disc, the title-track of the first, that the group achieves a near-telepathic unity of a kind rarely achieved by more casual encounters. This is particularly obvious at lower dynamics. The live set was taped in Belfast during a short British tour. In contrast to the previous night's concert in London, taped and broadcast by the BBC, Parker sounds tired and almost unengaged, and it is Hoyer and Hennen who hold the floor. The set falls into two long improvisations, each more than 30 minutes, with Hoyer switching to piano for a brief encore. Even in a concert situation, there is a strong exploratory dialectic, and even when group communication falters, as in the latter half of 'Sonic Flowers', individual paths are still compelling enough to sustain interest.

After a gap of five years, the 4tet returned to the studio to make Synopsis. It's a diffident title, because there is nothing perfunctory or shorthand about this magnificent music. From the opening 'Convergence' through the more tricky 'Left Turn' and the concluding 'Jig', the group has its own language and distinctive energy, more measured than in the past, but by no means staid or predetermined. An important modern record. Moving Along is the most recent to date, but no definite word that the project is in long-term abeyance. Parker's extraordinary schedule presumably rules out frequent reunions. It's certainly the weakest of the bunch, with too many passages which seem to mark time, and anyone encountering this first will certainly be disappointed. These were obviously second-choice performances from the November 2002 recordings. However, the best of the playing is very good indeed and individually all four are playing well up to standard even if the results lack drama and coherence.

Frank Collett

PIANO

Seasoned player who's worked with Louie Bellson and Terry Gibbs.

 Perfectly Frank Fresh Sound FSRCD 5024 Collett; Bob Magnusson (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 10/02.

 All God's Chillun Got Rhythm /  Music From The Movies Fresh Sound FSRCD 5041 / 5043 Collett; Tom Warrington (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 7/04; 12/05.

With a swinging, richly varied delivery and a great ear for songs, Collett is a natural for a piano trio. He's no Bill Evans, but even with some crudities, more evident on the second album, which is devoted to Bronislaw Kaper film music, he's always listenable. Both bassists and drummer play full parts. 'On Green Dolphin Street' is included, of course, as are 'Hi-Lili Hi-Lo' from Lili and 'Drifting' from Auntie Mame. In the light of these, the movies album was almost inevitable. There's some strong material, including a couple of things from The Big Broadcast Of 1938 which don't often get an airing, and the highlight is a bouncy version of 'Ding Dong, The Witch Is Dead!' from The Wizard of Oz.

Buddy Collette (born 1921)

REEDS, WOODWINDS

Born in LA. He worked with Mingus in 1946 and Chico Hamilton a decade later but made his mark in the session fraternity, freelancing and organizing big bands for Monterey.

 Tanganyika VSOP 20 Collette; John Anderson (t); Gerald Wiggins (p); Jimmy Hall (g); Curtis Counce (b); Chico Hamilton (d). 10/56.
 Nice Day Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 747 Collette; Don Friedman, Dick Shreve, Calvin Jackson (p); John Goodman, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Bill Dolney, Shelly Manne (d). 11/56–2/57.

 Soft Touch Fresh Sound FSRCD 214 Collette; Gerald Wilson (t); Al Viola (g); Wilfred Middlebrooks (b); Earl Palmer (d). 58.
 The Buddy Collette Quintet Studio West 104 Collette; Jack Wilson (p); Al Viola (g); Jimmy Bond (b); Bill Goodwin (d); Irene Kral (v). 62.

Though he was proficient in a wide range of horns, his flute-playing earned him an unfortunate niche as novelty session-man on the West Coast. On his own dates, at least, he was able to deploy the other instruments in his music room. Tanganyika offers 'modern Afro-American jazz' and is nominally led by DJ Sleepy Stein. In fact, it's typical West Coast modern with very few convincing African elements. Collette writes most of the material. Some have noted certain similarities to the later Chico Hamilton group, but that's perhaps dictated by Collette's relationship with Eric Dolphy. Appealing music, but in no way special. On Nice Day Buddy's main horn is clarinet, a woodsy sound not so far from Jimmy Giuffre's. It makes an interesting gambit on the blues 'Minor Deviation' (the little-known Shreve takes a fine solo), and a queer arrangement of 'Moten Swing'. The record is let down a little by switching between three rhythm sections, but it ends usefully on a tenor feature, 'Buddy Boo'.

Soft Touch is nearly all Collette originals, many of them elusively tinged with the blues rather than being in strict blues forms. Buddy plays alto, tenor, clarinet and flute and one can hear in places the impact he must have had on Eric Dolphy. The playing's mostly smoother than that, of course, but there are idiosyncratic harmonies and Viola's guitar helps keep things open.

The 1962 session on Studio West (an imprint of VSOP) is equally mild and pleasing, and it's the addition of Kral which makes this one rather special. She sings unaffectedly but with great emotion, and her 'Spring Can Really Hang You Up The Most' is the album's highlight, with Collette reduced to accompanist.

* Flute Talk Soul Note 121165 Collette; James Newton (f); Geri Allen (p); Jaribu Shahid (b); Giampiero Prina (d). 7/88.

Buddy's first record for two decades also features the best group he's ever had in the studio. The meeting with pupil Newton is more respectful than combative, and Allen is her usual unpredictable self, alert in places, asleep in others. The recording isn't spot on for the flutes, but overall pretty good.

 Jazz For Thousand Oaks UFO Bass 02 Collette; Al Aarons (flhn); George Bohanon (tb); Sam Most (as, ts, f); Al Viola (g); Ronnell Bright (p, v); Richard Simon (b); Ndugu Leon Chancler (d). 6/96.

An elegant, latter-day octet from the 75-year-old. He shares the reed parts with Most, but with Aarons and Bohanon in behind the front line often sounds full and rich. The date is full of little surprises, like Bright's excellent singing, and the Latin sway of 'Veda' and the title-piece, which is full of wry quotation, suggesting a band having a good time on the stand. There's a nice live feel and good balance to the sound.

Also, in brief:

(*) Man Of Many Parts Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 239. 2–4/56.

Largely gimcracked round Buddy's multi-instrumentalism. Enjoyable enough, but inconsistent.

 Tasty Dish Fresh Sound FSRCD 213. 56, 57.

From a 1956 television show and a slightly later Hollywood date; intelligent jazz that falls somewhere between 'cool' and boppish.

() Jazz Loves Paris Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1764. 1/58.

An obvious, but thin concept, averagely executed.

 Live At El Camino College UFO Bass10629. 5/90.

A big-band set divided between spry originals in the first half and mostly Ellington–Strayhorn tunes in the second, though Hancock's 'Theme From Harlem Nights' gets covered. George Bohanon (tb) stars.

 Big Band In Concert Bridge 9096. 6/96.

An enjoyable latter-day date with lots of old friends from the LA glory days. By contemporary standards, though, only so-so.

Scott Colley (born 1963)

DOUBLE BASS

Born in LA, but based in NY since early '90s. Worked with Carmen McRae among others.

(*) This Place Steeplechase SCCD 31443 Colley; Chris Potter (ts, bcl); Bill Stewart (d). 9/97.
(*) Subliminal ... Criss Cross 1157 As above, except add Bill Carrothers (p). 12/97.
 The Magic Line Arabesque 153 As above, except omit Carrothers. 8/00.

Colley's pedigree as first-call bassist is unquestioned and it's no surprise that he should have made such a successful transition to leadership. Early dates favoured a pianoless trio, though the presence of Carrothers on Subliminal broadens the palette, albeit somewhat diffidently. The Steeplechase wasn't the debut disc; Portable Universe on Freelance came (and went) earlier the same year. This Place has much to enjoy, nicely balanced and with a few pleasing originals. Potter is slightly mechanical in this setting and Rollins's 'Airegin' has no charisma, but 'The Peacocks' and the Trane blues 'Mr Day' are both very good. Colley himself is graceful and lithe without sounding rubbery; he's wisely cautious about too many bass features.

The Criss Cross date isn't very good, and Stewart's 'Don't Ever Call Me Again' is probably more interesting to play than to listen to. The third record is much better, something of a breakthrough in creative terms. The trio sounds well-established and Colley's writing – 'Trip To Williamsburg' and 'Dog Logic' in particular – is terse, energetic and strong. He's also playing with Pettiford-like authority.

 Initial Wisdom Palmetto PM 2080 Colley; Ravi Coltrane (ts); Adam Rogers (g); Bill Stewart (d). 02.
* Architect Of The Silent Moment CamJazz 7793 Colley; Ralph Alessi (t); David Binney (as); Grégoire Maret (hca); Craig Taborn (p, org); Antonio Sanchez (d).

Apart from a short improvised track, and some modern repertory pieces, all the compositions are the bassist's. Here, though, he's thrown back on more conventional bass duties, though Rogers's vigorous comping frees him up considerably. Coltrane Jr sounds like he's in a Shorter phase, especially on 'Barracudas'. That free-form aberration apart, it's all disciplined and to the point.

Despite the grisly title, Architect is a wonderful record. Metrically complex, harmonically rich and with a range of sonorities unlike anything else around. Maret's harmonica is obviously a key element, but Alessi, Binney and Taborn all contribute richly and Colley's own playing has taken a further step forward. 'Strip Mall Ballet' is deftly structured around a triple-time feel, and the harmonica solo sets up a sad-hearts-at-the-supermarket feel. It follows on from the opening 'Usual

Illusion', which has a long, asymmetrical line and a sense that every bar is ready to break into its constituent elements if the pace slackens for a second. They play Andrew Hill's 'Smoke Stack' towards the end before going out on Colley's haunting 'Window of Time', which has a pleasingly retro quality.

Max Collie (born 1931)

TROMBONE

Born in Melbourne, he came to the UK in 1962 and formed his own Dixieland outfit. Character and determination saw an unfashionable style build and sustain a large audience.

 1971–1972 Reality 118 Collie; Phil Mason (c); Cy Laurie (cl); Jack Gilbert (cl, as); Jim McIntosh (bj); John Healy (b); Ron McKay (d, v). 71, 72.

 Battle Of Trafalgar – 200 King's Road Chelsea Reality 117 As above, except omit Laurie, Healy; add Trefor Williams (b). 73.

 Live At The Strathallan Raymer Sound RSCD 754 As above. 5/78.

Collie's a revivalist with a big strong tone, notably tight and well-schooled bands, and an entertainment potential that goes off the scale. The CDs do little more than provide tasters of the live act and provide souvenirs of glory days like the tour dates on the first of these (like most of the British revivalists, the Rhythm Aces went down hugely in Germany): no fiery solos, no fancy arrangements – songs are simply counted off and played, full stop.

Any one of these serves as an early glimpse. Mason's cornet is bright and peppy, Max plays with warmth and humour and the set-lists are nicely varied, with an emphasis on blues and blues-related tunes.

 The Thrill Of Jazz /  New Orleans Mardi Gras /  Latest And Greatest Reality RCD 109 / 111/ 113 Collie; Denny Ilett (c); Steve Mellor (cl); Lord Arsenal (p); Chris Marney (bj); Trefor Williams (b); Peter Cotterill (d); Pauline Pearce, Marilyn Middleton Pollock (v). 89; 91; 9/93.

 Live In Stuttgart 1998 /  Hot Jazz Celebration Reality RCD 115 / 116 Collie; Denny Ilett (c); Gabe Essian (cl); David Bashford (bj); Count John McCormick (b); Alan 'Slim' Poston (d). 98; 2/01.

The rationale behind Latest And Greatest was to provide a representative CD sampling for fans who'd just bought a player. Simple enough formula: just show up and plays loads of old things. The inclusion of Pearce and Pollock was meant to be a plus, but, unlike Ottilie Patterson's contributions to Chris Barber records, they don't add much. Otherwise, business as usual: 'Shimmee Sha Wabble', 'Fidgety Feet', 'When You And I Were Young, Maggie' ... The slightly earlier discs do pretty much the same job.

The Stuttgart date is a reminder of how popular this kind of jazz is in Germany and particularly the former DDR, where it is seen as authentically proletarian and untroubled by bourgeois 'art'. The band is one of the most stable in the business, not necessarily as individuals (!) but certainly as a unit and they play up a storm before an appreciative audience.

Also recorded by German radio, Celebrations marks Max's 70th birthday in grand style with the first seven tracks recorded on the day itself. He sounds in rude health and the whole session illustrates how vital this supposedly dead-and-buried end of the jazz spectrum still is. New bugs Essian and Bashford do an excellent job and it's good to find that Count John McCormick is being gainfully employed.

Graham Collier (born 1937)

COMPOSER, DOUBLE BASS

A major composer, he no longer plays bass. The '60s groups were consistently fascinating but always hinted at even more ambitious musics waiting in the wings.

* Workpoints Cuneiform 213 Collier; Harry Beckett, Henry Lowther, Kenny Wheeler (t); Mike Gibbs, John Mumford (tb); John Surman (ss, bs); Karl Jenkins (ob, bs); Dave Aaron (ts, f); Art Themen (ts); Roger Dean (p); Frank Ricotti (vib); John Marshall, John Webb (d). 3/68, 8/75.

 Down Another Road / Songs For My Father / Mosaics Beat Goes On BGO 1958 2CD Collier; Harry Beckett (t, flhn); Nick Evans, Derek Wadsworth (tb); Stan Sulzmann (ss, as); Tony Roberts, Alan Skidmore, Brian Smith, Alan Wakeman, Bob Sydor (ts); Karl Jenkins (ob, p); Geoff Castle, John Taylor (p); Philip Lee (g); John Marshall, Chick Webb (d). 3/69; 1–2/70; 12/70.

Collier's early records were of surpassing thoughtfulness. We understand that Disconforme, who had boldly set about reissuing the back catalogue, have since withdrawn. On the basis that these records may still be available through some sources they are noted below. Fortunately, Cuneiform, BGO and Jazzprint have continued their support, so much of this important composer/leader's work is still available.

The music draws on Ellington, Charles Mingus and Miles Davis's collaborations with Gil Evans, but Collier is also unmistakably English – or perhaps more accurately European – in his harmonic and rhythmic language. His sound-world is sometimes sombre but splashed with unexpected light and colour.

Workpoints is a double live set from the Maryland label which has a deep loyalty to British jazz and fusion of this period. This isn't a nostalgia release, but a further reminder of how powerful a presence Collier was and is. Both live sets come from his bass-playing days, 1968 in Southampton and 1975 in Middleheim, Belgium. The personnel is a cross-section of British talent, Harry Beckett sublime on trumpet and flugelhorn (especially on the pastoral 'The Barley Mow'), but with fine showings from the less well-known Dave Aaron (saxophones and flute) and John Mumford (trombone) as well. 'Workpoints' itself was written under the very first Arts Council commission to a jazz composer, but Collier fans will enjoy strong versions of 'Deep Dark Blue Centre' and 'Darius'.

Of the three albums now gathered together on BGO, Songs For My Father is the most accessible. The seven 'songs' are identified only by time-signature or other marking – 7/4, ballad, 9/8, a waltz in 4/4, rubato, dirge and 4/4 figured – but they are much more expressive than that suggests. Collier has always had a gift for writing charts which are both demandingly complex and open-ended enough for solo expression. Beckett is the main soloist on the album, though Skidmore and the more anonymous Wakeman each receive generous space; Bob Sydor was also an engaging regular in Collier groups, though he has since drifted out of the spotlight.

Down Another Road suggests that maybe there was to be a major change of direction. It doesn't emerge, beyond an ever more comfortable assimilation of advanced jazz harmonic ideas to the prevailing rock rhythm of the day. John Marshall's ability to blend those two seemingly inimical concepts can't be exaggerated. Jenkins plays a lot of piano but is also effective on oboe. It's Beckett who commands in the solo space, though. 'Danish Blue' is the most engaging track on a set of slightly anonymous material. He has the true bluesman's gift of combining hard times with absolute unfettered joy, and he touches both ends of the spectrum on Songs For My Father. His phrasing on 'Song Four', that 4/4 waltz, is immaculate and his ability to play expressively and at speed in unusual time-signatures is a mark of his talent. Two additional tracks were recorded live and in mono in Brighton in May 1970.

Mosaics was more ambitious but also much looser in structure, a sequence of themes, variations and instrumental cadenzas, somewhat Mingusian in cast, but marked by Eastern themes and modalities. There was a lot of writing of this kind around in Britain at the time – Neil Ardley is an obvious example – but no one explored it more fully and more intelligently than Collier. Again the soloing is less impressive than the overall conception of these pieces, but given the prominence given to solo excursions on Mosaics, it's a less coherent work.

CORE COLLECTION

* Hoarded Dreams
Cuneiform RUNE 252 Collier; Ted Curson (t); Henry Lowther, Manfred Schoof, Tomasz Stańko , Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Connie Bauer, Malcolm Griffiths, Eje Thelin (tb); Dave Powell (tba); Art Themen (ss, ts); Juhani Aaltonen (as, ts); Geoff Warren (as, af); Matthias Schubert (ts, ob); John Surman (bs, cl, bcl); Roger Dean (p, ky); John Schroder, Ed Speight (g); Paul Bridge (b); Ashley Brown (d). 6/83.

It isn't necessarily Collier's masterwork, since even more ambitious and more confidently achieved work followed in later years, but the performance of Hoarded Dreams at the much-loved Bracknell jazz festival was a piquant and now-nostalgic moment for British jazz fans: an international orchestra of soloists (and every one of them receives a solo spot) playing new music by an admired British composer at an event devoted to musical innovation rather than fashion – it was heady stuff. Many who were there secreted private tape machines, but this recording blares out of the speakers with adult authority, grown-up music that, for all the solo structure, seems indivisible and entirely logical. It's a delicately nuanced work, which rarely calls on the 19-piece band for mere power. The trumpeters steal it to some extent, with Lowther stunning in 'Part Two', Stańko in 'Part Five', fine interventions from Schoof and Curson elsewhere. Even so, there's not a weak performance through the band, largely because the material is so strong. Collier's dream-hoard is rich, sometimes strange and entirely free of British whimsy. A lastingly satisfying experience.

 Charles River Fragments Boathouse BHR 004 Collier; Henry Lowther, Steve Waterman, Patrick White (t); Hugh Fraser (tb); Bill Mee (btb); Andy Grappy (tba); Art Themen (ts, ss, bsx); Mark Lockheart (ts, ss); Geoff Warren (as, af); Chris Biscoe (bs, acl); Pete Saberton (p); Ed Speight (g); Dudley Phillips (b); John Marshall (d). 95.

The main piece here was commissioned by the BBC for performance at the London Jazz Festival. Dedicated to Herb Pomeroy, with whom Collier had studied at Berklee College, and to Charles Mingus, it's a large, sprawling work for improvising ensemble which again relies heavily on the gifts of the players. Fraser, Lowther, Themen and Lockheart are the most important frontline players. The ideas are, as ever, expansive, and the balance between big shapes and small details is maintained with great consistency. The only other item on the set is 'The Hackney Five', on which Waterman is prominently featured. It's a mere prelude, though, to the longer work.

 The Third Colour ASC CD 28 Collier; Simon Finch, Steve Waterman (t); Ed Sarath (flhn); Mat Colman, Hugh Fraser (tb); Oren Marshall (tba); Steve Main, Karlheinz Miklin, Art Themen, Geoff Warren (sax); Roger Dean (ky); Ed Speight (g); Andy Cleyndert (b); John Marshall (d). 11/97.

One of the marks of Collier's great strength as a composer is that he regards music as a medium in which performers express themselves, not one in which the composer attempts to make a mark. Hence 'Three Simple Pieces', hence 'Shapes, Colours, Energies', 'The Third Colour' and 'The Miró Tile', all performed at Collier's 60th-birthday celebration. It was one of a sequence of special events in 1997. 'Three Simple Pieces' was written for a birthday concert at the Guildhall, where he taught, and is a generous invitation to solo elaboration. The band is somewhat lacking in punch, but Themen and John Marshall bring real power to the third of the sequence.

Oren Marshall is strongly featured on 'Energy Squared', part of 'Shapes ...' and he shows up again on the opening 'Groove' of 'The Third Colour', testimony to Collier's interest in writing for low horns. The title-piece takes its inspiration from art theorist Clement Greenberg's suggestion that line is the 'third colour', a reflection of Collier's interest in the space between composition and improvisation.

 Winter Oranges Jazzprint 126 Collier; Danish Radio Jazz Orchestra. 11/00.

 Bread And Circuses Jazzprint 131 Collier; 15-piece ensemble. 9/01.

These are both ambitious projects, recorded with two very different orchestras. The Collective on Bread And Circuses is a group of Western Australians, presumably young, since the playing sounds precociously accurate and a tiny bit soulless; the Danish group is one of the most effective big bands on the scene, capable of a roar of noise and delicate piano within a few bars, and certainly capable of giving complex charts a rich emotional inflection. The structure of Bread And Circuses is typical Collier: an introduction followed by a series of 'patterns', ballads and blues, with clapping segments and instrumental cadenzas.

The other disc is more weighty and more classically structured. The set consists of the title-suite, and parts of 'Three Simple Songs' from The Third Colour. These are all impeccably done and delivered with a richness of vision that suggests many hours of rehearsal, but is probably the result of accurate sight-reading combined with Collier's generously insistent personality. This is the man who helped transform British jazz in the '80s by his sponsorship of what became Loose Tubes. He has been a dogged presence on the scene, even when in exile in Spain, and his music deserves to be heard more widely.

Also, in brief:

(*) Deep Dark Blue Centre Disconforme 1957. 1/67.

The title comes from Hoagy Carmichael. The music comes from a rich vein of musical imagination that is still functioning forty years on.

 Portraits Disconforme 1961. 11/72.

Superficially reminiscent of Miles Davis's '50s work, broadly modal in approach, but with the later rock sensibility peeping through. So either prescient or retro, depending on how you look at it.

(*) Darius Disconforme 1971. 3/74.

Where other leaders offered paintball copies of Miles records, Collier created something richly nuanced. This is one of the best of the '70s discs.

 Midnight Blue Disconforme 1972. 75.
The emphasis on brass over saxophones was interesting and telling at the time, but no one seemed to be listening.

() New Conditions / () Symphony Of Scorpions /  The Day Of The Dead Disconforme 1973 / 1974 / 1975. 6/76; 12/76; 3/77, 4/78.
Benchmark works in Collier's progress and in modern jazz composition.

 Something British Made In Hong Kong Disconforme 1976. 12/85.
A strangely one-dimensional project, which seems to flirt with irony but fails to deliver a consistent message.

George Colligan (born 1970)

PIANO, ORGAN, SYNTHESIZER, TRUMPET, DRUMS

Raised in Maryland. He started on trumpet before switching to keyboards. An able accompanist as well as leader.

 Activism Steeplechase SCCD 31382 Colligan; Dwayne Burno (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 11/95.
(*) The Newcomer Steeplechase SCCD 31414 Colligan; Ingrid Jensen (t, flhn); Dwayne Burno (b); Billy Drummond (d). 4/97.
Colligan is exciting, even if the records don't always impress as complete entities. The trio date has head-turning moments from all hands. Colligan contributes only one original, the title-piece, and for the rest chooses tunes by Monk, Silver, Shorter, Pearson and others. Sometimes the leader's playing is oversmart, even cruel: a near-sarcastic take on 'Jitterbug Waltz' for instance. Some tracks go on too long, as often happens on Steeplechase dates. Burno gets too much space and doesn't use it effectively, while the voluble Peterson isn't the idea player for the situation.

The Newcomer suggests he's comfortable in a band situation. Shorter's 'The Big Push' puts him into useful perspective: mercurial blocks, trills, bebop lines, locked hands, Colligan can find a use for every device in jazz piano. He brought three interesting themes to the date and the band is excellent, with Jensen and Turner both surpassingly thoughtful.

(*) Stomping Ground Steeplechase SCCD 31441 Colligan; Drew Gress (b); Billy Hart (d). 9/97.
(*) Constant Source Steeplechase SCCD 31462 Colligan; Jon Gordon (as, ss); Mark Turner (ts); Ed Howard (b); Howard Curtis (d). 4/98.
The trio's an advance on the first Steeplechase. He had only rarely played with Gress and Hart and so there was minimal preparation, but the results are well-shaped and the playing on a very high level. Colligan's choices are a fan's notes on modern jazz: Billy Harper's 'Priestess', Kenny Wheeler's 'For Jan', Charles Tolliver's 'Right Now'. Sometimes, as on 'What Are You Doing The Rest Of Your Life', he meanders into a remote and not terribly interesting place. Mostly, though, his salty vigour and aggression, tempered by an innately fine touch, bring these pieces vividly to life, abetted by top work from the other two.

The quintet record concentrates largely on Colligan's own material. 'Void' is a somewhat amazing bridge between emptiness and form. 'Pitchrider' has a remote connection with blues changes but goes somewhere quite different. Considering that he leads from the piano, Colligan shows a surprising penchant for evading tone-centres and encourages his horn-players to take a journey into clear space. He harmonizes them in sometimes discomforting ways, as in the title-track, which seems ready to spiral off into abstract Konitz–Marsh counterpoint before it falls into place. Gordon and Turner can extemporize their way of out whatever trouble the boss has plotted.

(*) Small Room Steeplechase SCCD 31470 Colligan (p solo). 9/98.
This is no premature indulgence. If anything, it's a rather sober effort. Some of the material, such as Gary Thomas's 'Exile's Gate', is used to investigate what he can wring out of a specific formula, in that case the piling of structure onto an unchanging left hand. 'Elves' is Chick Corea impressionism without the whimsicality. 'When Your Lover Has Gone' is a ballad treatment in which the melody (of both verse and chorus) is ingeniously recast and it should be compared with 'Some Other Time', which banishes memories of the Bill Evans version.

 Unresolved Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 054 Colligan; Jon Gordon (as); Mark Turner (ss, ts); Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Drew Gress (b); Howard Curtis (d). 98.
The most multifarious and ambitious record so far. Besides piano, he plays organ, synth, trumpet and even drums on one track. Turner is present throughout; Gordon and Rosenwinkel appear twice each. If anything, there's a sense that Colligan may be trying a shade too hard with this one: some of it is overwritten ('Evil Ambition') or just inconclusive (the well-named 'Unresolved'). The electric keyboards cloud the picture more than they introduce useful colour, and the opportunity to use Gordon and Turner together consistently, as he did on Constant Source, is rejected. There's good stuff here, though: 'Modeidi's Modalities' is a menacing development out of 'Donna Lee', 'Nebulosity' gets a great performance out of Turner, and when he gets some open space Colligan injects some inspirational touches.

* Agent 99 Steeplechase SCCD 31498 Colligan; Doug Weiss (b); Darren Beckett (d). 11/99.
This is emphatically the first choice to date. 'You Do Something To Me' is an eventful reharmonization which entirely transforms an unremarkable song. The title-tune proves the group's hard-bop chops, a Blue Note copy that's performed with great panache, and 'Poor Butterfly' is classic ballad playing.

() Twins / () A Wish Steeplechase SCCD 31485 / 31507 Colligan; Jesper Bodilsen (b). 2/00; 3/01.
An interest in rhythm is thoroughly explored here – samba pulses, the varied time of 'Up Jumped Spring', the original 'Scandinavian Rhythm'. Both sets feel a little off-the-cuff in the Steeplechase way, but the playing has so many ideas that its uncluttered feel and ripe invention are a typical Colligan tonic. As a sample, go to the steadily evolving transformation of 'Nobody Else But Me' on Twins, which has you hanging on to the very last note.

(*) Ultimatum Criss Cross 1222 Colligan; Gary Thomas (ts, f); Drew Gress (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 12/01.
A new label but the same one-day-in-the-studio format. Pro that he is, Colligan gets a strong record out of it. Thomas spends more time in academia than on the stand these days, but he's in great shape: beautiful flute-playing on 'Ancestral Wisdom', fierce tenor on 'Lords Of Justice'. A few inevitable rough edges, but Gress and Peterson (the latter back for the first time since the debut record) play with shimmering power.

 Blood Pressure Ultimatum 101 Colligan: Jamie Baum (f); Meg Okura (vn); Joshua Ginsburg, Boris Kozlov (b); Jonathan Blake, Vanderlei Pereira, E. J. Strickland (d). 10/06.
Not for the first time, Colligan is tripped by trying too much. The Latin side is aired on 'Enjoy It While It Lasts', with Baum. The violinist comes in for a lovely ballad. There are a couple of electronic pieces and one wild freak-out, 'Angry Monk', which seems to come from a different session. That said, the opening 'Rose Coloured Glass' is a powerful conception, simple but forceful and questioning, and 'Debonaire' follows it with a much more relaxed and contented ambience. One senses that now more than ever he needs direction and a firm production hand.

Also, in brief:

 Desire Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 071. 2/99.
Colligan wants this to be heard as more than a blowing session; having seen the chart for the opening 'Battle Cry', we doubt that any of the musicians would have thought it was. Demanding, but cryptic.

 Como La Vida Puede Ser Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 102. 5/00.
Picks up where the last Fresh Sound left off, but Colligan's Latin schtick doesn't quite work and he has more interesting rhythmic experiments elsewhere.

 Past – Present – Future Criss Cross 1262. 10/03.
Drummer Bill Stewart anchors this, allowing Colligan to work out his own ideas on things like Jaco's 'Three Views Of A Secret'. Fine but oddly unconsidered playing.

(*) Realization Sirocco SHL 1030. 9/04.
The fusion band is called Mad Science, but what they do is cooler and less hyperactive than the genre usually demands. Another chance to dig out his electric keyboards, mostly to happy use.

Alice Coltrane (1937–2007)

PIANO, HARP, ORGAN

Also known as Turiya and Sagittananda, Alice McLeod grew up in Detroit, studied classical music and took lessons with Bud Powell. Replaced McCoy Tyner in husband John Coltrane's group and contributed a floating, arpeggiated approach later heard in her own harp and organ work. Devoted much of her later life to meditation and devotions.

 A Monastic Trio Impulse! 051267-2 Coltrane; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Jimmy Garrison (b); Rashied Ali, Ben Riley (d). 67–68.
 Ptah, The El Daoud Impulse! 051201-2 Coltrane; Joe Henderson, Pharoah Sanders (ts, af); Ron Carter (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/70.
 Astral Meditations Impulse! 051242-2 Coltrane; Frank Lowe, Pharoah Sanders, Joe Henderson, John Coltrane (ts); Reggie Workman, Cecil McBee, Ron Carter (b); Ben Riley, Elvin Jones, Jack DeJohnette (d); Elaine Jones (timp); strings. 66–71.
 Universal Consciousness Impulse! 589514 Coltrane; Leroy Jenkins (vn); Jimmy Garrison (b); Tulsi (tambura); Rashied Ali, Jack DeJohnette, Clifford Jarvis (d); string section. 4 & 6/71.
Alice McLeod was introduced to John Coltrane by Terry Gibbs, with whom she had recorded Jewish Melodies In Jazztime. After Trane's death in 1967, his widow was drawn into quite another religious tradition – or, rather, an eclectic synthesis of Egyptian, Indian and Oriental systems. Her first solo record is a pretty straightforward tribute to her late husband, and very much bound up with the music they were making together over the last couple of years. It also establishes Sanders as her most responsive and sympathetic playing companion, occasionally capable, as on 'Ohnedaruth' and 'The Sun', of Trane-like transcendence. The American edition of the CD has two extra tracks, but the shorter Japanese version has better sound.

Ptah is the highest avatar of God in Egyptian religion, and the title-piece is a rippling essay in transcendence, the paired horns coming from quite different directions. Their doubling on alto flute on 'Blue Nile' is magnificent, a perfect complement to piano and harp. By the time this record was made, Alice Coltrane had already recorded for Impulse! without horns. 'Turiya & Ramakrishna' retreads that sound, a simple three-note cell expanded into a huge meditation that is the spirit of lightness. Carter is intuitive and alert, but Riley seems a mismatch.

Astral Meditations finds Alice in the company of another Trane disciple. Frank Lowe is interested in things which Alice tends to pass over, melody most obviously, and the encounter is a fruitful one. Universal Consciousness is perhaps her finest achievement on record. The set opens with the title-track. Harp and strings (arranged by Ornette Coleman) contend and complement one another, DeJohnette provides lyrical accompaniment and Jenkins takes a central role; Alice's switch to organ is undoubtedly dramatic, but musically just right. 'Battle Of Armageddon' is more abrasive, an extended dialogue with Ali, but the violence is philosophical rather than actual. 'Oh Allah' has a distinctly pentatonic cast, though its modalities work far beyond that basic model. Again, DeJohnette is magnificent. 'Hare Krishna' and 'Sita Ram' are based on traditional materials. Adding chimes to his kit, Ali returns for a further dance of opposites on the closing 'The Ankh Of Amon-Ra'. It's a bitty record in some respects, but the personnels reflect quite distinct musical approaches and Alice Coltrane's conviction that every piece of music had its own sufficient orchestra. Her harp and organ work here are superlative and she picked her fellow musicians with care and confidence, albeit from a familiar orbit.

* Translinear Light Impulse! 01330 Coltrane; Ravi Coltrane (ss, ts, perc); Oran Coltrane (as); James Genus, Charlie Haden (b); Jack DeJohnette, Jeff Tain Watts (d); Sai Anatam Ashram Singers (v). 00–04.
The first album for more than 25 years outstrips all expectation. Skip straight to 'This Train', forget the inevitable pun lurking in the title of what is after all a very old song, and marvel at how brilliant a jazz organist Alice can be. Her supporting cast could hardly be better, of course. DeJohnette is masterful, Haden strong and supportive and her two sons play better than at any point in their admittedly very different careers. Ravi we know to be a strong and committed soloist and here he is in top form on both his horns. His solo on 'Jagadishwar' is exemplary. His younger brother has had a quieter time of it, but his single appearance here on 'The Hymn' is astonishingly good, so much so that one wonders why he is not more widely exposed. The vocal material, by the chorus at the ashram which is now Alice's only ongoing performance space, is better integrated than on past projects. There's nothing flimsy or otherworldly about this music, even when it evokes metaphysical issues. It is intense, lyrical, often unexpectedly raw, and focused on the here and now.

Also, in brief:

(*) Journey In Satchidananda Impulse! 051228-2. 11/70.
A lumpy home recording (at the Dix Hills Coltrane studio) that touches on a few of John's late harmonic ideas and some non-Western practices. Despite Pharoah Sanders's (ss, perc) presence, it never catches light or casts any.

* Eternity Sepia Tone 5. 8–10/75.
An unexpectedly good introduction to Turiya's musical philosophy. Dissonant organ-playing, Latin touches, and a faithful rendition of a passage from The Rite of Spring. Originally on Warners.

 Radha-Krisna Nama Sankirtana /  Transcendence /  Transfiguration Warner Bros 9362 48182-2 / Sepia Tone 6 / 1. 8/76; 5/77; 4/78.
Perhaps these devotional works have moved beyond jazz altogether. The personnels include Roy Haynes (d) and Reggie Workman (b), but the idiom is elusive, with only occasional references to gospel and blues. Deeply personal and profoundly felt, but hard to contextualize here.

(*) Sacred Language Of Ascension Kindred Rhythm 1132. N.D.
Posthumously released, this is a set of spiritual exercises made in collaboration with Dr J. J. Hurtak. Unlike the majority of Alice Coltrane's later recordings, the jazz content is minimal.

John Coltrane (1926–67)

TENOR, SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Born in Hamlet, North Carolina, the most influential modern saxophonist had a conventional apprenticeship in R&B. By 1949 he recorded bebop with Dizzy Gillespie, before signalling a shift towards modalism and experiment in Miles Davis's quintet. A brief period with Thelonious Monk in 1957 preceded the start of a career as leader; over the next ten years his classic quartet exerted seismic influence. In 1960, Coltrane added soprano saxophone to his repertoire. After recovering from narcotic and alcohol addictions he espoused an intense spirituality which sustained him until he succumbed to liver cancer.

 John Coltrane And The Jazz Giants Prestige 60014 Coltrane; Donald Byrd, Miles Davis, Wilbur Harden (t); Tadd Dameron, Red Garland, Thelonious Monk (p); Paul Chambers, George Joyner, Earl May, Jamil Nasser, John Simmons, Wilbur Ware (b); Jimmy Cobb, Louis Hayes, Philly Joe Jones, Art Taylor, Shadow Wilson (d). 56–58.
 Coltrane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 020 Coltrane; Johnny Splawn (t); Sahib Shihab (bs); Mal Waldron (p); Paul Chambers (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/57.
Just ten years separate John Coltrane's first records as leader and the sombre curtain-call of Expression, made weeks before his death in 1967.

If Coltrane's career had ended with the closure of his Prestige contract, how would we understand and rate him now? As a major innovator? Probably not, though there are signs from the beginning that he was pushing for something beyond the existing conventions of hard bop. As a distinctive saxophone stylist? Yes, to a degree. The biting tone had been burnished in numerous big bands, and more than a year in Miles Davis's group had promoted a restless, tumbling solo style. In fairness, though, it is hard to hear any of these early albums as anything other than way-stations. The Jazz Giants sessions are a worthwhile background sampling, shambolic in some respects and with some questionable choices of material but a useful context for what follows.

Coltrane is more energetic in tone than the other early dates, thanks largely to Splawn, who always sounds as if he's just rushed in with a telegram. Chambers is on excellent form, dancing lightly through the changes. Trane himself sounds a good deal more assured than on Dakar (see below) a month before.

 Cattin' With Coltrane And Quinichette Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 460 Coltrane; Paul Quinichette (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Julian Euell (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 5/57.
(*) Wheelin' And Dealin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 672 Coltrane; Paul Quinichette, Frank Wess (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 57.
Listening to these records offers a sense of how Beethoven must have felt during the French bombardment of Vienna, intimidated, a little deafened and desperate for a waltz. The difference is that the French cannon were state of the art and these tenorists simply sound old-fashioned. Inevitably, Coltrane stands out. No one else, then or since, has ever sounded like that, and a combination of the law of averages and the competitive ethos that was part of such multi-horn sessions guarantees some excellent moments. The pairing with Quinichette is the most relaxed. Cattin' is an underrated album with a light, almost joyous feel, two guys of markedly different temperament discovering a companionable middle ground.

 Lush Life Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 131 Coltrane; Donald Byrd (t); Red Garland (p); Earl May (b); Louis Hayes, Albert 'Tootie' Heath, Art Taylor (d). 5/57–1/58.
An album of oddments, garnered from three distinct sessions over a six-month period. This was the time when Sonny Rollins was experimenting at the Village Vanguard with a pianoless trio. Coltrane's more tentative step in the same direction was enforced when Garland failed to show for the date. May is too anonymous a player to go the extra yard required for this exacting discipline. There are unexpected inconsistencies of register and articulation in Coltrane's own performances, perhaps already due to dental problems. The title-piece has the rugged grandeur of many of Trane's ballad meditations, but the often remarked resemblance to Stan Getz is fading.

(*) Traneing In Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 189 Coltrane; Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 8/57.
This is more like it, the first group that sounds as if it might contain the germ of the classic quartet. And not just any old off-the-peg rhythm section either, but Miles Davis's current line-up. The title-piece is one of the first of the saxophonist's open-form blowing themes, a progression of chords which doesn't so much propel the scant melody as catapult it across the changes. Trane's solo is fiery and committed to the hilt, the sound of a virile pretender not yet rising to the majesty of later years. He also shows a remarkably delicate touch with a ballad; 'You Leave Me Breathless' is also a key moment, and a valuable reference point when one compares it with Soultrane, recorded with the same group six months later.

(*) The Ultimate Blue Train Blue Note 53428 Coltrane; Lee Morgan (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Kenny Drew (p); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/57.
* Blue Train Blue Note 95326 As above. 9/57.
A perfect example of the Blue Note effect, an overvalued record which bathes in the cachet of a fleeting association with the most glamorous label of its time. Michael Cuscuna has explained that, during the winter of 1956–7, it seems Coltrane visited the Blue Note offices because he wanted to get hold of some Sidney Bechet records. Alfred Lion was present and mooted the possibility of a recording. It was Lion's partner, Francis Wolff, who handled contracts, and, though some money seems to have changed hands, Wolff was not in the office on the day concerned and the agreement to record for Blue Note was settled on a handshake. It was almost a year later that Coltrane remembered the commitment and the good-faith payment and insisted on honouring it.

The unavoidable conclusion is that Blue Train is not an unalloyed masterpiece. Part of the Blue Note ethos was paid rehearsal, and there seems to have been ample studio time. The band fulfils its responsibilities perfectly well, but this was far from an ideal line-up for Coltrane. The rhythm section had already recorded together for Blue Note under Chambers's leadership, and Chambers and Jones were already familiar to Coltrane from Miles's band. Though Drew sounds out of sympathy with the charts, the real question marks are against Morgan and Fuller, both gifted players, but both locked on stylistic trolley-lines. Morgan seems content with a subsidiary role, but Fuller blusters and registers a positive presence only on 'Locomotion'. The opening title-tune is a starkly powerful blues which propels Coltrane into his first major recorded solo, plaintive and urgent, hard-edged but vulnerable. The rest of the album falls away. However important it was to be subsequently, 'Moment's Notice' is repertory hard bop. 'Lazy Bird' is based on a Tadd Dameron theme and is quite effective, 'I'm Old Fashioned' a formulaic ballad which would have been more appropriately set for just tenor and rhythm.

Coltrane is said to have considered Blue Train his own favourite among his records. Fans often wondered whether anything further was taped at the session of 15 September 1957. Forty years later – also the 30th anniversary of Coltrane's death – Capitol controversially released an 'enhanced' CD-ROM of the session, including two alternative takes, an extra 17 minutes of music in all, as well as documentary footage and interviews. Engineer Rudy Van Gelder called release of some of the material as a 'desecration', objecting to the issue of an earlier, unsatisfactory take of 'Blue Train'. What Blue Note had originally done was to issue take number nine of that famous opening track, but to issue it with the better piano solo from take eight spliced in. On The Ultimate Blue Train take eight can be heard for the first time entire, and with the same piano solo restored to its original position. Most listeners who know 'Blue Train' well will be fascinated and probably reassured to know that the definitive version is the one they already know. Neither the alternative of 'Lazy Bird' nor, indeed, the CD-ROM material on the final track adds very much, though the outer packaging of The Ultimate features a much better crop of Francis Wolff's famous cover portrait of Trane.

 The Believer Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 876 Coltrane; Donald Byrd, Freddie Hubbard (t); Ray Draper (tba); Gil Coggins, Red Garland (p); Spanky DeBrest, Paul Chambers (b); Louis Hayes, Larry Ritchie, Art Taylor (d). 12/57–12/58.

A fascinating compilation for early sight and sound of young talent. McCoy Tyner is composer of the title-piece, two years before he joined Coltrane's group. Hubbard, who solos to startling effect on 'Do I Love You Because You're Beautiful?', is already a monster. Two tracks are under the joint leadership of tuba-player Draper, a figure always destined to be marginal but capable of some fine and emotive playing on a cumbersome horn.

(*) Soultrane /  Settin' The Pace Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 021 / 078 Coltrane; Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Taylor (d). 2/58; 3/58.

At Prestige, by contrast, there was scant rehearsal time and a consequent need to stick with familiar material. Even so, Coltrane experimented. The much-cited 'sheets of sound' effect doesn't refer to the teeming wails and endless solos of later years, but to the work Trane was doing through the extended public woodshed that was 1958. Soultrane, to be fair, is an excellent record. One can quickly hear how much further the saxophonist was able to push the harmonic language than he had been doing with the same group in August 1957. 'I Want To Talk About You' was to become another favourite standard, a thoughtful and technically adroit reading, ranging without strain across two and a half octaves. Settin' The Pace is much less venturesome and might easily be mistaken for a second-string selection from the same date. The outstanding track is Jackie McLean's 'Little Melonae'.

 The Last Trane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 394 Coltrane; Donald Byrd (t); Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers, Earl May (b); Louis Hayes, Art Taylor (d). 8/57, 3/58.

'Last' not quite in the barrel-scraping sense, for the out-takes from the Garland, Chambers and Taylor date are actually very good indeed, and for anyone who finds this period of Coltrane's career more appealing than later work 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' is likely to be a welcome addition to the collection.

 Like Sonny Capitol 93901 Coltrane; Ray Draper (tba); John Maher, McCoy Tyner (p); Steve Davis, Spanky DeBrest (b); Billy Higgins, Larry Ritchie (d). 58, 60.

Valuable for a first glimpse of Coltrane in the company of McCoy Tyner, the pianist whose instinctive grasp of modal principles was to be a key factor in the saxophonist's spectacular progress over the next few years. This basically puts together two quite different sessions, one of them featuring the tuba-player Ray Draper and his anonymous rhythm section. It includes some interesting material, including Draper's own 'Essii's Dance', but it's the nascent quartet with Steve Davis and Billy Higgins which really points the way forward.

(*) The Complete 1958 Mainstream Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10116 Coltrane; Wilbur Harden (flhn); Curtis Fuller (tb); Tommy Flanagan, Howard Williams (p); Alvin Jackson, Doug Watkins (b); Louis Hayes, Art Taylor (d). 3 & 5/58.

This material has also been available for some time in various reissue forms, notably under Harden's leadership as Countdown and Tanganyika Strut (also Gold Coast, Dial Africa). The flugelhornist is a more than decent player, who scarcely deserves relegation on these early sets, where Coltrane is still carving out an individual voice. Harden suffered a mental collapse not long after these dates, and was not much heard of again. The alternates are all included (and not just the familiar 'Countdown' and 'Wells Fargo'), which gives this Lone Hill release a certain discographical value, and the sound is pretty good.

 The Standard Coltrane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 246 Coltrane; Wilbur Harden (t, flhn); Red Garland (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 7/58.

 Bahia Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 415 As above, except add Art Taylor (d). 7 & 12/58.

 The Stardust Session Prestige 24056 As above. 7 & 12/58.

It's easy enough to untangle these three late releases from the Prestige period. The Standard pretty much explains itself, a low-intensity operation with the emphasis on ballads. Two tracks from the same session plus 'My Ideal', 'Something I Dreamed Last Night' and 'I'm A Dreamer (Aren't We All)' are included on Bahia, though the liner-details inconsistently imply that the middle item was taped on the December date, which seems unlikely. Harden's warm, unemphatic trumpet-playing is perfectly appropriate to the setting, and it rarely attempts anything that will scare the horses. He and the leader seem to have worked out the approach only rather notionally, and each of their improvisations has an informal, loose-limbed quality that is attractive but hardly dynamic. The Stardust Session is a reasonable value compilation including all of The Standard Coltrane and a couple of items from Bahia.

(*) The Prestige Recordings /  Jazz Showcase Prestige 25104 6CD / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 6015 As above. 11/56–7/58.
The boxed set offers the most comprehensive and, for most listeners, exhaustive documentation of Trane's deceptively short time with the label. It reveals the saxophonist still in larval stage and not yet the compellingly beautiful imago of the Atlantic years. The single CD sampler is fairly unsatisfactory.

[illegible]

* Giant Steps

Atlantic 781337 Coltrane; Tommy Flanagan, Wynton Kelly, Cedar Walton (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb, Lex Humphries, Art Taylor (d). 3, 5 & 12/59.

* Giant Steps: Deluxe Edition

Rhino 75203 As above.

Moving from Prestige to Atlantic had the same effect on Coltrane as a more extended association with Blue Note might have done. The first album is the product of time and preparation, and it cements its status as Trane's first genuinely iconic record, with no fewer than seven original compositions, most of them now squarely established in the repertory. The big stylistic shift is the move away from chordal jazz, and a seemingly obsessive need to cross-hatch every feasible subdivision before moving on to the next in the sequence. In its place, a faster-moving, scalar approach that was to achieve its (in the event) brief apotheosis in the title-track. That this was a technically exacting theme is underlined by the false starts and alternative takes included on the expensive and atrociously titled The Heavyweight Champion Rhino box set (which might still be around in small numbers), but there is a chance to sample an earlier version of the tune on this CD reissue, performed with another group a month and a half before the issued recording (which featured Flanagan, Chambers and Taylor). Cedar Walton just about goes through the motions at the 26 March session. He finds the beautiful ballad 'Naima' a more approachable proposition, though this time the released version was actually from a later session still, with Wynton Kelly and Jimmy Cobb. It remains one of Trane's best-loved themes, a million miles away from the pitiless drive of many of his solos. Dedicated to the bassist, 'Mr P.C.' is a delightful original blues which has become part of most contemporary horn-players' repertoire. 'Syeeda's Song Flute' is a long, spun-out melody for Trane's daughter. The remaining tracks are 'Spiral', 'Countdown' and the funky, homely 'Cousin Mary'. Giant Steps was released on the cusp of a new decade, in January 1960. It threw down a quiet, unaggressive challenge. Once again, it is difficult to see it as anything other than a transitional record. Flanagan doesn't sound much more confident with the new idiom than Walton had been on the dry run, though he is a more intuitively lyrical player.

The 'deluxe edition' includes alternates of most of the tunes; these variants have been available before, of course, but they still help to build a picture of what was going on during this remarkable session. Having them isolated in the context of the issued album is of some merit, though perhaps only newcomers to the Coltrane diaspora will be unaware of the extraordinary enterprise that had such seasoned and intelligent players wrestling with a new conception in jazz.

* Coltrane Jazz Atlantic 781344 Coltrane; Wynton Kelly, McCoy Tyner (p); Paul Chambers, Steve Davis (b); Jimmy Cobb, Elvin Jones (d). 11–12/59, 10/60.
Again, sessions overlap. Much of this comes from the date that yielded the issued 'Naima', but there is also a later track, 'Village Blues', which features Tyner and Jones, meaning that the classic quartet is just around the corner. At this point, four years after picking up those Bechet records from Alfred Lion (but seemingly inspired by having heard straight-horn specialist Steve Lacy), Trane was deliberating on what was to be his only significant 'double', the querulously pitched soprano saxophone. Even when he is playing tenor, though, there are signs that he is looking for new pitch relationships, and he can be heard exploring split tones on 'Harmonique'. With the exception of Johnny Mercer's 'My Shining Hour', all the material is original, a consolidation and in some regards a slight retreat from the innovations of Giant Steps. However, by this point 'Coltrane Jazz' does begin to sound like a distinct stylistic subspecies.

 The Avant-Garde Rhino 79892 Coltrane; Don Cherry (t); Charlie Haden, Percy Heath (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 6–7/60.
A needlessly, perhaps off-puttingly self-conscious title for an album which was intended to square the circle by putting Coltrane in company with Ornette Coleman's music and group. Three of the numbers played are Ornette's 'The Blessing', 'Focus On Sanity' and 'The Invisible'; 'Cherryco' is the trumpeter's; and 'Bemsha Swing' is by Monk and Denzil Best. Except on the last and most familiar of these, Trane sounds untypically awkward. His soprano-playing is not yet either idiomatic or nimble, and on 'The Blessing' he makes even Ornette's eccentric pitching sound dead centre. A curiosity.

* My Favorite Things Atlantic 8122 75350-2 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Steve Davis (b); Elvin Jones (d). 10/60.
* Coltrane's Sound Rhino/Atlantic R2 75588 As above. 10/60.
* Coltrane Plays The Blues Rhino 79966 As above. 10/60.
The Avant-Garde didn't appear until rather later, and Coltrane's real coming out as a soprano-player was disguised behind the unthreatening banner of a Rodgers and Hammerstein tune. Yet who could have anticipated the sheer strangeness of his take on 'My Favorite Things'? Call it what you will, a radical subversion of American popular song, the quintessence of the scalar approach, a new synthesis of Western and Eastern idioms (and all of these have been advanced and substantiated), it is a remarkable, unsettling performance. In later years, 'My Favorite Things' was to become a regular feature of Coltrane's live sets, often spun out to several times the length of this relatively controlled, 13-minute version. Here, it has all the freshness and innocence of the original song, and though Tyner follows his boss in largely ignoring its chord structure, he still manages to retain the familiar contours.

A year and a half after Kind Of Blue, Trane still sounds as if he is hearing versions of the Miles Davis group in his head. 'Summertime', 'Every Time We Say Goodbye' and 'But Not For Me' are all marked by Miles's cool modality. The two Gershwin songs are taken on tenor, and 'Summertime' points forward to some of the things Coltrane was to be doing on the larger horn over the next couple of years, with basically this group.

The all-standards programme was a marketing strategy as much as anything, for there was to be a good deal of very mixed material, including some originals, in the extended session that ran from 20 to 26 October. Coltrane's Sound was programmed to deliver a much darker sound and was issued in a sleeve on which Coltrane's calm face was reduced to smears of paint; he is reported to have been distressed by it. The album starts as dramatically as anything since Blue Train with a roiling interpretation of 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes' which is both in the spirit of and dramatically different from his treatment of 'My Favorite Things'. Coltrane merely states the theme of 'Central Park West' on his soprano; otherwise it is a feature for Tyner. The leader is back with a vengeance on 'Liberia', as blackly intense as anything from the Atlantic period. Nothing else on the release LP quite matches up. Trane's Afro-excursion on 'Body And Soul' is relatively predictable in the context; though, given that he was redefining the parameters almost session by session, that's a relative judgement.

The blues album, made over the same long session as most of the Coltrane's Sound tracks, is often overlooked or reviewed as if it were a separate and distinct project. Much of the interest lies in Tyner's withdrawal from some of the numbers, a first experiment with a pianoless trio since Prestige days. Here once again simplicity of statement and sophistication of harmonic structure lie in fertile balance.

 Olé Coltrane Atlantic 8122 75351-2 Coltrane; Freddie Hubbard (t); Eric Dolphy (as, f); McCoy Tyner (p); Art Davis, Reggie Workman (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5/61.

The end of Coltrane's time with Atlantic and already overlapping with the Africa/Brass project, which was to be his first Impulse! recording and the beginnings of a short, intense association with Eric Dolphy. Though there was obvious closeness and warmth between the two, it now seems increasingly clear that Dolphy's role in 'arranging' Africa/Brass was less central than once thought. His part in Olé Coltrane was also supportive rather than central; Dolphy was even obliged for contractual reasons to appear as George Lane. His flute shadows Coltrane's soprano on the title-track, switching to alto for 'Dahomey Dance' and for McCoy Tyner's prescient 'Aisha'. These are the only three tracks on the original release, though an inititally untitled ballad, known as 'To Her Ladyship' and credited to Billy Frazier, was also recorded. The presence of Hubbard also helped expand the timbral range, pointing to the new, more orchestrated sound Coltrane was interested in developing at the time. Interesting as it is episodically, Olé never quite holds the attention.

* The Very Best Of /  The Last Giant: Anthology Rhino 79778 / 71255 2CD As for Atlantic/Rhino releases above. 59–61, 46–67.

What's the difference between a compilation and an anthology? The first of these begins boldly with 'Giant Steps' and includes 'Cousin Mary', 'Naima', 'My Favorite Things', 'Central Park West' and 'Summertime', along with a couple of blues and standards. Apart from a glimpse of Trane playing bebop with Dizzy in 1946, or accompanying Gay Crosse's 'Good Humor Six' in 1952, there's nothing on the second to persuade even hardened collectors to part with their cash for this retread of the formula; two hours plus of music, but as an introduction it's a poorer bet than The Very Best Of.

* The Complete Africa/Brass Sessions Impulse! 052168-2 2CD Coltrane; Freddie Hubbard, Booker Little (t); Britt Woodman (tb); Carl Bowman, Charles Greenlee, Julian Priester (euph); Jimmy Buffington, Donald Corrado, Bob Northern, Robert Swisshelm, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Eric Dolphy (as, f, bcl); Garvin Bushell (picc, reeds); Pat Patrick (bs); McCoy Tyner (p); Paul Chambers, Art Davis, Reggie Workman (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5–6/61.

Coltrane's debut for Impulse! was to have, like some of the masterworks that followed, a slightly muddled history. Even after two CD generations there are still inaccuracies in the annotation. The first and obvious point to make about the music is that, while Trane clearly was becoming interested in large-scale ensemble playing and in a bigger, more collective sound, this is essentially a quartet album with a fairly minimal – though undeniably powerful – orchestration done by Coltrane, Tyner, Dolphy and – on one track, the initially rejected 'The Damned Don't Cry' – Romulus Franceschini.

As before, chord structures are left implicit at best and time-signatures are never as clear-cut as they might appear. Even the waltz-time feel Coltrane had begun to favour for long-form soprano improvisations is breaking up into constituent subdivisions. The impact of African music on the title-piece is difficult to pin down or quantify, but it is unmistakably there, and it was to mark a new departure for Coltrane. The original Africa/Brass CD consisted of just three tracks: 'Africa' itself, a huge conception generated by the simplest of two-note bass figures; 'Greensleeves', another soprano deconstruction of a familiar tune; and 'Blues Minor'. (The notes here suggest that it consisted of 'Greensleeves' and two takes of 'Africa': nonsense.) In the mid-'70s, Impulse! released Africa/Brass Sessions: Volume 2, which consisted of 'Song Of The Underground Railroad' and alternatives of 'Greensleeves' and 'Africa', while a further version of the title-piece and a Cal Massey composition called 'The Damned Don't Cry' emerged on the double-LP compilation Trane's Modes. This is still garbled, and there are still some question marks over the exact composition of the orchestra (a previous CD release claims Jimmy Garrison was involved, in advance of his signing as the Coltrane Quartet's regular bassist), but the above is our best effort.

The music is extraordinary. Coltrane sounds exalted on 'Africa' and turns in performances of markedly different emotional temperature on each of the three available versions. For students of his soprano work, the two versions of 'Greensleeves' are equally a revelation. A bright, swinging idea, 'Blues Minor' is in some respects a throwback to the Atlantic years, but 'Song Of The Underground Railroad' is defiantly prescient of the saxophone/drums axis with Jones and Ali.

* The Complete 1961 Village Vanguard Recordings Impulse! IMPCD 054232-2 4CD Coltrane; Eric Dolphy (bcl); Garvin Bushell (ob, cbsn); McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison, Reggie Workman (b); Ahmed Abdul-Malik (oud); Elvin Jones, Roy Haynes (d). 11/61.

* Live At The Village Vanguard: The Master Takes Impulse! 051251-2 Coltrane; Eric Dolphy (bcl); McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison, Reggie Workman (b); Elvin Jones (d). 11/61.

(*) Impressions Impulse! 9011 As above. 11/61–4/63.

It was Coltrane's decision to record material in a club setting where a measure of direct communication with the audience was possible. For the better part of four decades, these performances at one of New York's premier jazz spots were available in scattered form and with uncertain identification of personnel. The situation was eased considerably when reissue producer Michael Cuscuna played the surviving tapes to Reggie Workman, who was able to nail the question of who played on which track.

The original Live At The Village Vanguard included 'Spiritual', a half-remembered song from long before, taped on the night of 3 November and featuring an extraordinary vocalized bass-clarinet solo from Dolphy; after this comes 'Softly As In A Morning Sunrise' without Dolphy. Taped the night before, the torrential tenor outpouring of 'Chasin' The Trane' comes with an almost physical shock; it is a trio piece on which Tyner sits out but which, like a couple of other tracks, includes Dolphy in the final cadence. There had been nothing quite like this in jazz; no one had dared to create a solo as freely stressed, polytonal and downright ugly since the days of the early bluesmen, except that Coltrane was sustaining this level of invention for more than a quarter of an hour. It was an approach that sparked off instant controversy. It is now confirmed that Garrison was the bassist on 'Chasin' The Trane' and, with all the benefit of hindsight, it does have a more urgent and percussive sound than Workman's.

Other material from the November 1961 residency first appeared on Impressions, which was released two years later and included the mysterious 'India', on which Trane's soprano floated over twinned basses; it could almost be shawm and drones, were it not so hard-edged. The solo on 'Impressions', which was recorded on the same night as 'India' and 'Spiritual', is one of the most important in Coltrane's whole career, a staggering edifice which looks disorderly only from a certain aesthetic distance.

The 1963 release was augmented with two studio tracks recorded that year, 'Up 'Gainst The Wall' and the intensely beautiful 'After The Rain'. Thereafter, material from the 1961 Vanguard stint was to appear on compilation discs: six tracks, including another 'Greensleeves', another 'India' and 'Spiritual' from Sunday, 5 November (with guests Bushell and Abdul-Malik), a version of 'Chasin' The Trane' with Dolphy in tow, and 'Brasilia', which had previously been known as 'Untitled Original', were released on a 1977 compilation, The Other Village Vanguard Tapes. There was more material on Trane's Modes (including another 'Chasin' The Trane', on which Tyner does briefly appear but on which Jones is replaced by Roy Haynes) and two further items, variants on 'India' and 'Spiritual', were released on From The Original Master Tapes. The CD Master Takes reunites 'Spiritual', 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise' and 'Chasin' The Trane' from the original Live, with 'India' and 'Impressions' from the later Impressions. Great music, even if the package seems like salami-slicing.

It is now clear that only numbers that were thought likely to be worthy of release were actually taped at the Vanguard, so the remaining material is not as wearisomely exhaustive as might have been feared. Even so, The Complete 1961 Village Vanguard Recordings is a formidable document, a body of work which allows the devoted listener to graph changes in emphasis, temper, pitching and approach, night on night. The set amounts to four and a half hours of concentrated music but David A. Wild's archiving work and commentary provide valuable map references. One of the points he is at pains to make is how integral Dolphy was to this group, a prominence minimized in the original releases. Whether the quartet 'Chasin' The Trane' is better or not, it certainly is less securely Coltrane's. Just to muddy the water further, there is also 'Chasin' Another Trane' with Dolphy and (very briefly) Tyner as well.

In the event, there are only three previously unissued items (all with Dolphy on bass clarinet), which may sway a final purchasing decision. Wild suggests that it was Eric who wrote 'Miles's Mode', which is back-titled as such after its appearance on Coltrane the next year, but which is referred to in the Vanguard tapes as 'The Red Planet'. 'Naima' is always to be treasured, and again Dolphy steals the show.

 The 1961 Helsinki Concert Gambit 11161 As above, except omit Workman. 11/61.

Right after the Vanguard dates, the quintet headed to Europe, where concerts were extensively bootlegged. This isn't the best of the available recordings, but the material – 'Blue Train', 'I Want To Talk About You', 'My Favorite Things', 'Impressions' – is solid fare and executed with great authority. The Kultuuritalo acoustic is respectable, too.

(*) Coltrane /  Coltrane Impulse! 589567 / 589567 2CD Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 4 & 6/62.

This is the classic quartet's first manifestation in the studio. The show-tune feature for soprano this time falls to Loesser's 'The Inch Worm' from Hans Christian Andersen. 'Miles's Mode' (aka 'The Red Planet') is dealt with rather briskly, and 'Tunji' is one of the more forgettable items in Trane's book. Ultimately, the album stands or falls on a truly dramatic reading of the Arlen/Mercer song 'Out Of This World'. It's an inspired if unexpected first item; it's then followed by Mal Waldron's 'Soul Eyes', a tune of grace and elegant emotion. The album's worth having for those two alone. The 2002 reissue spreads over two discs and includes extra cuts of 'Tunji' and other material, including 'Big Nick' and 'Up 'Gainst The Wall'.

 The European Tour Pablo Live 2208222 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 62.

(*) Bye Bye Blackbird Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 681 As above. 62.

 The Paris Concert Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 781 As above. 62.

 The Inch Worm Get Back 105 As above. 11/62.

A year after the visit with Dolphy, Trane and the quartet were back in Europe and pulling down extraordinary reviews. There are, in addition to these records, several more of questionable or indeterminate provenance. Bye Bye Blackbird is probably the best of the bunch, consisting of just two mammoth performances, the title-track and another 'Traneing In'. There is some valuable material on the Pablo disc, and one rarity, 'The Promise'. The Paris date has also appeared in other forms and with very mixed sound-quality; the blues, 'Mr P.C.', is terrific, the rest less so.

The Swedish date on The Inch Worm was formerly available on Magnetic and Swedish Historic Performance and is well-known to Coltrane collectors. Its relative merits are slightly difficult to establish given that sound quality, choice of themes, solo orders are such that one can only rarely compare like with like.

* Live Trane: The European Tours Pablo 84433 7CD As above. 61–63.

The statistics alone are impressive: an astonishing 37 tracks of which 19 are previously unreleased, most invitingly a 1961 concert performance in Hamburg with Eric Dolphy as guest star. This is comprehensively bootlegged territory, but these are nicely cleaned-up recordings and though not up to contemporary standards – Garrison is still poorly served throughout – sufficient to their purpose. Inevitably, given the nature of Coltrane's performances at the time, there is a good deal of repetition of themes: six versions of 'My Favorite Things', five of 'Impressions' and 'Mr P.C.', and four of 'Naima'. A thunderous 'Blue Train' is one of the best of the less-familiar cuts.

Basically, the set brings together all of Afro Blue Impressions, The Paris Concert, Bye Bye Blackbird and The European Tour. Anyone who already has these discs and doesn't feel the need for sometimes merely professional performances may want to hang on to their cash.

(*) Ballads Impulse! 589548 2CD Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 9–11/62.

 John Coltrane And Johnny Hartman Impulse! 051157-2 As above, except add Johnny Hartman (v). 3/63.

America in 1962 was no place to be black and angry. In John Coltrane, there was a constant war between rage and beauty, personal pain and transcendence. In the second half of 1962 Coltrane had been experiencing further dental problems and was having difficulty with his articulation. Partly to work around that limitation, partly no doubt to generate some market-friendly product, Bob Thiele suggested the Ballads project, and also the session with singer Johnny Hartman; he had also managed to arrange the historic encounter with Duke Ellington. Coltrane had always been an exquisite ballad player and the material he chose for the date was guaranteed to please: 'Too Young To Go Steady', 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' and a brief, flawless 'Nancy (With The Laughing Face)'. The bonus track on the original CD was 'Vilia', but the augmented edition includes further versions of 'All Or Nothing At All', 'It's Easy To Remember' (seven takes) and 'Greensleeves' (five).

The frustrating thing about the Hartman session is that, with the exception of 'Lush Life', there isn't a vocal performance of one of the standard songs Trane had made his own. Ironically, too, Trane's tone seems to have hardened up again by the spring of 1963 and is obviously being kept in check, whereas on the Ballads date he is not quite coasting but is certainly holding back, ceding a lot of the foreground to Tyner, who fills the air with rolling chords and delicate right-hand fills. Garrison also seems to relish the pace and the space, producing cello-like tones reminiscent of Oscar Pettiford. These are now available with enhanced audio, gatefold design, rare photos and original liner-notes.

 Live At Birdland And The Half Note Cool & Blue C&B CD 101 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5/62–5/65.

(*) Coltrane Live At Birdland Impulse! 051198-2 As above. 10–11/63.

The early '60s were a strange time for black Americans. The club tracks on the Birdland album – and, despite the title, there are a couple of studio items as well – were recorded a month before JFK's assassination, with the country poised between hope and violence. The end of 'Afro-Blue' is an intense cry of pain and blame, commingled with defiance; and 'The Promise', the soprano feature heard on the European tour the autumn before, has a more ironic sound in an American setting. By this stage Trane was able to play the more familiar standard tunes in his bag with a trance-like freedom. 'I Want To Talk About You', which appears in different versions on both discs, is a million miles from the Billy Eckstine song; on the Impulse! version, it ends with a fierce unaccompanied coda. Jones perceptively describes the way Coltrane's music of this period seems to break through an impenetrable fog of sound with a miraculous directness of statement. The two studio tracks are powerful examples; 'Alabama' was inspired by the death of schoolchildren in a bomb outrage in Birmingham, and 'Your Lady' was a love poem for wife-to-be Alice McLeod; a less celebrated theme than 'Naima', but no less beautiful.

The Cool & Blue disc brings together performances from quite a long span of time – and then includes them out of chronological sequence. 'My Favorite Things' and 'Body And Soul' come from June 1962, and it is surely not fanciful to note the dramatic darkening of intent between these performances and the album's closing 'Song Of Praise' from May 1965. Along with the Eckstine tune, the other item from 1963 is 'One Up And One Down', a tune which somehow seems made for Dolphy.

* Live At The Showboat, Philadelphia, June 17 1963 Rare Live Recordings RLR 88620 As above. 6/63.

A month before the Newport appearance, this finds the quartet in good if not revelatory form. It's a slightly unusual programme, starting with 'Good Bait', 'Out Of This World', 'Mr PC', 'Afro Blue' and 'Impressions'. The sound is respectable enough, but compared to other music privately recorded at the same residency it seems a relatively routine date.

(*) My Favorite Things: Coltrane At Newport Impulse! 9076 Coltrane; Eric Dolphy (as); McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison, Reggie Workman (b); Roy Haynes (d). 7/63, 7/65.

Coltrane made a number of Newport appearances. These are both dominated by very different interpretations of 'My Favorite Things'. The later appearance originally appeared on New Thing At Newport with material by the Archie Shepp quartet. This supersedes it. Fr Norman O'Connor's introduction to the band is charming, not least in his assumption that Elvin Jones is a 'newcomer' to jazz. In retaliation, Elvin plays with barely contained power. All the tracks from 1963 had been available before, on the Impulse! albums Selflessness and To The Beat Of A Different Drummer. The different drummer in this case was Haynes, who was standing in for the increasingly erratic Jones. Haynes has a lighter, springier sound and consequently these three very familiar themes – 'I Want To Talk About You', 'My Favorite Things' and 'Impressions' (the last of these never before heard entire) – are rather differently channelled. Coltrane seems to shadow-box with the drummer, placing his notes differently. Tyner and Garrison aren't well served by the recording, but they're audible and playing well.

* Afro-Blue Impressions Pablo Live 2620101 2CD Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 63.

No screaming highs, no dark inscapes; just rugged, straightforward versions of 'Naima', 'Impressions' and 'Cousin Mary' (the last of these not often revisited). There is also a foretaste of 'Lonnie's Lament', recorded in studio for Crescent the following spring. The 1963 European tour has been regarded as something of an anti-climax after the previous year: not so, we find.

(*) Crescent Impulse! 051200-2 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 4 & 6/64.

New and brighter CD sound opened up a silver lining to Coltrane's most melancholy record. Crescent is often seen as the dark hour that comes just before the spiritual dawning of A Love Supreme. 'Wise One' and 'Lonnie's Lament' are among the least effusive of his tunes, drawn once again from memories of field calls, spirituals and spontaneous blues; but 'Bessie's Blues' glows like a morning star. Crescent had an awkward birth. The band recorded versions of all five numbers on the album – and a head arrangement of 'Song Of Praise' – at a session on 27 April 1964. Two of those masters no longer exist, 'Crescent' and 'Bessie's Blues' being replaced with shorter versions on the LP. It's possible Jones was the factor; he's inconsistent on the record, out of focus and removed one minute, but also claiming his first significant written feature on 'The Drum Thing'. A significant record.

CORE COLLECTION

♛ * A Love Supreme

Impulse! 051155-2 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 12/64.

* A Love Supreme: Deluxe Edition

Impulse! 589945 2CD As above, except add Archie Shepp (ts); Art Davis (b). 12/64, 7/65.

The first records in Coltrane's career as a leader were the work of a man who had submerged himself in heroin and alcohol and who had mortgaged his physical health as a result. In reinventing himself technically, he also seemed to take on a new – or rediscovered – spirituality which expressed itself musically when simple materials generated torrents of harmonic and expressive detail. This is quintessentially true of A Love Supreme. Its foundations seem almost childishly slight, and yet what one hears is a majestic outpouring of sound, a preacher's voice, ecstatic but also authoritative.

It is not a piece that can be separated from the creator's intentions and programme. Coltrane explicitly stated that the final movement, 'Psalm', should be understood as an instrumental expression of the text that was printed on the sleeve. The rest has the pace of a liturgical act. 'Acknowledgement' begins with a sweeping fanfare that will return at the close. A sonorous eight-bar theme creates the background to the four simple notes – 'A love su-preme' – which have become some of the most familiar in modern jazz. Stated by Garrison, they are reworked and varied through the scale by Coltrane, whose solo defies categorization. The vocal chant is husky, strangely moving, and seems to occupy a different space and imprint from the hectic movement of the rhythm section. If this was to be Garrison's finest hour with the group, it is probably Jones's as well.

'Resolution' stokes the emotion. Coltrane's entry has an almost violent impact, and in LP days it was difficult to find the resolve to flip the disc over and essay the other side, even though it is clear that the music is left hanging, still bereft of the other sort of resolution. 'Pursuance' takes us into the dark wood, a troubled, mid-life moment. From now until the end, the rhythms are anxious, fractured, unsure. Horn and piano stagger like pilgrims from one brief point of rest to another. The closing 'Psalm' has an almost symphonic richness, culminating in a final 'Amen', a two-note figure in which a second saxophone (said to be Archie Shepp's) joins Coltrane. A partial restatement of the opening fanfare provides a reminder of the road travelled and also of the circularity of all such journeys.

The story of the making of A Love Supreme has been told in Ashley Kahn's fine book, which coincided with the release of the long-awaited deluxe edition. This provides a further insight into what went on in the studio during the making of the studio album, including two sextet cuts with Shepp and Davis, who are thanked on the original album but aren't heard. These are alternate versions of 'Resolution' and 'Acknowledgement'. The larger group doesn't bring anything significant to light that isn't in the original piece. More interesting is the inclusion of the Quartet's performance of A Love Supreme at the much-bootlegged Antibes Festival of July 1965. This was a relatively rare occurrence; Coltrane only rarely played the music again, which suggests either that he considered the LP version (credited to him alone, rather than the quartet) definitive or that it occupied a less central place in his thinking than usually thought.

Having awaited the revelation of the deluxe edition, we find no further epiphanies in it. Even extreme familiarity fails to tarnish A Love Supreme. It is without precedent and parallel, and though it must also be one of the best-known jazz records of all time, it somehow remains remote from critical pigeonholing.

 The Very Best of /  Standards /  Spiritual Impulse! 549113 / 549914 / 589099 As above. 61–64; 61–65; 61–67.

The Very Safest Of John Coltrane might have been a better title for the first of these catchpenny compilations. Excluding the ferocious work that came in the latter part of his time with the label and relying on familiar material like Ellington's 'In A Sentimental Mood' and live versions of 'My Favorite Things' and 'Naima' (both originally on Atlantic releases), this might serve as a useful introduction to Trane's output, but its limitations outweigh its value.

Spiritual is a fairly lame concept. Hearing these tunes out of context is potentially misleading, and not just because 'Acknowledgement' from A Love Supreme is only part of a much larger work. The problem is that Trane's spirituality, which was palpably genuine and deeply felt, worked in different ways and contexts. Lifting all of these pieces out of their original settings and grouping them as if they represented a sacred concert does some violence to their true character. 'Dear Lord' is still magnificent, 'Tunji' and 'Spiritual' itself are consistently inventive and there's even room for 'Ogunde' from the late, dark Expression.

Standards has some value as a representation of how Coltrane alternately caressed and subverted traditional and repertory themes. The inclusions are in no way surprising: 'Greensleeves', 'Softly, As In Morning Sunrise' from the Vanguard Sessions, 'Lush Life' with Johnny Hartman, 'The Inch Worm', Eckstine's 'I Want To Talk About You' and five others. Oddly, perhaps, no 'My Favorite Things'.

(*) The John Coltrane Quartet Plays Impulse! 051214-2
Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Art Davis, Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2 & 5/65.

A bare two months after completing A Love Supreme, Coltrane was back in the studio, with Art Davis added to the group for versions of 'Nature Boy' and 'Feelin' Good'. Master versions weren't recorded until the next day, suggestive of either uncertainty or creative discussion about a potential new direction. After A Love Supreme Impulse! clearly wanted another standards package, but the approach was challenging and there was further delay before the set was completed. It wasn't until 17 May that the remaining tracks were recorded, though in the meantime Coltrane and the quartet (without Davis) had included 'Nature Boy' in a set at the Village Gate. All three versions are now included on the CD, along with 'Feelin' Good', which was rejected. The obligatory show-tune this time out is the odious 'Chim Chim Cheree', another soprano essay, but this time inexplicably truncated, the shortest thing on the album; it may be that Coltrane decided to narrow his parameters slightly or it may simply be that he was now tiring of this long-standing formula. The session also included the original theme 'Brasilia' from the Village Vanguard days, as well as a complete version of 'Song Of Praise' which had been recorded as a head on the Crescent date. Plays is a fine record and the interaction of the group, both standard and augmented, is faultless.

 One Down, One Up Impulse! 0602498621431 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 5/65.

It's easy to fall back on terms like 'transitional', but here he is in transit between styles. Coltrane worries endlessly at phrases and motifs, without the kind of harmonic richness evident earlier in his career. Jones batters away on the title-track. 'Afro Blue' is more restrained but there is more storefront preaching on 'Song Of Praise'. Yet another live version of 'My Favorite Things' sounds sour and acerbic. Tyner emerges as the hero of the hour, developing his own conception all the time and shortly free to pursue it. He barely gets a hired sideman's share of the solo space, and when he does, he sounds almost clipped and remote.

(*) Kulu Se Mama Impulse! 9009 As above, except add Pharoah Sanders (ts); Donald Rafael Garrett (bcl, b); Alice Coltrane (p, tamboura); John Chapman (tamboura); Frank Butler (d); Oran Coltrane (bells); Juno Lewis (v); strings. 5/65, 10/65.

This has had a rather uncertain release history, though it's treasured not least for one of the most powerful cover images of Coltrane in the discography. The material was cobbled together from various sessions over the summer of 1965, and while 'Selflessness' and 'Vigil ' are both powerful pieces, the addition of other voices still sounds inchoate and uncertain, and the contributions of Lewis and the strings is decidedly unhelpful. A 2001 CD reissue should still be available, but it's a low-priority purchase.

♛ * Ascension Impulse! 543413-2 Coltrane; Freddie Hubbard, Dewey Johnson (t); Marion Brown, John Tchicai (as); Pharoah Sanders, Archie Shepp (ts); Donald Garrett (bcl, b); Joe Brazil (b, perc); McCoy Tyner (p); Art Davis, Jimmy Garrison (b); Frank Butler, Elvin Jones (d); Juno Lewis (perc, v). 6/65, 10/65.

There is nothing else like Ascension in Coltrane's work; indeed, there is nothing quite like Ascension in the history of jazz. By the middle of 1965, Coltrane had done as much with the quartet, technically speaking, as he seemed likely to. Even so, no one could have foreseen what was to emerge from the session of 28 June. If ever Eric Dolphy was missed, it must have been on this occasion, but Dolphy had died in Berlin the previous year.

In the simplest way, Ascension continues what Coltrane had been doing on A Love Supreme. The pattern of notes which begins the piece is a clear reference to the fanfare to 'Acknowledgement', but the vast collective improvisation which follows is almost antithetical to the highly personal, almost confessional quality of the earlier piece. The group was similarly constituted to the Ornette Coleman double quartet which recorded Free Jazz, though much less schematic. Coltrane devised a situation in which signals – from Hubbard and Tyner, in the main – could be given to switch modes, introducing new scalar and harmonic patterns. Soloists had a measure of freedom, and distinct ideas do seem to emerge within a broken field of gestural sounds. Everything is determined by the first few bars; nothing is determined entirely. It is a work that synthesizes the rules of classic jazz with the freedoms of the New Thing. Its success is difficult to gauge; its impact is total, overwhelming.

As ever, the original release was hopelessly confused. It seems that Coltrane had originally authorized the release of the first version recorded, and this was issued in late 1965 as Impulse! AS-95. Then the saxophonist decided that the 'wrong' master had been used, and the second take was substituted, leaving 'Ascension – Edition I' as a piece of jazz apocrypha. Hearing them on this compilation, it is difficult to argue with Marion Brown's support of Coltrane's position. The second take is more cohesive and more expressive. The involvement of players like Brown and Tchicai – and Shepp and Sanders in particular – afforded a first chance to hear the 'school of Coltrane' in action. Predictably, no one sounds anything like the master, but the overall impact of the piece does suggest that warriors were gathering round the standard.

Individual performances serve a very different purpose here from those on previous records and on other large-scale projects of the time like Coleman's. On Free Jazz, solos emerge out of the ensemble and impose a rather normative structure. Here, they provide an internal commentary that does not even threaten to disrupt the integrity of the piece. The main obvious difference between the two versions is the order of play. On the revised release (Edition II) the solos run: Coltrane, Johnson, Sanders, Hubbard, Brown, Shepp, Tchicai, Tyner and a bass duet, while on Edition I Shepp and Tchicai are in front of Brown, and Elvin Jones solos near the end. Coltrane must have had reasons for his preference, but there is not so very much separating the two versions qualitatively. After a time, they resemble a rock formation seen from a subtly different angle, but still unmistakably the same grand and forbidding outcrop.

* Sun Ship Impulse! 051167-2 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 8/65.

This remains one of the least known of Coltrane's albums, recorded in between Ascension and the Om and Kulu Se Mama sessions. There is a short nugget of conversation before 'Dearly Beloved', a minor-key ballad which sees Coltrane working on top of a gently unfolding, continuous rhythm. The angle of attack is much sharper on the title-piece, and it is tempting to wonder whether Trane was once again listening to his lost creative twin, John Gilmore. Certainly the resemblance here is quite overt. The solo, pitched very high in the altissimo range, is based on a four-note figure that might suggest any number of genealogies. 'Attaining' is quieter, a freely pulsed minor blues which, as the sterling David Wild suggests, is generically related to several other of Coltrane's folk tradition pieces. Its climax is extraordinary. The rating may seem extravagant, but it's high time this fine record was better known.

(*) Live In Seattle Impulse! 21462 2CD Coltrane; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Donald Garrett (bcl); McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 9/65.

From now to the end of his life, Coltrane's live performances were to become almost agonizingly protracted. 'Evolution' lasts more than an uninvolving half-hour, save for a wonderful moment when the three horns demonstrate the same interweaving line and block texture that was attempted on Ascension. Garrett is not Dolphy, and Sanders is not quite flat out yet, perhaps saving himself for the Vanguard and Japanese dates of the following year. By this stage, Tyner is lost. He plays manfully, but this is no longer his music. Even Jones, once so ubiquitously evident, has dropped into the shadows.

* First Meditations Impulse! GRP 11182 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2/65.

(*) Meditations Impulse! 051199-2 As above, except add Pharoah Sanders (ts); Rashied Ali (d). 11/65.

These two related sessions, which cover essentially the same material, bridge the end of the classic quartet and the opening phase of the new, augmented group with Sanders and Ali. This is music that emerges directly out of A Love Supreme, tiny, motivic ideas, often stated by Garrison, generating huge, sprawling improvisations, scalar segments proliferating into enormous harmonic fissions. In September 1965 Coltrane and the quartet recorded a version of a new five-part suite consisting of 'Love', 'Compassion', 'Joy', 'Consequences' and 'Serenity'. When he returned to the studio in November, the saxophonist substituted the turbulent 'The Father And The Son And The Holy Ghost' for the original opening movement, and moved 'Love' to what was the start of the continuous second side of the released LP.

The most important difference, apart from the addition of a second horn and of Ali's liberated drumming, is that the movements are run together almost seamlessly, whereas on First Meditations the breaks are quite distinct even though the sections are played without pause. On grounds of simple beauty and perhaps out of sentimental attachment to the group that was breaking up, the early version is to be preferred, though it clearly no longer represented what Coltrane wanted to do.

The CD of the February session includes an alternative version of 'Joy', the piece that sets in motion the final, multi-part movement. It's obvious that Coltrane is already trying to escape the sticky webs which Jones had woven for him. Had the old and new drummers been able to play together, 'Father/Son/Holy Ghost' suggests that something quite out of the ordinary might have occurred. As it is, Meditations and its Ur-text represent the final – and this time absolute – split between Coltrane and the rhythm of bebop.

* Live At The Village Vanguard Again! Impulse! 051213-2 Coltrane; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Alice Coltrane (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Rashied Ali (d); Emmanuel Rahid (perc). 5/66.

The arch-conservative Philip Larkin considered the later Vanguard set to represent in triple-distilled form the 'blended insolence and ugliness' of the New Wave. Ugliness is debatable; there is not a scrap of insolence about it, unless it be to play such a passionate and beautiful poem to one wife while another is playing piano behind you. Much has been said about what Alice Coltrane brought to the group. Like her harp- and organ-playing, she tends to work in blocks of sound-colour rather than linear developments. That is partially evident on 'Naima', but it comes out most strikingly on a huge deconstruction of what had been the Coltrane standard. This 'My Favorite Things' is almost the reductio ad absurdum; the version in Japan (see below) is analogous to bombing Nagasaki just days after laying waste to Hiroshima. The point has been made. Ali is already a key element, though here he has a percussionist as foil. It is easy to make the mistake of thinking that this is from the earlier Vanguard sessions – easy, that is, if one doesn't check personnel or listen to any of the music. It is drastically, diametrically different. There is no forward motion, no predetermined resolution; there is only music, always and eternally at the ear.

 Living Space Impulse! 051246-2 Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (d). 65.

The last word from the classic quartet, and not much more than a selection of largely untitled and generic oddments. Easy to romanticize a piece called 'The Last Blues' when there was in fact still a mile or two left on the extraordinary journey of John Coltrane, but it brings an intriguing and beautiful album to a satisfying end.

* The Classic Quartet: The Complete Impulse! Studio Recordings GRP 280 8CD Coltrane; McCoy Tyner (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Elvin Jones (p); Art Davis (b); Roy Haynes (d). 61–65.

Not the complete Coltrane on Impulse!. The 66 cuts include alternatives and some other unissued material, but only of the quartet itself and not of those augmented sessions when other players were recruited, so look in vain for Ascension, and for the sets with Duke Ellington and Johnny Hartman. The only exceptions are when Roy Haynes was standing in for the troubled Jones and some extra bass from Art Davis. The sessions are organized chronologically from the residual prettiness of 'Greensleeves' to the fractured intensity of 'Living Space', and there is obviously considerable merit in hearing the music develop in real time rather than in the issued order. However, the original releases are so much a part of the mind-set of a whole musical generation that it is hard to forget them, and most committed Coltrane fans will probably quickly return to the individual LPs.

* Interstellar Space Impulse! 543414-2 Coltrane; Rashied Ali (d, perc). 2/67.

The records after Africa/Brass are largely devoted to a search for the time beyond time, an uncountable pulse which would represent a pure musical experience not chopped into bars and choruses. Only with the induction of the unconventionally tutored Rashied Ali did such a thing become practically possible. With Coltrane on tenor and Ali running a gamut of percussion, this is the purest sound-experience of all the records. 'Mars', the first of the planetary sequence, is characterized as the 'battlefield of the cosmic giants', and that is exactly how it sounds, with huge, clashing brass tones and a dense clangour from the drum kit. 'Venus' is appropriately quieter, amorous and almost delicate, with Ali barely scuffing his cymbals with wire brushes. 'Jupiter (Variation)' was known to Coltrane fans even when Interstellar Space was out of catalogue, being included on one of the Mastery Of John Coltrane compilations of out-takes and ephemera. The release version is the shortest item on the set, a stately expression of 'supreme wisdom', coming immediately before the climactic evocation of joy that is 'Saturn'. 'Leo' is known in a live version from the Tokyo concerts but wasn't on the original album.

 Expression Impulse! 11312 Coltrane; Pharoah Sanders (ts, picc, perc); Alice Coltrane (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Rashied Ali (d). 2–3/67.

(*) Stellar Regions Impulse! 051169-2. 2/67. As above.

It would be wonderful if the final studio sessions really had represented the final wisdom of the greatest saxophonist since Parker, but Expression and the additional material issued as Stellar Regions (and later named by Alice) is a murky, often undistinguished work. There's some interest in hearing Coltrane on flute ('To Be', this from a man born in Hamlet, North Carolina) and there are a couple more instrumental quiddities, but what little of the music really convinces occurs on 'Offering' and 'Expression' itself, both of which are notably becalmed, almost resigned. 'Number One' is a new addition on CD. The suspicious thing about Stellar Regions is that the best track is 'Offering' again, not an alternative but the identical version which appears on Expression. This isn't so much sharp practice as desperation, an attempt to rescue an otherwise dud album which even falls down on the typography of a pastiche cover. The talking point is 'Tranesonic', which appears in two takes, where Coltrane seems to be playing alto, though none is listed in the credits.

Oddly, and quite unlike much of the Impulse! catalogue, Expression manages to sound worse on CD than on the notoriously muddy LP. Stellar Regions is an improvement, though back-to-back auditions of 'Offering' suggest that the difference is too slight even to be cosmetic. An achievement as great as this somehow calls for a grander conclusion.

Also, in brief:

 The First Giant Steps Rare Live Recordings RLR 88619. 7/46–6/54.
Very early material recorded in Hawaii with Dexter Culbertson's Navy Band, and eight years later with Johnny Hodges. Of slender historical interest.

() Complete Sessions With Dizzy Gillespie / () ... Johnny Hodges Definitive DRCD 11249 / 11528. 11/49–3/51; 6–8/54.
These, of course, are Dizzy and Hodges dates, with Coltrane in the middle of the band; the latter are currently unavailable in any other form, so there's some value in this, though Hodges fans will grind their teeth at the attribution.

 Tenor Conclave Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 127. 9/56.
Zoot, Al, Mobley, Quinichette, Trane. Too many tenors.

() Dakar Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 393. 4/57.
Supervised by vibist Teddy Charles, who added two of his own tunes to the date and presumably negotiated the unusual tenor/two baritones front line. CD helped the sound hugely.

 The Bethlehem Years Bethlehem 20 50012 2CD. 57–58.
Overlaps with the Lone Hill material reviewed above, but still a worthwhile option for that period.

 Plays The Blues Prestige 11005. 57–58.
Further salami-slicing from Prestige; issued as part of a roots series in which major artists concentrate on the blues.

 The Complete Lee Kraft Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10154. 11 & 12/57.
Perverse attribution, since these Kraft-produced tracks are relatively familiar and have been issued on Bethlehem under both Coltrane's and Art Blakey's names.

 Trane's Blues /  The Art of Coltrane Blue Note 98240 / 98645. 57–60.
One compilation devoted entirely to the blues, the other to a somewhat more rounded picture of Trane's development; both of them from the stable that really missed out on Trane's great years, hence some desire to capitalize on what they do have.

* Black Pearls Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 352. 5/58.
Along with the later Om, the drabbest session in the whole Coltrane canon. With Donald Byrd (t).

 Coltrane Time Blue Note 7 84461. 10/58.
Blue Train really was the only Blue Note. This was originally a Cecil Taylor release, reattributed later. Both men play diffidently and it's Chuck Israels (b) who stars.

(*) The Gentle Side Of John Coltrane Impulse! 051107-2. 62–65.
One of those records which – like Mellow Miles – seems to miss the point, but which is eminently approachable. Material from Ballads and the Hartman date, and there are the eternal 'Soul Eyes', 'After The Rain', 'Wise One' and 'Dear Lord'. Good value.

 Coltrane For Lovers / * Plays For Lovers Impulse! 549361/ Prestige 6020. 57–61.
No!

() The Olatunji Concert: The Last Live Recording Impulse! 589120-2. 4/67.
This has obvious historical importance, but the awful sound makes it virtually unlistenable.

… plus very many more compilations and repackagings.

Ravi Coltrane (born 1965)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Just two when father John died, he has tended to work in sideman situations rather than trading on the family name as leader.

 Mad 6 Eighty-Eight's/Columbia 510884 Coltrane; George Colligan, Andy Milne (p); James Genus, Darryl Hall (b); Steve Hass (d). 5/02.
 In Flux Savoy Jazz 17444 Coltrane; Luis Perdomo (p); Drew Gress (b); E. J. Strickland (d). 6–7/04.
Coltrane Jr still sounds more like Joe Henderson and, in some moods, Dexter Gordon than he does his father. He certainly hasn't yet learned to harness the soprano's demons as John did. The music hardly needs another version of 'Round Midnight' and there is not enough architecture to Ravi's version of 'Self-Portrait In Three Colours' to justify its inclusion. The opening '26-2' and closing 'Fifth House' are more promising vehicles and prompt the best from all concerned. Colligan demonstrates what a gifted and thoughtful player he can be and he could have been more generously featured on this. The title-track is a brief oddity, its inclusion a sign of uncertainty more than of confidence.

With the earlier RCA sets out of catalogue, his recorded output looks scanty. In Flux is a solid group date, with an even-handed approach. Shorter's 'United' points to a third influence that's ever more evident in the hooded, enigmatic saxophone sound, but Strickland gets a writing credit for 'Angular Realms', almost the best thing on the set, and there are a couple of collectively improvised tracks, again suggestive of a lack of direction more than creative confidence. Ravi is a fine player, hampered by an impossible weight of expectation. All he lacks is a vision and a story to tell.

Ken Colyer (1928–88)

CORNET, TRUMPET, GUITAR, VOICE

The purist's purist, he was born in Great Yarmouth. Self-taught, he formed the Crane River Jazz Band, before joining the merchant marine and escaping to New Orleans, where he met idols like George Lewis. In 1953 began bandleading in Britain with Chris Barber and also played guitar in skiffle situations though never relaxing his principles. His Studio 51 Club was an important traditional venue.

 The Unknown New Orleans Sessions 504 CD 23 Colyer; Albert Artigues (t); Jack Delaney (tb); Raymond Burke (cl); Stanley Mendelson (p); Edmond Souchon (g, v); Bill Huntington, Lawrence Marrero (bj); Dick Allen (tba); Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b); Harold 'Katz' Maestri, Charles Merriweather, Abbie Brunies (d). 12/52–2/53.
() The Complete 1953 Recordings 504 CD 53 Colyer; Harrison Brazlee (tb); Emile Barnes (cl); Bill Huntington (bj); Albert Glenny, George Fortier (b); Albert Jiles (d). 2/53.
 Vintage Ken Colyer Lake LACD 190 Colyer; Chris Barber (tb, b); Monty Sunshine (cl); Lonnie Donegan (bj, v); Jim Bray (b, sou); Ron Bowden (d). 5/53.
 In The Beginning Lake LACD 014 Colyer; Chris Barber, Ed O'Donnell (tb); Acker Bilk, Monty Sunshine (cl); Lonnie Donegan, Diz Disley (bj); Jim Bray, Dick Smith (b); Stan Greig, Ron Bowden (d). 9/53–9/54.
Colyer has a unique place in British jazz. Nobody has ever been more revered in local circles and few were so righteously dogmatic about authenticity. As the trad boom got under way, he abjured such 'modern' style models as Armstrong and Morton and insisted on the earlier New Orleans methods of George Lewis and Bunk Johnson. Colyer's records are an intriguing muddle of stiff British orthodoxy and something that finds a genuine accord with the music that obsessed him.

